WHITE CO. GET AWARD FOR FIRE APPARATUS

Mayor Awards Contract For Chemical And Ladder Trucks

Mayor Campbell this morning awarded the contract for the auto chemical and hose combination and the auto hook & ladder truck to the White Automobile Co., the net price being $10,150. The appropriation made for the purchase of the two pieces of apparatus was $21,000.

The Mayor, accompanied by Chief Billings of the Fire Department, and Councilman Ross, chairman of the committee of Fire and Police of the City Council, spent the day Wednesday in going over many details in reference to the purchase of the new motor fire apparatus for the city. Their investigations led them to several cities where fire fighting apparatus was demonstrated to them. The demonstrations included several trips at full speed, and up and down very heavy grades and in every way demonstrated the practicability of the motor apparatus.

At the close of the day's inspection it was the unanimous opinion that the contract should be awarded to the White Company of Boston, whose net contract price for the combination, chemical and hose wagon, with two chemical tanks and 6 cylinder motor, and a ladder truck with a 6 cylinder motor with standard equipment of trussed ladder, and taking old ladder truck in trade was $10,150. After some negotiations the White Company agreed to the request of the committee to equip the machines with self-starters, which ordinarily would be $400 extra for the two machines, and an extra equipment of 114 ft. of ladder, all without extra charge. It may be that a chemical tank may be installed on the ladder truck, in which case there will be an extra cost for same, but in any event it will fall several hundred dollars short of the authorized expenditure.

SECRET MARRIAGE NOW DIVULGED

The marriage of John L. Mavers of Bennington street, South Quincy and Miss Zelma May Savels of Jamaica Plain was announced by phone Wednesday evening to the immediate relatives and friends of the contracting parties.

The ceremony was performed at the home of the groom's brother, Albert Mavers of Mattapan, by Rev. Clarence Campbell of the First Presbyterian church of this city, a half hour before the announcement

All preparations were made in secret, only those who were obliged to know of the arrangements being aware of the plans of the couple, and the marriage was not suspected.

The bride's folks were the first to learn of the event and then the groom phoned his parents and friends. Both are well known here and in Somerville where Mr. Mavers is employed and where they will make their home

MANY STREETS WASHED OUT

Many of the streets about the city were badly washed out during the night by the heavy rain that fell for several hours. This was particularly true of streets running from Wollaston Hill to Newport avenue. The rain which fell turned these streets into rivers and the water carried with it a large quantity of the gravel with which the street was surfaced and deposited it on the street car tracks. The result was that the street railway was obliged to send a gang of men down and shovel off the tracks before they could be used.

Ratchford street, Houghs Neck, was also badly washed out as were also Sagamore and Prospect streets, Atlantic, where the water rushed down the hills and filled several cellars.

At the junction of Highland avenue and Brook street, Wollaston, the brook overflowed and there was danger of considerable damage being done before the situation was relieved.

As a general rule, however, the drains of the city are in exceptionally good condition and take care of the surface water accept on sides of hills.

The sewing circle of Rebecca Wiswell tent, Daughters of Veterans, will hold an all day meeting at the home of Mrs. Laura Connell at 2 Bradford street, Friday.

THE WEATHER.

It was a steady but nevertheless hard rain storm that passed over Quincy during Wednesday night. The rain commenced sometime after midnight and continued until daylight. There was apparently little wind and the rain fell steadily giving the ground a good soaking, which was badly needed. For Friday the weather man says there will be little change in temperature, light winds, generally southerly.

BRIDE OF LAST JUNE WEDDING

Miss Jennie Harding Marries Cambridge Man

Closing the list of the June 1915 Weddings, the marriage of Miss Jennie Harding, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Matthias Harding of 50 Old Colony street, and Herbert Henry Barnard of Cambridge, which took place Wednesday evening at the home of the bride's parents, was one of the prettiest and most attractive home weddings of the season.

The ceremony was performed at seven o'clock in the presence of a few relatives, but at the reception, the house was filled with a gathering representing guests from this and other cities, notably New York, Newburyport, Vermont, Cambridge, Worcester and Everett.

Miss Evelyn Price a piano pupil of the bride, at the appointed hour rendered the Bridal chorus from "Lohengrin" and as the first notes were sounded the bridal procession began, starting from one of the rooms on the second floor and descending to the parlor, where at a further corner, bewitchingly attractive, was erected a sunburst draped canopy of Alice Blue tulle, the centre crowned with a large white bridal bell, festooned with ropes of daisies, and heavily banked with green fernery near the floor. Here the ceremony was performed by the Rev. T. W. Davison, pastor of the Memorial Congregational church of Atlantic.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, was charming in an exquisite gown of white satin, en train, made with a lace tunic draped with pearl trimmings. Her long tulle veil was arranged in cap effect and caught in place at the coiffure with a coronet of orange blossoms, and she carried a beautiful shower bouquet of lilies of the valley and bride's roses.

Miss Frances Harding, a sister of the bride, who was maid of honor, wore a lovely gown of blue crepe de chine and carried an arm bouquet of marguerites.

Ray Barnard of Cambridge a brother of the groom acted as best man, and the ushers were Earl Freeman of Boston and Peerley Barnard of Cambridge.

A reception immediately followed the ceremony, Mr. and Mrs. Barnard being assisted in greeting the guests by Mr. and Mrs. Harding, Miss Harding the maid of honor, Ray Barnard the best man, and Mrs. Barnard the bridegroom's mother.

Late in the evening the bridal couple left on a honeymoon trip to Sterling Junction, and upon their return are to take up their residence at 37 Houghton street, Dorchester, where after August first they will be at home to their many friends.

Mrs. Barnard wore a charming travelling suit of sand color silk poplin, and left midst a shower of confetti and many expressions of future happiness and good wishes that friends of the young couple extended to them on their going.

During the evening the guests availed themselves of the opportunity of inspecting the many wedding gifts received by the couple, prominent among the presents being two dozen or more pieces of cut glass all matched in daisy pattern, a chest of silver, numerous pieces of hand painted china, pictures, statuary and other articles all expressions of friendship.

Mrs. Barnard previous to her marriage was a music teacher and widely known among the young social set.

Mr. Barnard is a Cambridge young man and is in the employ of the Gray and Davis Company.

GERMAN ARMY IS DRIVEN BACK

Dispatches from the front today confirmed reports that the Crown Prince had directed determined attacks against the French lines to counteract the French drive around Arras.

SAY GERMANY WAS JUSTIFIED

By John Edwin Nevins.
(Special, United Press.)

Washington, July 1—That Germany will have excellent grounds for maintaining it was justified in sinking the "Armenian" was the consensus of opinions in official circles today. The state department ordered a full investigation.

Ambassador Page at London was instructed to send a man to the scene of the affair. Ambassador Gerard at Berlin was directed to get a complete report from the commander of the German submarine which sunk the ship. An inquiry was also in progress at Newport News from which port the Armenian sailed with its cargo of mules.

The questions to be answered were "who employed the members of the crew of the "Armenian"—the British Admiralty or the Leyland line "who was in charge of the mules, a British officer?"

The admiralty announcement that the ship was engaged in Admiralty business however was regarded as placing it in the transport class. News agencies agree that instead of submitting to search the vessel began sending out wireless calls for aid and tried to escape when the submarine was sighted. Under such circumstances the best posted authorities agree that international law justified Germany destroying her.

QUINCY HIGH SCHOOL CROWDED AT ANNUAL GRADUATION EXERSISES

Five Honor Pupils Among 79 Girls And 52 Boys Who Receive Diplomas Wednesday Night

One hundred and thirty-one young men and women Wednesday evening in the High school hall received their diplomas and some good, sound advice. The diplomas were awarded for the completion of the four years' course at the school, and the advice was to prepare them for their future, both for those entering college, and those about to start out in the business world.

The honor pupils were: Miss Margaret Lucy Park, Miss Beatrice Allen Rogers, Miss Annie Agnes Schlenker, William K. MacMahon, Thomas Tilson Barstow.

The honor pupils are those attaining an average of over 90 per cent for the entire four years.

Of these 131 pupils, 79 were girls and 52 boys. The girls were all in white, and the boys in black suits and all wore the class flower, a Jack rose.

The hall was prettily decorated with the class colors, yellow and green. The balcony was hung with festoons of the two colors, and the pillars were also entwined with yellow and green paper. Across the platform in gold letters on a green banner hung the class motto "Tu ne cede malis." The platform was decorated with palms, and daisies, and around the front was a row of lovely cut flowers, roses, pinks, etc., which at the conclusion of the exercises proved to be the individual bouquets of members of the class.

On the platform were seated the speakers, Lewis Perry, John D. Mackay and Mr. Barbour and Mr. Collins.

First the seniors marched in to the strains of an inspiring march played by the High school orchestra, led by Miss S. Maud Amsden. Their accompanists were Miss Rosalie May Du Temple and James Hilton Marr.

After the graduating class were seated, a selected chorus and the orchestra gave Costa's "With Sheathed Swords" from "Naaman." This was admirably sung. This chorus perfectly accompanied by the orchestra, gave three other selections during the evening: "Blow, Blow, Thou Winter Wind" by Whiting, "The Cossack Song" by Williams, and Strauss' "Beautiful Blue Danube."

Without question they sang the latter the best. It was perfectly rendered. It was a rare treat to hear so many sweet voices so well trained that each part sounded like a separate voice. No one voice dominated any part, and all was wonderfully balanced.

The members of the orchestra are: Edward H. Fuller, Viola H. Jones, Earle B. Simmons, Marion C. Hardy, Anna I. Burns, Esther V. Bagg, Cecelia G. Arenberg, Arthur Leary, Ruth E. LeLacheur, David D. Shechner, David Weinhouse, Royal S. Weymouth.

Three of the honor pupils gave addresses on the Centenary in History, Science and Arts.

Thomas Tilson Barstow told about History. He said that 100 years ago Napoleon's army lay down in the wheat fields to wait to find out whether Napoleon's despotism or Peace should rule France. He then clearly gave a resume of subsequent events, bringing history down through to the Treaty of Ghent following the War of 1812. He explained the treaty and forcibly told of the 2500 miles of Canadian border "without a fort nor even one gun pointed either way" and its resulting 100 years of peace. "Fidelity and no fortification is far better than infidelity and miles of forts and soldiers," he exclaimed. He ended his scholarly remarks by saying, "May our country have continued peace! May she continue to increase the benefits of all mankind. May she conquer the world, but in the larger sense by peace and greatness!"

The next speaker, William K. MacMahon, told of the Centenary in Science. He told of the discoveries and uses of the stethescope the locomotive, the kaleidescope, and the miner's lamp. He gave interesting facts and his address showed careful study and a clear understanding of his subject.

A MAID OF 1815.

Miss Margaret Lucy Park told about the Arts in a very clever and original way. She said she had been studying in the art museum one day, hunting for biographies of the great men in Art 100 years ago. Tired, she went into a secluded alcove to sit down and rest a little. She happened to glance up and saw a lady in a frame. The lady was of unusual beauty.

Miss Park sat there she said, looking at the picture, and repeating biographical facts about two great painters she had been studying, when a faint odor of lavendar reached her and a sweet voice spoke to her. Turning she saw the lovely lady of the picture at her side.

The lovely lady said that it was her picture hanging there painted on her 16th birthday by Benjamin West. She hummed the "Star Spangled Banner" and asked Miss Park if she had heard that "new song," yet. Bewildered and interested Miss Park said she had. Then the lady told how it had just been written and told of the circumstances

Music brought to the lovely lady's mind the fact that she had just attended the first concert of the Handel and Haydn society in Boston.

She then noticed Anthony Trol-

AUTO CLIMBS SIDEWALK CRASHES INTO IRON FENCE

Four People Miracuously Escape Serious Injury Wednesday Night

Four Brockton people returning by automobile from Houghs Neck Wednesday night narrowly escaped serious injury when the machine dashed across the street at the corner of Elm and Hancock streets and came to a stop against the iron fence in front of the residence of Mrs. John F. Welch. The party were frightened and shaken up considerably but were not seriously injured.

The car was a four seated touring car owned and operated by H. Young of Brockton. The man who sat beside Mr. Young on the front seat was thrown violently forward when the automobile brought up against the fence but was not thrown out. His face was bruised by contract with the windshield. Two women on the back seat were badly frightened but were uninjured.

The accident happened about 10.45 P. M. According to Mr. Young the party were proceeding up Hancock street toward Braintree at a moderate speed. They were riding along the pavings on the west car track. At the point in front of Hancock court where the tournout merges again into a single track the completed portion of the street narrows.

Mr Young was unaware of this fact and claims that the lamps set along the ditch were infrequent and inadequate. His right hand wheels therefore slipped over the rail into the uncompleted roadbed, a drop of a foot or so. Mr. Young said he did not realize just what had happened and when he felt the automobile tilt heavily to the right he feared it would turn turtle. He therefore put on power feeling that if he stopped the auto would tip over. In front of Walsh's drug store the wheels struck a pile of loose dirt which lifted the machine on to a level once more and Mr. Young turned sharply to the left.

As the rear right hand wheel left the loose dirt and came on to the paved part of the street it slewed sharply bringing the machine nearly at right angles to its former position. Before the driver could shut off his power and apply his brakes the front of the car plunged on to the sidewalk and into a granite gate post on the Welch estate. The granite was the real Quincy brand and it quickly stopped even the speeding automobile.

As the front wheels of the auto struck the curbstone the right hand tire burst with an explosion which was heard a considerable distance and which brought sleepers in neighboring houses to their windows. Mr. Young was very angry and in the presence of bystanders declared his intention of suing the city. He measured the distance between the various lamps set along the unfinished road bed, their distance from the car track, etc.

THE SCHOOLHOUSE PLANS.

Something of a surprise was created when Tuesday's Ledger announced that the School Committee has laid on the table the plans for new school buildings submitted by four architects. We do not presume to know what further disposition will be made of these plans by the School Committee but if the plans submitted are not taken from the table at some futufe date it is obvious that the four firms concerned have wasted their time and labor.

This does not seem hardly satisfactory. The submitting of bids for various public requirements in general is a good principle and usually it works out to the benefit of the community. It can not be so readily applied to school buildings, however. Architects hesitate about entering a competition of this nature in which only one is likely to be successful. In fact, many architects will not participate in such a competition, for the chance of wasting many hours of work is too great.

It has been the usual custom here to select an architect from among a number who have submitted rough sketches, and then direct him to work out the finished plan. This has usually worked well and there seems to be no good reason for changing. Let an architect of ability be selected after a reasonable preliminary requirement has been satisfied and let him then proceed to make the plans with the assurance that his time and labor will not be thrown away.

We are pleased to see that the School Committee has insisted upon the most up to date ventilating system because surely next to safety this is one of the most important requirements for a schoolhouse.

GRADUATE ENTERING THE WORLD

As the members of a college or High school graduating class line up on the platform, it is a hard guess to tell which will be the big business and professional successes of ten years hence. Even the professors who know the young people thoroughly, are often mystified.

In a good many cases a certain degree of business success is assured at the start through personal "pulls." Many young men have fathers or uncles or brothers in large concerns. A handsome desk and comfortable salary is assigned the fledgeling of the family as soon as he acquires his degree. He may become a faithful and methodical worker. But he is rarely the one who pushes his concern into bigger fields.

The success attained by many comparatively obscure fellows is a wonder both to their teachers and associates. They may have had no social graces and no facility in book work. But somewhere back in their make-up was a certain bull dog tenacity that knows not the word "fail." They hang on and hang on, until the gates of opportunity open, weary of their importunate striving.

Many young men without family influence are sure of good results from the start, by a certain innate personal winsomeness. They greet the world with frank enthusiasm, and make friends every day of their lives. People like to have them around and do business with them. Their only danger lies in their too great facility Sometimes the prizes come so easily that they forget to work. Then the tortoise soon overtakes the hare.

Graduates of colleges and High schools do not usually have to wait long for a job. There is always something ready for a bright young fellow with willing hands. But to find an opening offering any chance of advancement is no easy matter. Young men should look carefully for lines of work in which there is no call for individual judgment and initiative. There is too much haste for four o'clock jobs, where the young man gets the afternoon off for society and games.

THE LACK OF SKILLED LABOR.

A man connected with a concern now making water material remarked a few days ago, that it seemed almost impossible to get enough skilled workmen. He found that there is a good deal of help that can be had, but only a fraction of the applicants are men who can do a high grade of mechanical adjustment.

In rush times almost any kind of an employe can get work. His inferior product slips along. The inspector may see its defects, but when customers are clamoring for delivery of orders, many faults slip through that ought not to pass.

In the dull times of the past few years, inferior workmen have found themselves out in the shuffle. If there was work for only a part of the force, the skilled man was kept at the bench, while the less efficient man was informed that there was nothing doing. No complaint might be made of the quality of his work, but homehow there was never anything for him.

Just now the rush of war orders is providing work for many men whose product is of inferior quality. But when the war orders stop, and before the normal trade of peace times is re-established, there will be many an idle day for the second rate artisan. These conditions are true not merely of workmen in the lines making war material, but in all lines of mechanical employment.

The young mechanic should put some brains into his work. He should study the philosophy of mechanical processes and physical forces, and learn the one perfect way of performing every motion. If some of the time spent in discussing socialism and baseball were spent in getting information about the best methods of producing the desired mechanical results, there would be more meat for the family table and more clothes for the kidlets. Also in every trade there are practical books of technical science that give good ideas.

The tuberculosis dispensary which opened in this city Tuesday has possibilities of great service in the community. Quincy is entitled to no particular credit for establishing it because the city was forced to do so by the state law. But in Quincy's hands lies the future of the institution. Upon the ability and industry of the physician and nurse in charge much will depend. We have confidence in those who have been selected to take charge of the work here and do not doubt that much will be accomplished in checking the dread disease in its incipient stages.

---

A student of character would have had a good chance to study it Wednesday night at the High school graduation when the hundred and thirty young men and women marched across the platform to receive their diplomas. Some bowed graciously and thanked Chairman Mackay, some grabbed their roll and hustled off, some looked straight ahead without a sign that they had received anything, some gave a sigh of relief as if feeling at last it is mine, some smiled broadly and others blushed and lost step.

COMMON SENSE.

Longfellow could take a worthless piece of paper and write a poem on it and make it worth $65,000—that's genius. There are some men who could write a few words on a piece of paper and made it worth $8,000,000—that's capital. The United States can take an ounce and a quarter of gold and make it worth $20—that's money. A mechanic can take material worth $5 and make it into watch springs worth $1,000—that's skill. There is a man in Chicago who can take a fifty cent piece of canvas, paint a picture on it, and make it worth $1,000—that's art. A Greek can take an article worth 75 cents and sell it for $1—that's business. A woman could purchase a hat for 75 cents but prefers one worth $27—that's foolishness. A ditch digger handles several tons of earth for $1.50 a day—that's labor. The author if this can write a check for $9,000,000, but it wouldn't be worth a dime—thats rough. There are people who will tell you that other papers are as good as this—that's nerve. Take $2.00 and get a year's subscription to the Sentinel!—that's common sense.—Franklin Sentinel.

MAY HAVE DOUBLE RESULT.

In some places it is announced that owing to demand for powder in the war, fireworks in this country are to go up in price very materially. Inasmuch as this is not a good year for throwing away money needlessly, another result will probably be that the demand for the fireworks will be materially less than in some other years. Perhaps that is not altogether a sorrow. It may mean fewer hospital cases and less burning of buildings, for the "Sane Fourth" is not wholly so even yet. It may mean that fewer children will be crippled, and fewer horses will run away. Perhaps the wholesalers of fireworks have adopted a method that will aid in a great reform, and that may make their output less popular not only this year but in years to come. Burning fireworks is not by any means a necessity of the time.—Framingham News

AMERICANS ON TORPEDOED SHIP

Twenty Drown When Armenian Is Sunk by Germans.

CARRIED CONTRABAND CARGO

Action of United States Will Depend Upon Whether Steamer Was Transport of War or Freighter—Was Carrying Mules From Newport News to British Port

Washington, July 1.—In the face of the expected conciliatory reply from Berlin on the Lusitania tragedy came the tidings that nearly a score of Americans had lost their lives when the Dominian liner Armenian, formerly in the Boston-Liverpool service, was sent to the bottom by a German submarine off the southwest coast of England.

News of the latest activity of the dreaded submersibles came in dispatches from Consul Armstrong at Bristol, Eng., who reported that twenty-nine men in all were lost, and ten injured. The steamer was flying the British flag when torpedoed and was carrying a contraband cargo of mules for British army service. She sailed from Newport News, Va., on June 17.

Word of the affair was immediately wired to President Wilson at Cornish, N. H. It was subsequently learned that, while displaying deep interest in the news, he intimated his desire to wait for full official information before deciding what course to pursue, and declared that a thorough investigation would be ordered.

The question of German responsibility toward America hinges on whether the Armenian was, at the moment of sinking, an American boat, or whether she had been chartered by the British government. If the latter is found to be the case, she was technically an army transport of a belligerent nation, and as such could expect no mercy from the Germans.

This being the first case of the loss of American lives since the sinking of the Lusitania, the news created a sensation in official circles in Washington.

The gravity of the incident, however, and the action of the American government depend almost entirely on whether the Armenian was chartered by the British government and was, in fact, a transport of war, on which Americans would sail at their own risk, or whether she was an unarmed merchantman.

In the latter case, even though carrying contraband, the ship should have been subjected to visit and search and those aboard transferred to a place of safety before the German torpedoes were fired.

The list of missing as finally made up from Armstrong's reports follow: C. Williamson, St. Louis; I. M. Monroe, New Orleans; B. M. Granberry, Montgomery, Ala.; S. R. Sutton, Cartersville, Va.; Harry Stone, New York city; Edward F. Brown (cattle carpenter), Harrisburg, Pa.; J. S. Viso, Porto Rico; R. H. Brooks, or West (chief foreman of muleteers), London (naturalized American); Henry, Leroy, Jackson and Speed, Richmond; Wall, Foley and Little, Newport News, Va.; King, Small, Rickert and Oakes, Norfolk; Smith, Portsmouth, Va. (All negro muleteers.)

From the messages received it appears that, in addition to the torpedo, at least one shot was fired from a disappearing rifle. The consul's report said the wireless house was taken by second shot." It was not made clear whether the Armenian was first ordered to halt and resisted capture, requiring a second shot, or whether the submarine attacked without warning. The fact that the number of the submarine was given indicated that she had come to the surface to make the attack.

Mules are contraband of war, according to all the lists of the belligerents, so there can be no doubt as to the contraband character of the Armenian's cargo. Officials will make an effort to learn, however, whether the vessel was armed and whether she was a part of the British naval forces before the opinion of the state department on the case will be disclosed.

Then followed a talk between the two of what a hero should be like and Miss Park told her that Trollope's were middle aged, the heroines all young and that really "none of his books had much plot."

The lady said she once saw a new book in the library called "Waverly" but the author kept his name a secret. She pictured him a big, dark, strong man.

She said her father was interested in Washington Irving's History of New York

Although her mother could not abide him her father really liked the new kind of minister, she said, and with Miss Park's help remembered that his name was Channing.

Speaking of her father reminded her that he liked a new magazine, The North American Review, but of course that was too intellectual for women. Jane Austen's new novel looked simple enough, and yet was too hard to read. The lovely lady was just then frightened away by the entrance of two elderly women, who came to see her portrait.

They remarked that the original was one of Boston's first families who died the birthday night after the picture was finished. Miss Park then discovered that on the picture was the date "1815."

SPEAKER OF THE EVENING.

Mr. Collins introduced the speaker of the evening, Lewis Perry, principal of Phillips Exeter academy.

The speaker gave some good straight from the shoulder advice to those about to enter college, particularly emphasizing the importance of college activities as a moulder of character.

He said success in college depended on the way this question of activities was answered by the freshman. Freshmen are always in awe of the "doers" among the upper-classmen and want to become "doers" themselves. They have contempt for the inconspicuous grinds.

"Look at that glorious time, Commencement. How little a part the curriculum plays. All are kindled with the thought of the great mother sending out her sons and daughters—this one a great orator, that one with a glorious voice, this one a powerful athlete, that one a wonderful essayist. 'All who make their mark make good.' All this glory based on some activity. Each excels in some line of endeavor.

"The first test of a man or woman is his or her social not intellectual success. Of course the activities are not to be overdone, but they are a wonderful developer of character.

"Athletics, for instance take away a man's conceit." Mr. Perry said he has seen a fellow one week gaining the sympathy from thousands over a sprained ankle in a game, and the next week cheerfully sweeping out an office. Athletes are more modest than the literary men or even, sad to say, than the religious workers.

"Undergraduate activities are not, as has been charged, a stumbling block," he exclaimed. "Many a boy has been made more manly by athletics and many a girl brought out in dramatics, who might have never found herself. All tend to make the boy or girl lose selfishness, gain confidence, and learn how to meet people."

He then told of the value of dramatics, the learning to love poetry and the many other things thus learned.

"The thing that makes faculties old before their time is the inactives, the inane, empty-headed bores, whose activities end for the day when the morning sporting page is read. They read of the sports but in actuality all they can play is tiddlety-winks and ping-pong. Their main recreation is the 'movies' but I don't intend here to discuss the 'movies' but I do wish to refute the statement that history, literature and even arithmetic may be learned from them. To be sure the sting would be eliminated from childhood could arithmetic be learned by the eye while the band played. You can see Paul Revere ride through every village and town in New England, and not learn history. You can see Little Nell have all the sorrows there are and not learn Dickens. A man with the 'movie' habit better never have been born.

"What is the college's attitude toward activities? 'Let me just say with the right kind of teachers to make the classes interesting, the activities will take care of themselves. Your motto in life should be, 'Be rather than do,' then you'll come out all right.

"Most boys of your age are fighting over on the other side of the water. You're living in a critical year. Make the most of it."

He then gave some advice about not feeling big by just "getting by." "And remember," he said, "in college it does not pay to advertise."

He ended by heartily exclaiming "I wish you God-speed on this great adventure."

PRESENTS DIPLOMAS.

John D. Mackay, Esq., chairman of the school committee gave some good advice to those going into business. He said:

"Members of the graduating class: It may be fairly assumed that you begin a post-graduate course tonight regardless of the fact that most of you will not continue the student life any longer, and on that assumption I wish to congratulate you on the fact that you have received the initial lesson of that course from the lips of the scholar who has preceded me. And if you are alive to your opportunity and your duty you will endeavor to carry his address with you and remember it as faithfully as if you expected to be examined upon its subject matter a little later. Rest assured, you will be examined and tried and tested before you get far in life not only in respect to what you have just heard tonight but also on everything else worth while which you heard within these walls during the last four years; and you will find these things will stand you in good stead in times of need if you do but translate them into your lives and characters.

"Your instruction by the City of Quincy has now ceased, but not so your education, I trust. It is to be hoped that you will keep on acquiring knowledge and developing your minds whether you are so fortunate as to go to college or not. Your teachers your principal, your superintendent the school committee, all derive satisfaction from the fact that here you have acquired that mental strength that courage and fortitude which will enable you to take up life's burdens and carry them without fainting.

"I am well aware that only a few of you can go to college. The most of you will be candidates for jobs tomorrow and every day thereafter until you obtain them. I wish I could say the word which would be helpful to you in this connection, but I fear I cannot. You must work out your own salvation, and I don't know that it matters greatly whether you do so in fear and trembling or in joy and triumph. The task is yours. The credit also will be yours if you win.

"While there are no jobs yearning for you to come and fill them, I haven't any doubt you will secure employment. High school graduates are not by any means a drug on the industrial market. Your talents and services will in the long run be in considerable demand. While at first it may seem to you that your employers are disposed to procure your services for less than they are reasonably worth, you will find that by being faithful to their interests you will be insuring the first step in your own promotion.

"Don't think that because your services are more in demand and command higher compensation than those of less education and training that you are the objects of any particular affection or solicitude on the part of the employing class. The man who would exploit your less fortunate brother or sister would do the same to you if he could. He would if he could reap dividends from your ill requited toil also, but the necessities of the case will generally be such that he will be obliged to pay for your work such rate of compensation as will enable you to live in a manner befitting an American.

"The times are very much out of joint. The question of greatest importance before us today arises from the fact that there is stupid injustice in our system of wealth production and distribution. There are enough of the good things of life for all, but the many are in need and the few are in luxury. It is inconceivable that such a system is necessary. A better order of things can be undoubtedly brought about. Indeed it is being gradually done. In this direction you can be of considerable help. Your intellectual training fits you to carry fairly heavy responsibilities. Is it unreasonable to say that you can be important factors in improving conditions in the industrial world?

"Look at the men in our state legislature, the men to whom are entrusted the affairs of our commonwealth. They are not on the average college men by any means, but men who had even less schooling than you have received. The same may be said of the men in our city councils and boards of aldermen. But they carry their responsibilities all right. They continued to grow mentally after leaving school, and now they are able to hold their own in important positions. You young men will have ample opportunity to serve your day and generation in public affairs.

"And let me say to the girls for their thoughtful consideration that if one half the time and thought and

BURNING UP MONEY.

The aggregate amount of leaf tobacco reported as in the hands of manufacturers and dealers and in United States bonded warehouses and bonded manufacturing warehouses on April 1, 1915, was 1,481,000,000 pounds This amount is exclusive of stocks held by manufacturers whose output during the preceding calendar year was less than 50,000 pounds of tobacco, 250,000 cigars, or 1,000,000 cigarettes; and by dealers who on an average had less than 50,000 pounds of tobacco in stock at the ends of four quarters of the preceding year. The total just given is more than 100,000,000 pounds greater than the corresponding one for April 1, 1914, and is about 122,000,000 pounds greater than the April 1, 1913 figure.

Chewing, smoking, snuff, and export types formed 69.2 per cent of the total leaf tobacco held; cigar types, 26.1 per cent: and imported types, 4.7 per cent. The leading individual type was Burley, of which there was reported 343,7000,000 pounds or 23.2 per cent of the total. Tobacco from the "Bright yellow district of Virginia, North Carolina and South Carolina" contributed 335,700,000 pounds, or 22.7 per cent, and tobacco classed as "Dark fired as grown in Clarksville, Hopkinsville, and Paducah districts" amounted to 158,700,000 pounds, or 10.7 per cent.

Of the cigar types, "Pennsylvania," with 127, 200,000 pounds, or 8.6 per cent: of the total for all types, was first; "Ohio" was next, with 91,000,000 pounds, or 6.1 per cent; and "Wisconsin" third, with 88,700,000 pounds, or 6 per cent.

Of the total, 570,000,000 pounds was returned as "actual weight," and 911,000,000 as "marked weight", that is, the weight marked on the container when the tobacco was packed, and for which an allowance for shrinkage must be made.

One hundred and fifty-nine million pounds, or 10.8 per cent of the total, was stemmed, and 1,322,000,000 pounds, or 89.2 per cent, was unstemmed.

The Census Bureau in preparing its regular semiannual tobacco reports has had the active cooperation and assistance of the Bureau of Internal Revenue and of the manufacturers and dealers. It is the intention of the bureau to issue an annual report after the publication of the October statistics, associating therewith the data as to production, consumption, imports, exports, condition, etc., published by the Bureau of Crop Estimates of the Department of Agriculture, the Bureau of Internal Revenue of the Treasury Department, and the Bureau of Foreign and and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce.

A four foot rattlesnake with 12 rattles was captured in the Blue Hill Reservation Wednesday by two young boys who were berrying. John Fruth and Joseph Kegier were suddenly startled when they heard a rattle at their feet and on turning saw the reptile about to spring for them. ## TYPHOID FEVER IN THE UNITED STATES

An editorial in the Journal of the American Medical Association, April 17th, says in part, "It is evident that Typhoid Fever is on the way to become a relatively rare disease in many parts of the United States. There are two main reasons for this. First, there are now comparatively few large cities in which the public water supply is likely to contain Typhoid Bacteria. Second, the increase in the practice of pasteurization has resulted in a dimunition in the amount of milk borne typhoid."

The Elm Farm Milk Company complying with the general demand by by the Medical Profession and Sanitarians, were one of the first to scientifically pasteurize their milk. This milk is offered at the same price that rules for ordinary milk.

This process is the only one that absolutely guarantees the safety of milk against all of the infectious diseases.

Elm Farm Milk means SAFETY, SERVICE, SATISFACTION.

HAD LONG BEEN HARNESS MAKER

Cornelius Cronin, who had carried on a harness making business in Quincy for many years, died Wednesday at the home of his brother P. J. Cronin at 228 Plain street, Lowell, after a long illness, aged about 56 years.

In his younger years Mr. Cronin had a desire to follow the sea and he made one trip. It was during this trip that while aloft he lost his balance and fell to the deck breaking his leg, which caused him afterward to walk with a limp. He was employed for many years by James E. Wild, but of late years has conducted a harness shop on the first floor of the Grand Army building. Owing to failing health he was obliged to give up business. He was at the City Hospital for some time and then was removed to the home of his brother in Lowell.

Funeral services will be held from the Sacred Heart church at Lowell, and the body will be brought to Quincy in the afternoon for burial in the family lot at St. Mary's cemetery. Mr. Cronin was never married.

AIRSHIP OWNER IS NOW KNOWN

Squantum, July 1—The name of the owner of the mysterious aeroplane housed in the hangar of the Squantum Women's club on the aviation field has been learned but those who know decline to announce it.

It is said however that it was brought there the latter part of the week by an aviator who is about to start a school and that two of his pupils visited the grounds Wednesday.

DISPENSARY IN FULL OPERATION

Miss Andrews who is in charge of the free dispensary which opened for the first time Wednesday afternoon reports that she put in a busy hour between 1 and 2 o'clock Wednesday answering questions of many who called to make inquiries. In the afternoon between 4 and 5 o'clock Dr. Diehl was at the office to make examinations and he put in a busy hour. Many people who thought that they might be afflicted with the white plague called for examination.

PUBLIC LIBRARY NOTES.

There is still a great deal of call for books concerning the European War, and although the Library is obliged to be extremely economical in its purchases this year, there are some books which go to make up the history of the world, which the Library must have.

Among these is a "History of Europe since 1815," by Charles Downer Hazen, published in 1910. It gives "the history of Austria, Russia, France and Italy in combination, and that of England, Russia, Turkey and minor countries, separately."

Another book is that in which a complete presentation of the important facts concerning the present war is given. This is the "Handbook of the European War," edited by Stanley S. Shelp.

"The Effects of War on Contractor and on Trading Associations in Territories of Belligerents," by Coleman Phillipson is also a work of interest just now.

In his "Audacious War," Clarence W. Barron has made a study of the conditions from a finacial stand-point, bringing out, especially, the causes of the outbreak and in the last chapters, giving a consideration of the lessons which the United States should learn from the war and of what peace should mean.

But by far the most interesting to general readers are two by well-known writers. "With the Allies," by Richard Harding Davis, and "Fighting in Flanders," by E. Alexander Powell. These are first hand accounts by eye-witnesses of the campaign in Belgium The graphic word pictures in both books are augmented by illustrations from photographs taken at the front.

FOY EMPLOYEES CAPTURE GAME

The game between the base ball team of the R. E. Foy employees and the J. G. and B. S. Ferguson team at Forest Hills Wednesday afternoon was won by the Quincy combination by a score of 8 to 7.

The finish of the Foy team was strong, the result of the effective pitching of McGrane who struck out the last three men. The hits were few and scattered. The game was exciting from the beginning, both teams being on their toes because of the close rivalry between them.

Donald Berry made the best hit of the day. It sewed up the game for the Foy team. In many respects the game was a battle between the pitchers until the sixth inning when Godfrey the bakers twirler went into the air somewhat. The summary:

MONTCLAIR BOYS BEAT SQUANTUM

Montclair won a closely contested game of ball from the Squantum boys [illegible] the Squantum field Wednesday forenoon. The inability of the Squantum boys to hit Whalen, the Montclair twirler, at important points in the game, won the victory for the visiting team. The Squantum boys played a fine fielding game but did not bring in base runners when runs were needed.

Callahan pitched a good game and struck out eight men. Pope struck out 12 of the Squantum boys and had excellent control of the game at all time. Two or three costly errors lost the game for the Squantum boys in addition to their poor work at the bat.

A fair-sized crowd saw the game. The Squantum boys made a fine rally in the ninth inning and brought in two runs but the Montclairs had too big a lead for the local boys to overcome.

WEST STREETS BEAT ALL STARS

The West streets defeated the All Stars in an exciting game Wednesday evening at Spring pasture. The game was witnessed by about a hundred fans who cheered lustily. The score at the close of the fifth inning was nine to six in favor of the All stars who went out in the sixth confident of victory. Three successive hits placed the three West Streets on bases and Bonafini a heavy hitter up. He knocked a slow grounder to Marini who fumbled and let in three runs. Bonafini scored on a past ball and the game was over. The final score was 10 to 9.

Batteries:

West street: Kusser and Colletti.

All Stars: Cazzalio and Pangraze.

Miss Catherine Moynihan, formerly of Main street, Quincy Point, returned to her home in Brockton Wednesday after a week's visit with friends in Quincy and Weymouth.

JUNE HAS SEEN MANY WEDDINGS

With the tolling of the hour of midnight Wednesday, June, the most popular month of all the year, for blushing brides and stately grooms, passed into history. The brides have laid away the beautiful wedding finery with a sigh. The congratulations that have been heaped upon them by loving friends have been laid up in the archives of memory. The exciting and expectant days of preparation and the trying scenes attendant upon the final ceremony have passed. Now hand in hand, the bride and groom of a few days turn toward the world, determined to face bravely together life's many trials and perplexities.

The month has been a busy one for local clergymen who have been called upon to say the magic words. There is one man, whom the law obliges shall be notified in advance, and that is the city clerk. He however keeps the secrets well and one might as well try to squeeze gold out of the sea as to get him to divulge the secrets of his office.

Until the clergymen make official return of the marriages they have performed it is impossible to tell the exact number. Some clergymen are very prompt in making their returns, while others seem to take delight in holding them back until the last possible moment and then it occasionally happens that the city clerk has to drop a postal card in order to obtain the data necessary to complete his records.

However it is possible to form an idea of the number of marriages for the city clerk has unburdened himself to the extent of saying that during the month of June 1915 he issued 54 marriage licenses, or two less than was issued during the month of June 1914.

Doubtless some licenses were issued the latter part of May while the ceremony was not performed until June. It is also possibly true that some licenses issued in June will not be used until July.

There will of course be some weddings during the month of July and August but the number will fall off considerably during the extreme hot weather. November, however, will see business in this line booming again for the fact is November and June are rival months for marriages, with June well in the lead.

As a rule, the weddings of the month, outside of those of the Catholic faith, were home weddings. There were, however, three prominent church weddings. Two of these were at the First Parish church and were officiated at by Rev. Adelbert Lathrop Hudson, and the third was at the Wollaston Baptist church, Rev. Joseph Walther officiating.

The first of the church weddings was that of Miss Edna Lewis Smith, who on June 9th become the bride of George Willard Gay of Norwood. This wedding was followed by a brilliant reception in the chapel of the church.

The second church wedding of note was that of Miss Muriel May Badger of Wollaston to John Edward Booth, of Burlington, Vt. This took place at the Wollaston Baptist church June 15 and was followed by a largely attended reception at the home of the bride 9 Park street.

The third church wedding was that of Miss Mary Munroe Faxon, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Munroe Faxon to Lemuel Bannister, of Montclair, N. J. This wedding was solemnized at the First Parish church at 8 o'clock June 28 and was followed by a large and brilliant reception at the home of the bride's parents on Adams street.

Many of the home weddings were largely attended and very pretty affairs. Most of the newly married couples on their return from their honeymoon will reside in Quincy.

OLD TIME STYLES.

Grenadines and Voiles—Transparent Hats—Angular Lines—Cretonne Bridles And Skirts—Elaborate Simplicity That Conserves Economy.

Never were this Metropolis and its many suburbs so closely connected, for swift motor-cars make nothing of a run to town for shopping or a lunch at some of the fashionable places, or a cross country trip to one of the other centres where festivities are enticing.

Practically everyone gets about in this fashion or goes part way by train if that is more convenient, hence, all sorts of top coats have come to play a most important part in the wardrobe. One can put several of these to good use, or if clever at planning make one or two do as much service as seven. A plain stylishly cut coat of velvet finished wool, or golfine, will go nearly anywhere suitably and top with equal propriety a plain dress or a fussy one, while for warmer days the Tussore silk and taffeta coats are both comfortable and pretty.

GRENADINES AND VOILES.

Grenadines and voiles are back in favor in both the silk and cotton weaves. Silk trimmings are so much employed on the cottons with little silk sleeveless overblouses that these are quite as much used for festive affairs as are the more costly fabrics. It is this, combination of plain and figured, thick and transparent weaves which creates an effect of elaboration when very often the dress itself is quite simply gotten up, and quite within the skill of almost any good home dressmaker.

McCall Design

GRANDMOTHER'S STYLES.

All the fallals and fashions dear to our Grandmothers are revived in today's styles. Transparent sleeves of chiffon or net make taffeta and other silk gowns comfortable and attractive, while a host of sleeveless models for evening and dance wear with dainty floating draperies of tulle show a perfect arm to advantage, but are a bit trying to one that needs first aid to beauty to be presentable.

Our Grandmothers solved this same problem more than half a century ago, by using X Bazin depilatory powder, which removes any unsightly hairs promptly without injuring the skin, but compartively few women know that this can still be obtained, if one will take the trouble to ask for it at any well-stocked counter where toilet articles are carried.

CRETONNE FANCIES.

The smart shops on Fifth Avenue are showing very pretty "Bridles" made of cretonne with straps that go over the shoulders and pocket pieces that set over the skirt on either side, all held in place, with a strapped belt With most of these there is an extra collar of the figured cretonne to top the coat collar of the suit. Skirts of flowered cretonnes in stripes are another fad of the moment. These are at their best topped with a black velvet harness, or a black silk coat.

TRANSPARENT HATS.

Hats with their brims or crowns of transparent material accord so perfectly with fussy victorian styles that their popularity is easily accounted for. One sees quite a lot of hat brims either square or triangular, and parasols take the same freakish lines, only more so. The latest thing in a parasol of broadcloth unlined and embroidered at the edge in a cross stitch design. For beach use parasols of cretonne are modish and durable.

A GIRLISH GET-UP.

At a garden party on Long Island a girlish frock that was greatly admired was of white dotted swiss muslin, the full gathered skirt trimmed with three tucks of blue taffeta and the simple transparent blouse of the muslin topped with a short sleeveless blouse of the silk which was cut away sharply in front, from bust to waist line, where it was held in place by three narrow straps. A little frilled peplum completed this.

The hat of blue crin, in flat wide shape, was wreathed with pink crush roses and black velvet streamers fell well below the waist line at the back.

STORES MUST BE CLEANED AT ONCE

If the business men of Quincy do not get busy and clean up the cellars of their stores between now and Saturday morning Chief Billings will close the stores without further notice. Commencing this afternoon Chief Billings and details of firemen will visit every business house in the city and examine the cellars of the stores. If they are cluttered up with rubbish the proprietors will be informed that if not cleaned up by Saturday morning the store will be closed.

According to Chief Billings the Fourth of July is a bad time for fires. The weather is very likely to be hot and with cellars filled with rubbish and closed up for two days, spontaneous combustion is likely to start a big fire.

According to Chief Billings he is acting under orders of the Fire Prevention Commissioner and the orders will be strictly enforced.

AUTO CASES IN COURT TODAY

The case of Mrs. M. Snow, said to be the wife of a prominent Boston attorney, in court this morning in connection with violations of the auto law, was dismissed for want of prosecution.

J. MacDonald was fined $25 for operating without a license in Milton. Other violations of speed laws on the Blue hill parkway were disposed of on payments of $10 costs, pleas of nolo contendere being accepted in all cases. Those in court were Clarence S. Freeman, 18, of 50 Parker street, Chelsea; Robert T. Burr, 19, of 9 Walton street, Boston; Stephen Palmer, 57, of 16 Raymond street, Everett; Harry R. Stanley, 30, of 1090 Beacon street, Brookline.

CELEBRATES HER 11th BIRTHDAY

There was a birthday party at the bungalow of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Johnson of Adams shore Wednesday afternoon for Pearl Richmond Johnson, one of the daughters. The affair was given by the parents in honor of the little girl's 11th birthday anniversary and nearly a score of children at the shore were the guests.

The bungalow was decorated with field flowers and streamers of crepe paper and during the afternoon games were played by the "kiddies."

The special guest was Mrs. Margaret Burke, the 80 year old grandmother of little Pearl. Two of the boys played the part of colored waiters and served the refreshments. It was some minutes before the children recognized their playmates through the heavy color which was smeared on their faces.

Among those present were Constance Youngquist, Theda Loud, Nellie Harold, Ellsworth Loud, Philip Woodsim, Elmer Rogers, Doris Johnson, James Johnson, Alice Rooney, Dorothy Stockinger, Jason Sabian and Richard Loud.

BENJ. E. CORLEW.

The funeral of Benjamin E. Corlew who died at Brookline, was held Wednesday from his late home,1651 Beacon street, services being conducted by Rev. Philip A. Nordell of Brookline, which is part included the ritual service of the Grand Army. Among the many at the funeral were members of the Old Hawes School Boys association, G. H. Dalrymple post, G. A. R., and the Women's Relief Corps. The burial was at Cedar Grove cemetery, Dorchester.

Mr. Corlew was the father of Miss Julia E. Corlew, the well known instructor of dancing who has had many classes in Quincy and Wollaston. For several years he was the proprietor of the Bayside hotel at North Weymouth, a summer resort.

GRADUATE OF AMHERST.

money and energy which is expended through the channels of organized charity were devoted to the proper solution of the industrial and economic problems of our time, the hateful word "charity" would almost disappear from our speech and its place would be taken by justice. Only that degree of poverty would remain which is attributable to defects of character, and that is only about sixteen per cent of the total. The rest is due to injustice. It is preventable poverty.

"I congratulate you on the fact that you are about to receive these diplomas and especially on the fact that you have earned them. By your industry, your perseverance and by your demeanor and conduct during the course you have become entitled to be called ladies and gentlemen and you have entitled yourselves to these important documents which it is my honor and pleasure now to hand to you."

After singing the class song the seniors for the last time marched out of the assembly hall. The words of the song were composed by Miss Pauline Brogan and the music by Miss Rosalie DuTemple. Miss Brogan led the singing.

OFFICIATES AT FIRST MARRIAGE

Fr. Mark E. Madden, the newly appointed pastor of the parish of Most Blessed Sacrament at Houghs Neck, officiated at the first marriage since he assumed his new duties on Tuesday evening. The contracting parties were Mathias C. Harcourt, 22 years, of 19 Pequot road, an engineer, and Clara Mary Tees of 22 Pequot road. The marriage became known this morning when the return was filed at the office of City Clerk Crane.

RELUCTANT GIVING.

Now boys," said a Sunday school teacher, "I want each of you to subscribe something towards the mission to the Caribo s. I shall hand the box round, and as each of you contribute you will, I hope, say an appropriate text. Now Charlie, show a good example."

A ruddy-faced urchin stepped forward, dropped in his coin, and observed:

"It is better to give than to receive."

Then another contributed a copper, saying:

"Waste not, want not."

This was ruled somewhat out of order, but it was fairly capped by a third youngster, who evidently parted with his penny with extreme reluctance, for as he dropped it into the box he murmured:

MILLIONS THRONGING TO THE GREAT PANAMA-PACIFIC INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION

Now Is the Time to Visit America's Huge Panama Canal Celebration at San Francisco; Be There When the Liberty Bell Arrives, July 16th; Marvelous Exhibits From All Corners of the Globe on Display.

MINIATURE BATTLESHIP BLOWN UP AND MINE EXPLOSION INTERESTING FEATURES IN TWO EXHIBITION PALACES

Amazing Voice Amplifier and Other Wonders of the World's Progress at the Great Panama-Pacific Canal Celebration—This Year the Year of All Years to Take Marvel Journey to the Pacific Coast.

FROM every part of the world visitors are thronging to the great Exposition at San Francisco. The Exposition there is the most comprehensive and interesting of all universal expositions, and it will probably be the last to be held within the present generation. Now is the time to see it.

The Panama-Pacific International Exposition, which opened on Feb. 20 last, has charmed the millions who have already beheld the magic city by the Golden Gate.

The marvels of the universe are displayed in the vast exhibit palaces, affording the most comprehensive summary of the world's progress ever disclosed. Many of the exhibits are as revolutionary in their character and mean as much to future generations as did the locomotive or telegraph when it was first introduced. The Audion amplifier, for example, makes it possible for a man in New York city to deliver an address through the telephone to a large audience in San Francisco, 3,000 miles away. Through the use of heat waves the intensity of the voice vibrations is increased to such an extent that, although the orator may deliver his address in a low voice into the telephone in New York, in San Francisco it is possible to increase the sound in volume sufficient to fill a large hall. On the other hand, the New York speaker's address may be distributed through telephonic receiving disks attached to each chair in the hall in San Francisco. In one of the exhibit palaces visitors may, without charge, hear a man in New York read from the headlines of the New York newspapers. This performance begins in the Palace of Liberal Arts each day at 3 o'clock.

The amazing voice amplifier is but one of many revolutionary scientific advances demonstrated at the Exposition. The invention has made possible the transcontinental telephone, and the principle which is applied has not been developed to its fullest extent. It is said that with the probable development of the long distance wireless telephone this new invention will make it possible to project the human voice halfway around the globe without the use of a telephone wire. Contrast the era sixty-five years ago, when the pioneer required months to cross the plains, with that of today, when the orator in New York may address his audience in San Francisco.

And there are many other developments as wonderful and as revolutionary, all revealing the trend of the world's progress in the arts, sciences and industries. If you are interested in mining, for example, beneath the floor of the vast Palace of Mines you may find a mine in operation, with its stopes and tunnels and shafts and compressed air drills. Wait a moment and you may witness an explosion in the mine. A gong rings; an ambulance dashes up with a corps of rescuers provided with respiratory apparatus, and effects a rescue.

In the Palace of Machinery you may see a miniature battleship blown up by a miniature mine patterned after one of the latest types of the submarine mine. In the Palace of Education you will see classes of students engaged in their studies, and perhaps you may be able to see Mme. Montessori, the celebrated Italian teacher, instructing classes of children. A great purpose of the Exposition is to show not only results and finished products, but the methods, processes and principles by which results are achieved. In the exhibit palaces and state buildings motion pictures are freely employed with this object in view. There are forty-three free cinematograph shows upon the Exposition grounds, and, by the way, there is no charge to enter the exhibit palaces. Once you have entered the Exposition grounds all the displays of the states and nations are spread before you. In the great Australian Pavilion and in the Palace of Manufactures gem cutters are to be seen at work, while exhibitions of a model postoffice in full operation, of a model laundry, of a paint manufacturing machine, of a broom manufactory in operation, of an automobile manufactory, with an almost endless succession of other operating machines, illustrate the advance in industrial processes. Man is becoming more and more a master of the machine, with the electrical current as the intermediary to lighten the burden of personal supervision.

If you are interested in what the foreign nations have accomplished you have only to visit the marvelous displays of the European countries or of those of the Orient or South America, Canada or Australia. Among the French displays you may, if you wish, behold priceless works of art never before exhibited in America and which at the Exposition find sanctuary from the ravages of war.

ALL AMERICA ON EXHIBITION THIS YEAR; RAILROADS GRANT LOW ROUND TRIP RATES TO SEE UNIVERSE'S MARVELS

Privileges of Routing Never Before Offered—Hotel Rates Average Less Than Those of Other Great Cities and 125,000 Rooms Available In Hotels and Apartment Houses In San Francisco.

THERE is something helpful and inspiring for every one at the Exposition. Said Vice President Marshall recently: "Whoever can, even at a sacrifice of something which for the moment appears necessary, should come to see a real work of art never equaled, even by a mirage. If there be any one in America with a thirst for knowledge and for beauty and a longing for a liberal education, such a one can obtain it here.

"This is the university of the world. It has a chair fully endowed to meet the wants and needs of each. The eye, the ear, the mind, the heart, the soul, each may have its horizon here enlarged. I came to beat a message. I remain to become a student. I leave the feet of this Gamaliel of all expositions with regret." And Miss Helen Keller, who, as all know, is both blind and deaf, having acquired the faculty of speech, although she has never heard any one speak, said of her visit to the Exposition that it was the most inspiring period of her life. Said Dr. Frederick J. V. Skiff: "Here the world is shown in epitome. The visitor from whatever realm here enters into his native land."

Apart from its costly and comprehensive displays, the great Exposition is an inspiration in itself. In its architectural beauty the Panama-Pacific International Exposition surpasses any of its predecessors. At night the great Tower of Jewels stands out satin-white, sparkling with a thousand changing colors, as batteries of searchlights play upon this pyramidal monument, the loftiest structure at the Exposition and as tall as the average thirty-five story city block. The coloring of the Exposition, the decorative lighting at night, the sculpture and the landscaping are all the work of foremost men in their respective fields.

At this writing the great Exposition is under full swing, and if you have not already made plans to see it early you should do so at once. Now is the time to visit the Exposition and the great Pacific coast region and, in so doing, to take advantage of the opportunity to make the most wonderful journey in the world in the most wonderful country on earth, the United States of America, under more favorable conditions of routing and travel than have ever prevailed before. The railroads are reducing rates from every part of America, and the low round trip rates will enable the visitor to come by one route and return by another. Thus you see the same parts of the country but once, and both your going and returning journeys are new and distinct travel trips.

Hot weather is unknown in San Francisco. Although flowers bloom the year round, it is as cool in summer as in winter, the average temperature being about 60 degrees. When you reach San Francisco you will, of course, wish to find accommodations without unnecessary delay, and, while you will find some accommodations necessarily much more expensive than others, you will be able to secure a room at a dollar a day and up. Indeed, one can find all sorts of rooms in the great city of San Francisco, which in reality is a much greater center than the census would indicate, since, with its neighboring cities around San Francisco bay, it forms a group of cities with a population of almost 1,000,000 persons. Hotel rates in San Francisco are no more than they are in any other great city in the United States. As a help to visitors the Exposition maintains the Exposition Hotel Bureau, an official activity which is conducted with the co-operation and assistance of a committee of representative hotel men of San Francisco, Oakland and Berkeley. This Hotel Bureau has no purpose other than to serve the public. It is not a profit making institution. If you want full particulars as to accommodations address the Official Exposition Hotel Bureau, Flannery building, Market and Kearny streets, San Francisco. In writing, it would be well to state how many there are in your party and how long you desire to stay.

There are accommodations for all in the great city by the Golden Gate, and one need only glance through the classified columns of the San Francisco papers to find how great is the variety of the accommodations offered, while a ride through the rebuilt city will show hundreds and hundreds of hotels and apartment houses, all constructed within the past eight years.

So do not fail to see the Exposition early. The journey there is a journey through the most interesting country in the world, and when you have reached the Exposition you will find the whole world spread out before you. The greatest geniuses of the age and the greatest nations of the world have contributed the earth's supremest achievements, and a visit to the Exposition is not only an education, but an inspiration.

SPORTING COMMENT

The Redmen A. C. of South Quincy will play the strong West Quincy team at the Ward three playground Saturday. The game starts at three o'clock.

The holiday will not pass without a league game, the Fore Rivers and Game well Fire Alarm Co. of Newton being billed at Merrymount park in a Manufacturers league game. The Makaria team, which was to face Fore River, has made other plans.

It is rumored that the Misses Marion and Amy Fallon will do the battery work for the Sanctuary Girls in the game with the sodality at the St. John's parish field day. Miss Julia Duffy, manager of the sodality girls, has kept the lineup of her team a secret.

Link Elcock is playing at Warwick, N. Y., with the independent team of that place. He is holding down second base. Three games a week are played. He passes Sunday by playing with the team at Patterson, New Jersey.

Quoits has been introduced as the pastime at police headquarters. Several winning combinations are made up.

WATER BILLS DELAYED.

Not To Go Out Until New Rates Adjusted.

Today is the day upon which the water bills for the coming six months are usually sent through the mails to consumers. Not so today, however, for owing to a delay in fixing the new water rates it will be several weeks before they go out. It is understood that with the bills will be a statement of the changes in water rates.

This is due to a large extent to the work of the Mayor and the special committee on water investigation appointed by the City Council some months ago. The Mayor has been working with the committee and one of the first things done was to employ an expert who spent some time in Quincy investigating the water system. The new rates will doubtless be in accordance with his recommendations.

"IS IT JUST A COLD?"

Quincy People Should Ask Themselves This Question.

Don't say: "It's just a cold."

It may turn into backache, rheumatic aches, achy joints.

Or other serious sickness that comes from weak kidneys.

Colds are due to congestion.

Colds often leave the kidneys weak.

First break the cold;

Then use Doan's Kidney Pills to avert the kidney dangers.

Let this Quincy resident tell you about them:

G. E. Mitchell, proprietor restaurant 26 & 27 Temple Street, Quincy, says: "A severe cold settled in my kidneys and disordered them. I didn't seem able to overcome the trouble until I used one box of Doan's Kidney Pills. I improved at once and since then haven't needed a kidney medicine. I know that Doan's Kidney Pills are a reliable medicine for the back and kidneys."

Price 50c. at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mr. Mitchell had. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

TAKE MEASURE OF LOCAL POLICE

Lynnites Wield Stick More Effectively

The Lynn police came from behind and won out from the Quincy police in a Massachusetts league game at Merrymount park Tuesday by a score of 11 to 8. The features of the game was the batting of Lynn of the visitors and the fielding of Fallon of Quincy.

The local boys scored all of their runs in the first three innings. After that Gannon; Lynn's twirler, improved and held them down to infield hits. Quincy netted nine hits while the visitors secured 15. In the last half of the game some of the Quincy players commenced to be effected by the weather and were unable to field the ball with any speed.

Four home runs were made during the game. Henry Riley getting one of them. The cleanest wallop was made by Gannon who drove the ball to Hancock street. Whelan did some good base running, stealing three bases. On one circuit he stole and drew a wild throw, which allowed him to score. The summary:

CIRCUS IS DUE HERE ON FRIDAY

Back to those halycon days when we were barefoot kiddies we will be taken by the arrival of that giant world toured shows, the Jones Bros.' Big Three-Ring Wild Animal Circus, which comes to our city on Friday for an afternoon and evening performance. It requires two trains of steel cars to bring this circus and menagerie of wild animals to us and as usual a warm welcome awaits them.

A visit to the great show is not complete without at least an hour spent inspecting this wonderful collection of wild beasts of every clime which are exhibited in a condition as near to nature as the exigencies of travel will permit. To the children it is the realization of their dreams, and the practical illustration of many a nursery tale. To men and women it is an incentive to intellectual thought and speculation. To the man who is still a boy at heart, the word "circus" brings back visions of joy supreme, of days that stand out high above all other wonderful days.

Do you remember how you once watched the men putting up the posters, those fascinating heralds of joys to come? How you couldn't sleep at nights for thinking of the great time you would have when the show came to town. And you tell yourself, now that you are a man, that you will send the children to the circus because they must be amused, and then you become strictly honest with yourself and admit that you, too, are going, because you want to go to the circus to bring back a little of the joy that was yours when you were a boy.

SEVERLY CUT.

Joseph Bertrand of Hilbert street suffered a severe cut on the hand Wednesday morning at the Hitchcock Quarry where he is employed. He was climbing up from the quarry and was stepping over a large stone when his foot slipped and threw him on the ground. He put out his hand to protect himself from falling back into the quarry and struck a sharp stone inflicting a deep cut. It was necessary to take two stitches in the wound.

IS TO MANAGE TEAM IN MAINE

Joseph Ford To Take Eight of Blues

An entire change in the plans of the blues who were to tour Maine has been made, Joseph Ford, promotor of the trip, having been appointed manager of an independent ball team at Livermore Falls, Me. His appointment carries with it the choice of players, and most of them will be local boys.

Ford will leave tonight to complete preliminaries for the team. Those who will play will follow in a few days.

Included in the lineup will be Frahar, Gloster, Ray Condrick and Reggie Nash of Weymouth; Jimmie Michaels, Wes Ganzel, Frank Hoyt, Tizzer Carlson of Quincy.

The vacancies will be filled by players at Livermore Falls.

POST "COMBO" WINS AGAIN

The Y. M. C. A. team lost to the Saturday Evening Post Wednesday at Merrymount park by a score of 12 to 0.

The Y. M. C. A. nine was patched up team, and without the services of four of the regular players. Mr. Humphries, the "smiling church league official" who is also pretty well known around the Y. M. C. A. went in as a substitute and together with Gusta was the whole Y. M. C. A. combination.

The Posts walloped out a total of 17 hits. The Y. M. C. A. boys could get but one hit from Hultin who pitched a good game for the Posts. Galvin, Mahoney and Melville made 4 hits each and excelled in battery while Humphries and Asklund were the fielding "stars."

The score:

WALTERS AND BAKER VICTORS

Sidney Baker and A. W. Walters beat their men in the third round of the state junior golf championships but lost in the semi-finals at the Albemarle club at Newton Wednesday. Fred J. Wright of Watertown High and Tom Mahan of the Heath school play the finals today, unless postponed because of the heavy links.

Joe Lally, Brookline High, picked as the winner and the winner of the medal on the opening day from George Kerrigan of Atlantic, fell by the wayside. He was beaten by 2 and 1 by Wright. Wright eliminated Sid Baker in the third round by 6 and 4. Mahan beat Walters by 2 and 1.

In his match with Walters, Mahan was never up until the 15th was played. They alternated in winning the first two holes, and the next three were halved in 4's. The following four holes see-sawed, and the boys were all even starting for home, with both taking 36 for their first nine. Walters won the first hole of the second round in 4 and 5, and following a half in 4 at the second Mahan evened the match by winning the third in 4 to 5, and won by 2 and 1.

Tomorrow morning at 10 o 'clock the final match for the title will be played between Mahan and Wright. It will be at 36 holes. The summary:

THIRD ROUND.

Tom Mahan, Heath school, beat M. P. Graham, Waltham High, by 3 and 1.

A. W. Walters, Quincy High, beat H. J. Hughes, Wellesley High, by 7 and 6.

Fred J. Wright, Watertown High, beat Joseph Lally, Brookline High, by 2 and 1.

SEMI-FINAL ROUND.

Mahan beat Walters, by 2 and 1.
Wright beat Baker, by 6 and 4.

DON'T DO IT AGAIN.

An enterprising local firm gave away several hundred horns Wednesday afternoon, and the natural result followed. Young America enlivened City Square with a din that was deafening for a time.

WASHOUT TIES UP CARS.

Owing to a washout of the street car tracks on Squantum street near the entrance to the old aviation field, the car leaving Neponset at 6 o'clock this morning was unable to get through and passengers had to transfer. This occurred on two of the early morning trips.

QUINCY POINTERS GUARD BONFIRE

Pile of South Quincy Boys Goes Up in Flames

(By Pryo)

Town River Yacht club, July 1—Tide swept over Pin Cushion island this morning, carried away some of the bon fire material. It was a couple of hours late however, permission to have the fire on the old wharf being granted late last night and most of the wood being moved across the river. Today Pin Cushion island and non est is synonomous.

A week ago the South Quincy boys who prepared a bon fire for the Fourth of July celebration were drawn to its site only to see it in flames. Someone had fired the pile and the labor of weeks went up in smoke. Who set it and why it was done has never been learned. The finger of suspicion was pointed at some of the Quincy Point boys, the reason pointed out being that they wanted to be the only ones to have an illumination.

So a vigilance committee has been formed down at the Point to prevent any acts of revenge and from now until the match is touched to the monstrous pile of boxes, sleepers, barrels and other wreckage, the committee will be wide awake.

Gus Keith, who is so tall and rangy—one step and he is over in North Weymouth—is said to be captain of the guards. Their watch has been lonely but last night the heavy rain nearly soaked through the tent, no one making preparations to protect it. This morning some of the boys are nursing the beginnings of colds.

Joseph Pinel, chairman of the committee, will set the fire at five minutes after midnight Sunday. It will be the only one on the South Shore, no other permits being granted, it is understood.

The general committee has arranged for a final meeting at the Town River Yacht club, which fostered the celebration, on Saturday evening. Then the minor details of the extensive program has been completed and the collectors will make the balance of their returns.

During the week the committees have left printed programs of the celebration at nearly every home in the Ward two section and hundreds of official score cards have been given out. The badges have been distributed and even the umpires of the ball game will have an official ribboned designation. The badges are tri-colored—red, white and blue, and are marked "Ward Two Celebration, Independence Day, 1915."

VACANT LOT GARDENING.

Vacant lot gardening is quite the rage in many cities this year. There is more or less land in all of them which might well be cultivated. Such farming would reduce the cost of living to all who engaged in it. Last year Philadelphia went into the business on a considerable scale. More then 800 families took part and the crops raised were worth $60,000, or about $75 to a family. Washington, New York, Chicago, Cincinnati, Cleveland and Newark had gardens of the kind. They pay.—Framingham News.

A Romance of the Bear Tooth Range

By HAMLIN GARLAND

Copyright, 1914, by Hamlin Garland

She stirred uneasily under his frank admiration. "I'm mightily obliged to you," she replied, as heartily as she could command.

"Don't thank me. I'm indebted to you. There is so little in my life of such companionship as you and Norcross give me."

He helped Norcross mount his horse, and as he put the lead rope into Berrie's hand he said, with much feeling: "Good luck to you. I shall remember this night all the rest of my life, Miss Berrie."

"I hate to be going to the rear," called Wayland, whose bare, bandaged head made him look like a wounded young officer. "But I guess it's better for me to lay off a week or two and recover my tone."

And so they parted, the surveyor riding his determined way up the naked mountain side toward the clouds, while Berrie and her ward plunged at once into the dark and dripping forest below. "If you can stand the grief," she said, "we'll go clear through."

Her caution was all for him. She tried each dangerous slough first and thus was able to advise him which way was safest. His head throbbed with pain and his knees were weary, but he rode on.

At last they came into open ground on a high ridge and were gladdened by the valley outspread below them, for it was still radiant with color, though not as brilliant as before the rain.

At 1 o'clock on the bank of a clear stream the girl halted. "I reckon we'd better camp awhile. You look tired, and I am hungry."

She unsaddled one pack animal and spread some blankets on the grass. "Lie down and rest while I boil some coffee," she commanded, and he obeyed, too tired to make pretension toward assisting.

Lying so, feeling the magic of the sun, hearing the music of the water and watching the girl, he regained a serener mood, and when she came back with his food he thanked her for it with a glance before which her eyes fell. "I don't see why you are so kind to me. I really believe you like to do things for me." Her head drooped to hide her face, and he went on: "Why do you care for me? Tell me!"

"I don't know," she murmured. Then she added, with a flash of bravery, "But I do."

"What a mystery it all is! You turn from a splendid fellow like Landon to a 'skate' like me. Landon worships you—you know that—don't you?"

"I know—he"— she ended, vaguely distressed.

"Did he ask you to marry him?"

"Yes."

"Why didn't you? He's just the mate for you. He's a man of high character and education." She made no answer to this, and he went on: "Dear girl, I'm not worth your care—truly, I'm not. I resented your engagement to Belden, for he was a brute, but Landon is different. He thinks the world of you. He'll go high in the service. I've never done anything in the world—I never shall. It will be better for you if I go—tomorrow."

She took his hand and pressed it to her cheek, then, putting her arm about his neck, drew him to her bosom and kissed him passionately. "You break my heart when you talk like that," she protested, with tears. "You mustn't say such gloomy things—I won't let you give up. You shall come right home with me, and I will nurse you till you are well. It was all my fault."

"I will not have it go that way," he said. "I've brought you only care and unhappiness thus far. I'm an alien—my ways are not your ways."

"I can change," she answered. "I hate my ways, and I like yours."

As they argued she felt no shame, and he voiced no resentment. She knew his mood. She understood his doubt, his depression. She pleaded as a man might have done, ready to prove her love, eager to restore his self respect, while he remained both bitter and sadly contemptuous.

A cow hand riding up the trail greeted Berrie respectfully, but a cynical smile broke out on his lips as he passed on. Another witness; another gossip.

She did not care. She had no further concern of the valley's comment. Her life's happiness hung on the drooping eyelashes of this wounded boy, and to win him back to cheerful acceptance of life was her only concern.

"I've never had any motives," he confessed. "I've always done what pleased me at the moment—or because it was easier to do as others were doing. I went to college that way. Truth is, I never had any surplus vitality, and my father never demanded anything of me. I haven't any motives now. A few days ago I was interested in forestry. At this time it all seems futile. What's the use of my trying to live?"

CHAPTER XIV.

The Gossips Awake.

BERRIE was frightened for Wayland, and as she thought of the long ride still before them she wrung her hands. "Oh, what shall I do? What shall I do?" she moaned.

Instantly smitten into shame, into manlier mood, he said: "Don't worry about me. Please don't. I can ride. I'm feeling better. You must not weaken. Please forgive my selfish complaints. I'm done! You'll never hear it again. Come! Let us go on. I can ride."

"If we can reach Miller's ranch"—

"You can ride to your ranch!" he declared, and rose with such new found resolution that she stared at him in wonder.

He was able to smile. "I've had my little crying spell. I've relieved my heart of its load. I didn't mean to agonize you. It was only a slump." He put his hand to his head. "I must be a comic figure."

His sudden reversal to cheer was a little alarming to her, but at length she perceived that he had in truth mastered his depression, and, bringing up the horses, she saddled them and helped him to mount. "If you get tired or feel worse tell me, and we'll go into camp," she urged as they were about to start.

"You keep going till I give the sign," he replied, and his voice was so firm and clear that her own sunny smile came back. "I don't know what to make of you," she said. "I reckon you must be a poet."

It was dark when they reached the village, but Wayland declared his ability to go on, although his wounded head was throbbing with fever and he was clinging to the pommel of his saddle; so Berrie rode on.

Mrs. McFarlane, hearing the horses on the bridge, was at the door and received her daughter with wondering questions, while the stable hands, quick to detect an injured man, hurried to lift Norcross down from his saddle.

"What's the matter?" repeated Mrs. McFarlane.

"He fell and struck his head on a stone," Berrie hastily explained. "Take the horses, boys! Mother and I will look out for Mr. Norcross."

The men obeyed her and fell back, but they were consumed with curiosity, and their glances irritated the girl. "Slip the packs at once," she insisted.

With instant sympathy her mother came to her aid in supporting the wounded, weary youth indoors, and as he stretched out on the couch in the sitting room he remarked with a faint, ironic smile, "This beats any bed of balsam boughs."

"Where's your father?" asked Mrs. McFarlane of her daughter.

"He's over on the Ptarmigan. I've a powerful lot to tell you, mother, but not now; we must look after Wayland. He's nearly done up, and so am I."

Mrs. McFarlane winced a little at her daughter's use of Norcross' first name, but she said nothing further at the moment, although she watched Berrie closely while she took off Wayland's shoes and stockings and rubbed his icy feet. "Get him something hot as quick as you can!" she commanded, and Mrs McFarlane obeyed without a word.

Gradually the tremor passed out of his limbs and a delicious sense of warmth, of safety, stole over him, and he closed his eyes in the comfort of her presence and care. "Rigorous business this life of the pioneer," he said with moving inflection. "I think I prefer a place in the lumber trust."

"Don't talk," she said. Then, with a rush of tender remorse: "Why didn't you tell me to stop? I didn't realize that you were so tired. We could have stopped at the Springs."

"I didn't know how tired I was till I got here. Gee," he said boyishly, "that doorknob at the back of my head is redhot! You're good to me," he added humbly.

She hated to have him resume that tone of self depreciation, and, kneeling to him, she kissed his cheek and laid her head beside his. "You're splendid," she insisted. "Nobody could be braver, but you should have told me you were exhausted. You fooled me with your cheerful answers."

He accepted her loving praise, her clasping arms, as a part of the rescue from the darkness and pain of the long ride, careless of what it might bring to him in the future. He ate his toast and drank his coffee and permitted the women to lead him to his room, and then being alone he crept into his bed and fell instantly asleep.

ELECTION PLOT IS UNCOVERED

Thirty-Five Indictments as Result of Federal Investigation

PROMINENT MEN IMPLICATED

Conspiracy to Debauch and Corrupt Election in Second Rhode Island Congressional District Is Charged—Police Chief and Others Plead Not Guilty and Are Held For Trial

Providence, July 1.—A gigantic election plot which contemplated swinging by bribery a whole congressional district is alleged by federal officials as the foundation for thirty-five indictments against town officials and citizens of North Providence and Coventry.

The bribery is claimed to have occurred in the Second congressional district, where Walter R. Stiness was elected over Peter G. Gerry. Picturesque methods figured in the plot, according to the federal officials.

Chief of Police Willis of North Providence, Assemblyman Hay, Town Highway Commissioner Sweet and Harry Saunders, Progressive leader in the town and national committeeman of the Progressive party from the town, were among the eleven defendants arraigned in the United States district court here, charged with conspiracy to corrupt and debauch the general election last November when Stiness was elected a member of congress.

The others are Councilmen Swallow, Thomas F. Moran, School Committeeman Gilsen. William Pelschke and Clarence A. Broley, saloon keepers, Policeman Hauser and William E. Forgus.

All pleaded not guilty and were held, some in $5000 and others in $2000 bail, for trial later. This made seventeen defendants arrested in the North Providence election fraud cases, six having been previously arrested.

Willis is accused of having directed that a cottage in the town be hired for Republican headquarters, where red and blue tickets, passed out to voters on election day and, representing $2 each, could be redeemed, and with having paid $10 for the use of the cottage on election day. He is also charged with having delivered instructions to certain persons calculating to corrupt and debauch the election.

Moran is accused of having contributed a large sum of money to the campaign fund, in consideration for which he was permitted to run gambling establishments in the town with the knowledge and agreement of Willis and Edgar P. Hurdis, president of the town council.

Saunders, it is charged, escorted certain persons to the cottage to have red and blue tickets redeemed and gave a check to Hurdis after the latter had said to him and Willis:

"I have dumped in enough. You and Willis will have to come across."

The others are charged in a general way with conspiring by various means with the saloon and hotel keepers by supplying drinks and dinners in pursuance of the conspiracy.

THAW DEFENSE RESTS

Prosecution Introduces Record at Matteawan as Evidence

New York, July 1.—Harry K. Thaw's lawyers announced, after the cross examination of their alienist, Dr. Mills of Philadelphia, had been completed, that they rested their case.

The state thereupon opened its case against Thaw by reading the record of his career at Matteawan.

Testimony relative to Thaw's sanity, given by his mother at his second trial for murder, was next read into the record, and was unfinished when adjournment was taken.

Mills testified on direct examination that Thaw believed his wife wanted him kept in the Matteawan asylum so that, as an insane person, he would be unable to make a will cutting her off from his fortune.

EXPIRES BY LIMITATION

End of Famous Aldrich-Vreeland Emergency Currency Measure

Washington, July 1.—The Aldrich-Vreeland emergency currency law, under which nearly $4,000,0000 was put into circulation during the first days of stress of the European war, died at midnight by its own limitations.

Practically all the currency issued has now been retired and every dollar is expected to be redeemed during the next few days. For its operation 3500,000,000 in notes have been kept on hand in the treasury.

The expansion and contraction of currency hereafter will be taken up in the federal reserve system by issues of notes at the regional banks issued on commercial paper.

Question of Kissing and Imbecility

New York, July 1.—Whether a young man is an imbecile and incompetent to handle his estate of $200,000 because he has an uncontrolable desire to kiss every girl he sees, is a moot question. A jury split on the question, so Alexander Ross 29, escaped the asylum.

GENEVIEVE CLARK

Daughter of Speaker of House Becomes a Bride

WEDDING OF MISS CLARK

People Flock From All Parts of Missouri to Attend Ceremony

Bowling Green, Mo., July 1.—Miss Genevieve ClClark, the 20-year-old daughter of Speaker Champ Clark, was married to James M. Thompson, editor of the New Orleans Item.

The ceremony took place on the lawn of Honey Shuck, the Clark homestead. The bridal party stood under a white pergola, built under a honey locust tree and almost hidden in the foliage.

Speaker Clark gave away his daughter and the wedding ceremony was performed by Rev. Robert S. Boyd, pastor of the First Presbyterian church of Louisville.

A general invitation had been issued to the people of Missouri and from all parts of the state they came by train, carriage or automobile. Thousands of Missourians mingled on the lawn with social and political notables from all sections of the country.

This town of 2000 inhabitants celebrated the event as though it were a royal occasion. From every window a flag was flying, the streets were gay with bunting and the townspeople vied with each other in making the wedding guests feel welcome.

BUILDING TIE-UP INVOLVES 200,000

Effort to Force Chicago Strikers to Agree to Arbitration

Chicago, July 1.—A general shutdown of all allied building construction and material interests went into full effect today. All plants are to remain closed until a settlement is reached with organized labor in the building industry.

The order to shut down throws out of employment more than 200,000 men, according to estimates. Several thousand teamsters engaged in hauling material, the building trades craft now at work and the employes of all allied industries will be idle.

The general shut down is intended to force the 14,000 striking carpenters who have been on a strike since May 1 to agree to a settlement by arbitration. The carpenters went out because they were refused wage increases of from 65 to 70 cents per hour.

BALKS AT ELECTROCUTION,

Osborne Absents Himself From Sing Sing Execution as Protest

Ossining, N. Y., July 1.—As a protest against capital punishment, Warden Osborne of Sing Sing prison did not attend the electrocution of Joseph Ferri at Sing Sing.

Osborne went to New York and his place at the execution was taken by Deputy Warden Johnson. "I am leaving because that is the only way that I have to protest against the law which makes the execution necessary," said Osborne before going.

Ferri was put to death for shooting and killing his brother-in-law, Florentino di Giovani, with whom he worked at times as a gardener at their home in Inwood, L. I.

Would Crush Prohibition

Utica, N. Y., July 1.—A combination of interests to crush prohibition was advocated in speeches at the New York state liquor dealers' convention here. An attack on William J. Bryan by David Neuberger of New York was a feature.

Slayer of Two Kills Self

Redford, Ind., July 1.—Faris Hassan, who killed John W. Fender, was run down by a posse. After killing Walter Brown, a member of the posse, he shot and killed himself.

Eighteen Months' "Vacation" Ends

Sharon, Pa., July 1.—Operations at the local plant of the Carnegie Steel company have been resumed after eighteen months' idleness. Five hundred men are employed.

Shakes In South Africa

Johannesburg, S. A., July 1.—Several earthquakes occurred in the Rand and were followed by slight tremors. No loss of life is reported.

CABARET SHOW GREAT SUCCESS

Program Delights Merry Gathering

The cool southerly breeze that was wafted across the broad piazzas of the Quincy Yacht club house Wednesday evening, was delightfully refreshing after a sweltering hot day, to the large number that had gathered to attend the cabaret show, given under the auspices of and in aid of the Quincy Day Nursery association. While the attendance perhaps was not as large as that of a year ago, there were enough comfortably to fill the hall. It was an enthusiastic gathering that were seated in groups of four at the tables, which had been arranged about the hall of the club house and the numbers by the several artists who appeared were freely applauded.

The merrymakers began to gather in the early evening, and while they circulated about enjoying the breeze, bewitching young women passed among them selling bouquets while others encouraged the gentlemen to purchase a pound of chocolates for their ladies. These young women while not annoyingly persistent had a winning way about them and few of the gentlemen escaped.

By 8.30 most of the party were seated at the tables in the hall. The menu while not an elaborate one contained about all one desired on an occasion of this kind. For cooling refreshment there was ice cream and cake and plain ice cream, ginger ale and lemon soda by the bottle. On the bottom of the menu card was the gentle reminder: "Please tip the waiter."

Early in the evening Delcevare King passed song sheets among the merrymakers, these he informed them were free, "but that was all that was free." Between the several numbers on the program, with Sam Sears at the piano, the audience joined in singing these popular songs Mr. King was the leader of the singing and at the start he announced that while he could not sing much he could make a lot of noise. To vary matters a little Mr. King arranged it so that some of the lines of the song were sung by the women led by Miss Lacey and the men led by Carle Homer. Among the popular airs sung were "When you wore a tulip," "Tip-Top Tipperary Mary" "Chinatown" "I'm on My way to Mandelay" "Mary, you're a little bit old-fashioned" and "When it's night time down in Burgundy".

The program, a very pleasing one, opened with a laughable sketch entitled, "Only Amateurs" by Bruce Saville and Miss Beatrice Morrison, which scored the usual success of these talented young amateurs.

Then while Mrs. J. Harry Slade sang "Maria" a Neapolitan song, Miss Geraldine Vandalinda, gowned in a Spanish costume, passed among the tables with a tambourine into which she invited the merrymakers to drop coin. So pleasing was this number that an encore was demanded and for this Mrs. Slade sang "Cas tallano."

The next number was a vocal duet by Miss Clarice Doble and Miss Katherine Johnson, and was one of the hits of the evening. Both of these young ladies have unusually pleasing voices and their number was greatly enjoyed. For their first selection they sang, "Somewhere a voice is calling" and for an encore "Mother Machree" The latter selection made a great hit, and at the urgent request of the audience it was repeated.

Mr. King then announced that Paul Blackmur had just arrived and upon his introduction he sang "I love you truly and of course he was obliged to respond to an encore. Messrs. Brown and Connors were to have given a musical sketch but this was omitted and instead they sang a duet.

The last number on the program was a duet by Mrs. J. Harry Slade and Paul Blackmur, entitled "A Musical Dialogue." It was enthusiastically received.

Much of the success of the several numbers was due to Mrs. Paul R. Blackmur, Miss Ruggles and Sam Sears who officiated as accompanists.

The tables and chairs were removed from the hall and exhibition of modern dancing given by Herbert Barker and Miss Florence Barker, music being furnished by the Quincy Quintente, composed of R. A. Sears, Sam Sears, A. F. Schenkelberger, Edward Simmons and Miss Ninon Lacey. They also furnished the accompaniment for the dancing which continued until 11.30, at which time special cars left for Quincy.

The cabaret was for the benefit of the Quincy Day Nursery association and was in charge of Mrs. Eugene C. Hultman and Mrs. John H. Johnson.

GIRLS ENJOY OPENING NIGHT

Miss Huston who had charge of the opening night of the Adams Academy building for the girl's club, reports that although there were several social affairs Wednesday evening which interfered with many attending, there were a goodly number present and all seemed delighted at the opening of the building as a girls club.

Many of the girls present were those employed during the day as clerks in stores in Quincy and Boston, and the opportunity for the enjoyment of these recreation rooms was gladly welcomed. There was no set program for the opening night, but it afforded Miss Huston an opportunity to get better acquainted with the young girls. Music was furnished throughout the evening by a victrola and there were several spirited games of basket ball.

It is hoped before next Wednesday evening to have a tennis court laid out on the grounds, also a croquet set ready for use. As it is not dark until nearly 8 o'clock the girls will have an opportunity to indulge in these out of door sports. Miss Huston said that she was going to make an effort to have the use of the building and grounds given the girl's club on Saturday afternoons during the summer months.

MAYOR AGREES TO BIG BON FIRE

Willing to Touch Match to Old Hotel

Mayor Campbell informed Chief Billings this morning that he had no objection to the old hotel and barn on the City of Boston property at Squantum being burned in a huge bonfire July 5. Furthermore the Mayor promised Chief Billings that he would apply the match that would start the old buildings burning if it was so desired.

According to Chief Billings the City of Boston desired to get rid of the buildings. It has been offered a good price for them by a concern that deals in old lumber, but fearing an accident had rather the buildings would be burned.

The old hotel building is one of thirty rooms and near it is a large barn. Both are badly in decay and their removal will add greatly to the appearance of the property.

Chief Billings said this morning that Chief Grady of Boston had agreed to send one of his largest fire boats to Squantum when the buildings were burned and in addition to this a pumping engine and plenty of hose would be sent over the road to Squantum for use in case a high wind should place the buildings in the Squantum district in danger. The fire boat is capable of throwing fourteen streams and this with the land force will be sufficient to take care of the fire.

Chief Billings plans to start the fire on the morning of July 5 in the vicinity of 11 o'clock in the morning.

CITY TO GET $9000 CHECK

City Solicitor Pinkham was informed by the city auditor of the City of Boston Wednesday that the check in payment to the City of Quincy for taxes on the Squantum property had been drawn and would go out in today's mail. The amount of the check is $9,157.75. It will probably be received by the tax collector this afternoon.

TO PLAY BALL THIS SUMMER

Harry W. French, head of the commercial department at Quincy High school, left this noon for Rochester, N. Y., where he will pass the summer playing base ball. French will pitch for one of the teams of the city league. He closed a most successful season there last year.

French, although but little known here as a twirler, has been the hero of many hard fought games. As pitcher for the Everett Independants, a team of former college stars, he was most effective. The few games he was billed to pitch here were not played because of poor weather conditions.

He has been active in the development of High school athletes and the fast second base ball team was the result of his efforts. He has a fine reputation as a bowler and has been a most popular young man throughout the city.

LEADS FIELD.

Mike Brady, the Wollaston Golf club pro and a resident of Atlantic is leading the field for the state open title through brilliant rounds of 73 and 71 at the Country club, Brookline, Wednesday. # RUBBER TIRE AIDS PEDDLERS

The inspection trip of Sealer of Weights and Measures James N. Cantfill and Inspectof of Provisions Walter Field on Wednesday was brought to a sudden close about 4.50 o'clock when the rubber tire came off of one of the front wheels of the carriage in which they were riding.

The trip was being made for the purpose of examining the permits of the hawkers and peddlers of the city. Several were warned that operating in this city again would result in their arrest.

It has been decided that Boston peddlers will be issued no permits to do business in Quincy this year. A state license will allow them to come in however. Those who neglect to get a state license and come to Quincy violate the law and are liable to arrest.

The ordinance regulating hawkers and peddlers conflicts with the amended state law which empowers provision inspectors to issue permits but puts the enforcement up to the sealer of weights and measures and the police. Because of this it is probable that the ordinance will be changed.

The many friends of Miss Agnes Monahan will be pleased to hear that she is rapidly recovering from her recent illness.

HOLD OUTING AT SQUANTUM

One hundred members of the South Boston Retail Grocery and Provision Dealers association held an outing at Lee's inn, Squantum, Wednesday afternoon. The party arrived at 2.30 o'clock by special electric cars.

The features of the afternoon were a baseball game, potato race, wheelbarrow race, and other sporting events. Ladies and gents both participated in the races and a general good time was enjoyed.

A 6 o'clock the party sat down to an excellent shore dinner served by Mrs. Lee. The evening was spent in dancing and a social time. The president of the association is Frank E. Willis and he had general charge of the affair. The other officers are William J. Murphy, secretary and John J. Dorgan, treasurer.

The baseball game was the exciting feature of the afternoon and was won by the West Sides by a score of 5 to 1.

CENSURES MAYOR FOR PLAN TO BURN BUILDING

Dr. John H Ash Disapproves of Having Real Fire At Squantum

That Mayor Campbell in setting fire to the buildings at Squantum Head, owned by the City of Boston, as proposed for the morning of July 5th will be laying himself open to censure is the gist of a criticism made public today by Dr. John H. Ash.

Dr. Ash points out that Quincy annually spends considerable money in buying wood and, if the buildings were given by the city of Boston, the unemployed could tear them down and the wreckage given families who will need it next winter.

He also states it would be a most unwise example to set young America for they might fire a building that to them would be worthless but might be of great value to the owners.

"Why not sell the property to a building wrecker and spend the money in charity?" asks Dr. Ash. "This proposed action by the mayor may have been planned and agreed to by those concerned while moved by a spirit of patriotism but I am not in sympathy with him in doing it.

"How can Mayor Campbell get a permit to touch a match to property of this kind? Who will give him such authority, and why should the city of Boston go to the expense of sending out an engine company or whatever is contemplated to protect Squantum property in case of a high wind when all this can be avoided by not setting it on fire.

"It is not of more benefit to me and my neighbors, "said Dr. Ash, "to give me a right to burn rubbish in my yard and exterminate germs collected by it, a right which myself and other people have not, and who will give Mayor Campbell a permit to burn down those buildings at Squantum."

Mrs Warren of Stetson of Middleboro has been visiting Mrs. H. O. Studley the past few days.

CITY TO SELL 200 ESTATES

Mayor Campbell announced this morning that some two hundred parcels of real estate which the city has acquired during the past 15 years are now being prepared to be sold at auction by Tax Collector John Curtis. These properties are those which have been taken for one reason or another by the city, but mainly acquired because those who bid them in at the regular tax sales did not take them, and in other cases they are on the hands of the city because no bids were received at the time of the sale.

The law states that after a certain period the holder of a tax title can claim ownership and can then sell the property with a clear title. This is what the City Tax Collector intends to do as the limit on practically all tax titles held by the city has expired. These tax titles have been in the hands of the city for a great many years and for some reason or other have been allowed to drag on without being disposed of and properly taxed to the individual. The city will be able to give a quit claim deed on the titles.

SHIPBUILDING ERA FOR U. S.

Activity at Fore River is Forerunner

A great Shipbuilding era for the United States is prophesied by Practical Politics which sees a forerunner of the boom in the activity at the Fore River Yard. The article reads as follows:

The inauguration of a great shipbuilding era for the United States promises to develop the American steel foundries and similar companies along new lines, say the Wall street reports on the steel industry. With the United States developing its railroads and leaving shipbuilding chiefly to European yards such companies had given their attention almost wholly to their railroad departments, treating the orders from shipyards more in the line of side issues. Shipbuilding now promises to prove one of the most vital factors in their trade.

The location of the plants of the American steel foundries is such that it should benefit not only from the increases in shipbuilding on the Atlantic coast, but in the Great lakes shipbuilding yards as well, although heretofore the amount of work which the company's plants in the middle west have done in connection with ship orders has been small. Now the shipbuilding industry on the Great lakes is beginning to boom because of the large number of lake carriers which have been diverted to ocean trade, and the fact that Atlantic yards are unable to accommodate all the orders which are coming forward. Although new yards are being constructed rapidly along the Atlantic coast, the demands for tonnage are proving too urgent for the ocean-carrying trade to await their time for the beginning of operations.

In most of those cases in which vessels of a length permitting passage through the Welland canal is sought, the orders are being given to the Great lakes yards. That several lengthier vessels may be constructed in the lakes yards and sent to the canal in sections to be quickly pieced together in drydocks on the Atlantic coast is one development which is receiving the consideration of the shipbuilding trade.

A forerunner of the boom for the manufacture of castings for steamships in plants near the Atlantic seaboard, including the Fore River yards at Quincy, is furnished by the orders which are already being placed by the Atlantic shipyards for steamship plates. The Lukens Iron & Steel Co. nearest to the seaboard for such orders, is now said to be working close to capacity, principally on steamship hull and boiler plates.

THE WEATHER.

The farmer who has been praying for rain to refresh his garden which has been sadly in need of water is satisfied for the present. The large amount of rain which has fallen since Wednesday night has given the ground one of the best soakings it has had in many years. According to a record kept at the weather bureau, more rain fell on Thursday, July 1, then during the whole month of June. In fact it has been the heaviest rain in twenty years.

The forecast for Saturday indicates that the day will be generally cloudy while Sunday will be generally fair with not much change in temperature. Pleasant seasonable weather is indicated for Monday, when the National holiday is celebrated.

CHARGES FATHER WITH BITING HER

COSTS DEFENDANT $25

Pretty Maria DiTempesta of Hall place, 16 years of age, bared her arm in the district court this morning to show Judge Avery where her father, Domenico DiTempesta, had bitten her. She told the court he had also struck her and was jealous of her. The mother, when told she did not have to testify against her husband unless she wanted to, did not take the stand.

Tempesta was arrested in Inspector Goodhue Wednesday on charges of assault on his wife and daughter. He also preferred a disorderly house charge against the man and had neighbors in court today as witnesses.

Judge Avery fined the defendant $25 for assault on his daughter. He also affirmed an old sentence of 1912 when $25 was imposed. The other cases were filed.

Inspector Goodhue in speaking of the conditions at the house said the family was destitute. Miss Mildred Huston, overseer of the poor, has secured employment for the girl. Today the bite will be examined by Dr. Bartlett, city physician, to see if there is any trace of infection.

The family moved to Quincy a few months ago from Barre, Vt. Two weeks ago the wife was fined $50 for having a revolver in her possession. She is alleged to have taken the weapon to the street and threatened several men who she declared were about to assault her husband.

HOLD LAUNCHING AT FORE RIVER

Third Craft For British Goes Down Ways

Another submarine built at the Fore River shipyard for the British government was launched shortly after three o'clock today. The sponsor was Mrs. Anna Nelson Ewertz, wife of Eric Ewertz, who has charge of submarine construction at the shipyard. On Saturday another submarine will be launched at four o'clock, the sponsor being Mrs. Maria Burress Currier, wife of Guy W. Currier of 84 State street, Boston.

Special agents of the treasury department have been active in Quincy the past few weeks investigating the rumors that some of the submarines had been sent to Halifax and then shipped to England. The investigation failed to prove such was the case. Two were found anchored in the stream and eight on the ways.

STORM CAUSES MUCH DAMAGE

Tears Up Streets On Sides of Hills

The storm, which started in such a business-like manner Wednesday night, contiued all day Thursday and Thursday night and is still holding forth, did a large amount of good, and likewise a great amount of damage.

The good which it did was to vegetation which was suffering from the lack of rain. This was especially true of lawns which had begun to dry up and no amount of water from the lawn hose seemed to do them any good. With the large amount of awter which has fallen, the lawns will be wonderfully improved. It will require but a few hours of sun to brighten them up.

As for damage the greatest was to streets, especially those leading to hills. On these streets the heavy rain caused the water to rush down in rivers, overflowing the gutters on the side and tearing away large sections of the streets which have been deposited in the valleys below.

The Telephone company was also quite hard hit by the storm and many of its lines were put out of commission. The company, however, immediately sent out a large gang of trouble men and they are fast straightening out the lines, and putting them in working order again.

FURIOUS PROTEST OVER DISPENSARY LOCATION

Some Tenants In Building Threaten To Move Out

A general howl of protest has gone up among the occupants of the offices in the Durgin & Merrill block over the leasing of two rooms in the block to be used as the tuberculosis dispensary and if what the occupants say is lived up to there will be some vacant rooms to let in the very near future.

Several of the occupants say that it seems rather queer that the management of the block should allow any of its rooms to be used for such a purpose. It is a public block, they claim, in which are located a large number of offices that are daily visited by many men, women and children. To allow the use of some of the roms as a dispensary where people who have tuberculosis, or think they have it, come for examination is declared to be unwise. The tenants point to the fact that people coming to their offices are almost sure of meeting some of these patients either going to or returning from the dispensary and while there may be no danger of contracting the dread disease people do not care to take any chances.

The tenants in the block did not pay much attention to the fact that a dispensary was to be established until Wednesday when the rooms were opened for use for the first time. During the office hours of the nurse in the middle of the day and again in the late afternoon during the office hours of the physician there were many people who visited the rooms, and this is what caused the occupants to sit up and take notice. Some of them say that if the dispensary is allowed to continue its office in the block they will move out.

NO ALL NIGHT DANCES ARE TO BE ALLOWED

Mayor Forbids Issuing Permits To Hold Them July 5th and 6th

Mayor Campbell threw cold water this morning on the plans of proprietors of several public dance halls who were arranging to hold all night dances. In some years it has been the plan of these dance halls to open their places just after midnight Sunday, when that day preceded the Fourth and hold dances until daylight. Similar applications were made this year by parties at Houghs Neck who not only desired to open up their halls at midnight Sunday but to run an all night dance on the night of July 5. The following letter to Capt. McKay of the police department will show the Mayor's position in the matter.

July 2, 1915.

Capt. Daniel R. McKay,
Acting Chief of Police.
Dear Sir:—

My attention has been called to several requests to hold what is generally known as "all night" dances, that is starting at midnight on July 4th and also on the night of July 5th.

That there may be no misunderstanding I desire to state that I am strongly opposed to any permits being granted for this form of entertainment and under no consideration will I approve such applications. This information is given you that you may know my attitude should you receive requests for such entertainment.

Yours very truly,
(Signed ) CHESTER I. CAMPBELL,
Mayor

MAKE IT SAFE.

An automobile party Wednesday night was involved in an accident, which narrowly escaped being serious, at the corner of Elm and Hancock streets, and the driver of the car attributed the accident to inadequate lights on the incompleted roadbed on the west side of Hancock street. How much of the blame should be shouldered by the driver himself it is difficult to say. He was a stranger to the locality and we believe such an accident might well happen at this point to any driver who did not exercise an unusual amount of care.

It is quite certain that insufficient precautions have been taken to prevent accidents at this point. The lights are few and far between and serve very little purpose. The city does not want to become involved in costly damage suits to say nothing of not wanting to be responsible for the injury or death of human beings. While this street is under construction every method should be employed to make it safe, even if it is necessary to maintain a watchman at both ends.

A DANGER.

The announcement that a certain popular low priced car is to make a further reduction next year, coupled with the cuts made by many other automobile manufacturers, means that the army of auto owners will be even larger than it now is because other things being equal the lower the price the larger number of purchasers.

While it is pleasant to reflect upon the extension of the joys of automobiling it is not amiss to have a thought for the augmenting of its perils. The enormous increase in the auto traffic on Sundays and holidays during the last few years, and indeed during the last year, is noticeable. Driving a machine on a popular road on Sundays has become rather less of a pleasure. It is no place for the nervous man, the irresponsible or the inefficient.

Despite traffic regulations, accidents are increasing in geometric rather than arithmetric progression. They are chiefly due to the carelessness and inefficiency of some men whom lax laws permit to drive automobiles when they are hardly fit to operate wheel barrows. The state should require the passing of an adequate examination by every applicant to run a motor vehicle, private operator as well as hired chauffeur.

ANCIENT LANGUAGES.

Will the so-called dead languages drop out of our high schools and colleges? Certainly the records of work on which the diplomas are being awarded, give a little less space every year to these subjects. Latin still has a large place but Greek has almost dropped out of sight.

As a practical business proposition it does not seem much use for the ordinary boy to study Greek today. French, German and Spanish help him to keep closer in touch with the current of modern life. A business man finds no Greek in his newspaper, he is rarely called on to write a letter in either that language or Latin.

At the same time, when a student drops the classics, there are certain losses that are not made good. If he studies the old languages, particularly Greek, he follows the thought of certain great philosophers which must enlarge his conception of life. The classic world emphasized ideas that are badly needed today. The old philosophers dwelt upon the obligation of the citizen to the state, obedience to law, the necessity of a temperate, well rounded balance of all the elements necessary to successful life. It was a healthy minded philosophy. The student's thought is filled with noble images of heroism, self sacrifice, civic spirit.

It is of course useless to turn back the educational tide. The business man must study the aspects of life that bring him the closest to the modern world. But American life needs men of thought as well as men of action. Those who aspire to be writers, preachers, teachers, can not afford to neglect the noble ideals of the wonderful old classics.

SEIGAL DEFIANT.

For stealing more than $2,000,000 of the hard-won savings of poor persons induced to deposit in a department store bank, Henry Siegel, tried and convicted before a jury not of the vicinage, in Geneseo, last November, after a six months' stay, is at last sent to a cell in the model Monroe County penitentiary, where at easy work in the office he will spend eight and a half months, if he behaves himself as a prisoner. He offered to pay depositors $150,000 of the money he had stolen to avoid this term of confinement. Now, a defiant criminal he says he will keep their money and use it to start himself in business after he gets out.

The term is grossly, ludicrously inadequate to the crime. The defiance of the criminal makes a laughing stock of justice. And the judge who imposed the sentence and then stayed it for a period of long dickering as to "restitution," occupies a most regretable position in the judgment of law-abiding Americans.

The compounding of a felony is itself a crime, whether the euphemism of "restitution" is used or not. That is plain English, which even an up-State judge ought to be able to understand. Negotiations with thieves are never creditable to the courts.—Brooklyn Eagle.

REFERRED TO MISS LANE.

Does a bird, the gull, for instance, reason? The scientist who answers tis question offhand in the negative will have to reckon with Col. V. F. Rowe of the British army.

During a recent visit to Oddicombe Beach this gentleman, who is not only a lover of animals, but possesses the power of ingratiating himself into their favor, formed a very pleasant acquaintance with a number of gulls. He grew to be especially friendly with one, which he christened Joey, who became his inseparable companion on the beach.

One particular morning, as the Colonel approached the water and sat down on the sand, Joey flew to him, but instead of accepting a morsel of bread, as usual, plucked the colonel's coat as if trying to urge him to move in a certain direction.

Naturally enough, the bird was not understood at first, but his efforts were so persistent that his military friend finally fancied that there was a meaning in them. He arose, therefore, and followed Joey a little distance down the beach to a stone behind which was a tiny ivory box.

It belonged to him. He had lost it several days before. So far as he remembers, Joey had seen it in his possession but once.

The colonel is quite sure that the gull recognized the box as his property, and restored it to him, thus evincing intellectual power not hitherto recognized as belonging to birds. He commends the incident to scientists in general and to students of animal psychology in particular.—Jamaica Plain News.

"TAINTED NEWS."

It is astounding to discover that no less than 50 newspapers in Massachusetts are printing "tainted news;" that is, articles printed as legitimate news matter, but furnished to these papers by a concern, under a blanket contract for advertising purposes. The federal law distinctly says that no paper shall publish in its news columns any article for whose insertion the newspaper has received a valuable consideration, unless the article shall be plainly labelled as an advertisement. In the case of the 50 Massachusetts newspapers which are printing these insidious articles attacking the temperance cause in this State, there is no such label. So an appeal is likely to be taken to George W. Anderson, as the federal attorney for this district. Just how he will construe the law, as applicable to this "tainted news," we do not profess to be able to predict. From our point of view, there is a still more effectual way of dealing with the evil. Why not give to the public the names of the 50 Massachusetts newspapers which are printing these articles without letting the general public know their source and their inspiration? Probably public opinion will be able to deal with the evil very promptly and very effectually. That sort of thing is not popular, here.—Boston Daily Advertiser.

We are pleased to note that the esteemed Advertiser has taken this matter up and can only hope such measures will be taken as will prevent the publication of these insidious articles in any form, especially under the unfair guise in which they are now appearing.

We are surprised that any self-respecting local paper, especially in a no-license district, will furnish space, whether paid for or not, for such articles as "How Character is Built, Quo Vadis" and others of similar nature which are published as signed articles apparently in the interests of the rum traffic.—Dedham Transcript

READY FOR CELEBRATION OF 4TH AT QUINCY POINT

Committees Arrange Elaborate 24 Hour Program

The only real big Fourth of July celebration in Quincy this year will be that held under the auspices of the Town River Yacht club and Citizens' Committee of Ward Two, familiarly known as Quincy Point and the Fore River district. For weeks a large and efficient committee has been hard at work and everything now points to a most successful, safe and sane observance of Independence Day.

The day's program will begin at 12.05 the morning of the Fourth, with a huge bon fire at the foot of River street on Town river. The match will be touched to the towering mass of railroad ties, barrels, boxes and other things calculated to make a great blaze, and the celebration will be officially open. "Joe" Pinel is in charge of this feature. From then until 12 o'clock at night there will be something doing every minute.

Just as the bonfire is started the clubhouse of the Town River Y. C., which fathered the celebration movement, will be thrown open. The keys will be deposited in Town River for 24 hours and the quarters will be open constantly until the hour of midnight. An orchestra will play all night and there will be refreshments. No one is going to be allowed to do any sleeping for there will be plenty of things going on to keep all awake.

The freedom of the club is extended to all who have contributed to the expense of staging the celebration. These will be designated by the little buttons which have been distributed to those who have put their names to the public subscription lists. The public is invited to the numerous other events, however, and a great crowd is expected during the day down in the old East Side.

The sporting events arranged are attractive and should furnish plenty of fun for the crowd. At 8.30 the first event will be staged in the form of a baseball game between the Married men and the Single Men of the ward. These teams will play about 7 innings, if they can stand it that long, and then will follow a game between the Waseca club and the Bigelow A. C., two clubs composed of Point boys. Intense rivalry exists between the two nines and a fast game is expected. A purse of $10 will go to the winning club. Both of these games will be played at the Ward Two playground.

At 1.30 in the afternoon a series of track events will be started for boys and girls up to 17 years of age. The list includes a 50-yard dash for boys, 50-yard dash for girls, pie eating contest for boys, potato race for girls, half-mile race for boys, 220-yard dash for girls, and 3-legged race for boys. The committee in charge of these events is headed by William H. Flynn, an official of N. E. A. A. A. U. and himself an oldtime track athlete. The events will also be held at the Ward Two playground on the running track. Suitable prizes will be awarded to the winners.

The scene will then change back to the yacht club at the foot of Edison park, where a program of water sports will be run off under the direction of James Brooks. The events include a canoe race, ladies rowing race, boys' rowing race, men's 100-yard swim, girls' rowing race, tub race, men's half-mile swim, boys' swimming race, greased pole and tilting match.

For power boats there will be a bang-and-go race at 4.30, upen race at 5, and speed boat races at 6.30. The regatta committee is headed by Thompson B. Crane, rear commodore of the yacht club. Entries should be made with W. C. Luther, 87 Edison park.

In the evening there will be a display of fireworks beginning at 8.30. A long list of pieces has been arranged and these will be touched off from a float in the river off the yacht club. In the meantime dancing will be in order in the clubhouse. There will also be a band concert.

Commodore Joseph Carruthers is president of the general committee of arrangements. W. C. Luther is secretary and George H. Jaques is treasurer. The executive committee consists of these officers and H. R. Holmes, Allan MacGeachie, W. C. Newcomb and William Caldwell. The chairmen of the subcommittee are William H. Flynn, athletics; Joseph W. Pinel, bonfire; Rev. S. C. Lang, children; George H. Jacques, fireworks; James Brooks, water sports; Councilman Charles B. Yule, program; T. B. Crane, regatta; Peter M. Sullivan, press; W. C. Caldwell and C. C. Foster, house committee; commodore Carruthers, reception.

Special preparations for the children have been made under the direction of Rev. S. C. Lang, who is being assisted by the Quincy Riverside Women's club. The women have joined with the men heartily in making the celebration a success and have given valuable assistance in preparing for the day.

The collectors have been working hard getting funds together to pay the expenses of the day, but just a little more money is needed. If you are not visited by one of the collectors, come around to the clubhouse on the Fourth and contribute your little bit. It has been reported that someone not in authority has been canvassing the ward for subscriptions, and persons are warned not to give anything to anyone not armed with a paper bearing the signature of George H. Jaques, treasurer of the committee. Persons contributing should receive one of the little buttons procured by the committee for the purpose and collectors, if they are genuine, will give a button with each subscription.

TAX COLLECTOR GETS BIG CHECK

Tax Collector Curtis received a check from the City of Boston Thursday for $9,157.75 in payment of the taxes on the City of Boston property at Squantum. Taxes on this piece of property have not been paid for a number of years, owing to a dispute as the right of the City of Quincy to assess the property.

This year the property was advertised for sale for its taxes and in the meantime a bill was introduced in the legislature authorizing the Mayors of the City of Quincy and the City of Boston to settle the controversy over the property. As a result a settlement was reached whereby the City of Boston was to pay the principal. This has now been done and the amount paid, which will be turned into the general city receipts.

It is understood that an effort is being made by Mayor Campbell to have the Metropolitan Park Commission take the property and convert it into a public park. The location is one of the most sightly in the city and if placed under the care of the Park Commissioners would be made an ideal spot.

CITY WILL SAVE BY NEW BRIDGE

Work is to be begun soon building the new bridge across the Neponset river between Quincy and Neponset to take the place of the wooden structure now in use. The bridge which is to cost $350,000 ,will be built under the direction of the Metropolitan Park Commissioners. It will be located in exactly the same spot as the present bridge and during its construction a temporary bridge will be built to one side of the present bridge.

City Solicitor Pinkham, who looked after the cities interest in the matter of the new bridge, is given considerable credit for getting such a good bargain for the city. Of the total cost the City of Quincy will have to pay 15 per cent, the City of Boston 20 percent, Norfolk County 5 per cent, Plymouth county 2 1-2 percent, Street Railway 15 percent, and Metropolitan Park district 42 1-2 persent. Quincy will of course have to pay its proportionate part of the Norfolk County and Metropolitan district appropriation, which will appear in the Metropolitan and County Tax warrants. This will make the assessment of the City of Quincy practically 18 percent.

One of the best things however that has been accomplished by City Solicitor Pinkham is in regard to the maintenance of the bridge after its completion. The cost of maintaining the present structure is born by the City of Boston and by the City of Quincy. The City of Quincy is now obliged to maintain that part of the bridge between its connection with Hancock street and the draw and the expense of maintenance has been a large one.

The maintenance of the new bridge however will be under the direction of the Metropolitan Park Commission, and Quincy will pay only 5 percent of this cost. The new bridge will be lighted and policed by the Metropolitan Park Commissioners.

Mr and Mrs. Herbert W. Pinkham of Wollaston left Thursday for a trip through the west.

ASKS CLERGY TO AID HIM

The Fire Prevention Commissioner appeals to the clergy of all denominations to speak a word of caution to the people in their churches on Saturday and Sunday, against the careless use of fire or explosives on the coming Fourth of July. "What clergyman can say that his wise words may not avert a conflagration, or protect some home from sorrow and suffering," exclaims Mr. O'Keefe.

READY FOR ITS TOUR OF DUTY

Machine Gun Co. Will Go Into Camp

The Machine Gun Co., 5th Regt. M. V. M., of Quincy, will perform its first ordered tour of duty, leaving Saturday and returning Monday, after participating in the military parade at Lowell.

Forty members of the company will leave the North station Saturday at three o'clock for Baldwinsville where they will go into camp with the regiment. On Sunday they will be detached and go to the Lowell armory where they will be joined by a few more men who will leave Sunday in charge of Sergt. Frank M. Chubbuck.

The parade Monday will see the first appearance of the mounted detachment of the company. All of the men will carry the regular equipment, the infantry rifles not being used.

During the tour of duty they will prepare their own food and work out several problems in the sham battle between the 5th and 8th regiments.

All week the members have gathered at the armory in the Alpha hall building, drilling and getting ready for the fray. Heavy equipment will be shipped today.

Lieut. George M. Downes took formal possession of his headquarters office on Thursday evening. Spic and span furnishings have been installed and the boys accorded him quite a reception.

Sergt. Charles Starbird, detailed as company instructor has listed the ability of every man and all the occupations at which he has worked, whatever it may have been in order that it will be known if the members are able to meet conditions as they arise.

It is quite surprising to note that electricians, mechanical and automobile engineers, graduates and students of technical schools, expert horsemen, are enlisted and it may be the aim of the commanding officer to make the company a miniature engineering corp for the regiment.

It was announced Tuursday evening that the company will attempt to hold two rendezvous drills which require the presence of two thirds of the maximum enlistment, or 50, present at each drill. If the necessary number is present on Saturday and Monday the men will draw 90 cents each. Ten of these drills are allowed during the current year, the men to be paid the money before Christmas.

The company will also get, on the tour of duty, one day's pay and transportation and rations are allowed. The first official complete list published, follows:

DELAY PROBABLY SAVED HIS LIFE

Worcester Aviator Was To Go With Jones

How the delay of an hour in train service prevented Gustaf W. Granberg, an aviator, of 6 Orchard street, Worcester, becoming one of the passengers in the ill-fated trip of Harry M. Jones which closed with two fatalities and injuries to Jones, became known Thursday during a conversation between Granberg and Acting Chief McKay at police headquarters. The former believes the delay saved his life.

Granberg, whose card reads "exhibition flier and ascensionist," said he left Worcester two weeks ago today headed for Squantum to spend a few days with Jones, his former teacher. The trip to Boston was delayed through a minor accident and Boston was reached late in the day. He made a hurried run to Squantum and learned the fate of Hersey and Ely, the passengers. He will remain here a few days.

He can't here after reading of the mysterious plane housed in the unused hangar of the Squantum Women's club. He saw the machine but said he was unable to clear up the mystery surrounding its owner. He said the machine was a valuable one.

PIANO RECITAL.

The young pupils of Miss E. Gertrude Welsh closed the season by a very successful musical at her home 129 School street, Wednesday afternoon.

The rendering of Faust by Miss Alice Ford and the Poet and Peasant Overture by Miss Esther Phillips proved to be extremely pleasing, as were the duets by the same pupils.

Refreshments were served after which singing and games brought the recital to a close. The pupils present were: Eleanor Parsons, Jennie Moodie, Mary Curtin, Ruth Coughlin, Veronica Harrior, Blanche Graham, Mildred Eastman, Tyra Eastman, Bertha Green, Alice Ford, Katherine Fitzgerald, Beatrice Boggs, Bertha Crooker, Helen Sullivan, Irene Holland, Angela Holland, Esther Phillips, Anna Powers Elizabeth Moore, Josephine Belacchi, Mary Hartling, Eleanor Stuart, Margaret Sullivan, Gladys Imlay, Ellen Evans, Bertha Ford, Mae Reardon, Carl Olson, Richard Wexler, Rolland Hughes and John Young.

SQUANTUM PLANS BIG CELEBRATION

Squantum has planned the biggest celebration of its history for the Fourth of July. From sunrise to midnight there will not be a dull moment. Under the able leadership of former President William N. Kenyon, the Squantum Improvement association has arranged a lively program and nearly $200 has been subscribed by Squantum citizens for the home celebration.

The official program will start with a flag raising at James H. Loughan's on Bellevue avenue at 7.30 A. M. This will be in charge of Charles Bostwick.

At 8.15 the parade will start. Many novelties will be introduced. A dozen prizes will be given for the best features. The line of march will be as follows—Bay street to Bellevue road, to Hampden street and counter march to Brunswick street, to Bay Side road, to Border, to Dorchester street, to Pratt road, to Beach street to Parke avenue, to East Squantum street, to Ocean street and disband.

At 10 A. M. the Squantum Boys club play a game of baseball with the Atlantic Juniors. This is expected to be one of the features of the day as excellent prizes will be given the winning team and the Squantum boys will do their best to win.

If the Quincy fire officials decide to burn the old Reed Hotel property at Squantum Head at 11 o'clock this will be the next feature of the day. A $3,000 bon fire will be a great novelty. In the event of the bon fire not taking place there will be a baseball game between two teams of the Squantum Improvement association, one captained by James H. Sumner, president of the association, and one by Roger Mason, vice president.

At 2.30 P. M. the annual field sports take place on Callahan's Oval. The sporting events will include a running race for boys and girls under 12 years; running race for girls and boys between the ages of 12 and 16; men's pipe race; men's running race; spoon race for ladies; blind race for ladies; quoit throw for ladies. During the afternoon ice cream will be served all the children.

In the evening there will be a vaudeville show by professional talent including W. B. C. "Chick" Fox; Stanley Nichols and the Temple Male Quartet. Following this the prizes won during the day's events will be distributed.

The judges for the parade will be Herbert A. Smith, T. F. Callahan and N. C. Paul. There will be special prizes for the best decorated homes and the judges for this event will be John R. Nelson, John Jepson, Sr. and Frank Lawler.

The chief marshal of the parade will be James J. Loughan. The committee in charge of the Fourth of July celebration is W. N. Kenyon, chairman; James H. Sumner, president of the Squantum Improvement association, John Jepson, Harry Tobin, Charles Bostwick, William Whitley, James H. Foster, John P. Loughan, Roger Mason, C. H. Singleton, Charles Swanson, Chauncy Paul, Edward Carlson and James J. Loughan. Music for the parade will be by the Dorchester High school fife and drum corps.

CIRCUS IS HERE DESPITE RAIN

There was a large crowd of women and children in City square all the forenoon waiting in the rain for the circus parade to pass. Owing to the bad weather, however, it was somewhat late in arriving. Many of the women in the crowd went home when noon came, but not so the youngsters. It takes more than a dinner to keep a youngster from waiting to see a circus parade, and as usual patience had its reward.

Owing to the dampness of the grounds it was impossible to start the parade as early as was expected, and it was after 12 o'clock before the head of the procession made its appearance in City square. Considering the difficulties caused by the bad weather the parade was a good one.

The circus train arrived in Quincy bright and early this morning having come from Norwood where it exhibited Thursday in weather much the same as today. It takes more than a rain storm however to keep the Jones Bros. circus from exhibiting as advertised. Some of the cars were shunted to the spur tracks at South Quincy and others to the tracks of the main freight yard on Granite street. Some delay on account of weather was experienced in putting up the big tents, but they were up and all ready for the afternoon performance.

One of the officers of the company in speaking of the exhibition Thursday at Norwood said that the grounds were the worst he had even seen in his many years with circuses. When the tents were taken down in the evening to be loaded onto the cars for Quincy it required forty horses and an elephant to draw one of the big wagons from the grounds to the street. The same force was put at work here today. Fortunately the circus is well equipped with horses and elephants to help out in difficulties like that of Thursday.

STRANGER GETS HOT WELCOME

Officer Has Hard Battle With Prisoner

With both eyes discolored and his nose swollen, Patrolman Duffy appeared in court this morning as complainant against Arthur Reynolds, charged with drunkenness, disorderly conduct on a public conveyance and assault and battery. The defendant was arrested in City Square at 6.30 Thursday evening and created a turmoil by assaulting the officer. Many were drawn to the scene.

Patrolman Duffy took Reynolds on orders of a conductor. The man quietly accompanied him to the signal box near the First Parish church. As the wagon call was sounded he became angered and sent over a stiff haymaker. The blow struck Duffy on the bridge of the nose and caught him unawares. Duffy, stunned for the instant, quickly recovered. He tackled his man without the use of his club. Both rolled over and over in the mud and after a hard tough struggle the officer was victorious.

Reynolds also had black eyes and several bruises on the face when he was arraigned this morning. The drunk charge was filed and he was fined $25 for assault and $20 for disorderly conduct. Unless he pays the fine he will have to serve three months in the Dedham jail. Reynolds, the court officials say, is a stranger and arrived in Quincy two days ago. From his appearance today he was none too pleased with the welcome he received.

PARTY AT YACHT CLUB.

Women's Guild Have Royal Good Time.

The members of the Women's Guild of Christ church were entertained Thursday by Mrs. John Emery and Mrs. Myron B. Turner at the Quincy Yacht clubhouse. There were 21 in the party and although the weather outside was stormy it did not prevent them from having a good time. At noon dinner was served in the restaurant dining room at the clubhouse, after which the women gathered on the piazzas away from the storm where the afternoon hours passed very quickly.

An executive meeting of the officers of the Young Women's club was held Thursday evening with Miss Minnie Packard.

MAYOR MAY GO TO CALIFORNIA

Mayor Campbell is thinking strongly of leaving Wednesday with a small party of Boston business men for California to attend the exposition, in order that he may be there at same time as Gov. Walsh and the state party. The main party of the Real Estate Exchange who are to visit the exposition will not leave until the first part of September.

MAKARIA TO PLAY FORE RIVER.

"These be troublesome times in base ball circles," and all kinds of changes have taken place. The final result of the controversy has been the arranging of a game between the Fore River and Makarias for three o'clock Monday afternoon at Merrymount Park. They say there is bad blood between the player. Some nine innings, eh?

RELIGIOUS MASS MEETING.

Three of the Swedish churches of Quincy namely St. Paul's M. E., the Congregational and the Baptist have decided to hold a large union meeting in Merrymount park, Sunday, July 11, at 4 P. M. The speakers will be the Rev. Newton F. Sundstrom of the Swedish M. E. church and the Rev. A. G. Sporrong of the Swedish Congregational church. Extra singing will be furnished by a choir composed of members from the choirs of the three churches. The object of the meeting is to create more interest among the Scandinavian people for things religious. Also to bring the pastors and the members of the different churches closer together, that more efficient work may be done for the Scandinavian people of Quincy as a whole. The spirit of good feeling and brotherhood it is claimed is developing more and more among the members of the three churches. Rev. Sporrong will be in charge of the meeting, and it is expected that great numbers of the Scandinavian people will attend. There will be no Sunday evening meetings in these three churches on this day. The meetings for the evening being omitted in order that the afternoon service at four may be well attended. In case of rain the union meeting will be held in the Swedish M. E. church at 7 P. M.

BRADY LOSES GOLF TOURNEY

W. C. Hagen of Rochester Takes Title

Walter C. Hagen of Rochester, N. Y., the 1914 open champion of this country and the present winner of the Panama-Pacific tourney, by winning the state open title at the Country club, Brookline, Thursday, becomes the first out of state man to secure that title. He scored 298 for a 72-hole medal play, defeating Michael J. Brady, the Wollaston Golf club pro and victor in 1914.

Golfing circles consider the winning by Hagen a distinct triumph because the conditions he faced were adverse to low scoring.

Hagen and Brady had the say whether or not the matches would be played under the conditions. They voted to go ahead and bring it to a close. The course was a series of miniature lakes. There was water on the putting surfaces and in the bunkers. The round in the afternoon was played by the locating of islands here and there.

The final 36 holes were played in a blinding rain over a water-soaked course, and the ultimate winner two strokes behind M. J. Brady, the 1914 State title holder, at the start of the day's play. At the end of the morning half Brady and Hagen were tied at 222 for the 54 holes played, and it was apparently a question of one round of the course between these two for first honors. Gilbert Nichols of Wilmington had come in with a 76 also during the morning rain and took a position as a possible winner. He did not play his best in the afternoon and, in fact, missed a very short putt to tie with Brady for second prize at 303 on the home green, where his ball did not go down on a putt of less than three feet.

Brady threw away his chances and his title on the homeward round when he took 6s at the 13th and 14th holes. This gave Hagen a 5-stroke lead with but four holes left to play, and as the former champion was playing faultless golf, there was little doubt as to the ultimate winner from this point on.

Tom Kerrigan of Atlantic did not get into the prize money. His second day's play was 82 and 85, added to 153 on Wednesday, giving him a score of 329. The leading summaries:

|---|---|---|---|---|
| Brady | 144 | 78 | 81 | 303 |

ST. PAUL'S CHURCH NOTES.

The Epworth league will hold its monthly business and social meeting in the church this evening, Friday. At the last meeting it was decided that each member earn an extra dollar during the month in addition to their regular salary. This extra dollar from every member of the epworth league will be turned over to the organ fund this evening. It is expected that quite a sum will be realized. The Epworth league has decided to pay for a new organ, and ere long the melodious tones of a fine large organ will gladden the hearts of those who come to worship in the Swedish M. E. church

A school for learning the Swedish language will be opened next Tuesday at 10 A. M. The school will be held in the Sunday school room of the Swedish M. E. church and the pastor will be in charge. All the Scandinavian people of Quincy are invited to send their children to this school. The tuition will be free. Sessions will be held from 9 A. M. to 12 M. four days of the week beginning with Tuesday.

Some people may question the advantage of Swedish schools in America. The writer of these lines knows through actual experience that it is to a great help and advantage to know more than one language. For example First: educationally. The Swedish boy or girl contemplating a high school or college education will find it easier to learn English, Latin, German or French when they have mastered the Swedish grammar. Second: commercially. It is very much easier to get a good position in the business world when one has acquired two or more languages. Third: arts. Sweden has contributed some of the greatest literature to be found in the world. Not many years ago Selma Lagerlo received the Nobel prize for literature Sweden's song and music ranks wit the best in the world. To know th Swedish language, its literature an song is an education in itself. Fourth religiously. The Swedish people are religious people. Their's is a heart re ligion. In order to develop the reli gious instinct in the hearts of Swedis boys and girls an heritage of hundred of years, there is only one way. Le the Swedish-American boys and girl learn the Swedish language. The mother tongue opens the heart for religion and all good impulses.

May the parents who have childre co-operate with the pastor that th Swedish school may be a success Music and singing will also be taugh

MISS PACKARD AT KINCAIDE'S

Appears In Delightful Sketch "California"

A large number of the audience at the Kincaide theatre Thursday evening were drawn there by their interest in Miss Ruth Packard of this city, who appeared in the delightful scenic sketch "California." Miss Packard is well known throughout the city as one of Quincy's most talented amateurs and her debut on the professional stage aroused great interest.

In "California" she takes the part of an Indian maiden. The part is not an important one and there are no speaking lines attached to it, but Miss Packard has an opportunity to join in the singing on several occassions, and her clear voice, with which she has delighted so many Quincy audiences in amateur productions, notably in the "Mikado" last winter, could easily be heard above the others. Her facial expression was good and she carried off the requirements of her part with her usual ability.

The sketch itself is one of the most delightful which has been shown in vaudeville anywhere for some years. The blending of the tragic and comic is irresistible. One of the best comedians seen in many a day is the gentleman with the long name, who terms himself a boy scout, but is in reality the president of the railroad. Threatened by a ferocious Mexican he maintains perfect equanimity and when the Mexican tries to attack him he draws, not the tiny pistol hanging to his belt, but a huge horse pistol which brings his enemy to his knees. It appears however, that after he has pointed the gun his knowledge of its operation ends and he beseeches the Mexican to tell him how to fire it. He is always cheerful except once, when the Mexican insists on dodging instead of standing still to be shot. This he declares is unfair and he querously inquires how the Mexican expects to be shot if he doesn't stay still.

The part of California was admirably taken by a most attractive young woman, who sang delightfully. Also well taken were the parts of the padre, the young engineer hero, and the three Mexicans. The scenery, too, deserves more than a word of praise. All in all the half hour sketch was a rare treat.

The rest of the program was excellent. "The Wop and the Cabaret Girl," Henry & Wood, were received with applause. Bounding Johnson, the wire actor, does some unusual stunts on the tight rope. The Gray Friar appears in the unexcelled "Exploits of Elaine," and interest in his thrilling adventures is enhanced by the query as to his identity. Is he the missing detective, Craig Kennedy? Who can say. This serial is really in a class by itself. The two comedies are of unusual merit.

CHURCHES HOLD SERVICE.

The first of the summer union services between the Wollaston Baptist, Methodist Episcopal and Congregational churches was held Thursday evening at the Wollaston M. E. church. It was the regular mid week prayer meeting and was in charge of Joseph A. Sedgwick. Under the arrangements made by the three churches union services will be held for the next three weeks at the Methodist church. These include the Sunday morning service, the young peoples service at 6.30 Sunday evening, and the mid-week prayer meeting on Thursday evenings.

KEEPING MEAT IN HOT WEATHER

Government Report Gives Housewives some Very Helpful Advice

WEEKLY MARKET REVIEW

Local market reports indicate that the prospect of a generous supply of salmon for the Fourth of July is vanishing as the holiday draws near. There has been a considerable falling off in receipts of Eastern fish, while Western shipments have dwindled to an extent to suggest that the interior is taking a good many of the fish that ordinarily would come to this market. There has been an unusual large demand this year for salmon for July Fourth, and with the low supply the price has advanced above the 7 cents a pound a week ago.

Many people believe that no July Fourth dinner is perfect without salmon and green peas, but this year unless prices should take a sudden drop many will doubtless forego that pleasure.

Mackeral have also taken a jump and are much more expensive this week than last, although tinkers are plentiful enough. Most people prefer a tinker to the larger size believing that they are sweeter and more appetizing. Bluefish and swordfish are a little more plentiful and prices have dropped somewhat. Chicken lobsters continue very scarce and there has been a further advance in price. Lobsters are not quoted boiled as the demand is for live ones. Large lobsters are plentiful enough and the price is two cents a pound cheaper than for chicken lobsters.

The story of local fruit and vegetables market is still one of abundance of the things common to this season of the year, with costs already reasonable and continually getting more so. The local markets lack nothing that is usually on hand at this time and since the weather following a backward spring has been favorable, the supply is large.

New potatoes are in such a big supply and so low in price that there is scarcely any demand for the remaining supply of old tubers, sales of which are reported at the low price of 25 cents a bushel.

The famous Dighton strawberries have arrived in the markets. They re large and handsome and are selling at 15 cents a basket, two for 25 cents. Cantelopes, a little small in size, are selling at 10 cents each. Blueberries at 23 cents a box, watermelons at 50 cents each, native tomatoes 15 cents a pound, butter beans and string beans at three pounds for 25 cents and peas, one of the essential articles of food for the July Fourth dinner, at 60 cents a peck.

While asparagus was a little short last week it is said that it will be more plentiful by the end of the week. New Jersey however has stopped shipping and there will be only native "grass" from now on to meet the demand, and prices are apt to run a little higher. Cucumbers, owing to the scarcity of receipts, are also commanding a little better price, but there are cabbages galore with prices low.

Lemons are becoming a drug on the on the market owing to the large supply, which will be good news to the people who desire to make up a quantity of lemonade with which to refresh callers on the Fourth.

The Weekly News letter, a publication issued by the United States Department of Agriculture, this week has some interesting remarks to make concerning the keeping of meat in hot weather. The article follows in full:

A few simple precautions will aid the housewife in keeping meat untainted in hot weather. It is, of course, common knowledge that the higher the temperature, the quicker meat will spoil, but the family's supplies are not absolutely at the mercy of the thermometer. Ice and cleanliness are two great weapons of defense.

For many families a refrigerator is obviously out of the question, but it is perhaps better to have no refrigerator at all than a neglected one. Merely to wash it out occasionally does little good; it should be thoroughly scalded at frequent intervals, in particular the drain. This, if overlooked, is apt to harbor fungous growths, which may spread to the food. On one occasion a man applied to the department because he had found that a joint of beef placed in his refrigerator had turned a peculiar bright red. Upon examination it was ascertained that the meat was covered with a peculiar fungous growth due entirely to the condition of the refrigerator. Growths of this kind do not always advertise themselves so prominently and there may be much evil in an ice box that the eye can not detect.

If the refrigerator drain is not thoroughly cleaned, moreover, it is likely to become choked, the water is not carried off quickly enough and little pools are left standing in the interior. Dampness is one of the conditions most favorable to bacterial growth. An ice box in this state will not protect food long. It is, in fact, a wise precaution to wipe the interior of a refrigerator every day with a dry cloth.

The temperature of the average refrigerator is higher than most persons suppose, and in those households where a regular supply of ice is not obtainable a cool cellar, a spring house, or the depths of a well may serve somewhat the same purpose. On farms where there is an ice house the meat may be placed in some form of closed retainer and buried in the ice. In any event, the meat must be carefully screened from flies. The danger from infection from these pests has been pointed out many times, but familiarity breeds contempt and they still persist. The fly not only does the meat itself no good, but it may readily deposit upon it some infection, which is carried in turn by the meat into the human system. Some flies will deposit their eggs on the meat and these in a short time will become maggots, and the meat is "flyblown."

Much sickness that is popularly ascribed to ptomaine poisoning or to bad food in general is really caused in some such way as this, the food, in itself perfectly wholesome, acting merely as a mechanical carrier for the "germs" which cause the trouble. Some of these sorts come from the human intestine, and their presence is a sure indication that filth is present, even if the amount is too small to be seen. Filth of this kind may be carried by dust, but it more often comes from soiled hands. One might wish that every kitchen could have the sign found in some well-managed food factories—"When you leave the room for any purpose, wash your hands before you return to work"

"Germs" which grow in foods and cause illness grow very rapidly, particularly if the food is a little warm, and are not destroyed unless the food is well cooked before serving. Simply "warming up" is not enough, as was found in a case of illness recently reported after eating some warmed-up creamed vegetable. Certain kinds of food—creamed chicken, or custard, or warm vegetables, for example—are excellent culture mediums for bacteria which may have been introduced into them by accident. For this reason it is a safe rule to have as short a time as possible intervene between the preparation of food and its consumption. Broth is another excellent medium and in consequence should be drained off if it is intended to keep the meat for any length of time before serving. If the broth is used also it should be boiled thoroughly first. All food, cooked or uncooked, should be kept in a clean, cool place in order to reduce the danger of infection to a minimum.

When meat must for any reason be kept for unusually long periods of time or when the conditions are unusually unfavorable scalding may be resorted to advantageously. Dropping the meat into boiling water for a few minutes will not seriously affect its flavor when it ultimately appears upon the table, and it will put it in a much better condition for keeping. It is important, however, that it be dipped in a large body of boiling water. If only a small amount of water is used, the introduction of the meat will lower the temperature to such an extent that the whole process become worthless. With such meats as veal or pork, which are always—or ought to be—thoroughly done, the precaution can be carried further and the joints partially cooked before being stored away. Care should be taken, however, to see that the recooking is thoroughly done.

Hot weather also calls for additional precautions on the part of the housewife in regard to canned products. Once these have been opened and exposed to the air they spoil as quickly, if not more quickly, than fresh food. The contents of a can should therefore be disposed of without delay. In no event should they be left in the can after it has been opened, but should be used at once unless the housekeeper wishes to "air" the canned material, which some believe is desirable. If this is done, the can contents should be transferred to a clean earthen or glass dish and put away for an hour or two in a cool place where dust will not reach it.

TYPHOID FEVER IN THE UNITED STATES

An editorial in the Journal of the American Medical Association, April 17th, says in part, "It is evident that Typhoid Fever is on the way to become a relatively rare disease in many parts of the United States. There are two main reasons for this. First, there are now comparatively few large cities in which the public water supply is likely to contain Typhoid Bacteria. Second, the increase in the practice of pasteurization has resulted in a dimunition in the amount of milk borne typhoid."

The Elm Farm Milk Company complying with the general demand by by the Medical Profession and Sanitarians, were one of the first to scientifically pasteurize their milk. This milk is offered at the same price that rules for ordinary milk.

This process is the only one that absolutely guarantees the safety of milk against all of the infectious diseases.

Elm Farm Milk means SAFETY, SERVICE, SATISFACTION.

THE FORESTER'S DAUGHTER

A Romance of the Bear Tooth Range

By HAMLIN GARLAND

Berrie and her mother went back to the sitting room, and Mrs. McFarlane closed the door behind them. "Now tell me all about it," she said in the tone of one not to be denied.

The story went along very smoothly till the girl came to the second night in camp beside the lake. There her voice faltered, and the reflective look in the mother's eyes deepened as she learned that her daughter had shared her tent with the young man. "It was the only thing to do, mother," Berrie bravely said. "It was cold and wet outside, and you know he isn't very strong, and his teeth were chattering he was so chilled. I know it sounds strange down here, but up there in the woods in the storm what I did seemed right and natural. You know what I mean, don't you?"

"You're splendid," she insisted. "Nobody could be braver."

"Yes, I understand. I don't blame you—only—if others should hear of it"—

"But they won't. No one knows of our being alone there except Tony and father."

"Are you sure? Doesn't Mrs. Belder know?"

"I don't think so—not yet."

Mrs. McFarlane's nervousness grew. "I wish you hadn't gone on this trip. If the Beldens find out you were alone with Mr. Norcross they'll make much of it. It will give them a chance at your father." Her mind turned upon another point. "When did Mr. Norcross get his fall?"

"On the way back." Here Berrie hesitated again. "I don't like to tell you, mother, but he didn't fall; Cliff jumped him and tried to kill him."

The mother doubted her ears. "Cliff did? How did he happen to meet you?"

Berrie was quick to answer. "I don't know how he found out we were on the trail. I suppose the old lady phoned him. Anyhow, while we were camped for noon yesterday"—her face flamed again at thought of that tender, beautiful moment when they were resting on the grass—"while we were at our lunch he came tearing down the hill on that big bay horse of his and took a flying jump at Wayland. As Wayland went down he struck his head on a stone. I thought he was dead, and I was paralyzed for a second. Then I flew at Cliff and just about choked the life out of him. I'd have ended him right there if he hadn't let go."

Mrs. McFarlane, looking upon her daughter in amazement, saw on her face the shadow of the deadly rage which had burned in her heart as she clinched your children's throat.

"What then? What happened then?"

"He let go, you bet." Her smile came back.

"When did this take place?"

"Yesterday about 2. Of course Wayland couldn't ride, he was so dizzy and kind o' confused, and so I went into camp right there at timber line. Along about sunset Nash came riding up from this side and insisted on staying to help me, so I let him."

Mrs. McFarlane's tense attitude relaxed. "Nash is not the kind that fatties. I'm glad he turned up."

"And this morning I saddled and came down."

"Did Nash go on?"

"Yes. Daddy was waiting for him, so I let him go along."

"It's all sad business," groaned Mrs. McFarlane, "and I can see you're keeping something back. How did Cliff happen to know just where you were, and what started you back without your father?"

For the first time Berrie showed signs of weakness and distress. "Why, you see, Alec Belden and Mr. Moore were over there to look at some timber, and old Marm Belden and that Moore girl went along. I suppose they sent word to Cliff, and I presume that Moore girl put him on our trail. Leastwise that's the way I figure it out. That's the worst of the whole business." She admitted this with darkened brow. "Mrs. Belden's tongue is hung in the middle and loose at both ends—and that Moore girl is spiteful mean." She could not keep the contempt out of her voice.

"Oh, I wish you hadn't gone!" exclaimed the worried mother.

"It can't be helped now, and it hasn't done me any real harm. It's all in the day's work anyhow. I've always gone with daddy before, and this trip isn't going to spoil me. The boys all know me, and they will treat me fair."

"Yes, but Mr. Norcross is an outsider, a city man. They will all think evil of him on that account."

"I know. That's what troubles me. No one will know how fine and considerate he was. Mother, I've never known any one like him. He's a poet! I don't care what people say of me if only they will be just to him. They've got to treat him right," she added firmly.

"Did he speak to you—are you engaged?"

Her head drooped. "Not really engaged, mother, but he told me how much he liked me, and—it's all right, mother. I know it is. I'm not fine enough for him, but I'm going to try to change my ways so he won't be ashamed of me."

Mrs. McFarlane's face cleared. "He surely is a fine young fellow and can be trusted to do the right thing. Well, we might as well go to bed. We can't settle anything till your father gets home," she said.

Wayland rose next morning free from dizziness and almost free from pain and when he came out of his room his expression was cheerful. "I feel as if I'd slept a week, and I'm hungry. I don't know why I should be, but I am."

Mrs. McFarlane met him with something very intimate, something almost maternal in her look, but her words were as few and as restrained as ever. He divined that she had been talking with Berrie and that a fairly clear understanding of the situation had been reached. That this understanding involved him closely he was aware, but nothing in his manner acknowledged it.

She did not ask any questions, believing that sooner or later the whole story must come out. The fact that Siona Moore and Mrs. Belden knew that Berrie had started back on Thursday with young Norcross made it easy for the villagers to discover that she had not reached the ranch till Saturday. "What could Joe have been thinking of to allow them to go?" she said. "Mr. Nash's presence in the camp must be made known, but then there is Clifford's assault upon Mr. Norcross. Can that be kept secret too?" And so while the young people chatted the troubled mother waited in fear, knowing that in a day or two the countryside would be aflame with accusation.

A long day's rest, a second night's sleep, set Wayland on his feet. He came to breakfast quite gay. "Barring the hickory knot on the back of my head," he explained, "I'm feeling fine, almost ready for another expedition. I may make a ranger yet."

Berrie, though equally gay, was not so sure of his ability to return to work. "I reckon you'd better go easy till daddy gets back, but if you feel like it we'll ride up to the postoffice this afternoon."

"I want to start right in to learn to throw that hitch, and I'm going to practice with an ax till I can strike twice in the same place. This trip was an eye opener. Great man I'd be in a windfall wouldn't I?"

He was persuaded to remain very quiet for another day, and part of it was spent in conversation with Mrs. McFarlane, whom he liked very much, and an hour or more in writing a long letter wherein he announced to his father his intention of going into the forest service. "I've got to build up a constitution," he said, "and I don't know of a better place to do it in. Besides, I'm beginning to be interested in the scheme. I like the supervisor. I'm living in his house at the present time, and I'm feeling contented and happy, so don't worry about me."

A Friend of the Family

ALL thing being equal, the newspaper that goes into the home and is read there is the most valuable advertising medium.

A paper like this, in a community like this, is really one of the best advertising mediums in the country. It goes into the home and is thoroughly read there.

This newspaper acts as a salesman in the home.

AMUSEMENTS

..CASTLE SQUARE THEATRE...

"Shenandoah," the gripping war drama, will be the bill for the week of July 5 at the Castle Square Theatre. This play has more thrills and stirs the martial spirit more than any other war play ever written. Miss Eleanor Gordon will play the part of Gertrude Ellingham for a week's special engagement, her first appearance at the Castle Square. More than 100 extra men will be engaged for the week. There will be horses, real bugle calls and the soldiers will be drilled according to the U. S. cavalry and infantry tactics. Sheridan's famous ride affords one of the most exciting climaxes a play ever had. There are three love stories woven into the plot. The war separates the couples beginning with the firing on Fort Sumter in the first act. Everything ends well, however. Miss Gordon, who has been a great Boston favorite for years, will be seen in a sympathetic role well suited to her. William P. Carleton, Betty Barnicoat, Theodore Friebus, Donald Meek, James Sealey and Mabel Colcord will be included in the cast.

B. F. KEITH'S.

"The Meistersingers," New England's most famous male singing organization, will commence its fifth consecutive summer season at B. F. Keith's Theatre on Monday afternoon, July 5th, in their very newest and most elaborate scenic spectacle, "The Flag Station." This new production shows the Meistersingers in the White Mountains of New Hampshire. The scene is laid at a lonely flag station on the line of the Boston and Maine Railroad, and some very unusual and effective scenic and mechanical effects are introduced. The Meistersingers will be heard in an entirely new and popular programme of solos, quartettes and concerted numbers, everyone of them new, and some novel effects in singing are introduced. Surrounding the Meistersingers will be a very strong show, including Charles Case, who talks about his father; Lilian Herlein, the stunning prima donna of Lew Fields' "Never Homes;" Hussey and Boyle in "The New Chauffeur;" Mlle. Maryon Vadie and her dancing girls in a series of lyric dances; Harry H. Holman and company in "Adam Killjoy"; White and Claton, different dance doings; and Charles McGoode and company in a novel juggling act.

...TON THEATRE.

For the week commencing July 5th, the star feature of the great bill offered at the Boston Theatre, New England's best picture palace, will be Max Figman and Lois Meredith in the dramatization of "My Best Girl," adapted from the musical play of the same name, played by Clifton Crawford with tremendous success. Lois Meredith is one of the greatest favorites of the petite type who ever appeared upon the screen. Max Figman, a clever comedian of national reputation plays the role portrayed by Mr. Crawford in the original play. Caroline B. Nichols and the Fallettes will continue their wondrously popular daily promenade concerts before the regular picture programme every afternoon and evening with an entirely new repertoire of classical and popular numbers. Other features will include new Charlie Chaplin and Mary Pickford comedies, a new scenic picture, the ninth installment of "The Goddess," Gouverneur Morris' great serial which has everybody talking all over New England, and other features to be announced later. The performance is continuous from ten a. m. to ten-thirty p. m. It requires three and one-half hours to see the entire and complete picture and musical programme.

KICK BY HORSE BREAK HIS LEG

"Ernie" McDonnell Is At City Hospital

Ernest McConnell of Germantown, well known in City square through his connection with the fruit store conducted on Hancock street by his father, is at the Quincy City Hospital with a broken leg. On Thursday evening he was kicked by a horse at Germantown. This morning he was taken to the hospital and at noon he was not out of the ether.

GIVES MUSICALE FOR HER GUEST

There was a musicale at the home of Miss Corinne LaBrecque, last evening, in honor of her guest Miss Helen Tripp, of New Bedford.

One of the principal features of the evening was the reading of Miss LaBrecque's own play "A Friend in Need," the parts being taken by Miss LaBrecque, Miss Helen Galvin and Miss Margaret Heaney. This sketch was enthusiastically applauded by the guests, who were most delighted to learn of this additional talent of their versatile hostess.

Professor Michael Donalen of Boston gave several beautiful cello solos, as well as accompanying Miss Anna Walsh who sang "Creole Swing Song" and Miss Helen Galvin. William Healey, also of Boston, sang several solos, and a duet in Italian with Senor Campaigna.

Miss Margaret Heaney read "The Bootblack," which was so well received that an encore was added—"She Knew It." Miss Gertrude Hughes read "Zenobia."

The hostess added another amusing feature to the evening's entertainment when she renderd "A Tragedy in Three Minutes—For the Piano."

The evening closed right merrily with general singing in French, English and Italian, and the serving of delicious refreshments.

Those present were the Misses Anna and Elizabeth Walsh, Helen Galvin, Gertrude Carroll, Margaret and Mary Heaney, Mildred Huston, Gertrude Hughes, Mary Lyons, Nonnie O'Connor, Messrs. John Heaney, William Healey, A. Campaigna and Prof. Donalon.

ATTEMPTS TO KILL J. PIERPONT MORGAN

One Shot Takes Effect But Wound Not Fatal

(By United Press)

Glen Cove, July 3—John Pierpont Morgan, the financier, was shot at his home here shortly before nine o'clock today. The would be assassin, a man apparently of German descent, refused to give his name or any account of himself.

He pushed by the butler at the Morgan home flourishing two revolvers, and forced himself immediately into the presence of the financier. After an exchange of words he opened fire with a 32 callibre revolver. The first shot entered Morgan's groin, came out at the hip and the second shot went wild. Before the third could be fired Morgan closed in on his assailant.

He grappled with him and with the butler's assistance disarmed the would be assassin. The man succeeded once in breaking away but was recaptured before he could get out of the house. He was turned over to the Glen Cove police by attaches of the Morgan household.

ST. JOHN'S FIELD DAY POSTPONED

Put Over Big Out Door Event Because of Weather Until Monday

LONG COMMITTEE LIST

The annual field day of St. John's parish scheduled for today has been postponed to Monday because of the inclement weather conditions. This morning the grounds were very damp and it was decided to make it part of the holiday celebration of the city.

The affair will be the first of its kind since Fr. Michel J. Owens became pastor of the parish. Extensive committees, appointed several weeks ago have completed elaborate plans for the day. Assisting in the direction of the program will be Fr. John J. Casey and Fr. Walter A. Quinlan, curates of the parish.

The same committees will be in charge on Monday, the same program will be carried out, and from the support received in general the attendance will eclipse that at all affairs of the kind held in connection with the parish.

The ball game between the Sanctuary Girls of St. Joseph's church and the Sodality of St. John's church will be played. The event will be a most interesting one. Games will also be played between the St. John's and St. Mary's of West Quincy and the St. John's juniors and the Medford boys.

Prettily decorated tables will be set at various places about the grounds and the athletic events will be run off in the yard of the parish school. Music will be furnished during the day by an orchestra. In the evening there will be jitney dancing and between the numbers vaudeville sketches will be given.

The field day as usual will be the occasion for a general reunion of the parishioners. Old and young will be present.

Features for the children have not been forgotten in arranging the program. A Punch and Judy show will be given and also a concert by the choir members which will include the singing of songs and several sketches. These features will be part of the afternoon program.

In addition to the general committee special committees have been appointed to preside at the tables as follows:

MOTORCYCLE STRIKES CAR

Oscar Schell Escapes Serious Injury

Oscar Schell, aged about 21 years and employed in a shoe factory at Braintree, had a narrow escape from serious if not fatal injury this morning when he collided with an electric car at the corner of Washington and Foster streets.

The young man, who rooms at the Y. M. C. A., purchased a motorcycle a few days ago and this morinng he took the machine out to learn to ride it on Foster street. He headed for Washington street just as the car left Quincy at 10.35 for East Weymouth. He either did not see the car or was unabe to check the speed of his cycle for he banged into the car striking it about midway. He was thrown to one side but clung to the motorcycle which was badly damaged.

Dr. M. T. Sweeney who happened to be passing at the time took the young man in his automobile to his office. Here an examination showed that Schell had received a cut over the left eye, a cut on the scalp and a deep gash on the thigh. Dr. Sweeney says that the injuries are not of a serious nature.

FIRE FOLLOWS LOUD EXPLOSION

Firemen Fought Blaze For Hour

The alarm from Box 67 at 4.55 Friday afternoon was for a fire in a two tenement house at 49 Walker street. Atlantic, owned by Walter Burrell and occupied on the second floor by Mr. Burrell and on the first floor by C. L. Mosmar.

The fire started from some unknown cause in the kitchen of the tenement of Mr. Burrell. He says that he heard an explosion in the kitchen and going to the door found a blaze in progress. Closing the door he called the Atlantic fire station by telephone. Chief Billings was also notified by telephone and responded with the Central Station Auto Chemical.

As soon as the Atlantic apparatus arrived on the scene and it was seen that the fire gave promise of being a serious one a bell alarm was sounded. The fire worked up through the walls and ceiling of the kitchen to a blind attic, which was stored full of furniture. The fire was confined to this attic and did not break through at any time, although it required nearly an hour's work to get the blaze under control.

GENERAL INCREASE IN CITY'S WATER RATES

New Schedule Aimed to Remove Annual Deficit

The result of the work of the special committee of the City Council, appointed Jan. 18, to act with the Mayor in investigating the water department of the city will be made apparent to consumers when they receive their bills, sometime this month for water for the coming six months.

The committee has held numerous meetings and has gone into the matter thoroughly, and in addition to their own investigation have had the advice of an expert employed by the Mayor.

It was found early in the investigation that the deficit in the water department each year had been caused in part by the large leakage, due to unmetered services, old and improper mains, and so called butt ends. Another cause was found to be from the fact that the various city departments which have been large users of water have not been charged for the same, and that the department has not received its due credit for the water thus used.

It was found upon investigation that the leakage in Quincy was one of the largest in the Metropolitan district. In other words fully 40 per cent of the amount of water taken from the Metropolitan works has gone to waste. In other cases it was found that some users were receiving water at a price less than the actual cost.

During the past six years investigation showed that the water department has run behind from $22,000 to $35,000 each year and to meet this deficit the amount had to be placed in the annual tax levy. Mayor Campbell is opposed to this method of making up the deficit each year, believing that the water department should be self-supporting.

Taking all these things into consideration the committee made a recommendation to the Commissioner of Public Works that the water rates be changed to such an amount that

RECTOR URGES SANE HOLIDAY

The flowers on the altar at Christ church Sunday morning will be in memory of Dr. Henry C. Hallowell. The regular morning service will be held at 10.45 with Holy Communion and sermon. In accordance with the appeal of the Fire Prevention Commission, the Rector, Rev. William Grainger, in the church calendar for the coming week says:

"It is not often that Independence Day falls upon a Sunday as it does this year, and therefore it is an opportunity we ought not to miss for a real "safe and sane" celebration. The ordinary celebration is too much the occasion of fire, smoke and noise, the sort of thing heathen Chinese practice when they chase away the devils. We ought rather to have rehearsed for us the struggle for independence, the principles for which the forefathers fought, and then join in a hearty thanksgiving to God for the success of that struggle, and a prayer to Him that He would help as maintain the principles of freedom and justice for all.

"This can be said and done better in church than in any other place, and what better service could there be for it than the Holy Communion, our service of praise and thanksgiving."

The Sunday evening and Friday evening services at the church will be discontinued during the months of July and August.

MODERN FIRE FIGHTING.

Considerable newspaper comment was aroused by the celebration in New York of the fiftieth anniversary of the paid fire department of that city. This half century has been a period of wonderful development in this line. Our country is weak in fire prevention. But after a fire starts, our firemen beat the world.

The departments in many towns of but moderate size are very effective. The principal thing is getting there quick. With a motor hose wagon and ladder truck, and a few men ready at a moment's notice, more can be done than with a battalion of experts who get there late.

A good many small towns get intelligent fire fighting work at a small cost by the simple expedient of hiring some practical man for a small salary, and giving him as a part of his compensation a yearly trip to the national conventions of fire fighters. A fire chief in that way gets practical ideas, and the pleasant outing would please many men quite as much as a larger money payment.

What can be done to save the many buildings that burn in outlying country districts, very frequently with no insurance? The rural fire department is apt to feel it accomplished big things if it saved the woodshed when the house gets fire. The gradual spread of motor trucks helps this situation. An automobile fire wagon can run many miles out in the country where horses would soon be winded.

Success in putting out fires depends on the co-operation of citizens. Some merchants have their basements stuffed with flimsy packing cases, excelsior, and other inflammable material. No fire department on earth could save their buildings with a blaze starting on a windy night. The fire fighting efficiency of the future lies not so much in developing the efficiency of departments as in removing hazardous conditions in advance. Much has been done in Quincy in this respect and much is still being done.

AMERICANIZATION DAY.

There is quite an extensive movement on foot to make the Fourth of July this year a great Americanization day—to be mindful of the many foreigners here in our own country and attempt not only to make them feel at home but to make them loyal American citizens. They are here not merely for the natural resources of our country but also for citizenship, and we ought to see that they take pride in their duties and opportunities as citizens.

Mr. Campbell of the Water street church is intending to emphasize this splendid movement at the Sunday evening service by giving an interpretative reading of Zangwill's great American play, "The Melting Pot." In this play America is likened to a great melting pot into which is drawn all the bloods and races of the world and out of whose purging fires comes the typical American. It will be a great opportunity to hear Mr. Campbell's interpretation of this wonderful American drama.

Fire Commissioner O'Keefe states in a friendly letter to the editor of the Ledger that after all he gave no order respecting bon fires on the Fourth of July. This is confusion worse confounded. Someone intimated rather emphatically that the only bon fire for which a permit had been issued was that of the Town River Yacht club. Who was the individual who has thus mislead us and unduly squelched the hopes and aspirations of Young America, incidentally bringing up the question of whether the Mayor had a permit for that Squantum building which he is reported to have promised to touch off if invited?

Although admitting the value of books of non-fiction upon topics of the day and reasserting our belief that most of the fiction turned out is not worth the paper it's printed on, yet we suppose the Thomas Crane Public Library ought to have some of the stuff. After all, in these days of circulating libraries and similar institutions a public library has to be up to date. It is rather an unfortunate state of affairs when our public library has bought little or no fiction for the last three or four months. Is the city niggardly or the trustees over-intellectual?

The rain appears to be washing away the very thin coating of cement covering the paving stones on the rebuilt portion of Hancock street and permitting the pavings themselves to show their heads, advertising Quincy granite and making a nice soft roadway for automobilists.

This is truly beautiful April weather.

That dispensary is not without honor save in its own building.

EXPRESSIVE PATRIOTISM.

"The criticism is often made that the average American, although generally demonstrative, evinces little evidence of a consuming love for the flag of his country. Not one boy or man out of a hundred in the United States instinctively lifts his hat to salute the stars and stripes as they pass at the head of a procession."

Very true!—in fact, too true! Is it however, due to lack of feeling so much as to ignorance and thoughtlessness? I take exceptions to "generally demonstrative"—providing the words refer to free expression in public of one's feelings. The old stock American "feels like a fool" if caught in an emotional state. How silly he looks when he kisses his wife good by in the station or on the train! It's hardly fair to compare us with Europe, for there much is done under compulsion, particularly where militarism prevails. The average audience will now rise at once for the "Star Spangled Banner," and it will generally prefer to sing "America" while standing. We are improving in this respect.—Milford Gazette.

THE APPLE CROP

Indications point to a fair apple crop in New England, probably somewhat better than the average although not as good as last year. The barrel firms in New England have never been able to supply the demand for new, well seasoned apple barrels They are continually increasing their output and will in a short time be able to take care of all demands.

The new packing law in Massachusetts and other parts of New England will increase the demand for barrels very materially this year. All who have a large number of apple trees and who expect to have a fair-sized crop should make an estimate of same and plan to get their supply of apple barrels during June and July. Those who wait later will get barrels poorly coopered and many times made of green lumber. As formerly the fruit growers should plan to buy in carload lots by getting together with their neighbors.—County League Advisor.

MASSACHUSETTS G. O. P.

Viewed from northern New England there seems to be but one rational course for the republican party of Massachusetts to pursue and that is to nominate, as their standard bearer, the man who led the party last year to signal victory, and who lost his own election only by the narrowest possible margin. Having in mind the changes in public sentiment which have come about during the past year, one displays but slight temerity in predicting that Samuel W. McCall as the republican nominee for governor in 1915 will lead the party triumphantly to the goal, and in the succeeding administration of its affairs, restore that party to its once invincible leadership in Massachusetts affairs.—Manchester, N. H., Union.

A GREAT INSTITUTION

Chautauqua was inaugurated by Bishop John H. Vincent, who transformed a Methodist camp meeting into a big class for education and sent an idea spinning down the corridors of time. John H. Vincent is a big man, but he never guessed even with his prophetic vision, the size of his idea. There was something in it that met the needs of the people, all the people; and today there are in America a thousand Chautauquas. The Chautauqua is America's fourth great institution. The other three are the Home, the Church and the School.—Framingham News

BERT COFFIN IS WITH US AGAIN

Albert Coffin, connected with the Bureau of Insular affairs at Porto Rico, is visiting his parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Coffin of East Milton after 10 months government service. He has received a warm reception at the hands of his Quincy friends.

Deeply tanned, a trifle taller and just as thin, he is the same enthusiastic "Bert" Coffin who lived here until last summer. The only real change is his full grown moustache, but it doesn't alter his apeaarnce much, let alone disguise him.

"Young Bert" quietly returned a few days ago and in order to surprise his friends he sent no word ahead. He will be here about 10 weeks and on his return to the island will commence to practice law, his profession.

In the short time he has been here he has probably answered as many questions as most returned travellers and uppermost in the minds of all, after friendly greetings, sems to be how has the war affected the island.

"Bert," after the pictures Friday, was willing seriously to discuss the situation, and had just told of how loyal the natives were to the United States and how they yearned for the opportunity of fighting under Old Glory when the fire department apparatus went by.

"Never mind that," remarked Charles Wilkes, a local attorney, "how do they fight fires down there?"

"O," said "Bert," "all apparatus is hand drawn.

"I move you," Mr. Chairman, said Richard Simmons, after he had been recognized, that Coffin stay here where we have plenty of motor apparatus and plenty of water (pointing to the rain flooded streets.) "Carried," declared Chairman John Anderson, and the meeting broke up, those who could going to a fire in Atlantic.

START WARFARE ON MOSQUITUS

Atlantic Improvement Association Meets

The Atlantic Improvement association had an exceptional meeting at the rooms of Standish club Friday night.

F. B. Atwood told of the investigation that was going on and the comparisons that were being made in regard to late collections of mail in Atlantic and other parts of Quincy and also other suburban cities around Boston and said that the association and community would hear results later.

Maurice Kilpatrick told of the interview with the Board of Health in regard to the Teel pond nuisance and the expectation of a remedy soon.

The mosquito problem was taken up and the following men volunteed to solicit funds to exterminate the mosquitos by spraying: John Beal volunteered to canvass Ocean street; Jesse Spear, Conant road and extension of Atlantic street; William Mac Mahon, Walker place and Prospect street, Fred Bryan, Sagamore street; Mr. Merrill, Billings street, W. N. Davis, Atlantic street; William E. Barnes, Botolph street; W. G. Young, Madison and Old Colony street; Mr. Stockford, Hollis avenue; Maurice Kilpatrick Squantum street and F. B. Atwood, Faxon road.

G. H. Higgins gave an addres on trees and shrubs after the business meeting.

FOILS ATTEMPT OF PICKPOCKET

Napoleon Rogers of West Quincy frustrated the attempt of a pickpocket to dip him at the circus Friday evening by grabbing his hand as it entered his pocket. He swung around and a blow aimed at the dip struck another man, the pickpocket ducking in time to avoid it. He then escaped in the crowd and could not be located. The assaulted forgiving, joined in the hunt.

Fathers are requested to ask the boss to let them off for the day and mothers are enjoined to finish up their washing, ironing and baking on Wednesday, so that all the family can go together. They are also advised not to wear their Sunday clothes.

LETTERS FROM OUR READERS

Editor of the Ledger:

I recently heard one of the leading anti-suffrage speakers cite figures intended to show that the cost of elections was greatly increased by woman suffrage without any compensating gain. By a coincidence a friend in California sends me the following editorial from the Los Angeles Tribune:

The Erie (Pa.) Dispatch, for some inscrutable reason, has elected to support the antisuffrage movement. In its issue of May 26 the Dispatch quite gratuitously says: "California's expenses since women got the vote have increased 130 per cent. 'Doubling the electorate' is but a small part of the extravagance and expensive fads a state must indulge 'when women get the vote.'" Indulging the conviction that the Erie Dispatch is moved rather by ignorance than by malice, we venture to offer a correction.

The legislature has just adjourned. The increase in the appropriations made by this legislature over those made by the last legislature is the smallest increase in the history of California, being indeed, less than 3 per cent. The record thus established was substantially duplicated by the legislature of 1913, when its appropriations are compared with those of its predecessors. Thus we cover the entire period that has elapsed since the women of California were politically emancipated. Will the Erie Dispatch, therefore, having been misled, now have the kindness and the common honesty to confess its error?

The result of the participation of women in the government of this state has been extraordinarily helpful. Their quick responsiveness to moral considerations in questions involving social justice, and their sympathy with all well-considered movements having for their object the betterment of conditons, have proven a mighty force for good. California is getting more for its money than it ever got before. The conditions of life for toilers have been bettered as else they could not have been in many years. Fads have received no countenance from the women of California. Indeed, they have shown rare discernment and keen intelligence in discriminating between the meretricious and the things worth while.—Pennsylvania papers, please copy.

REGRET NO CELEBATION.

Many of the people of Atlantic are now expressing sincere regrets that the Ward Six Patriotic association is not carrying out its work for the Fourth this year.

This organization has for several years been very helpful in arranging for sports for the day, but like any public effort has often been thankless.

There is this year the suggestion of combining effort by Improvement and Patriotic Association for the future good of the community.

Daniel N. Handy of Standish avenue returned Thursday from Maine where he was called Saturday on account of the serious illness of his mother Mrs. Tracy of South West Harbor, Maine who was taken to the Bar Harbor hospital but did not survive the operation.

"All Cats look grey—at Night!"

So thinks the Tire User who buys Pneumatics "Blind," without comparison after thorough investigation.

So thinks the Car Owner who buys from the Cut Price Dealer, the "just as good" Tire on which that Dealer quotes him the biggest discount off a Price List specially printed up for that purpose.

So thinks the Man whose Tire bill averages nearly half of his entire Season's running Expense, when it need not average one-fourth, if he would only "Work his head" and, once for all, learn the Tire Game.

THERE are Car Owners who regularly get 25% to 50% MORE Mileage, per Dollar invested in Tires, than do the Owners of other Cars driven with equal care, under equivalent road conditions.

The latter type of Owner is apt to conclude offhand (from his own experience) that all Tires must be Short-lived and Unsatisfactory.

Now this is to tell him that there is as much difference between the Mileage and Resilience of different brands of Tires, when the facts are investigated, and proven through actual Service, as there is difference between the Color of Cats—when viewed by Daylight.

This is to inform him that three Rubber Factories using precisely the same quantity and quality of Materials might, and sometimes do, produce (through the difference in their Rubber EXPERIENCE and efficiency methods) Tires of such widely different Mileage-Result as to average 3000 Miles, 4000 Miles, and 5000 Miles respectively—under parallel road conditions.

COST of production is therefore no sure guide to the Mileage and Resilience which can be put into such a subtle and "temperamental" product as the Rubber in a Pneumatic Tire.

And, though The B. F. Goodrich Co. can, and does, put the most Mileage per Dollar invested by the User, into Goodrich Safety-Tread Tires, they do not interpret this as a reason why they should charge a higher price, to include an Insurance Premium which would place their "Adjustment Basis" beyond the safe and reasonable minimum that Bad Roads and Careless Driving make necessary.

Because of its Manufacturing Advantages, its Precision Methods, and Waste-reducing Processes (resulting from its 45 years' EXPERIENCE in the working of Rubber), The B. F. Goodrich Co. can afford to and does, offer the greatest Mileage in Tires at the lowest price per Mile.

It sells the standard grade of Goodrich Safety Tires at 10% to 30% lower prices than other non-skid brands which "Guarantee" greater Mileage but cannot prove delivery of greater Mileage in actual use.

Why pay MORE for any Tire?

GENERAL INGREASE

the estimated revenue will be able to pay the expenses of the department, and thus save the city the necessity of placing the amount necessary to cover the deficit in the tax levy.

With the new rates as recommended and the proposed charge of the different departments, in accordance with the supplementary budget order introduced at the request of the Mayor at the last meeting of the City Council, the revenues of the department will be brought to a point where the income will merely meet the outlay. The committee feel that the changes are comparatively small and do not nanticipate that they will create any hardship upon the citizens.

In order to see just what increases are made in the water rate by the new schedule it will be necessary to make a few comparisons with the rate which has been in force. Taking the first item. "One faucet single dwelling house rate." The rate under the old schedule was $6 per year for 2,555 cubic feet. Under the new rate the price is $8 for 3,200 cubic feet The price for one faucet and one closet and other houses remains the same but the amount of water that can be used is reduced somewhat. On the $10 rate the amount of water is reruced from 4,380 feet to 4,000 fee and on the $14 rate from 6,205 fee to 5,600 feet.

Under the old system but one charge was made for a house occupied by more than one family that was supplied by one service. Under the new rate an additional charge of $4 is made for each additional tenent.

The commercial rates are also changes somewhat. For instance, under the old rate consumers using less than one million cubic feet annually paid 10, 11 and 12 cents per 100 cubic feet. Under the new rate they will have to pay 20 cents per 100 cubic feet.

Consumers using over 1,000,000 cubic feet annually who have been paying 9 1-2 cents per 100 cubic fee will have to pay hereafter 15 cents per 100 cubic feet.

One faucet in a store, office or place of business which use in excess of 3,200 feet will have to pay at the rate of 25 cents per 100 cubic feet instead of 23 cents per 100 cubic feet These are the principal changes.

The new rates which the committee reccommended to the Commissioner of Public Works, and which have gone into effect, as will be seen by the new bills when received are as follows:

METERED WATER RATES.

Single Dwelling Houses.

| | Rate. | Allowance Per Year. |
|---|---|---|
| One Faucet | $ 8.00 | 3200 cubic feet. |
| One Faucet and One Closet | 10.00 | 4000 " " |
| All other single houses | 14.00 | 5600 " " |

For all houses occupied by more than on tenant, an additional minimum charge of $4.00 per tenant shall be charged. There shall be no additional amount of water allowed for the additional minimum charge.

All water used in excess of the amount allowed for the minimum charge shall be charged for at the rate of 25 cents per 100 cubic feet.

COMMERCIAL RATES.

One faucet in store, office or place of business, same as dwelling houses, $8.00 per year for an allowance of 32 00 cubic feet. All water used in excess of this amount to be charged for at the rate of 25 cents per 100 cubic feet.

All water takers using less than one million (1,000,000) cubic feet annually shall be charged at the rate of 20 cents per 100 cubic feet.

All water takers using over one million (1,000,000) cubic feet annually shall be charged at the rate of 15 cents per 100 cubic feet.

TRANSIENT WATER TAKERS.

All water takers who do not come under the annual rates shall be charged 30 cents per 100 cubic feet.

No service connection will be made with the street mains for less than

HOLIDAY BILL AT THEATRE

The local motion picture and vaudeville houses have arranged for unusually strong programs on the holiday and will doubtless compete strongly with the outdoor sports, especially if April weather continues.

The Kincaide theatre has booked a well balanced program, including four acts, Conroy and O'Donnell present a comedy singing and talking act. The Three Rubes are decidedly eccentric comedians. Van Hazen gives a comedy singing and piano act, and Pernaine appears in a musical act. "The Diamond from the Sky" heads the list of motion pictures and the management promises that this installment of his thrilling serial is fully up to the standard set by the preceding installments.

The Auditorium presents that popular "movie" actor in "The Storm," a two reel drama. Mr. Kerrigan is assisted by Miss Vera Sisson. "To Redeem an Oath," with Frank Lloyd and Helen Leslie, is an absorbing two reel drama. "School Days" is a merry comedy in one part. Another one reel comedy stars Billie Richie. Then there is a single reel drama which should prove popular. There will be a special holiday matinee.

BRIEFS

The Thistle club will enjoy a trolley party to Nantasket beach Wednesday evening, July 14th.

Miss Katherine Fitzerald and Miss Josephine Campbell, two popular telephone operators at the Quincy Exchange are enjoying their vacation at Goff's Falls, N. H. They will be joined over the holidays by Miss Catherine Shea also of the local exchange.

The marriage of Huntington Reed Hardwick of Quincy and Miss Margaret Stone of Boston is to take place Thursday at noon at Great Hill, Marion. A private train which leaves Boston at quarter past nine is to stop at Quincy to take on a large party of relatives and friends of the groom.

TYPHOID FEVER IN THE UNITED STATES

An editorial in the Journal of the American Medical Association, April 17th, says in part, "It is evident that Typhoid Fever is on the way to become a relatively rare disease in many parts of the United States. There are two main reasons for this. First, there are now comparatively few large cities in which the public water supply is likely to contain Typhoid Bacteria. Second, the increase in the practice of pasteurization has resulted in a dimunition in the amount of milk borne typhoid."

The Elm Farm Milk Company complying with the general demand by by the Medical Profession and Sanitarians, were one of the first to scientifically pasteurize their milk. This milk is offered at the same price that rules for ordinary milk.

This process is the only one that absolutely guarantees the safety of milk against all of the infectious diseases.

Elm Farm Milk means SAFETY, SERVICE, SATISFACTION.

OUT FOR STATE OFFICE.

Samuel W. George, of Haverhill, former state senator and gas and electric light commissioner, and a well-know publist and economist, has been announced as a candidate for the Republican nomination for state auditor.

Mr. George was some years ago a candidate in the state convention for this nomination and his defeat there was claimed to be the result of the combination of claimants for salary increases whose petitions he had defeated in his then recent service on the ways and means committee.

Mr. George served six terms in the legislature, four in the house and two in the senate, being on the ways and means committee in both branches and the chairman of both the senate and joint committees. He was appointed by Governor Bates to the gas and electric light commission and by President Roosevelt as an assistan United States appraiser at the port of Boston, serving throughout the Taft administration and two years under President Wilson.

SPORTING COMMENT

Allen Connor is already for the baby Marathon at Hopkinton on the holiday. His associate members of the North Dorchester club, Jimmy Hennigan and others will be his opponents. Edouard Fabre, the Montreal big distance winner will also be in the mill.

It will be like a touch of old times for Billie Flynn on the holiday. He will run off the athletic events at the Point.

Porky Flynn, at Granville, N. Y., is looking after the playing end of the team of that place. The league also includes Poltney, N. Y., and Rutland and Pittsford, Vt. It is expected that Bull Moose Brown and Wes Ganzel will join him.

The Fore River—Makaria game on the holiday afternoon at Merrymount Park has been well advertised. The schedules bearing the booking have circulated widely and the controversy between the managers assumed large proportions. The discussion was the result of Fore Rivers sudden submission of a Manufacturers league game. The Makarias put up so strenuous an objection that the original agreement was finally reaffirmed.

Mike Brady may have lost the state amateur golf title but the Wollaston Golf club members who attached him to their club as the "pro," have an unwavering faith in him and declare he is one of the most consistent golfers in the country. Brady is a young man and is good for a score of years.

Why circusly. Real duck weather.

Three days have passed and none of the rough riders have offered to flaunt the burro which adds a touch of Mexico and the border line to the sketch "California" at the Kincaide theatre.

William Cox, new captain of the Rice High school base ball team, is a good batter.

The annual open regatta of the Wollaston Yacht club starts today at 3 o'clock. Tide is high at 4.28. The classes will be, A, B, C, D, I, H, K, S, and X, with a special class for Hingham and Winthrop, one-designed 15 footers. No power boat races will be held.

The Old Colony Driving club and the Dorchester Gentlemen's Driving club hold an interclub meet at South Weymouth on the holiday, with souvenirs to the patrons.

Frank Bruce, injured in a fall two weeks ago, has been taken from the Quincy Hospital to his home.

There will be ball games at Atlantic and Ward three to day if.—

Miss Ruth Keating left Wednesday for Boothbay, Maine, where she will be a member of the orchestra at the Grove hotel for the season.

IS TO ERECT RUSSIAN BATH

Thirteen Building Permits This Week

A permit has been issued this week to John Paskala to erect a building on Arthur street in which to conduct a public Russian bath. The building will be a one story affair 30 feet by 44 feet and will be fitted with a swimming pool, shower baths, bath tubs, etc.

Aside from commencing work on the new block to be erected by Henry M. Faxon on Hancock street, of which mention has already been made, there is but little new in the real estate line this week. Nothing has as yet been decided by Fred B. Rice as to what use the lot at the corner of Hancock street and Revere road will be put.

The building permits issued by Inspector Thomas this week were as follows:

Edward J. Paradise, barn, Dayton street.

Coleman Joyce, store, Washington street.

F. Allesandrini, shed, Water street.

Mrs. Annie E. Rodman, dwelling Royal street.

Mrs. Mary T. Young, dwelling, Chapman street.

H. F. Thayer, dwelling, Thayer street.

Jacob Goldman, shed, Main street.

P. N. Elliott, dwelling, Morse farm, Atlantic.

John Paskala, bath house, Arthur street.

Leon Delano, dwelling, Freeman street.

Henry M. Faxon, stores, hall and offices, Hancock street.

O. A. Clancy, dwelling, Pelican road.

GREENBACKS LAUNDERED.

The full extent to which present day public laundries are useful is not always appreciated by the general public. One resident of Quincy, however discovered quite unexpectedly this week that other things beside clothes may be laundered there.

The Superintendent of Construction on the Quincy Shore Boulevard packed a number of shirts neatly into a laundry box Tuesday morning and went away to business. Later in the day he discovered, very much to his distress, that he had lost 85 dollars in bills. After an extended search he decided that he must have lost them out of his pocket while on the street. On Thursday, upon opening the box of shirts just returned from the Old Colony Laundry, imagine his surprise and delight to find the bills lying on the top, all neatly laundered and tied with a ribbon. Upon looking at the list the gentleman found that the laundering of the bills had cost 15 cents.

Y. M. C. A. CAMP.

The Braintree Y. M. C. A. camp at Manomet has been occupied during the past week by a group of boys from Dorchester. Everything will get into full swing next Tuesday when the first group of boys from Braintree goes down to the camp.

Braintree is to be congratulated in having an organization like the Y. M. C. A. and a camping place so beautifully situated and with so many facilities as is the camp at Manomet. The association informs us that they are expecting the largest number of boys at the camp this season that they have ever had. The association suggests that all boys planning to go notify one of the members of the committee whose names appear in the association's advertisement of this issue at once, and that all boys when they come bring some books with them for use during any rainy days. The association requests the donation of books appropriate for boy's reading, same to be left at the house of Mr. F. C. Folsom, Lowell street, Braintree.

DISTRICT COURT.

John Barry, 38, 92 Main street, Millis, leaded guilty to drunkenness, was fined $15 and had his sentence suspended to June 28, 1916.

John Lester Brooks, fined $10 for taking clams without a permit. Patrolman Donovan was complainant.

CIRCUS GIVES FINE PROGRAM

Jones Bros. Present First Class Show

Give a circus a chance to pitch its tents and the show will be given and the Jones Brothers' outfit which got to Quincy early Friday morning was heavy showers as the reception committee was no exception. The massive canvasses were stretched from the poles on the Old Colony playground and the tiers of seats were set inside. No rain penetrated but of course there was some dampness.

The weather conditions interfered somewhat with the attendance. Those who attended were fully repaid. A jitney line competed with the railway and did a good business.

To the surprise of many the show is not of the barn storming variety but is a high class combination of fun, novelty and surprise. Excepting the Miller 101 Ranch Wild West Show, Jones' Brothers production can safely be considered the best seen here in years.

The circus drew a most orderly crowd and although several policemen were on duty no arrests were made as has been the "custom" at others.

The circus is first of all an animal show. The trained seals fulfilled their part of the program through unusually good balancing stunts. Trained lions, not aged and toothless but of tender years, contributed a wonderful stunt and the doggies, valuable and well appearing, amused the entire tent. The menagerie was well stocked and the elephants were the last word.

Well kept animals pranced and danced, raced and did unexpected tricks. The aerobatic features of the program were hardly of the nerve trying quality but of the variety which gets a hand because it is deserved and not as a compliment.

The show was given in two divisions the first the animal and acrobatic acts and the second a miniature Wild West show. Taking part were the ponies, two dozen well groomed dandies, who acted their parts with an almost human intelligence.

The steam calliope, fed by a gasoline engine, furnished a short concert. The calliope was played by a woman who had original and catchy ideas of syncopated music and the poular songs received the run for their money. Three bands furnished music during the afternoon and evening. They furnished the music for the group of clowns which tumbled and turned to their hearts content.

SHOULD SUCCEED.

Florence Sindberg received a diploma from the Lewis and Clark high school in Spokane, Washington last month after finishing the four-year course in two years and earning her own living the while. It is the first time in the history of the school, that the work has been completed in two years, according to Principal Henry M. Hart.

Miss Sindberg was working in a small town in Idaho when she decided that she wanted an education. Her funds were insufficient to carry her far, so she began working after school. She learned telegraphy so well that she was given employment with a Spokane company as substitute operator on the night shift. She attended school all day, learned her lessons so well that she was able to skip every other grade, and spent most of her evenings over a telegraph instrument.

At the close of the first year of her high school work she entered the summer high school and was enabled to make two credits toward graduation. The next summer she repeated the summer school course and made two more credits. Miss Sindberg plans to go through [illegible] in the same [illegible]

RAIN DOES NOT STOP LAUNCHING

Present Diamond Ring to Sponsor

A handsome diamond ring was presented to Mrs. Anna Nelson Ewertz, wife of Eric H. Ewertz, in charge of submarine construction at the Fore River shipyard after she had christened the British underwater craft launched at 3.40 Friday afternoon. Pres. Joseph W. Powell of the builders made the presentation.

A sharp inshore wind swept over the ways and the launching stand, carrying with it plenty of rain. Improvised coverings had been provided but hardly kept out the dampness.

No flags waved over the hull and there was nothing to indicate the submarine had been constructed for Great Britain. Those with superstitious minds found a connection between the designation H-13 and Friday. A short luncheon followed the launching.

THE FORESTER'S DAUGHTER

A Romance of the Bear Tooth Range

By HAMLIN GARLAND

He was indeed quite comfortable, save when he realized that Mrs. McFarlane was taking altogether too much for granted in their relationship. It was delightful to be so watched over, so waited upon, so instructed. "But where is it all leading me?" he continued to ask himself, and still that wall of reserve troubled and saddened Berrie.

On the fourth morning the phone rang, and the squawking voice of Mrs. Belden came over the wire—"I wanted to know if Berrie and her feller got home all right?"

"Yes, they arrived safely."

The old woman chuckled. "Last I see of Cliff he was hot on their trail—looked like he expected to take a hand in that expedition. Did he overtake 'em?"

"I don't hear very well. Where are you?"

"I'm at the Scott ranch. We're coming round 'the horn' today."

"Where is the supervisor?"

"He headed across yesterday. Say, Cliff was mad as a hornet when he started. I'd like to know what happened"—

Mrs. McFarlane hung up the receiver. The old woman's nasty chuckle was intolerable, but in silencing the phone Mrs. McFarlane was perfectly aware that she was not silencing the gossip; on the contrary, she was certain that the Beidens would leave a trail of poisonous comment from the Ptarmigan to Bear Tooth. It was all sweet material for them.

Berrie wanted to know who was speaking, and Mrs. McFarlane replied, "Mrs. Belden wanted to know if you got through all right."

"She said something else, something to heat you up," persisted the girl, who perceived her mother's agitation. "What did she say—something about me—and Cliff?

The mother did not answer, for Wayland entered the room at the moment, but Berrie knew that traducers were already busy with her affairs. "I don't care anything about old lady Belden," she said later, "but I hate to have that Moore girl telling lies about me."

CHAPTER XV.

Wayland Hears From Home.

IT was almost noon of the fourth day when the supervisor called up to say that he was at the office and would reach the ranch at 6 o'clock.

"I wish you would come home at once," his wife argued, and something in her voice convinced him that he was more needed at home than in the town.

"All right, mother. Hold the fort an hour, and I'll be there."

Mrs. McFarlane met him at the hitching bar, and it required but a glance for him to read in her face a troubled state of mind.

"This has been a disastrous trip for Berrie," she said after one of the hands had relieved the supervisor of his horse.

"In what way?"

She was a bit impatient. "Mrs. Belden is filling the valley with the story of Berrie's stay in camp with Mr. Norcross."

His face showed a graver line. "It couldn't be helped. The horses had to be followed, and that youngster could not do it, and, besides, I expected to get back that night. Nobody but an old snoop like Seth Belden would think evil of our girl, and, besides, Norcross is a man to be trusted."

"Of course he is, but the Beldens are ready to think evil of any one connected with us. And Cliff's assault on Wayland"—

He looked up quickly. "Assault! Did he make trouble?"

"Yes. He overtook them on the trail and would have killed Norcross if Berrie hadn't interfered. He was crazy with jealousy."

"Nash didn't say anything about any assault."

"He didn't know it. Berrie told him that Norcross fell from his horse."

"Good God! I never suspected a word of this. I didn't think he'd do that."

He fixed another penetrating look upon her face, and his voice was vibrant with anxiety as he said, "You don't think there's anything wrong?"

"No, nothing wrong, but she's profoundly in love with him. I never have seen her so wrapped up in any one. She thinks of nothing else. It scares me to see it, for I've studied him closely and I can't believe he feels the same toward her. His world is so different from ours. I don't know what to do or say. I fear she is in for a period of great unhappiness."

The return of the crew from the corral cut short this conference, and when McFarlane went in Berrie greeted him with such frank and joyous expression that all his fears vanished.

"Did you come over the high trail?" she asked.

"No, I came your way. I didn't want to take any chances of getting mired. It's still raining up there," he answered; then turned to Wayland: "Here's your mail, Norcross, a whole hatful of it—and one telegram in the bunch. Hope it isn't serious."

Wayland took the bundle of letters and retired to his room, glad to escape the persistent stare of the cowhands. The dispatch was from his father and was curt and specific as a command: "Shall be in Denver on the 23d. Meet me at the Palmer House. Am on my way to California. Come prepared to join me on the trip."

With the letters unopened in his lap he sat in silent thought, profoundly troubled by the instant decision which this message demanded of him. At first glance nothing was simpler than to pack up and go. He was only a tourist in the valley, with no intention of staying, but there was Berea! To go meant a violent end of their pleasant romance. To think of flight saddened him, and yet his better judgment was clearly on the side of going "Much as I like her, much as I admire her, I cannot marry her. The simplest way is to frankly tell her so and go It seems cowardly, but in the end she will be happier."

His letters carried him back into his own world. One was from Will Halli day, who was going with Professor Holsman on an exploring trip up the Nile. "You must join us. Holsman has promised to take you on." Another classmate wrote to know if he did not want to go into a land deal on the gulf of Mexico. A girl asked, "Are you to be in New York this winter? I am. I've decided to go into this suffrage movement." And so, one by one, the threads which bound him to eastern city life respun their filaments. After all, this Colorado outing, even though it should last two years, would only be a vacation. His real life was in the cities of the east Charming as Berea was, potent as she seemed, she was, after all, a fixed part of the mountain land and not to be taken from it. At the moment marriage with her appeared absurd.

A knock at his door and the supervisor's voice gave him a keen shock. "Come in," he called, springing to his feet with a thrill of dread, of alarm.

McFarlane entered slowly and shut the door behind him. His manner was serious and his voice gravely gentle as he said, "I hope that telegram does not call you away."

"It is from my father asking me to meet him in Denver," answered Norcross, with faltering breath. "He's on his way to California. Won't you sit down?"

The older man took a seat with quiet dignity. "Seems like a mighty fine chance, don't it? I've always wanted to see the coast. When do you plan for to pull out?"

"I haven't decided to go at all. I'm still dazed by the suddenness of it. I didn't know my father was planning this trip."

BECKER IS DESPERATE

Expected to Name Men Who Took Cash Derived From Graft

New York, July 3.—Charles Becker, in the death house at Sing Sing, will reveal the names of the police department officials, living and dead, with whom he divided the $100,000 graft money that was wrung from the gamblers and illegal resort keepers in his violent career as commander of the strong arm squad.

This was the prediction made by the condemned man's lawyer, Martin T. Manton. Those who are alive ought to be shaking in their shoes, according to Manton, because Becker is desperate, now that hope is practically gone.

UNION HATTERS TO PAY BIG JUDGMENTS

Each Member Gives One Percent of His Weekly Earning

New York, July 3.—The work of raising the $300,000 which the union hatters of Danbury, Conn., must pay to satisfy judgments resulting from the Loewe boycott of eleven years ago has begun.

The hatters' unions of the Newark and Orange districts notified their members that each member must pay 1 percent of his weekly earnings into the treasury. The same thing will be done in all districts throughout the country.

NEEDED WATERTIGHT DECK

Watt Blames Owners For Titanic's Inadequate Construction

New York, July 3.—Rear Admiral Watt, former chief constructor of the United States navy, testified as an expert in the suit of the Ocean Steam Navigation company—the White Star line—to limit its liabilities for the loss of property and lives in the Titanic disaster.

The witness said that had the Titanic had a watertight deck extending to the top of her bulkheads she would be afloat today. He also asserted that longitudinal bulkheads would have increased the buoyancy of the ship.

Watt gave it as his opinion that if any one was to blame for what he termed the Titanic's inadequate construction, it was her owners, who, he said, were responsible for her limited safeguards. He added that had the constructors been given a free hand they would have employed more safety devices.

Garrison believes that cases not under observation in remote districts will bring the total number of cases in the state to 400.

GARDEN ANTS.

They Do Not Injure Plants, And If They Disfigure Lawns They May be Easily Controlled.

An unusual number of complaints have been received this year by the Department of Agriculture from persons who say that ants are injuring their lawns and gardens. As a matter of fact, these ants do little harm and the injury that is attributed to them is usually caused by something else. In large numbers however, the small conical nests which they build on lawns are somewhat unsightly and on this account it may be desirable in some cases to destroy them.

Except for the unsightly appearance of their nests, however, the lawn ants do no appreciable harm. They are frequently noted on roses and on other ornamental and garden plants, and it is naturally supposed that they are doing harm to these. As a matter of fact, it is not the plants that attract the ants, but plant lice. These tiny creatures excrete a sweet liquid of which ants are very fond and which they collect without injuring the plant lice. For this reason plant lice are frequently termed "ant cows." The analogy is emphasized by the fact that ants have been known to take plant lice into their nests, shelter them through the winter, and return them to suitable plants in the spring very much as men are accustomed to feed and shelter cows throughout the winter, putting them on pasture with the coming of the spring. This is the only way in which ants can be said to injure plants.

They enter houses very rarely and, on the whole, may be said to do no harm of any kind except in so far as they lessen the attractive appearance of the lawn. On the other hand, it is quite possible that by bringing up from the lower depths sand and earth they may distinctly increase fertility by forming a top dressing or soil mulch, and at the same time permit better aeration of the earth.—U. S. Dept. of Agriculture.

ST. JOHN'S PARISH HOLD ANNUAL FIELD DAY AND REUNION MONDAY

Baseball Games, One Between Girls Teams, And Athletic Sports, Important Part of Program

The annual field day and reunion of St. John's parish opened with a shower but closed in a blaze of glory. A heavy downpour caused an intermission of an hour in the final preparations by the committees, soaked the grass and decorations and gave it a dubious outlook for a while. Old Sol came to the rescue however and by two o'clock the grounds were dry, the decorations reset and the happy gathering entered into the spirit of the occasion. The affair continued until after 11 o'clock.

Fr. M. J. Owens, the pastor, was given a hearty reception by the parishioners and Fr. John J. Casey, who had charge of the general committee, and Fr. Walter A. Quinlan, athletic adviser, came in for their share of praise.

The booths were in charge of the various societies of the parish and presided over by their members. Real novelties, fancy and useful articles were sold and persons of all ages qualified for the militia at the shooting gallery. The tables were ranged about the lawn near the parish house and the school yard was turned into an athletic field. There was plenty of entertainment for the people between both fields, including a dancing board, vaudeville through the courtesy of Capt. Geo A. Wardwell of the Kincaide theatre, truck rides through the courtesy of Burgess and O'Brien, and music by Provost's six piece orchestra.

Fully 200 children participated in the athletic program, in charge of Timothy S. Ford. Many heats were required and it was a case of the survival of the fittest. There were three ball games.

Easily the feature was the game between the Sanctuary Girls of the mission station of St. Joseph's of Quincy Point and the Sodality of the mother parish. The former, through better team work and an inside knowledge of the game were winners by a score of 20 to 3. Only three innings were played, approaching darkness bringing the contest to a sudden close. Marion and Amy Fallon were the

Dr. and Mrs. Ahlstrom and their niece Miss Esther Peterson were on their way to spend the holiday with friends in Milford and were near their destination when the auto skidded and after crashing into a hydrant overturned pinning the three occupants beneath the car. They were removed from this dangerous position by bystanders and removed to the Milford hospital where their injuries were dressed.

They returned to their home in Quincy later in the day. Aside from a compound fracture of her arm Mrs. Ahlstrom received a severe nervous shock.

WILD RUNAWAY IN CITY SQUARE

Driver Thrown Under Wheels After Companion Jumps

Jumping in sight of City square in time to avoid being thrown from the wagon of the Boston Ice Cream Co. drawn by a pair of runaway horses, Edward Caddy escaped injury. Walter Reid, the driver was thrown when the wagon struck a car. The wheels passed over his leg and he was taken to the City Hospital in the police ambulance. He was slightly injured but will probably be able to go home today.

The horses started to run on Hancock street, near Adams academy, Sunday evening, when the whiffletree unhooked and struck the off horse. In going into City square at break neck speed the rear end of the wagon struck an electric car, right after Caddy jumped.

Reid was thrown to the street under the wheels and the horses continued across City Square, through a crowd of people and several passing autos. They swung to the right on nearing the chain fence around the First Parish church and the front wheels brought up against one of the stone posts. Someone in the crowd stopped the horses before they had gone much further.

Reid was rushed to the hospital and put on the operating table. No bones were broken. Caddy was taken to his home. The wagon was not damaged and the horses were uninjured.

The pask equipment was carried by the mounted detachment. Private Arthur Hultman, who led a monstrous black horse, was nick named "Jess Willard" by the crowd.

Col. Warren E. Sweetser of the regiment personally complimented the commanding officer and the men before they left for Quincy.

Both machines had the national colors entwined about them and the occupants were dressed in white, wore hats with blue trimmings and carried flags.

In the autos were Mrs. Rose A. Reed at the wheel. Miss M. Lizzie Furnald, Miss Nellie M. Cate, Supreme Chaplain Mrs. L. A. Harding, Miss Lillian and Bert Reed; F. F. Merrill at the wheel Mrs. Elizabeth M. Merrill Protector. Mrs. Annie G. Grignon, Chaplain Mrs. Electa Field, Mrs. Mary A. Fox. They were loudly applauded all along the line. ## MANY FALSE ALARMS FEATURE CELEBRATION OF "NIGHT BEFORE"

In Comparison with Former Years the Holiday was Quietly Observed

Saturday night, the real "Night before the Fourth" was an unusually quiet one in and about the city. Young America evidently saving its enthusiasm for Sunday night. During the evening there were large crowds in and about City square but everything was quiet and orderly. Some youth would now and then let out a blast loud and long from a horn and there was an occasional explosion of firecrackers. As a rule however things were very quiet.

The various clubs in City Square as well as in other parts of the city kept open house and entertained their members and friends, but midnight saw most of them closed for the night. It was an easy night for the fire department for not a bell alarm was sounded. All of the call men of the department were kept on duty at the several stations but their services were not needed. Capt. McKay of the police department had a large force of officers on duty in the several sections of the city, the regular officers being assigned in charge of squads of specials.

Occasionally during Sunday evening there was on explosion of cannon crackers but it was not until after midnight that the real thing began. Then bands of young men and women marched through the streets blowing horns and exploding firecrackers but they did little damage.

It was 9.42 Sunday night when the first bell alarm of fire was sounded from Box 58 situated at the corner of Adams and Beale streets and the recall followed in a few minutes. Again at 9.59 an alarm was sounded from Box 41 and this also followed by a recall in a few minutes. From then on until Monday morning there was almost a constant ringing of the fire fire alarm bells.

First one alarm would sound from the north part of the city, only to be followed by an alarm from the south part of the city, then came an alarm from Squantum, and a little later one from South Quincy. All of these alarms were followed in a few minutes after sounding by the re-call. Chief Billings and the Central Station Auto Chemical answered all bell alarms and they were kept on the jump.

It is fortunate indeed that it was not in the olden days when all apparatus was drawn by horses for it would have been a hard night for them. The last bell alarm of the night sounded at 4.10 Monday morning. This was the only fire of the night and was confined to a mattress in a house on Bell street, Houghs Neck, the damage being very slight.

The bell alarms of Sunday July 4, and Monday July 5 were:

POLICE OFFICER INTERNS AUTO

"Am I Sober, Now?" Is Query of Victim

Patrolman Canavan interned an auto at the Gould garage early Sunday morning and upset the plans of a party of four. The discovery that a man who was none too steady on his feet intended to operate the machine resulted in the ultimatum.

"As long as you stay here," declared the officer, "you are safe, but start the machine and you will be arrested for operating while under the influence of liquor. All protested but decided the officer had the best of the argument. Several times Patrolman Canavan was called off the street and asked "Am I sober now?" It was after dawn when the owner of the machine passed inspection.

MOTORCYCLIST BADLY INJURED

Breaks Both Legs When Cycle Hits Tree

Edward Apps, aged 31 years, of 286 Somerville avenue, Somerville, had both legs broken below the knee Sunday evening when he lost control of the motorcycle which he was riding and crashed into a tree on Adams street. The young man had been to Nantasket beach during the day and was on his way home. Just how the accident happened is not known but he probably lost control of his machine.

He was found lying unconscious in the road by District Engineer Badger who sent in a call for physicians and Dr. Thomas J. Dion responded, but before he reached the scene Dr. William H. Clancy, who was passing in his automobile, rendered first aid. Dr. Dion ordered the young man removed to the City Hospital where he was taken in the police ambulance.

MYSTERY OF AEROPLANE AT SQUANTUM SOLVED

Providence Aviator Removes Biplane From Women's Club Hangar

The mystery surrounding the ownership of the aeroplane found in the hangar of the Squantum Women's club on the Squantum Field cleared up Sunday when a man who said he was Ashworth, a Providence, R. I., aviator, directed the loading of the machine on an auto truck so it could be taken out of the city. Several members of the club witnessed his preparation for departure.

One prominent club member called at police headquarters and requested a warrant, charging Ashworth with breaking and entering, because he had to force the doors of the hangar to put the machine inside. The court official to whom she told her story said he thought that under the circumstances the act was hardly criminal but suggested two other charges—trespass or working on Sunday.

The woman left without securing a warrant.

The presence of the biplane in the club hangar has been an exciting mystery for Squantum. President Mrs. H. A. Morse of the club discovered it when showing the hangar to a prospective purchaser. No one knew who owned it or how it got there. The mystery grew as the days passed and the members consulted attorneys to learn their rights in the matter.

An investigation was made by the members but Mrs. Morse declined to be interviewed.

Patrolman Duffy of Atlantic said that the machine was brought to Squantum last Wednesday morning in an auto truck and that the truck reached the field about three o'clock.

Ashworth, it is understood changed his plans to fly at Squantum after he learned the state had made no provisions to issue licenses to aviators. It is believed he will conduct his school at Rocky Point, R. I.

DANGEROUS CHILDISHNESS.

The celebration of Independence Day brought the usual number of false alarms, pulled in by benighted individuals who thus wished to show their independence of all demands of decency, humanity and common sense.

There were no accidents in connection with the activity of these brainless maniacs, which is fortunate, but neither were there any arrests in the same connection, which is unfortunate. There are plenty of ways in which to enjoy the Fourth without resorting to so dangerous a pastime as ringing fire alarms, summoning apparatus whose passage through the streets is always attended with more or less danger to the firemen and bystanders.

Fortunately the apparatus is now motor driven but if the heavy trucks had been drawn through the streets by exhausted horses it would not have dampened the ardor of the false alarm maniac. Thoughts for others, be it man of beast, never enter the craniums of these childish beings. There is only one advantage in the large number of false alarms pulled: it increases the possibility of discovering the identity of the guilty persons. It may be hoped that the police will leave no stone unturned to discover and prosecute the offenders and good citizens throughout the city, who chance to know any of the guilty parties should feel it their duty to notify the authorities.

WALKING AND THE WORKER.

The recent United States health bulletin warning the public of the dangers of sedentary lives and urging every one to walk, has led many newspapers to comment very justly on the danger of lack of exercise. But many women who do housework or work in stores, and men who work in factories, say their daily labor leaves them weary, and they have no energy left for out door exercise.

Yet many of these indoor tasks provide little physical development. The organs of the body may degenerate almost as much as in the case of the business man who sits in a swivel chair all day.

People who give up walking because they are weary with daily work do not always realize how refreshing a daily constitutional is. In cities many thousands of working people ride in trollies to work would feel better for walking. After a little training of their muscles they would find that the exercise would be a pleasure and they would be better able to meet the strain of indoor employment.

Despite the handicap of a rather threatening day St. Johns parish conducted on Monday a field day which is a worthy rival of St. Mary's successful affair a short time ago.

The new water rates appear to be based upon common sense and if they are, as they appear, just and equitable, we should not protest over the slight increases.

SEE AMERICA FIRST.

The slogan, "see America first," which is growing in popular favor, even among the "globe trotters" and the fashionable tourists of Europe, is likely of necessity as well as by choice, to receive a bigger impetus this year than ever before because of the great war overseas. But even so there is need of a government tourist bureau which would more rapidly facilitate travel and sightseeing in our country. There are thousands of people eager to "see America", but who do not know just how to do it most satisfactorily. They want to go somewhere and to see the biggest sights there are but they dont know just where to go. The commercial agencies and railroad timetables are a help but they do not give the impetus, information and enthusiasm to home travel that a well-regulated and capably-administered federal bureau would if devoted entirely to making all kinds of tourist information about America complete, clear and accessible. Uncle Sam should be his own Baedeker if the best results of "seeing America first," both for the country and the tourists, are to be attained while the devastation of Europe is raging.—Jamaica Plain News.

BLINDED BY HEADLIGHTS.

In the news columns of a Boston Daily, Tuesday, was a description of an automobile accident at Portsmouth, N. H., caused by the driver of the auto being so blinded by the strong headlights of an approaching car that in endeavoring to avoid hitting a motorcycle he swerved his car, was dashed down an embankment and against a stone wall resulting in severe injuries to one occupant and less injuries to the other two. We wonder that the accidents from this cause are not much more numerous than are recorded. It seems to be the delight of some automobilists having those blinding lights to scorch along the road entirely oblivious of the rights or safety of anyone else. We understand there is a law compelling an electric car to dim its strong searchlights when signalled by a passing auto. The electric car is much less dangerous as it is confined to its track while no one can tell where the searchlighted auto will take its course. An even more stringent law should apply to the auto in this particular.—Dedham Transcript.

MISS THE CLOCKS.

People who are prone to be late for their trains miss the big clocks that used to stand on the streets in Boston. There used to be a lot of them and they were very convenient, saved looking at your watch every few minutes, whenever you wanted to catch a train. A recent city ordinance has tabooed all street clocks and they have disappeared like magic. I miss the clocks very much and have heard a lot of people say they do also.—Rockland Standard.

Financial Review

With the approach of Independence Holidays, the natural tendency for activity on the Stock Exchange was to diminish. During the week foreign selling of American stocks became more and more evident. This was due mainly to liquidation of foreign holdings, rendered necessary by preparations for the forthcoming huge war loan in London, and also to aid payment of Europe's gigantic war purchases in the United States. For some time to come our large excess of exports over imports is likely to have a material effect upon the international securities movement. During the twelve months just closed our merchandise exports have exceeded imports by about $1,000,000,000.

Orders for munitions by European governments to the extent of about $1,000,000,000 have already been received, and more big contracts are in course of negotiation. The bulk of these orders, which are now being forwarded, will probably be shipped during the next twelve months. That Europe will be able to increase her shipments of merchandise in payment is exceedingly doubtful, because each belligerent is turning so large a part of its energies to war. The conditions are, therefore, extremely favorable for a continued influx of American securities.

A more favorable opportunity for taking back a considerable amount of American stocks could not be expected. Such a policy would strengthen this country financially and industrially. Our foreign obligations would be diminished, and Europe would be better able to conduct the war, by withdrawing temporarily at least a portion of its invested capital in the United States. This does not mean that we shall no longer need foreign capital, or that we have as yet reached the point where we will have capital to lend abroad.

When normal conditions are resumed, the development of our natural resources and of our city and industrial life will require large sums; much larger in fact than we will be able to command at home. At no distant future we may again be seeking foreign capital, though not on the same scale as during the last fifty years; while on the other hand before another fifty years has passed we may have become one of the first lending nations in the world, if not the first.

Home trade conditions are fairly satisfactory. There has been no further improvement in the volume of trade, but reports from many sections are encouraging. The steel industry reports increasing activity owing to war orders, and the larger establishments are now running at about 90 per cent of their capacity, or about 50 per cent more than at the opening of the year. Prices are firm and many concerns are likely to show greatly improved net results. The railroad situation is also more satisfactory. Crops are somewhat backward owing to prevalent cool weather, but a few weeks of higher temperature would quickly compensate for this deficiency. The nation's acreage is larger than usual and the condition of most crops, particularly wheat and cotton, is entirely satisfactory.—Henry Clews, Banker.

CLUB KEEPS OPEN HOUSE

Gives Concert at Granite City Club Rooms

In accordance with its time honored custom the Granite City club, Quincy's well known business men's social club, kept open house at its rooms in the Savings Bank Building Saturday evening, and the rooms were thronged all the evening with members and guests. An orchestra was present and gave a concert, and a buffet lunch was served in the dining room.

At eleven o'clock the members were invited to Colonial hall where hot boiled chicken lobsters were served. The lobsters were brought from Boston alive and boiled in the clubrooms.

Monday morning the rooms were opened to the women and children and again there was a large attendance. Ice cream and cake was served and there was a concert by a victrola. As a little side issue a handsome five pound basket of candy was given to the young people.

The evening was in charge of the entertainment committee: Dr. W. H. Blanchard, John H. Johnson and Dr. Herman L. Keene.

The lost child call was sounded from Box 116 at 5.42 Monday afternoon to summon help to search for Carl Bausald, a 4-year old Boston boy who was missing from 115 River road where he had been visiting during the day. The lad was found shortly after the alarm, on Great Hill

BIG CELEBRATION AT POINT.

A crowd numbering several thousands gathered at the foot of River street shortly before midnight Sunday night to see the Town River Yacht club start its July Fourth celebration with a huge bonfire. The immense pile of old boxes, barrels and other inflamable material was built up into a pyramid nearly 50 feet high. It was intended to have the bonfire located on an island in the Town river but owing to the high tides this was changed and the mass of all material which Young America had been collecting for weeks was piled on what is known as the old Edwards wharf at the foot of River street.

Mayor Campbell arrived on the scene shortly before midnight and about the same time the club house of the Town River yacht club, which had been thronged with members and guests all of the evening, became deserted as the members and guests joined the crowd which had gathered on every vantage point.

It was only a few minutes after midnight when Mayor Campbell applied the match and a few minutes later a flame shot heavenward. About the same time the sound of exploding cannon crackers rent the air and the bells and whistles on the fire alarm system began to strike out Box 67. Chief Billings, who was on hand to see the bonfire, made a hastly exit, but the crowd had more interest in the bonfire at that time than any possible fire in the Atlantic section. The Yacht club house remained open all night.

WELL ON ROAD TO RECOVERY

Morgan Pronounced by Doctors to Be Out of All Danger

HOLT'S STARTLING CONFESSION

Cornell Instructor Who Made Effort to Wreck Part of National Capitol and Shot Leading Financier Had Considered Slaying Entire Family of Latter—Expert on Explosives

Glen Cove, N. Y., July 6.—Frank Holt, the former Cornell university instructor, who attempted to assassinate J. P. Morgan at East Isle, Morgan's summer home, near here, confessed that he was the man who set the bomb which exploded in the United States Capitol at Washington.

Two bullets fired at Morgan penetrated his hip but neither pierced the abdomen. The first shot struck the right hip and went through in a line almost horizontal, deflecting and slightly downward. The second shot struck nearer the groin and was deflected much more sharply downward. This shot came out of the upper leg.

Morgan continues to improve so much that specialists in attendance announced that he was out of all danger. His temperature and pulse are normal.

The favorable turn in the condition of Morgan was in marked contrast to that of Holt. Holt's condition became so grave that orders were given at the jail that he was not to be disturbed, and that no one was to be permitted to see him but his counsel and the jail physician.

By his confession and the detailed description of the bomb he used in the Capitol outrage, Holt stamped himself as an expert on the use of explosives, the police assert. Immediately his confession was obtained, the chief of the Washington police, a squad of secret service operators and New York city detectives and Bertillion and finger print experts were summoned to Glen Cove.

Thomas Tunney, captain of the bomb and Anarchist squad of detectives of the New York police department, and William E. Luyster, the chief of police before whom Holt was arraigned, obtained the confession. To do so, they intimated, they had to employ so-called third degree methods of police headquarters.

How Bomb Was Made

Three sticks of dynamite bound together, some match heads placed in a hollow of one of the sticks which Holt had scooped out with his penknife; a bottle of sulphuric acid in the neck of which there was inserted a cork carefully measured and of a kind previously tested—such was the bomb which Holt placed in the senate wing of the national Capitol at 4 o'clock Friday afernoon.

Holt had ascertained by previous tests that the acid would eat its way through the cork in about eight hours. Therefore he estimated that the bomb would explode about midnight. He wanted to make certain, he said, that it would explode, so he took a stroll about Washington and early in the evening went to the Union station, a few blocks away from the Capitol, and waited there till he heard the explosion.

Then he took a train to New York. Arriving in New York he lost little time in taking another train for Glen Cove. Several sticks of dynamite left over from the making of the Washington bomb were in his suitcase and these he took with him to Glen Cove. One of the sticks he stuck into his pocket along with two loaded revolvers, for use, if necessary, in his mission at the Morgan home. It was not used, but was found when he was locked up.

An Expert Bombmaker

At first the police thought the dynamite played a minor role in Holt's plans to assassinate Morgan. When they listened in undisguised amazement to the story he told of the Washington bomb's construction they concluded that he possessed a knowledge of explosives far beyond that of the ordinary bomb maker.

Under the persuasion of the third degree Holt talked freely of his bomb designing qualifications. Without much persuasion he admitted that he had gone to the Morgan home with the intention of remaining there till Morgan did something to end the European war. What he wanted Morgan to do was to prevent the further shipment abroad of American munitions of war.

The man who unfolded this unusual story of bomb placing and attempted assassination talked coolly and with dramatic frankness. He is an American citizen, native born, 35 years old, and educated above the average. He had been a student at Cornell, he said, and later an instructor there in French. The records show he taught German instead. Next fall he had expected to be the head of the department of French at the Southwestern Methodist university at Dallas.

His wife, a daughter of O. F. Sensabaugh, presiding elder of the Dallas district of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, is with her father in Dallas and to her he addressed a telegram after his arrest, telling her that man proposed but God disposed, and bidding her to be brave.

Holt told his tory in a cell in the Glen Cove jail. He had discarded his shirt and collar and had bound across his forehead a white cloth, through which there had seeped a trickling of blood that flowed from a cut above his forehead. His grayish eyes sparkled as he spoke, and he talked at first with great animation.

As the day wore on he weakened. The quantity of blood he had lost from a terrific blow on the head—a blow that knocked him unconscious as he grappled with Morgan and his butler on the floor of a hallway in the Morgan home—was great and the strain told on him quite severely.

Further examination of Holt by Major Pullman, superintendent of the Washington police, and Captain Tunney, developed that Holt was ready to slay the entire Morgan family had the financier refused to agree to stop making loans to the British government for the purchase of arms for the allies.

"Suppose that Morgan had refused to do as you wanted, had he talked over the question of arms with you. What would you have done?" Holt was asked.

"Well, I would have killed his family," came the cool reply.

"If it had come to that, who would you have killed first?"

"Well, if I had killed Mrs. Morgan first—just shot her—I think it would have had sufficient effect to impress on Mr. Morgan to make him do as I directed. If that failed to impress him, however, I had resolved to blow the children's heads off, one at a time. Maybe he would have given in before the last child was killed."

Evidence to show that Holt is Professor Erich Muenter, once instructor of German at Harvard university, who disappeared in 1906, after his wife was slain with arsenic, is accumulating. Pictures of Holt have been identified in Chicago by close friends of Muenter as the missing instructor. The two men certainly have similar traits and mutual interests. Muenter delved deeply into the occult, and Holt had made a thorough study of witchcraft at Cornell.

ACTED AS FISCAL AGENTS

Morgan Firm Had Handled About $500,000,000 War Contracts

It is said that the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co. has handled contracts for war munitions since the beginning of hostilities which are estimated at a total of at least $500,000,000.

Of this amount about $400,000,000 worth has been purchased for the British government since the Morgan firm was appointed as agent for that government in this country, and $50,000,000 worth for the French government contracted for within the last month, the Morgan firm having been appointed by the French government to act in the same capacity as it does for the British government.

About one-half of the total amount contracted for in this country represents contracts for ammunition, shells, powder and the like, but of the whole amount of ammunition contracted for only a small part, it was stated, had been forwarded to the purchasers. The remainder is now being manufactured.

The Morgan firm's commissions for placing the contracts were said to be on a sliding scale, which began at 2 percent and decreased in proportion to the magnitude of the contracts. All of the contracts, it was understood, had been placed with firms in the United States. The Morgan firm, it was stated, had not given any contracts to firms in which it was interested.

SOURCE OF DYNAMITE

Police Thus Far Unsuccessful In Efforts to Trace It

That Holt has confederates is the theory held by Raymond W. Pullman, who is making every effort to find out where Holt got the dynamite with which he tried to destroy the national Capitol, and which he carried to the Morgan home.

Every possible attempt was made by the police to discover whether Holt had accomplices in his attempted assassination of Morgan and the explosion of the bomb in the Capitol, with the result that police officials were inclined to believe that Holt had worked alone on both occasions.

HEAR BATTLE OF AMAZONS

Loud outcries and shrieks for assistance from women in a house on Franklin street, near Payne street, disturbed the peacefulness of the Doble's corner vicinity Saturday night. A crowd gathered and the police hurried to the scene.

They found that an argument had developed between two women, and the defeated one took that way to disapprove of the victory.

HIDE AUTO OF H. F. McINTIRE

Friends gave Herman F. McIntire, a prominent business man of this city and father of the movement to advertise Quincy annually in the metropolitan papers, a bad half hour Saturday night when they hid his automobile while he joined in the open house celebration at the Granite City club of which he is a member.

It was about midnight when he discovered the machine was missing. Visions of auto thieves entered his mind and enlisting the services of another auto owner he motored to police headquarters and informed the police.

A record of the make and registry number was made and the police in various parts of the city were notified McIntire solved the problem himself by taking a hint and looking around a corner on his return to the club. The look resulted in the discovery of the machine.

TYPHOID FEVER IN THE UNITED STATES

An editorial in the Journal of the American Medical Association, April 17th, says in part, "It is evident that Typhoid Fever is on the way to become a relatively rare disease in many parts of the United States. There are two main reasons for this. First, there are now comparatively few large cities in which the public water supply is likely to contain Typhoid Bacteria. Second, the increase in the practice of pasteurization has resulted in a dimunition in the amount of milk borne typhoid."

The Elm Farm Milk Company complying with the general demand by by the Medical Profession and Sanitarians, were one of the first to scientifically pasteurize their milk. This milk is offered at the same price that rules for ordinary milk.

This process is the only one that absolutely guarantees the safety of milk against all of the infectious diseases.

Elm Farm Milk means SAFETY, SERVICE, SATISFACTION.

SQUANTUM HAS BIG HOLIDAY CELEBRATION

People From All Over City Enjoy Elaborate Program

Squantum had its greatest celebration of the Fourth of July and enjoyed every minute of the day in spite of intermittent showers. Fully 2000 people took part in the day's events that began with a fire at 2 A. M. and did not wind up until close to midnight. The affair was in charge of the Squantum Improvement association and the excellent way the events were conducted was a fine testimonal to the activity of this live organization.

Former President William N. Kenyon and an able committee saw that there was not a dull moment for man, woman or child. It was "open house" throughout Squantum and hundreds of visitors were in evidence coming from all parts of Quincy and Greater Boston.

Twice during the early hours of the morning the Quincy firemen made the long run to Squantum. The first was for a fire in a couple row boats anchored near the beach. It was a needless alarm and the firemen hurried back to their stations. At 4 A. M. came a second call and this proved a false alarm the box being rung by some out-of-town celebrators.

The official day's program began with a flag raising at the home of James M. Loughan at 7.30 A. M. Over 150 children gathered around the big flag while Charles Bostwick played the cornet, James H. Foster, a drum, and the huge American flag was spread to the breeze. The children sang America and every child was given a pretty American flag.

The parade started shortly before 9 o'clock. Over 200 persons were in line and there were half a dozen floats depicting humorous sides of Squantum life.

The Squantum Women's club was given a jolly roasting in a float which carried a small shed which for some months has stood on the first site the women selected a clubhouse. A huge sign was labelled—Squantum Women's club. Watch us Grow (?) Then was shown a sketch of the proposed club house of 1913 which was labelled $8,000. 1914 showed the hangar which has been the subject of recent mystery as being occupied by a strange airship, and this was labelled $225. the price the women paid for the building; third came a sketch of the house carried on the float and this was labelled 1915 and the price $2. From the applause the float received all along the line it was evident that the women took the roasting good-naturedly.

The Squantum Boy's club made a fine appearance in their new baseball uniforms. There were three lively local hits in floats. They were the auto express; the jitney bus and the Squantum Coast guards. Mrs. John Jepson had a clever costume in imitation of a butterfly and her daughter, Mrs. Chester Young, was a Squantum Eagle. The Squantum mosquito now on the point of extermination as a summer resident, was the clever costume of Miss Edith Olsen.

Edward Carlson was dressed as an up-to-date mother and the husband impersonated by C. E. Kohler wheeled James Allen as a baby in a baby carriage. This feature got a good laugh all along the line of march. Robert Grant's costume consisted of a barrel and his own personality. Elliott Olson had a clever get-up in a Squantum circus and in a large crate which he drew were a cat and a dog which did not seem to mind the excitement at all. Charles Singleton was made up as Cream of Wheat.

Miss Isabel Owen made a big hit as George Washington dressed in a pretty suit of blue of Colonial design. Elsie Oberg was a real Dutch girl with huge wooden shoes. Sylvia Rund was a Girl of Many flags. Little Miss Ruth Holmes was very cute in the stars and stripes.

Charlie Chaplin, the noted film actor, had a close second in Charles Westlake, who attracted wide attention by his antics. Miss Annie Morrill had the most original costume in line appearing as a huge strawberry.

Peace and Prosperity in America was a pretty conception impersonated by three very charming young women.

At the head of the line was the Squantum Improvement association band consisting of Joseph Atkinson, Arthur Packard and Malcolm McCormack, bugles; Thomas Curley, cornet; Roger Mason, cymbals; James Foster, bass drum and Joseph Uppling, snare drum.

The day's festivities closed with a vaudeville show on the lawn in the rear of the First Church of Squantum. W. B. C. "Chick" Fox, Stanley Nichols, and several other well known professionals took part. The prizes for the day's events were then awarded as follows—Parade—

James Loughan was the marshall and headed the parade followed by Charles Bostwick, Indian, mounted, on a spirited black steed.

A full list of those in the parade will be printed Wednesday.

BASEBALL GAME.

Five hundred people saw the Squantum Boys' club defeat the Atlantic Juniors in an exciting baseball game following the parade. The prize for the winning team was a fine chest protector. The Squantum boys were out for the prize and did not take any chances on losing it. Not for a minute did they lose control of the game and at no point were they in danger of losing.

MISS FOLEY IS SPEAKER

Frihet Lodge Holds Annual Picnic

The annual picnic of the Frihet lodge of Good Templars was held all day Monday on the lower field at Merrymount park. The affair was largely attended. Many of the party went down during the early morning arriving just in time to get caught in the shower. As they took refuge in the shelter house the rain did but little damage. The Finnish band was also present during the day and gave concerts, Music was furnished by the mandolin and guitar club.

After the weather cleared and the sun came out there was a series of national games. In the afternoon there was an address by Miss Margaret Foley, the suffragist.

"The movement of the world is away from all customs and teachings of the early ages, and so the political status of woman cannot be an exception to the rule. In the early days the family was self-supporting and independent of the rest of the community. They raised all food necessary for the family on their little farm,—meats, vegetables, grains, milk, eggs, butter, cheese,—all the home products. The mother knew that the food was pure, clean, and wholesome and such as she could afford to give her children.

"It is not so today. All these things are under governmental control. Much of the food is unclean and unwholesome, and yet the mother is obliged to buy that food, taking risk of giving food that may bring sickness and disease to her family. The only way to control food supply is through legislation. This question lies with the government, therefore the mother heart, the home element, should be expressed in the government by giving a vote to the woman in the home.

We are told that politics is too corrupt for woman to enter as a voter. But does she not live under a government which is dominated by politics? If it is too corrupt to admit woman as a voter, then politics is too corrupt to make and administer the law which influences her life. Laws are enacted requiring individuals to be clean and upright, and yet the source of all this law-making, namely, the political world itself, is said to be unclean and unwholesome. If our government is built on moral law it should be clean enough for women to have a voice in it; and as there are no better housecleaners than women we certainly need them in politics.

"There is no great cry on the part of men because of the contaminating influences which woman meets in the business and industrial world. They are not keeping her out of the various vocations of life because of the evils which she might encounter. Are not the sweatshop conditions and overworked and underpaid evils far more destructive to the physical, mental and moral welfare of woman than any condition in which suffrage might place her?

"This has not been of her own choosing. The invention of machinery by man has taken the work formerly done in the home from the spinning and weaving, even down to baking and laundry work, and masses it in great factories and shops. As a result the homes of today and a hundred years ago are very different. Instead of woman taking man's work, it is the reverse. He has appropriated to himself what was long supposed to be hers. When this is not the case she must at least do it upon man-made plans. As this simply means that in developing this country men have consciously taken from the home its industrial life, and woman finds that what was formerly a work of love is now done under new conditions and strange environments. It is strange that any thinking being should consider in the general evolution and progress of the world that woman alone should stand still.

"The working woman needs the ballot because there are economic conditions which can be solved by the ballot only. At present laws are made without the woman's viewpoint. We know that the ballot carries with it responsibilities. We know that the person who is discriminated against by law is always the poorest paid, therefore woman's labor is cheap labor, and unjust discrimination against her as a wage-earner will continue until she becomes man's equal politically.

The great bodies of organized labor have for many years endorsed woman suffrage, and have declared that work should be paid for, not according to the sex of the worker but the merits of the work. But the workingman knowns that this will not be so long as she is without power in politics. Therefore political enfranchisement is a matter of vital concern to the working woman. A government of the people, for the people and by the people is only realized when every individual has equal share in administering such a government. Where one class governs without the consent of all there is no true democracy.

"I trust that every man of Massachusetts wil give the women of Massachusetts a square deal by voting for the equal suffrage amendment, in November 1915."

OPEN RACE AT WOLLASTON Y. C.

It was an ideal day for yacht racing Saturday and as a result the annual open race under the auspices of the Wollaston Yacht club was a great success. A fleet of fifty boats participated and the race was sailed without a protest or accident of any kind.

The race was under the rules of the Yacht Racing Union of Massachusetts in an easterly breeze that at times was light but which freshened toward the end giving the boats a chance to carry full sail in comfort. The course was a triangular one and the first leg had hardly been covered when the breeze freshened so that unusually good time was made over the last two legs.

In class A the Tyro secured the gun while the fast Areyeto of Eleazer F. Drew of the Squantum club secured second position.

In Class I the Louise of A. E. Whittemore of the Quincy club carried off the honors. In the sonder class the old Quincy cup defender Harpoon could not do any better than fourth position.

The Teaser finished first in class X, Sintram, in Class B. Winona in class H, Wawenock in class S and Vixen in the Winthrop and Hingham one design class.

Class D was made up entirely of yachts of the Quincy yacht club cape cat class, commonly known as scrappers, and lively race they put up. In Saturday's race however the Dolly 111, was the first to finish and she also won on corrected time with the Iris of ex-Commodore Frank Fessenden Crane a good second. The three old rivals, Dartwell, Clara and Almira finished in that order while Vice Commodore Edgar W. Emery at the stick of the Mudjekeewis withdrew. The finish in this class was a pretty sight. Cash prizes of $10, $5, and $3 were given in each class.

The summary of Class D.

Keeping in Touch

When the up-to-date man wants to take a day off, a week-end trip, or even a month's vacation, he doesn't sigh "to get away from a telephone."

Like the late E. H. Harriman, he makes the telephone a servant, not a master; uses it when he deems it desirable to keep in touch with business affairs; and refuses to let it intrude upon his leisure, without warrant.

One talk daily to the office or factory, and—for a limited period, at least,—the rest of the day belongs to the man who has the right kind of an organization.

"I see. Well, before you decide to go I'd like to have a little talk with you. My daughter has told me part of what happened to you on the trail. I want to know all of it. You're young but you've been out in the world, and you know what people can say about you and my girl." His voice became level and menacing as he added, "And I don't intend to have her put in wrong on account of you."

Norcross was quick to reply. "Nobody will dare accuse her of wrong doing. She's a noble girl. No one will dare to criticise her for what she could not prevent."

"You don't know the Beldens. My girl's character will be on trial in every house in the county tomorrow. The Belden side of it will appear in the city papers. Sympathy will be with Clifford. Berrie will be made an issue by my enemies. They'll get me through her."

"Good Lord," exclaimed Norcross in sudden realization of the gravity of the case, "what beasts they are!"

"Moore's gang will seize upon it and work it hard," McFarlane went on with calm insistence. "They want to bring the district forester down on me. This is a fine chance to badger me. They will make a great deal of my putting you on the roll. Our little camping trip is likely to prove a serious matter to us all."

"Surely you don't consider me at fault."

Worried as he was, the father was just. "No, you're not to blame. No one is to blame. It all dates back to the horses quitting camp. But you've got to stand pat now for Berrie's sake."

"But what can I do? I'm at your service. What role shall I play? Tell me what to do and I will do it."

McFarlane was staggered, but he answered: "You can at least stay on the ground and help fight. This is no time to stampede."

"You're right. I'll stay, and I'll make any statement you see fit. I'll do anything that will protect Berrie."

McFarlane again looked him squarely in the eyes. "Is there a—an agreement between you?"

"Nothing formal—that is, I mean I admire her, and I told her"— He stopped, feeling himself on the verge of the irrevocable. "She's a splendid girl," he went on. "I like her exceedingly, but I've known her only a few weeks."

McFarlane interrupted. "Girls are flighty critters," he said sadly. "I don't know why she's taken to you so terrible strong, but she has. She don't seem to care what people say so long as they do not blame you. But if you should pull out you might just as well cut her heart to pieces"— His voice broke, and it was a long time before he could finish. "You're not at fault—I know that—but if you can stay on a little while and make it an ounce or two easier for her and for her mother I wish you'd do it."

Wayland extended his hand impulsively. "Of course I'll stay. I never really thought of leaving." In the grip of McFarlane's hand was something warm and tender.

Berrie could not be entirely deceived. She read in her father's face a subtle change of line which she related to something Wayland had said. "Did he tell you what was in the telegram? Has he got to go away?" she asked anxiously.

"Yes, he said it was from his father."

"What does his father want of him?"

"He's on his way to California and wants Wayland to go with him, but Wayland says he's not going."

A pang shot through Berrie's heart. "He mustn't go—he isn't able to go," she exclaimed, and her pain, her fear, came out in her sharpened, constricted tone. "I won't let him go—till he's well."

Mrs. McFarlane gently interposed. "He'll have to go, honey, if his father needs him."

"Let his father come here." She rose and, going to his door, decisively knocked. "May I come in?" she demanded rather than asked before her mother could protest. "I must see you."

Wayland opened the door, and she entered, leaving her parents facing each other in mute helplessness.

Mrs. McFarlane turned toward her husband with a face of despair. "She's ours no longer, Joe. Our time of bereavement has come."

He took her in his arms. "There, there, mother, don't cry. It can't be helped. You cut loose from your parents and came to me in just the same way. Our daughter's a grown woman and must have her own life. All we can do is to defend her against the coyotes who are busy with her name."

"But what of him, Joe; he don't care for her as she does for him. Can't you see that?"

"He'll do the right thing, mother; he told me he would. He knows how much depends on his staying here now, and he intends to do it."

"But in the end, Joe, after this scandal is lived down, can he—will he—marry her? And if he marries her can they live together and be happy? His way of life is so different. He can't content himself here, and she can't fit in where he belongs. It all seems hopeless to me. Wouldn't it be better for her to suffer for a little while now than to make a mistake that may last a lifetime."

"Mebbe it would, mother, but the decision is not ours. She's too strong for us to control. She's of age, and if she comes to a full understanding of the situation she can decide the question a whole lot better than either of us."

"That's true," she sighed. "In some ways she's bigger and stronger than both of us. Sometimes I wish she were not so self reliant."

When Wayland caught the startled look on Berrie's face he knew that she had learned from her father the contents of his telegram and that she would require an explanation.

"Are you going away?" she asked.

"Yes. At least, I must go down to Denver to see my father. I shall be gone only overnight."

"And will you tell him about our trip?" she pursued, with unflinching directness. "And about—me?"

He gave her a chair and took a seat himself before replying. "Yes, I shall tell him all about it and about you and your father and mother. He shall know how kind you've all been to me."

He said this bravely, and at the moment he meant it, but as his father's big, impassive face and cold, keen eyes came back to him his courage sank, and in spite of his firm resolution some part of his secret anxiety communicated itself to the girl, who asked many questions with intent to find out more particularly what kind of man the elder Norcross was.

Wayland's replies did not entirely reassure her. He admitted that his father was harsh and domineering in character and that he was ambitious to have his son take up and carry forward his work. "He was willing enough to have me go to college till he found I was specializing on wrong lines. Then I had to fight in order to keep my place. He's glad I'm out here, for he thinks I'm regaining my strength. But just as soon as I'm well enough he expects me to go to Chicago and take charge of the western office. Of course I don't want to do that. I'd rather work out some problem in chemistry that interests me, but I may have to give in for a time at least."

"Will your mother and sisters be with your father?"

"No, indeed! You couldn't get any one of them west of the Hudson river with a log chain. My sisters were both born in Michigan, but they want to forget it. They pretend they have forgotten it. They both have New Yorkitis. Nothing but the big hotels will do them now."

"I suppose they think we're all 'Injuns' out here?"

"Oh, no, not so bad as that. But they wouldn't comprehend anything about you except your muscle. That would catch 'em. They'd worship your splendid health, just as I do. It's pitiful the way they both try to put on weight. They're always testing some new food, some new tonic. They'll do anything except exercise regularly and go to bed at 10 o'clock."

ARE YOU NERVOUS?

Maybe There Is a Cause For It That You Can Correct.

Many who suffer from backache and weak kidneys are unnaturally irritable fretful and nervous. Not only does constant backache "get on the nerves" but bad kidneys fail to eliminate all the uric acid from the system, and uric acid irritates the nerves, keeping one "on edge," and causing rheumatic, neuralgic pains. When suffering so, try Doan's Kidney Pills, the medicine so well recommended by Quincy people. Read this Quincy resident's statement:

Mrs. R. A. Neil, 40 Edison Park, Quincy, says: "My hands and ankles swelled. I was worse at night after I had done a hard day's work. I used several medicines, but they did me little or no good. I began taking Doan's Kidney Pills and I could see an improvement right away. They got my kidneys acting right and the swelling went down. I wasn't so nervous and felt better in every way. I now keep Doan's Kidney Pills in the house and consider them a fine family medicine."

LAND AND WATER SPORTS AT QUINCY POINT CELEBRATION

In Evening Large Crowd Enjoy Beautiful Display of Fireworks

A ball game between the Wasecas and the Bigelows opened the land sports program on the Ward Two playground. In the fourth inning a violent rain storm burst into the schedule. The game will be replayed Saturday.

Councilman Bert Williams was official umpire. All respected his size and he was able to keep back everything but the rain. Several close decisions were made, all base decisions being made on the spot, not from the box.

In the afternoon there were both land and water sports. Hundreds saw the contests. The fireworks in the evening drew several thousands. The display while not expensive was a treat. They were set off from a float in the river. One of the set pieces, an American flag was a beauty. Music during the celebration was by the Stetson band.

The key of the club house, thrown into the river when the bon fire was lighted, was fished out at midnight, after the orchestra which furnished the music for dancing had gone home. Open house was observed throughout the district. Fully 50,000 saw the program carried out in the 24 hours. There were no accidents and but one arrest.

Moving pictures of the sports were taken by Capt. Wardwell of the Kincaide theatre. The feature event was the pie eating contest with 20 boys, ravenous for the prize, digging into the halves of blue berry pies, and getting smeared in the process. The result of the sports follow:

220 yards dash for girls—Marion Peterson, Mildred Jones second.

Three-legged race—John Poole and James Murdock, Fred Gibb and Edward Bar second.

Following these sports there was a series of water sports in Town River off the yacht club house. The banks of the river were lined with interested spectators and the events proved to be among the best of the day. The various sports resulted as follows:

Canoe race, doubles—Harold Hayden and Walter Mead. Misses Erna Schlenker and Edith McCreedy second.

Ladies' rowing race—Miss Catherine Laing, Miss Ruth Bass second.

Tub race—Robert Barrows, Floyd McDonald second.

Greased pole contest—Won by Paul Johnson.

Tilting match—Miss Edith McCreedy, Henry Leet second.

There was also a series of power boat races as follows:

WIRELESS WARNS SHIPS OF BOMBS IN TRUNK

Holt's Farewell Letter To Wife Contains Tip

(By United Press)..

Washington, July 7, That the Navy Department sent wirless messages to the steamship "Philadelphia" and "Saxonia" warning them that Frank Holt had declared a ship which sailed from New York on July 3 would be sunk July 7 has been confirmed. It was stated that the department expected the warning would be picked up by any other vessel which sailed on the same day.

The first wireless message was sent Tuesday night and the stations continued sending further flashes throughout the night. The warning was in the farewell letter Holt wrote his wife and which was forwarded to the State Department by Joseph E. Pockoell of Dallas, Texas.

"The steamer leaving New York for Liverpool on July 3rd should sink on the 7th God willing. I think it is the "Philadelphia" or "Saxonia," but I am not quite sure as according to schedule these two left on the 3rd." read the letter.

Holt had written on the margin of the message "Tear this off until it has happened." This letter Mrs.Holt turned over to authorities who telegraphed Washington. As soon as the message was received it was communicated to Supt. Coleman of the Washington police. He asked the Navy Department to put the wireless into play and he also communicated with police Commissioner Woods of New York, who immediately started a search of all vessels in the harbor for bombs which Holt might have planted.

It is not known whether the ships were reached. At 11 o'clock this morning the American line announced it had received a reply from Capt. Miles of the "Philadelphia" through a wireless message sent at 10 o'clock this morning. The captain stated that all baggage aboard the vessel had been accounted for and identified and he was positive the Holt trunk was not aboard the vessel.

MYSTERY MAY BE UNSOLVED

Holt's Suicide Foils Attemp' To Clean It Up

(By United Press)

Mineola, N. Y., July 7—It seems unlikely today that the mystery surrounding Frank Holt, confessed dynamiter of the capital at Washington and assailant of J. P. Morgan, would ever be cleared up.

Holt's suicide halts, at least temporarily, all efforts to identify him as Eric Muenter, the long sought Harvard professor who murdered his wife. Holt's leap of 30 feet to the stone flagging beneath his cell mutilated his head which makes it improbable that old friends can identify him as the missing man.

Holt's suicide came with the discovery of one of the most important clues—the finding of a cottage near Hicksville where he lived apparently for weeks constructing the bombs and practising shooting. From the Long Island cottage detectives took Holt's black trunk, which had enough explosives to wreck several blocks, and put it in a storehouse.

JESS WILLARD RIVALS WILSON

(By United Press)

Windsor, Vt., July 8—President Wilson today was compelled to share the attention of the natives with Jess Willard, the conqueror of Jack Johnson. The champion arrived here today with a Wild West Show and was the centre of attraction.

EVELYN THAW MUST TESTIFY

(By United Press.)

New York, July 7—Evelyn Thaw will be forced to testify at her husband's sanity trial. Supreme Court Justice Hendrick made that positive today when he declared he would issue a writ of body attachment for her. The writ will be prepared at once and the deputy sheriff will be sent to Lake Chateaugay where Mrs. Thaw returned last night.

Justice Hendrick today examined Dr. Bernard Livingston who sent Deputy Atty. Frank Cook a statement yesterday saying Mrs. Thaw was physically unfit to testify. The justice declared the reasons insufficient and said he would issue an attachment if the state wished it.

Thaw is expected to take the stand late this afternoon. He will be called by the state. The concensus of opinion around the court room today seems to be that the state has not proved Thaw is insane at the present time. Evidence introduced about the actions years ago will not bear weight in the present trial it is said.

"JIM" CLAFLIN IS MARRIED

Word has been received from Chicago announcing the marriage in that city, June 30, in the English room of the Blackstone hotel of James Edward Claflin of Wollaston, son of Mr. and Mrs. James A. The groom is well known in Wollaston. He is a graduate of the Quincy High school in the class of 1908. While in school he took a prominent part in athletics. After graduating he went to Aiberta, Canada, where he remained about a year. He then went to Detroit, Mich., where he has since been engaged in the automobile business.

ASK REMOVAL OF DISPENSARY

Board of Health Considers Petition

The Board of Health has received a petition from the occupants of the Burgin and Merrill block requesting that the tuberculosis dispensary located on the third floor of the building be removed on the ground that it is a menace to public health. The petition is now before the board for consideration.

The dispensary was located in the building after representatives of the State Board of Health approved the choice of the local board. There is a feeling that the protest will receive favorable consideration although the members of the board are non-committal. If such action is taken however it is not anticipated for several months at least.

ANNOUNCE ENGAGEMENT.

The engagement is announced of Miss Eva Caroline Abbott, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Quimby S. Abbott of Whitman, formerly of Marsh street, Quincy, to James M. Smith of Quincy. Mr. and Mrs. William B Holmes of Wollaston have closed their home and will spend the summer with Mrs. Holmes' parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. Z. Pratt of Bridgewater.

COUNCIL COMMITTEE SCORES CHIEF BILLINGS IN REPORT

Assert Language at Willard Polishing Co. Fire Unbecoming His Position

Although it was generally known that the special committee which has been investigating the Fire Department would submit its report at Tuesday night's meeting of the City Council there were not many citizens present. The report was read during the regular course of business and immediately at its conclusion on motion of Councilman Smith it was referred to the Executive.

The City Council has no authority to order the Chief of the Fire Department to do anything as he is an appointee of the Mayor. The only thing the Council can do is to embody such rules as it desires in the form of an ordinance. The Mayor, however, if he sees fit, may direct the Chief to comply with the recommendations contained in the report, or he can place the whole report in a pigeon hole of his desk without any action.

The investigation had its inspiration in certain talk that followed the smash-up of the Central station auto chemical and the fire in the granite sheds at West Quincy. The report of the committee follows in full.

The special committee appointed under Order No. 229 to investigate the Fire Department, beg leave to submit the following report.

The committee's investigation is respectfully submitted under the following subjects: Accident to La France Combination, May 11th; the fire of the Willard Polishing Company, May 15th; Conduct and Efficiency of the Department; Needs and Recommendations.

ACCIDENT TO LA FRANCE COMBINATION.

The Committee has gone very thoroughly into the matter of this accident, having had a number of sworn witnesses before them. We find that on May 11th, the chief being obliged to be out of town, left the Central Fire Station in charge of the captain. The captain ordered Driver Richard Williams to take the auto combination out to instruct Edward Barry in the use of the gears.

They drove over several streets in the Point and Neck district. On their return to the Central Station by the way of Quincy Avenue, he, Driver Williams, willfully, against the instructions of the department, ordered the machine beyond the Quincy-Braintree line to an unreasonable distance. On their return to the station via Quincy avenue at a point approximately one hundred feet beyond the Kelliher house, while they were running at an excessive speed, at least thirty miles an hour which was entirely uncalled for, the machine became unmanageable, swerving into a telegraph pole which it severed at its butt, and plunged down an embankment on the land of the late Terrance Keenan.

The committee is unable definitely to determine whether or not this accident was caused by the steering gear breaking, but had the machine been driven at a reasonable rate of speed this serious accident which jeopardized the lives of the two men on the combination and caused great expense to the city, would have been avoided.

FIRE AT WILLARD POLISHING COMPANY, MAY 15TH.

The sworn testimony obtained by this committee pertaining to this fire, brings out the following facts:

At the time of the arrival of the

AN UNFORTUNATE HANDICAP.

It is a cause for deep regret that an institution with such possibilities for public service as the free tuberculosis dispensary, established a week ago in an office in the Durgin & Merrill block by the local Board of Health in accordance with the requirements of the law, should be handicapped by the opposition of those who fear its proximity.

Occupants of offices in the building are understood to object to the location of the dispensary near them on the ground that it will frighten away clients and some of them, it is understood, have threatened to move out if the dispensary remains. The probable result will be the removal of the dispensary to some other quarters.

We do not feel inclind to lay the blame too heavily upon the occupants of the offices in the block. They fear and probably with truth that some of their clients will be frightened away. There are certain to be persons who will shun the building under such circumstances although those same persons will throw themselves into worse dangers without a thought. After all the danger is comparatively slight, not so much as would be encountered by attending a public meeting in a hall, riding on a closed street car, in the smoker of the railroad train, or in many other places which we frequent without the slightest trepidation.

WANTED: A DESPOT.

The funeral of Porfirio Diaz, former president of Mexico, was held in Paris Tuesday. The lovers of revolution in Mexico must feel easier now that the one man who seemed able to prevent them can no longer take a hand in earthly affairs. Diaz was an old man and an outcast from his country but it is a fact that the Diaz legend had grown to such proportions that the fear of his return was ever present in the hearts of the weak men who essayed to take his place.

The most astonishing episode in the amazing career of this man was his weak resistance to the revolutionary forces which accomplished his downfall, forces not so strong as many which he had often crushed in the past. There can be no question that the Mexican dictator was conquered by old age and thus succumbed to an opposition which would have been laughable 20 years earlier.

It is well to be enthusiastic over the glory of republics and democracies but it is foolish to expect the impossible. The impossible is a republic in Mexico today. Those who truly sympathize with Mexico should hope for a man as great and as strong as Diaz but imbued with a more sincere desire for the happiness and welfare of the people. Mexico needs a benevolent despot.

A GUIDE TO TRADE.

"In my opinion the advertisements are far from being the least valuable part of the paper. I look them over carefully, and save at least five times the cost of the paper through the business advantage I get from them."

The above remark is credited by a newspaper exchange to a citizen of its home town, and it applies equally well in Quincy. The merchants are the purchasing agents for the people of the town. They make their report in the columns of this newspaper as to what they have been able to do for their clients. Every day there are notices of special values, which for some good reason or other can be had in the store of this or that merchant.

There are special exigencies in the daily history of every store which the newspaper advertisement tells about. A merchant finds a special opportunity to buy a large lot of valuable goods at a low price. No other store has them. To make a profit on the transaction, however, he must turn the lot over at once. He can not wait for the goods to be picked up as customers drift in by chance. He must let the whole town know about it in a systematic way, or the goods will move too slowly, and the deal prove a failure. The newspaper advertisement furnishes the only means by which he can solicit the whole town.

Similarly some merchant is constantly finding that he is overstocked on certain lines, and must turn his goods quickly to avert a heavier loss. The newspaper gives the new of it.

Changes like these are coming up all the time. The people who do not follow them through the newspaper are adding to their cost of living. The time to buy is when some one wants to sell. And if a man has anything that he must sell promptly and at a price advantageous to the customer, he will not keep still about it, nor wait for the public to happen into his store by chance.

"LOST AND FOUND."

A woman who recently lost a handbag of some value on the streets of a large city was telling the other day about her observations of "Lost and Found" advertising. She watched a number of newspapers for a week or two. She says that there are half a dozen people who advertise articles lost, for every one who ever advertises anything found.

Any article of sufficient value to advertise is usually picked up by some one. It looks as if about five-sixths of the people who find articles of value keep them, making no serious effort to find the owner.

No doubt most people who would keep a found purse, without effort to trace the owner, would recoil with disgust at the idea of picking a person's pocket. Their feeling would not merely be a fear of the law but a sense that it is a low down trick to steal Yet they may do something equally mean by indirection.

People should put themselves in the place of the other person. Losing a sum of money or other property is a most irritating experience. It fills one with disgust at his own carelessness, and one begrudges the loss far more than if the money were equally wasted in some extravagant and needless purchase. The return of a lost article is a kindness that is not soon forgotten.

There are comparatively few people who, on reading a "Lost" notice in a newspaper would decide not to restore the article. Failure to return the property would be so clearly a criminal act that a person must be potentially a crook not to do it. Keeping still about a found article that one has not seen advertised, is not morally any different. But many people's codes of honor are crude and hazy. The absence of any actively dishonest act seems to satisfy them. If the disproportion of Lost and Found advertising noted above is a general one, it indicates a yellow streak of dishonesty running through our daily life.

SWEEP OF PROHIBITION WAVE.

In all utterances with reference to the number of "dry" states in the American Union frequent revision is now necessary. We were writing a short time ago, for instance, of ten prohibition states; a little later of fourteen, still later of sixteen; now we find that the number must be put at nineteen. Within a few years, from a fifth the "dry" states have reached and passed one fourth and one third and now they are on the way to one half of the forty-eight sovereign commonwealths of the republic In the order of their admission to the prohibition column these states are: Maine, Kansas, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Georgia, Mississippi, North Carolina, Tennessee, West Virginia, Virginia, Arizona, Colorado, Oregon, Washington, Alabama, Arkansas, Idaho, Iowa and Utah.

Other states are on the way. Maine and Kansas had to bear the brunt of the fight in the earlier days. Both states for a long period were held up to derision. All manner of falsehoods were circulated and believed regarding the operation of prohibition within their borders. Their people were grossly slandered. Desperate efforts were made to injure them in reputation and in trade. But they were faithful and steadfast, and both have prospered without the saloon and despite the interests back of the saloon.

It is not so difficult now as it used to be to convince an individual or a state that sobriety, temperance, moral cleanliness, pays. The examples are too numerous. The old slanders hurled against the "dry" state now fall flat. All of the states in the prohibition column are made up in the main of virile, intelligent, industrious, progressive people. They have learned by experience, much of it very costly, that the traffic represented by the saloon is a root of disorder, wrong-doing, misery, bad citizenship; and they will have no more of it on any terms.—Christian Science Monitor.

Insolvency Overtakes Temperance Life Insurance Company

New York, July 7.—The business of the American Temperance Life Insurance association of New York, which was organized in 1889 to provide life insurance for total abstainers, has been made insolvent by the admission as policy holders of "moderate drinkers," its officers assert.

A representative of the insurance department said the concern owed about $80,000 in death claims, and there were no funds to pay living policy holders.

Former President Belano of the association said the largest financial loss was due to a modification of its principles so as to permit moderate users of intoxicating liquors to become policy holders.

"The deaths in this class were 50 percent more than among the totally temperate," he declared.

Claim He Was Slain to Prevent His Revealing Them

LINKED WITH ROSENTHAL CASE

Counsel For Becker Seeks John Doe Proceedings to Inquire Into Death of "Big Tim," Credited With Being High In Power Over Police and Authority Over Gangsters

New York, July 7.—The death of "Big Tim" Sullivan is said to be made the basis of an unusual legal move to keep Charles Becker from the electric chair.

Application for a writ of error will be entered with the United States supreme court by W. B. Cockran, chief counsel for Becker. After that paper has been taken to Washington, Cockran will ask some—it is impossible to be specific now—judicial officer to hear John Doe proceedings into the death of Sullivan, whose body was found beside the railroad tracks near Pelham on Aug. 31, 1913.

The purpose of this proceeding will be to bring into court as witnesses some of the witnesses who testified at both Becker trials, and draw from them admissions which, it is thought, they will be willing to make in Becker's behalf if they are guaranteed immunity from prosecution.

In the application for a John Doe hearing it will be alleged that the death of Sullivan is linked with the death of Rosenthal, and it will be said, further, that Sullivan was in possession of the facts in the Rosenthal killing, which it was his purpose to reveal in the event that the possibility of saving Becker and the gunmen seemed to be past.

Becker was convicted on the first trial on Oct. 25, 1912. Sullivan was then alive. Had he lived to see the gunmen denied a second trial and Becker a third, it is said, he would have come forward with a story which he thought would certainly save Becker and might save the gunmen.

"Big Tim" believed at the start that no jury would agree that either Becker or the four gunmen were guilty. He counted on disagreements. When all five were convicted in the 1912 trials he was confident that the findings of the juries would be reversed by the court of appeals. That court, on Feb. 25, 1914, upheld the gunmen's conviction and ordered a new trial for Becker. The gunmen were executed April 13, 1914. Becker was convicted a second time, May 23, 1914,

So, before Sullivan had opportunity to do what he counted on doing at—to him—the proper time, he was killed. After investigations it was decided that a train was the accidental agency of death, but this new move will dispute that finding and will, it is said, seek to point out that Sullivan's elimination at that time removed danger from persons vitally interested in placing the responsibility for Rosenthal's death on Becker's shoulders.

Sullivan was so high a power in the police department that he was credited with being, at times, the directing head of the department. He granted favors to policemen and guided them when trouble threatened. When gamblers wanted to open up and remain open, undisturbed by raiding police officers, Sullivan was generally appealed to for advice and action. And, enjoying an authority over gangsters, "Big Tim" was in a position of undisputed power and influence.

Becker's notes take in this feature. It is Becker's story that Rosenthal went to Sullivan for permission to open his gambling house, and was told by the political leader that he could do so without hindrance by the police.

When Rosenthal told this to Becker the then policy raider asked Rosenthal if matters had been adjusted elsewhere, and was told that they had. Shortly after this Rosenthal and Rose quarrelled; a few weeks after that Becker and Rosenthal disagreed. Then came Rosenthal's death.

It will be argued that the fact of the five convictions and the revelations that attended the prosecutions contributed to the unbalancing of Sullivan's mind and that when he left the sanatorium, presumably sane, he was a threatening figure to those persons he knew to have been behind the ordering of Rosenthal's killing. Very little time was consumed in the period between Sullivan's departure from the asylum and his death.

TYPHOID FEVER IN THE UNITED STATES

An editorial in the Journal of the American Medical Association, April 17th, says in part, "It is evident that Typhoid Fever is on the way to become a relatively rare disease in many parts of the United States. There are two main reasons for this. First, there are now comparatively few large cities in which the public water supply is likely to contain Typhoid Bacteria. Second, the increase in the practice of pasteurization has resulted in a dimunition in the amount of milk borne typhoid."

The Elm Farm Milk Company complying with the general demand by by the Medical Profession and Sanitarians, were one of the first to scientifically pasteurize their milk. This milk is offered at the same price that rules for ordinary milk.

ARREST STYLISH LOOKING "TRAMP"

Judge Avery Hears Story of Waterbury Man

Wearing an outing suit, this season's straw hat and with money in his pocket, a young man who claims he is Joseph Famelar of Waterbury Ct., was in court this morning on a charge of being a tramp in Milton. He was taken back to Milton by Chief Pierce of the police of that town so that further investigation could be made of his history.

Famelar was arrested in Milton Tuesday morning by Patrolman Bowman under peculiar circumstances. He was first seen on Brush Hill road and then on the piazza of the large dwelling occupied by Mrs. Charles A. Minot. As the maid opened the door he rang the bell and said he wanted to see someone in the house. When Mrs. Minot stepped into the hall he asked her for money for railroad fare and told a story of being in need of assistance. She inquired as to whether he wanted English. German or Italian money and engaged him in conversation while the police who had been summoned, were arriving.

In court today Famear told Judge Avery that he was up against it and that it seemed as though the old saying "It never rains but it pours" applied to his case. He said his pocket had been picked at the Forest Hills station Monday and that he had gone into Milton from Readville Tuesday evening. He said he picked a good looking dwelling and even offered his stickpin as security for the money he expected to be loaned.

Chief Pierce told the court he placed but little faith in the story told. Judge Avery turned the prisoner over to him for further investigation

Famelar claimed to be well connected in Waterbury, Ct, and mentioned references He said he worked as a draftsman at the plant in that city until three years ago when he went to Salem to go into business with another man and that the business failed He then said he secured work in the drafting room of the Sturtevant Blower works at Readville and worked there two weeks

Chief Pierce said the company stated he had worked there only a week "Well," said the young man. "they gave me the wrong pay for I received enough money to cover two week's work".

Famelar appears to be an Italian and and he had a long conversation in Italian with Placido Calabro. who does the interpreting at the local court. He said he never was in Massachusetts until he came here three years ago.

He was clean shaven. his hair was well trimmed, his teeth gave evidence of care and the safety chain which held a pair of pince nez glasses on his nose was gold. His stick pin. which he said he purchased in Boston two years ago for $12 had a red stone with a diamond chip. In his pocket he had a photograph of an apparatus for making blue prints under electric lights and claimed to have designed a curtain which perfected the idea. He also had a nickel plated German silver erasing plate such as is used by draftsmen.

Whether he was born in this country or not is not known. His English is free but in answering questions he talked fast and at times gave people the impression he was guarded. Probation Officer Fahey is also investigating his story.

Noticeable among the yachts and motor boats that were maneuvering in the bay off the Wollaston club houses on the holiday was the "P. B." hydroplane speed boat owned by Joseph D. MacIntyre of the Wollaston club. The "P. B." made her debut Sunday, attracting attention by the speed and ease with which she planed through the water, leaving but a trail of white foam headed by a black speck to guide the watchers eye. The "P. B." is equipped with a 30 H. P. marine engine and has a speed of thirty-five miles an hour. "Some Speed" was the popular remark of all who watched her.

Enticed by the ideal weather, cool breezes and the pleasures of bathing Wollaston beach was visited Sunday by a crowd of two thousand people.

The crowd was at its height between the hours of four and five when two Park officers stationed in front of the bath houses handled the steady stream of automobiles and traffic.

Bathing was ideal and nearly a housand enjoyed a dip in the bay. One interesting spectacle took place during the bathing hours when six bathers stood two-thirds deep in the water forming a linked circle with six other bathers. mounted from their shoulders. Simultaneously the six mounted bathers dived off into the water. producing an effect which brought a burst of aplause from the many onlookers.

INSTANT DEATH IS HOLT'S FATE

Dynamiter and Would-Be Slayer Takes His Own Life

JUMPS FROM WINDOW IN JAIL

One Report That He Took Advantage of Guard's Momentary Absence, While Another Declares That he Used Detonating Cap In His Cell to Accomplish Own Destruction

Glen Cove, N. Y., July 7.—Frank Holt, the Cornell professor who shot J. P. Morgan in his home here last Saturday, committed suicide here last night by jumping from a jail window to the concrete floor of the courtyard, about fifty feet below.

Holt was under the guard of Jeremiah O'Ryan, a jail attendant. The prisoner, apparently, was sleeping soundly, and O'Ryan, hearing a noise on the other side of the cell tier, left his place in front of Holt's open door and started to investigate.

O'Ryan heard a noise, which he said resembled an explosion, and hastily returned to Holt's cell only to find it empty. Holt had slipped through the open cell door and climbed to the top of the cell tiers to an open window through which he plunged to the narrow courtyard below.

Dr. Cleghorn, the jail physician, and District Attorney Smith were summoned. Cleghorn found that the skull had been crushed and that death had been instantaneous.

Smith searched Holt's cell immediately after arriving at the jail and found a letter written on yellow paper. This letter, which must have been written before he attempted suicide early Tuesday morning, when the pencil with which he tried to sever an artery was taken from him, was addressed "To My Dears," and follows:

"I must write once more. The more I think about it, the more I see the uselessness of living under circumstances such as these. Bring up the dear babies in the love of God and man. God bless you, my sweet.

"Affectionately,
"FRANK.

"P. S.—All please pardon me for all the heartache I have brought you. Pray with me that the slaughter will stop. My heart breaks. Good-by."

There was considerable confusion in the jail and conflicting stories as to the manner in which Holt was killed were told by those attached to the institution. The attendants disagreed as to the place where the body was found.

O'Ryan, detailed to watch Holt's cell, declared that he was positive that the body was in a pool of blood in the cell when he first saw it.

"It sounded to me like an explosion," said O'Ryan, in giving his version of what occurred. "You will have hard work to convince me that it wasn't. The cell was in partial darkness, as the lights had not been fully turned on.

"I was fifteen feet away from the cell when it happened and my back was turned. I heard a noise and then ran into the cell and looked around. It was dark.

"I couldn't see at first. Then I found the body in a pool of blood in a corner of the cell.

"Holt had been in remarkably good spirits. He laughed and joked earlier in the evening. That made me suspicious."

O'Ryan said he thought Holt killed himself with a detonating cap.

Montreal, July 7.—Seven men are missing and believed to be dead after a cordite explosion at the plant of the Canadian Explosives company at Peloeil. Ten persons were severely injured.

Details of the accident are difficult to obtain. First stories attributed the explosion to a fire and later it was said that experiments were being conducted.

COUNCIL COMMITTEE

department, the building was practically consumed. The nature of this fire. that is, the material in flames, caused a great scattering of burning embers, which caused what is known as a "spark chasing job." There were five hydrant streams in use, the most powerful playing a stream not over fifty feet. By the testimony of the chief, the steamer arrived at the fire about ten minutes after the alarm District Chief Badger, who was the first man in charge, notified the chief that it would be necessary to use the steamer, owing to the low pressure and the streams being unable to reach the top of the derrick, which was burning at the time. This was before the steamer arrived.

The chief claimed it was unnecessary to do so, that he could put the fire out on the derrick with the stream from the hydrant. From the testimony, we find the steamer was not used; and evidence procured from Driver Griffin was to the effect that the steamer, becoming stalled, he was unable to start it again on account of defective batteries. As a matter of fact, had the driver of this steamer stopped at the hydrant from which the lines of hose were attached, and which he had passed, or had the chief instructed the driver to stop there, or detailed someone to do so, the steamer could have readily been used, which in the opinion of the committee should have been done. It is somewhat of a question in the minds of the committee whether or not the break-down of the batteries was the real reason why the steamer was not used.

In brief, had the steamer been used, as suggested by the district chief, the damage to the derrick, about which there has been so much criticism, would have been much less.

There are other matters pertaining to this fire, which the committee will touch upon under Conduct and Efficiency.

CONDUCT AND EFFICIENCY.

During our investigation at the Central Fire Station one of the witnesses was Driver Williams. Under his own sworn testimony, he said he was instructed to take the machine to teach Edward Barry the shifting of gears, and keep within a reasonable distance of the engine house. He, by his own evidence, admitted going as far as the Quincy Point Bridge and across the Quincy-Braintree line, thus disobeying his instructions. Further, his attiude in answering questions was of such a nature to firmly convince the committee that he had been coached by someone in authority. This same attitude was shown by Edward F. Lane, only in a stronger degree, for when questions were put to him he showed a very antagonistic spirit, even going so far as demanding our authority for asking such, and claiming he had a right to be represented by an attorney.

In the evidence of Chief Billings, he admitted that he told the men to keep their mouths shut. saying in answer to questions: "I told them that we were all under civil service, and we could call for a public hearing." It is very evident to the minds of the committee that Chief Billings instructed his men to give as little information as was possible to do. This evidence is further corroborated by the fact that there is a written notice posted at the Central Station forbidding members of the Fire Department to answer questions, or give information to any councilman, with penalty of suspension, which notice is signed by the chief.

It is truly a fact that the chief has full power at the time of a fire, and while it may be annoying to the chief of the Fire Department to answer questions while he is exercising his duty, it has been proved to the satisfaction of the committee that he answered citizens at the Willard Polishing Co. fire in langauge unbecoming a man in his position. For the chief of the Fire Department to become unduly excited while performing his duty, does not tend toward efficiency or good discipline of his department, nor call forth respect from the men under him.

At the fire of the Willard Polishing Company, the chief's statement was to the effect that he was disgusted on account of the steamer being stalled. and after it was put in running order again, he ordered it to go back to the Station. The committee have evidence that at the time of the accident of the LaFrance engine, which was May 11th, the steamer was used to pull the damaged machine out of the ditch, and that the batteries at that time were ineffective, which readily shows that proper attention had not been paid to the condition. The Willard fire being May 15th, there was ample time to have the proper batteries installed.

The committee also find there has been great discrepancy in the pay of the newly appointed permanent firemen. Section 5 of Ordinance No. 1 distinctly states that permanent men shall receive $2.50 per day for the first two years. We have found there are several cases of men receiving the pay of three-year men at the time of their appointment as permanent men. An opinion passed to us by the city solicitor clearly shows a violation of this section.

We also find it has been the custom of men to vary greatly in the time taken for their meals. As there should be a man in charge at all times, it seems unnecessary that one man should have a longer time than another.

We find that a man rated as an efficient chauffeur was transferred from a position as chauffeur to driving horses, which he was not accustomed to, and which greatly depreciated his value as a member of the fire department.

NEEDS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

This Committee recommends:

1: At every fire station throughout the city, the man who is in charge shall keep a true and accurate account of all time off, including the one day off in five, and time allotted for meals, which shall be one hour. We recommend that a card system be used for this purpose.

2: That a system be installed in the department requiring written requisition for all supplies needed by the men in the performing of their duty. This should be made in triplicate.

3: That our present bell alarm system be abolished and the following be established: That there be three bell alarms, first alarm, second alarm and general alarm.

1st Alarm: The first alarm shall call apparatus such as the first alarm does under the present system. All call men shall be required to respond to their respective stations, or to the fire if in their district.

2nd Alarm: Second alarm shall call additional apparatus, and all call men with this apparatus, and institute the system which is known as the "filing-in" system.

The details of this arrangement should be worked out systematically by the chief of the fire department. The committee, however, having gone into this matter, are willing to cooperate.

We also recommend that in answering still alarms, the nearest apparatus be designed to respond, instead of running the apparatus from Central Station a great distance.

4: We find that the steamer has been used in the past for pumping out basements after a fire, which has been very expensive to the city, and we recommend that this practise be discontinued.

5: We recommend that the department be provided with materials for the preservation of the equipment.

6: In regard to the Alarm Signal Apparatus, inasmuch as the matter is already before the Council, the Committee recommend that the matter be taken care of as soon as possible.

This Committee has performed its duty in an absolutely impartial way, and have made the foregoing report on facts secured by sworn evidence.

Respectfully submitted,
Joseph L. Whiton,
Charles A. Ross,
Robert J. Williams, Jr.
George A. Boister,
James O'Dowd,
Charles F. Barnicoat,

SERVICES FOR MRS. GLOVER.

At the funeral service of Mrs. William Glover of 139 Atlantic street, which was held at her late home, Tuesday afternoon, the Rev. T. W. Davison paid a warm tribute to her memory.

Mr. Davison said in part that many of the rising generation and the recent comers to Atlantic knew little of the rare character of Mrs. Glover and her influence in working for the good of the community and beautifying it for all future time.

She was not a woman that did anything for show or ostentation, but the friends and neighbors in times of sickness and bereavement found her most thoughtful and considerate. Her whole thought to the last hour of life was for the enjoyment she could give others from her own beautiful home.

Mr. Davison read an appropriate poem. The burial was at Mt. Wollaston cemetery.

Mrs. Glover was among the first to enter Quincy High school under its first head master, Mr. Wellington.

English Ivy lodge, Order Daughters of St. George will hold a trolley ride to Revere beach Saturday. Cars leave Brewers corner at 2 P. M. and leave the beach at 10 P. M.

CLAIM CITY CHAMPIONSHIP

Fore Rivers Victory Over Makaria Is Basis

The Fore River base ball team which won the championship of the city through its 7 to 2 defeat of the Makarias at Merrymount Park Monday afternoon is also in line for the championship of the Manufacturers league. On next Saturday they will play C. H. Bird & Sons at Walpole, the team which holds first place with them. Each team has won seven and lost but one.

The Fore Rivers have a wonderful chance for a victory Saturday and will be conceded the top position in the league the rest of the season if they win Saturday. There are five remaining games on the schedule and Bird will play teams that have been defeated by Fore River. The local boys should win the rest of their games.

Bird & Sons have been practically a one man team all season, risking their chance by pitching Larry Gardner and backing him up with mediocre material. Gardner has been going well but the Fore Rivers say he will have to take his bumps and Gardner's friends say he anticipates a severe drubbing.

The condition of the Fore River team is tip top. Charlie Knight, the pitcher, is in fine form. He had no trouble in beating Makarias Saturday.

It is the opinion of the fans that the Fore Rivers are the city champions. Manager John S. Higgins states his men are prepared to defend that claim at any time, providing a good sized purse is put up, winner to take all. Whether or not the Makarias will take up the offer is hard to say.

The fans who will go to Norwood Saturday will make the trip in the bus of Charles Hollis of Weymouth and if the interest is taken in the contest which is expected it may be necessary to get another bus.

The balance of the Fore River schedule:

July 10—Bird and Sons at Walpole.
July 17—Gamewell Co., at Quincy.
July 24—Norwood Press at Norwood
July 31—General Electric at Quincy.
Aug. 7—University Press at Cambridge.

SPORTING COMMENT

Daniel A. Noonan, president of the Fitchburg team of the New England league, was striken with heart trouble in his office Tuesday and died soon after. His body was found by Manager Hugh J. McCune of the team. Noonan has been one of the leaders in state base ball.

Olson, the Cinci third sacker and Good, Chi's right fielder, had a free for all Chicago Tuesday. Good spiked Olson and the melee followed The fight became general between the players and Umpire Quigley stopped it. Some ump.

Braves injured in Tuesday's games.
Evers, injured ankle hurt again.
Rudolph, twisted ankle.
Moran, ankle hit with pitched ball.
Gowdy, bruised arm.
Schmidt, arm bruises by pitched ball.

The query among the fans is-do the New York Sun sporting writers know their biz when they say the Colonial league is on its last legs and never was anything but a newspaper league, started by a disgruntled newspaper man? The latest echo is that the Fall River and Taunton teams will be dropped unless the Wards of the Brooklyn Feds who said the Colonial was to be a high class Fed farm, are prepared to come across with about $10,000 to keep up the standard promised.

The auto races will be held at Readville next Monday. They were postponed from July 5.

DANCE AT YACHT CLUB.

There was a good attendance Tuesday evening at the weekly hop of the Quincy Yacht club. The weekly whist parties at the club house will begin Thursday evening and will continue every Thursday evening until September 2.

CHAPTER XVI.

Deserting the Ranch.

ALL that Wayland said of his family deepened Berrie's dismay. Their interests were so alien to her own.

"I'm afraid to have you go even for a day," she admitted, with simple honesty, which moved him deeply. "I don't know what I should do if you went away. I think of nothing but you now."

Her face was pitiful, and he put his arm about her neck as if she were a child. "You mustn't do that. You must go on with your life just as if I'd never been. Think of your father's job—of the forest and the ranch."

"I can't do it. I've lost interest in the service. I never want to go into the high country again, and I don't want you to go either. It's too savage and cruel."

"That is only a mood," he said confidently. "It is splendid up there. I shall certainly go back some time."

"Of course, we are not rich, but we are not poor, and my mother's family is one of the oldest in Kentucky." She uttered this with a touch of her mother's quiet dignity. "Your father need not despise us."

"So far as my father is concerned, family don't count and neither does money. But he confidently expects me to take up his business in Chicago, and I suppose it is my duty to do so. If he finds me looking fit he may order me into the ranks at once."

"I'll go there. I'll do anything you want me to do," she urged. "You can tell your father that I'll help you in the office. I can learn. I'm ready to use a typewriter—anything."

He was silent in the face of her naive expression of self sacrificing love, and after a moment she added hesitatingly: "I wish I could meet your father. Perhaps he'd come up here if you asked him to do so."

He seized upon the suggestion. "By George, I believe he would! I don't want to go to town. I just believe I'll wire him that I'm laid up here and can't come."

Berrie opened the door and confronted her mother, who said, "Mr. Evingham phones that the afternoon papers contain an account of a fight at Coal City between Settle and one of Alec Belden's men and that the district forester is coming down to investigate it."

"Let him come," answered Berrie defiantly. "He can't do us any harm. What was the row about?"

"I didn't hear much of it. Your father was at the phone."

"What is it all about, father?" asked Berrie.

"Why, it seems that after I left yesterday Settle rode down the valley with Belden's outfit, and they all got to drinking, ending in a row, and Tony beat one of Belden's men almost to death. The sheriff has gone over to get Tony, and the Beldens declare they're going to railroad him. That means we'll all be brought into it. Belden has seized the moment to prefer charges against me for keeping Settle in the service and for putting a nonresident on the roll as guard. The whelp will dig up everything he can to queer me with the office. All that kept him from doing it before was Cliff's interest in you."

"Of course he can't. He knows that. But he can bring us all into court. You and Mr. Norcross will both be called as witnesses, for it seems that Tony was defending your name. The papers call it 'a fight for a girl.' Oh, it's a sweet mess. You and Berrie and Mrs. McFarlane must get out of here before you are subpoenaed."

"That won't do," retorted McFarlane quickly. "That won't do at all. You must go with them. I can take care of myself. I will not have you dragged into this muckhole."

Berrie now argued against running away. Her blood was up. She joined her mother. "We won't leave you to inherit all this trouble. Who will look after the ranch? Who will keep house for you?"

McFarlane remained firm. "I'll manage. Don't worry about me. Just get out of reach. The more I consider this thing the more worrisome it gets. Suppose Cliff should come back to testify?"

"He won't. If he does I'll have him arrested for trying to kill Wayland," retorted Berrie.

"And make the whole thing worse! No; you are all going to cross the range. You can start out as if for a little turn round the valley and just naturally keep going. It can't do any harm, and it may save a nasty time in court."

"One would think we were a lot of criminals," remarked Wayland.

"That's the way you'll be treated," retorted McFarlane. "Belden has retained old Whitby, the foulest old brute in the business, and he'll bring you all into it if he can."

"But running away from it will not prevent talk," argued his wife.

"Not entirely, but talk and testimony are two different things. Suppose they call daughter to the stand? Do you want her cross examined as to what basis there was for this gossip? They know something of Cliff's being let out and that will inflame them. He may be at the mill this minute."

"I guess you're right," said Norcross sadly. "Our delightful excursion into the forest has led us into a predicament from which there is only one way of escape, and that is flight."

McFarlane was again called to the telephone. Landon, with characteristic brevity, conveyed to him the fact that Mrs. Belden was at home and busily phoning scandalous stories about the country. "If you don't stop her she's going to poison every ear in the valley," ended the ranger.

"You'd think they'd all know my daughter well enough not to believe anything Mrs. Belden says," responded McFarlane bitterly.

"All the boys are ready to do what Tony did. But nobody can stop this old fool's mouth but you. Cliff has disappeared, and that adds to the excitement."

"Thank the boys for me," said McFarlane, "and tell them not to fight. Tell 'em to keep cool. It will all be cleared up soon."

As McFarlane went out to order the horses hooked up Wayland followed him as far as the bars. "I'm conscience smitten over this thing, supervisor, for I am aware that I am the cause of all your trouble."

"Don't let that worry you," responded the older man. But he spoke with effort. "It can't be helped. It was all unavoidable."

"The most appalling thing to me is the fact that not even your daughter's popularity can neutralize the gossip of a woman like Mrs. Belden. My being an outsider counts against Berrie, and I'm ready to do anything—anything," he repeated earnestly. "I love your daughter, Mr. McFarlane, and I'm ready to marry her at once if you think best. She's a noble girl, and I cannot bear to be the cause of her calumniation."

There was mist in the supervisor's eyes as he turned them on the young man. "I'm right glad to hear you say that, my boy." He reached out his hand, and Wayland took it. "I knew you'd say the word when the time came. I didn't know how strongly she felt toward you till today. I knew she liked you, of course, for she said so, but I didn't know that she had plum set her heart on you. I didn't expect her to marry a city man, but I like you, and—well, she's the doctor. What suits her suits me. Don't you be afraid of her not meeting all comers." He went on after a pause, "She's never seen much of city life, but she'll hold her own anywhere, you can gamble on that."

"I'm right glad to hear you say that, my boy."

"She has wonderful adaptability, I know," answered Wayland slowly. "But I don't like to take her away from here—from you."

"If you hadn't come she would have married Cliff, and what kind of a life would she have led with him?" demanded McFarlane. "I knew Cliff was rough, but I couldn't convince her that he was cheap. I live only for her happiness, my boy, and, though I know you will take her away from me, I believe you can make her happy, and so—I give her over to you. As to time and place, arrange that—with—her mother." He turned and walked away, unable to utter another word.

Wayland's throat was aching also, and he went back into the house with a sense of responsibility which exalted him into sturdier manhood.

Berea met him in a pretty gown, a dress he had never seen her wear, a costume which transformed her into something entirely feminine. She seemed to have put away the self reliant manner of the trail and in its stead presented the lambent gaze, the tremulous lips of the bride. As he looked at her thus transfigured his heart cast out its hesitancy, and he entered upon his new adventure without further question or regret.

It was 3 o'clock of a fine, clear, golden afternoon as they said goodby to McFarlane and started eastward, as if for a little drive. Berrie held the reins in spite of Wayland's protestations. "These broncbos are only about half busted," she said. "They need watching. I know them better than you do." Therefore he submitted, well knowing that she was entirely competent and fully informed.

At last the topmost looming crags of the continental divide cut the skyline, and then in the smooth hollow between two rounded grassy summits Berrie halted, and they all silently contemplated the two worlds. To the west and north lay an endless spread of mountains, wave on wave, snow lined, savage, sullen in the dying light, while to the east and southeast the foothills faded into the plain, whose dim cities, insubstantial as flecks in a veil of violet mist, were hardly distinguishable without the aid of glasses.

Berrie turned in her seat and was about to take up the reins when Wayland asserted himself. "Wait a moment. Here's where my dominion begins. Here's where you change seats with me. I am the driver now."

She looked at him with questioning, smiling glance. "Can you drive? It's all the way downhill—and steep."

"If I can't I'll ask your aid. I'm old enough to remember the family carriage. I've even driven a four in hand."

Their descent was rapid, but it was long after dark before they reached Flume, which lay up the valley to the right. It was a poor little decaying mining town set against the hillside, and had but one hotel, a sun warped and sagging pine building just above the station.

"Not much like the Profile house," said Wayland as he drew up to the porch. "But I see no choice."

"There isn't any," Berrie assured him.

Woman's World

QUEEN HELENA.

Now that the kingdom of Italy has gone over to the allies it may be interesting to know something of the beautiful queen who sits upon the Italian throne with her husband, King Victor Emmanuel III.

Queen Helena is extremely interested in charities, especially in those charities which have for their object the relieving of the ills of children. She is lovingly called the "Babies' Queen" by her subjects.

Queen Helena is six feet one inch in height and is a spendid horsewoman and an all round athlete. King Victor Emmanuel is five feet three inches in height, and when he and the Montenegrin princess were married she knelt upon a cushion to bring her beautiful dark head upon a level with that of her loyal lover.

The king and queen of Italy are the most mutually attached couple among the world's royalties, and at the same time the most democratic, often employing toward equals and inferiors alike a courtesy which surpasses any royal etiquette. When in Rome their private apartments are on the second floor of the Quirinal, looking toward the Barberini palace.

Although Queen Helena as a Montenegrin princess lived a comparatively humble and frugal existence at Cettinje the fall months she usually spent with wealthy relatives in St. Petersburg, while the winter found her with her sisters on the Riviera. She is a good housewife. She writes poetry and short stories and plays the violin by ear. Her demeanor in public is somewhat haughty in repose, but in speaking or in action the same graceful solicitude which has made her husband such a favorite is noticed in her.

Alone of all Italians, aristocratic Florentines still affect to dislike her, and speak of her as the "Barbarian Queen." But, then, these Florentines regard all people, with the exception of themselves and certain members of old Roman families, as barbarians.

However, this war may serve to unite more closely the entire Italian race, and even the aristocratic Florentine may be glad that upon the throne with Italy's king is a queen who, despite her Montenegrin birth, is by adoption all Italian, and who loves Italy so much that for years she has foregone the pleasure of visiting Montenegro to prove to her subjects that their queen is first, last and always loyal to her great trust.

FOR BUSINESS WEAR.

Frills Are Considered Out of Place In a Public Office.

If you are a girl who must work for her living don't give way to the temptation to buy frilly, fluffy clothes, for you will only be burdening yourself with inappropriate raiment which will never be of any use. It seems rather hard that the working girl must eschew all forms of feminine frills, for every girl loves dainty things way down in her heart. They appeal to the feminine in her; they are part of her very nature.

But in an office frilly clothes are sadly out of place; also they soon become bedraggled in appearance, and nothing is worse to look upon than soiled finery. Better a hundred times a plain but clean shirt waist, a severely cut but well pressed skirt. It is folly to wear a chiffon waist in an office, not only because such a blouse is in decidedly bad taste, but because it soon becomes rolled and unattractive and looks cheaper than the cheapest sort of a linen waist.

Several waists which can stand frequent tubbing, a plain, but well cut skirt make up the appropriate garb for the working girl. If she sticks to such an outfit during office hours she will always look neat and trim. Her love of frills and furbelows may be gratified in her evening gowns.

Useful Hint.

Pour boiling water on oranges and let them stand five minutes. This will cause the white lining to come away clean with the skin, so that a large quantity of oranges can be quickly sliced for sauce or pudding.

ALL things being equal, the newspaper that goes into the home and is read there is the most valuable advertising medium.

A paper like this, in a community like this, is really one of the best advertising mediums in the country. It goes into the home and is thoroughly read there.

DEADLOCK PERSISTS ON STREET APPROPRIATIONS

City Council Fails To Pass Over Mayor's Veto

The dead-lock in the City Council over street matters is no nearer solution after the meeting of Tuesday night than it was before. It now looks as though but little if any money would be appropriated this year for street rebuilding or the acceptance of new streets. The Mayor returned without his approval the orders passed two weeks ago for street rebuilding and these the Council laid on the table without further action. Later in the evening a recesswas taken and there was an informal joint meeting between the finance and street committees to see if the two committees could not get together on street matters, and it was apparent when the council was again called to order that an understanding had been reached.

This idea was borne out when Councilman O'Dowd, chairman of hte committe on streets, offered an order calling for an appropriation of $20,000 for building a tar macadam pavement on Independence avenue, Liberty street, Rock Island road, Common street and Willard street. These streets were included in the bunch vetoed by the Mayor and this order was evidently in the nature of a compromise.

Before the order could be accepted it was necessary to suspend Rule 28, which provides that all orders for street rebuilding, etc., involving an appropriation of money received after May 15, shall be referred to the next City Council. After offering the order Councilman O'Dowd moved to suspend the rules.

Councilman Thompson started to argue the order but was called to order by a point of order raised by Councilman Smith that the question was not on the merit of the order but on suspension of the rules. The chair ruled the point not well taken and on an appeal from the ruling of the chair the chair was sustained by a vote of 10 yes and 8 no.

Councilman Thompson then said that he had not changed his opinion from the last meeting. He was opposed to bonding the city for this work and said that it should be put in the budget as a matter of principle.

Councilman Beeman asked of what use were the rules of the council if they could be amended for every little matter that came up.

The Council then by a vote of 13 yes and 9 no refused to suspend the rules and admit the order. It was then referred to the next City Council.

Councilman Smith then had the loan order for $33,700 taken from the table and referred to the joint committee on finance and streets.

$3,000 FOR SEA WALL.

The only other matters that created any debate were those in the calendar. The first of these was an order calling for an appropriation of $3,000 for a sea wall at Houghs Neck.

Councilman McGrath spoke at length against the order. He said it was a bad precedent to start building sea walls at this point. The old wall is going to pieces. If it had not been for the wall the embankment would never have washed away It was not necessary to expend $3,000 for a wall. A little grout dumped there would protect the end of Bell street, especially as the city is up against a proposition to harness the water. If the water was allowed full play there would be no wash. If $1,000 of grout was dumped in it would be all that was necessary.

Councilman Beeman replied. "The gentleman evidently forgets that the city owns the piece of land at this point. He also claims a less amount sufficient. I would not attempt to put my opinion against that of the City Engineer."

Councilman Griffin said "If we are going to do anything let us do it right If we do not do something we will loose taxable property. A permanent job could not be done for less money It would be foolish to dump $1.000 in grout there."

Councilman Craig asked the City Engineer how far $1,000 would go and that gentleman replied about 100 feet Councilman Craig continuing said that he had visited this place and seen how the street had been washed away and it was up to the city to build a sea wall.

Councilman Slade said that the order was only doing what was absolutely necessary, that the banking had been washed before the other wall was built.

Councilman McGrath claimed that it was because of the wall built on private property that the embankment was washed away. The City council should not go beyond fixing up the end of Bell street.

Councilman Bolster said that he had looked at the place and it was necessary that a wall should be built to protect the property.

Councilman McGrath's amendment to make the amount $1,000 was lost. The date of the bonds was then changed to July 1. and the order passed.

The next order to be debated was that calling for an appropriation of $4,500 to purchase an addition to the Atherton Hough school lot.

Councilman McGrath said that there was no hurry about this matter and he moved it be laid on the table. "There are so many matters in sight calling for money it is time we stopped. This matter is in no way pressing."

Councilman Ross: "This order has gone through its regular stages and there is no reason why it should be held up now. If the order has no merit vote it down."

Councilman Smith: "There is no urgent need of passing the order at this meeting."

Councilman Craig also favored laying on the table.

LAID ON TABLE.

The motion to lay on the table was voted down. Later this motion was reconsidered and the order was laid on the table.

The business of the council in detail was as follows:

Communications were received from the Mayor requesting the transfer of $200 to remove the fountain in City Square and $200 to provide a covering for a part of Sachem brook. Referred to finance committee.

From the Mayor appointing Thomas F. Ferguson a special constable and H. W. Matthews a public weigher. Confirmed.

From the Mayor in reference to a public hearing before the Directors of the Port of Boston on petition of the Fore River to dredge Bent's creek. Placed on file.

Applications for minor licenses were referred to the license committee and petitions for pole attachments and re-locations were granted.

MAYOR'S VETO.

Communications were received from the Mayor returning the following orders without his approval:

Tar macadam, Independence avenue.
Tar macadam, Liberty street.
Tar macadam. Atlantic street.
Tar macadam, Rock Island road.
Tar macadam, Hall Place.
Tar macadam. Common street.
Tar macadam, Willard street.
Tar macadam. Badgers lane.
Tar macadam. Beale street

His reasons for returning the orders without his approval were as follows:

"I herewith return to you order No.— without my approval, for the reason that no provision has been made for obtaining the money required for the same."

The question came then on passing the orders notwithstanding the objection of the Mayor.

On motion of Councilman Smith all were laid on the table.

The street committee reported orders establishing a building line on School street, widening School street at the easterly end, widening East Howard street. and changing the line of Howard avenue. All referred to the finance committee.

The license committee reported orders granting minor licenses and gasoline licenses. Adopted.

The order requesting the Mayor to forward a supplement budget to provide suitable quarters for the Grand Army was passed.

The order granting the Electric Light Co. a location for poles was passed.

The order appropriating $3,000 for a sea wall at Houghs Neck was passed.

The order appropriating $4,500 for additional land at the Atherton Hough school was laid on the table.

Adjourned at 9.51.

DROVE AUTO IN FRONT OF HEARSE

For interrupting a funeral procession in Randolph, Ellory C. Wright of Brockton was fined $25 in the district court this morning. It was the first case of its kind in recent years in the local court.

The government witnesses said Wright drove an auto between the hearse and first carriage, neglecting to stop. Wright said he intended no violation and didn't know the law existed.

Judge Avery said the statute had been enacted in 1851 and that laws which dealt with sentiment, such as the interruption of funeral processions should be respected. Wright offered a check in payment of the fine.

TROUBLE GROWS OUT OF STRIKE

An assault and battery case involving coppersmiths employed at the Fore River shipyard was called in court today and continued until Thursday. The defendant was Rundolph Steneck, one of the striking coppersmiths at the yard and the complainant was Karl Neusman who has been employed there since last Saturday. Atty. John W. McAnarney represented the complainant.

Steneck was arrested by Constable Bradley of the shipyard in a Quincy Point store Tuesday evening after a chase. He was charged with drunkenness and later with assault.

The testimony offered by a witness and the complainant tried to show that Steneck had assaulted Neusman. Other witnesses will be heard Thursday and the defense will be put on.

MAYOR LEAVES FOR CALIFORNIA

Mayor Campbell left this afternoon for the Exposition at California. While he will not travel with Gov. Walsh and the state party which also leaves today in a private car he will be at the Exposition at the same time as the state party. He expects to return to Quincy about the first of August.

During his absence City Clerk Emery L. Crane, will be the acting Mayor. When asked this morning what he intended to do in relation to the report of the special committee who have been investigating the Fire Department the Mayor said that he had a copy of the report and that he should take it with him to read and study on the trip. He made no further comment.

FIRE THREATENS S. S. MINNEHAHA

Think Caused By Explosion From One of Holt's Dreaded Bombs

BLAZE IS UNDER CONTROL

(By United Press)

New York, July 8—The fire that attacked the big liner "Minehaha" carrying ammunition to England, was caused by an explosion, Capt. Clarett wirelessed the Atlantic Transportation Co.'s office here this afternoon. The blaze is now under control.

The captain's message failed to state what caused the explosion. The message, however, lent color to the possibility that the dynamite trunk of Frank Holt found its way aboard the amunition carrier before she cleared from New York for Liverpool Sunday afternoon. Clarett's message, relayed to the New York office from the Cape Grace wireless station at 12.14 this afternoon read

"The fire was by explosion now controlled by suffocation and steam, Much smoke in hold. Deem it expedient to make Halifax. Will be off Chebucto Heat at the entrance of Halifax harbor about 9 o'clock Friday morning. Advise agent."

The belief that the mysterious fire aboard the "Minnehaha" resulted from Holt's activities has been expressed here when it was pointed out that the Minnehaha's pier 58 i nthe North river was very near the piers which the American liner "Philadelphia" and Cunarder "Saxonia" sailed from last Saturday.

MEN'S "ANTI" ASSOCIATION

Attempt Being Made To Organize

Preparations are being made throughout the state to fight the equal suffrage amendment which comes before the voters at the fall election on a referendum and men's anti suffrage clubs are being organized.

J. A. Desmond, who is well known throughout the state as a manager of Republican campaigns. has been in Quincy the past few days completing the preliminaries for the local "Anti" association. Those on the outside view his activities with little interest, saying his connection with the movement indicates the Republican party is to fight the amendment tooth and nail on the ground that the Democrats are to support it.

Prominent local Republicans have been interviewed and a number of members have been secured. The main trouble, considered a minor one at present, is the securing of a chairman.

The Democrats throughout the city are not viewing the presence of the state organizer with any alarm. They feel indebted to the suffrage movement and to Miss Margaret Foley for the broadside attacks on Roger Wolcott of Milton which resulted in his defeat for the Senate. The party gained but little through that defeat for John J. McDevitt finished in top place and was later suspended, giving local Democracy a black eye which it will carry for years to come.

At the same time they are satisfied they "got their man" as the saying goes. The Republicans are in the majority in Quincy by one or two and surface indications are that the "Anti" cause will be the victor. Orators pro and con will be here within a few weeks and while the canvassers are personally presenting their cause they will spread the doctrine from autos and corners. It would not be surprising if they frequently met in their campaigns but it can be hardly expected that they will jointly debate the subject.

A more logical view of the situation, however. is that the amendment will play but little part in party campaigns. Men in all walks of life. regardless of political affiliation or belief have positive ideas on equal suffrage and it is felt in Quincy at least that if men never before voted to please themselves on any question they will exercise a real choice this fall.

And the show has just commenced, gentlemen.

The cards report a delightful and interesting trip thus far.

POLICE SEEK BOLD BICYCLE PILFERER

Barber Turns Away For Instant And They Capture Bike

Bold Daylight Robbery

The ease with which day light bicycle thieves can operate undetected in this city can readily be imagined when it is known that they even go so far as to steal a bicycle from in front of a man's door while his back is turned for an instant.

Romolo Luca, who conducts a barber shop on Temple street, had this experience Wednesday. Romo rode to his shop and arrived about seven o'clock. He left the machine at the curbing in front of his door. He went into the shop and divided his time by cutting a man's hair and watching the bicycle.

He turned to say something to the man working at the chair beside him. It took only an instant and then he threw a look toward the street.

An open space where the bicycle had been was all that met his eye. He ran to the door and looked up and down the street but saw no sign of it. He inquired of several people who were passing if they had seen the machine but no one had.

Romo lost no time in reporting theft to the police. They took prompt steps to recover the stolen machine but have been unsuccessful. It is thought that the thief watched Romo from across the street and then sneaked across to the one of the entrances of the Adams building where he bided his time.

H. R. HARDWICK MARRIED TODAY

Weds Miss Margaret Stone at Marion

Huntington R. Hardwick, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. Theodore Hardwick, was married this noon to Miss Margaret Stone, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Galen L. Stone of Brookline, the ceremony taking place at the Stone's country home "Great Hill," Marion.

The wedding was a brilliant one being attended by upwards of fifteen hundred people. A special train of seven cars containing the wedding guests left Boston at 9.15 this morning making a stop at Quincy at 9.30 where it was boarded by some 60 friends of Mr. Hardwick.

The bride was attended by Miss Nathaline Cumner of Brookline and Cohasset as maid of honor and by her sister. Miss Barbara Stone as flower girl. The bridesmaids were Miss Edith Stevens of Beacon street and Miss Constance Kellen of Commonwealth avenue.

Mr. Hardwick's best man was his brother, Thomas Hardwick, Harvard '13 and among the ushers, all his classmates, were Russell Frye, who takes the place of Russell Ayres, who was unable to attend on account of ill health Frederick J. Bradlee of the varsity eleven; T. Emerson Murphy. Walter Trumbull and Robert Stone. brother of the bride.

Mr. Hardwick is well known in this city and he is widely known throughout the athletic world as "Tack" Hardwick, Harvard '15, All Americans end in 1914, captain of this year's victorious Harvard nine. In the fall he will take up his duties as coach of the football team of the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis, later entering the employ of his father-in-law, a prominent Boston Broker.

After the reception Mr. and Mrs. Hardwick left for a five day wedding trip. They will then return to Marion for a day and then will enjoy the summer in a trip to the Panama-Pacific Exposition at California. They will be accompanied by Robert Stone a brother of the bride, and a classmate of Mr. Stone's at Harvard.

Does Not Believe In Conspiracy Against Him.

(By United Press)

New York, July 8—Harry K. Thaw took the witness stand for the second time on his present sanity trial, this time called by the state for cross-examination. Slightly nervous at first he soon regained his composure and answered questions smilingly.

The first question fired at him by Deputy Atty. Gen. Cook was whether he believed William Travers Jerome his Nemesis. Thaw declared his counsel has told him as much but added: "I don't believe there is any such conspiracy now and I don't think you are in league with any millionaries to put me back to Mattewan." He admitted his relations with Jerome were not cordial.

FINES STANEK FOR ASSAULT

Judge Says Workman Must be Protected

Judge Avery before disposing of an assault case before him today involving coppersmiths of the Fore River shipyard said workmen ought to be protected and should not be interfered with. He then fined Rudolph Stanek a so-called striker. $25 for assault on Karl Neuman who went to work last Saturday, and ordered Stanek to recognize sureties of $300 to keep the peace for three months or stand committed until so recognized. At noon steps had been taken to secure the sureties.

Stanek was arrested by Patrick H. Bradley chief of police at the shipyard in a store at Quincy Point for drunkenness. after Newman had been assaulted. He was represented by Edward R. Mansfield. a well-known labor attorney of Boston. Attorney John W. McAnarney, in summing up the case for the complaint said the assault was deliberate, designed and cold blooded. Back of this assault, he said, was not merely the infliction of an injury but the desire on the part of Stanek to drive into the mind of Neuman that he would be assaulted unless he ceased employment where he had a right to seek it.

In making his finding Judge Avery said he did not attach much importance to the drunkenness charge and he dismissed it with the consent of Stanek. He said the assault was apparently committed in cold blood and that Atty. McAnarney was right in saying workmen ought to be protected and not interfered with.

The government witnesses were Henry McLaughlin, and Peter F. Hughes, watchman at the shipyard, Charles T. Casna, a workman. They testified to a deliberate assault on Neuman by Stanek about 4.45 Tuesday afternoon. Yard Chief Bradley and Sergt. Larkin of the Quincy police said Stanek was drunk when arrested.

The charge was contested, Stanek denying he had taken anything but two glasses of cider. His landlady, Mary Shea, corroborated him but it developed in cross examination that she had only seen him pass through her kitchen and had not noticed him particularly.

HIS HONOR OFF FOR CALIFORNIA

Emery L. Crane Holds Down Job of Acting Mayor at City Hall

REMARKS BY THE ORACLE

Mayor Campbell is now on his way to the exposition to California and City Clerk Emery L. Crane as acting Mayor is holding down the lid. Who knows but what he may be a real mayor sometime. However, Emery is too busy in the meantime attending to the affairs of the two offices over which he is at present presiding to talk politics.

Packed away in the grip which His Honor had with him when the noon limited left Boston Wednesday was a copy of the report of the special committee which had been investigating the Fire Department. Of course the Mayor heard the report read at the Council meeting but as he said afterward he could not digest it very well by having it read once. He plans to while away some of the long hours on the train by reading and digesting that report. It is doubtful, however, if he wires any word to Quincy as to what he intends to do about it. In the mean time Chief Billings is holding down the job.

Now that the Chief Executive of the city is away, is a good time to start political booms and some may be expected to explode at any time now. A few days ago when Dr. John H. Ash had his little say about the advisability of burning that old building at Squantum it was remarked. "Another political boom has been launched." Now that the special committee has made its report, it is up to someone to say: "Joe Whiton has launched his political boom."

The fact is however that some months ago it was rumored on good authority that if certain things happened "Joe" would be a candidate for Mayor next fall, and no one has heard him deny the rumor. There is plenty of time yet to launch mayoralty booms and probably after the hot summer days are over something may drop. If "Joe" runs and is elected will be reappoint Faxon Billings as Chief Engineer?

To an outsider it looks as though some of the members of the City Council were trying to play politics with the numerous street orders. A majority of the council is in favor of passing all of the orders over the Mayor's veto. On the other hand it is reported that before Mayor Campbell left the city he expressed a willingness, if the council could agree, to approve orders to the amount of $20,000. But evidently the Council can not agree. It does not look very favorable at the present time for any of the orders to get by this year either for repairing or rebuilding streets or for the acceptance of new streets.

FORE RIVER TO BUILD $400,000 STRUCTURE

Inspector of Buildings Issues Permit And Work to Start at Once

A permit was issued by Inspector of Buildings Thomas this morning to the Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation for the erection of the largest as well as most expensive block that has been built in Quincy for a long time. The proposed building will be erected on East Howard street. its estimated cost being $400,000. The building will be built of steel, brick and cement and will be used as a ship tool and storage shop.

The building will be two stories high and will have a frontage East on Howard street of 779 feet and a depth of 185 feet. The contract for the erection of the building has been awarded to the Aberthaw Construction Co., which will commence work immediately.

The fee for a permit for a building of this cost under the present ordinance is but $5. If however the ordinances had been amended in accordance with recommendations of the inspector of buildings the city would have received a fee of $202.50 for the permit. In justice to the City Council, however, it is but fair to say that this recommendation did not reach the committee on ordinances until just before the Council meeting last Tuesday evening. Under the ordinance as it now stands the fee for a permit for a first class building is $5. The recommendation of the inspector of buildings is that the fee for a permit for a first class building up to $5,000 be $5 and anything over that shall pay the rate of fifty cents per one thousand dollars cost.

INTERNAL INJURY CAUSED BY FALL

Frank Lynch, one of the time keepers at the Fore River shipyard, has a peculiar fall while visiting the Charlestown Navy Yard Wednesday and is now in the Quincy City Hospital suffering from internal injuries.

Lynch is having a vacation and while at the Navy Yard met Frank J. Duffy, former councilman, who is employed there. While both were walking toward the gate on their way to a car Lynch stepped on a lose stone in the street. The stone rolled from under his shoe and he was thrown to the ground. He made a violent attempt to maintain his balance but was unsuccessful.

On being assisted to his feet he complained of a pain in his back. It became more acute when he reached his home at 12 Franklin place. Dr. J. T. Reynolds was called and ordered his removal to the Quincy City Hospital, in the police ambulance. Lynch is doing well today.

Lynch is a well known young man throughout the city. He is a prominent member of John Adams aerie, Fraternal Order of Eagles, and at the last meeting was elected vice president to succeed Fred Steinbrenner who resigned because he was going out of town for some time.

FRANK BRUCE IS RECOVERING

Frank Bruce, the local Italian runner, who was thought to have received a fracture of the spine when he fell from a staging while painting a house on Canal street, is able to be out.

An X-ray examination made after he was admitted to the Quincy City Hostal showed he had suffered a facture of a small bone in the back. He was taken to his home a week ago and aside from a sharp pain is doing well. Wednesday he was able to walk as far as City square.

PARENTS OF GIRL.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry B. Smith of 4 Carleton street, Brockton are the parents of an 8 pound girl, Jeanette Woodbury, born July 5. Both formerly lived here being graduates of the Quincy High school. Mrs. Smith's maiden name was Mabelle A. Damon. Both mother and daughter are doing well.

QUINCY'S FIRE LOSS $67,950

The statistics as to fire alarms, the loss by fire and the per capita loss of all the cities of the Commonwealth which has just been issued, for the year ending May 1915, shows that Quincy stands 10th in the list of 29 cities with a per capita loss of $1.89, Pittsfield heading the list with a per capita loss of $5.93, Salem $4.60, Lynn $4.43 and Boston $4.05. Cities with a smaller per capita loss than Quincy are New Bedford, Everett, Northampton, Cambridge, Malden, Newton, Taunton, Waltham and Lawrence.

Quincy is credited with having had 389 fires during this period and a total loss of $67,950.

Of the total number of fires outside of the City of Boston 4977 were in frame building, 970 in brick buildings, and 181 other than building fires. Of the total number 126 or 2.05 percent were incendiary and 655 were of unknown cause. The largest single cause of all the fires was careless smoking, while the careless use of matches was a close second.

Of the grand total in all of the cities the loss by fire during the period mentioned was $26,194,270.57 and the sound value of property damaged $215,678,456 with an insurance on the same of $186,582,660. Insurance was paid amounting to $22,262,373.35.

THE NEW LAW.

During the short debate before the City Council Tuesday evening on the order appropriating $4,500 to purchase land for an addition to Houghs Neck school lot, it was stated that under a new law the city could not pay for land for municipal purposes a price that was more than 25 percent in excess of the average assessed valuation for three years previous.

The law in question is known as General Act No. 263 and was signed by the Governor in May 1915. It provides in brief that whenever a city takes land for municipal purposes, not already used for public uses, if the price is more than 25 percent higher than the average assessed valuation during the previous three years, land shall not be taken by purchase but by right of eminent domain, shall be paid for in the same manner as land taken for public streets. The act also provides that no land shall be taken until an appropriation for the same has been passed by a two-thirds vote.

The act is an important one and will doubtless mean the saving of thousands of dollars to the City of Quincy in the future. It is a well known fact that the city has been overcharged several times when it has purchased land for school lots. When land was taken for a new school building at Montclair the city paid twenty cents a foot for land assessed at 3 cents and the same was also true in the case of the original lot of land purchased for the school lot at Houghs Neck. Again when land was purchased at South Quincy for the new Adams school building the city paid $8,000 for a lot that was assessed for a sum considerably less than that figure.

In case of the land which the city proposed to take by the order pending before the Council, the price for the $30,000 feet was fifteen cents a foot, although if the city had taken the 60,000 feet as first proposed the price would have been 12 cents a foot.

According to the assessors' books of 1914 this land, owned by John T. Cavanagh, is assessed in a lump. That is it is assessed as 24 92-100 acres, the valuation being placed at $45,000. It will be readily seen therefore, that the fifteen cents which it is proposed to pay in the order is considerably more than 25 percent in excess of the average valuation for three years.

Under the law quoted, in order to take the land for municipal purposes, the price asked is more than 25 percent of the average valuation it must be taken by right of eminent domain and a public hearing will be necessary. If the owner is not satisfied with the award made by the City Council he can appeal to the courts.

DANGEROUS NEGLIGENCE.

In a recent editorial we took occasion to comment upon an automobile accident, which might have been very serious, due to the insufficient lighting of that portion of Hancock street now under construction. Since then it does not appear that any improvement has been made nor any adequate steps taken to decrease the very real danger of accidents at this point.

Th lighting of the west side of Hancock street between G. A. R. hall and Walsh's drug store is disgracefully inadequate. A few lanterns here and there throw their feeble rays on the street but do not sufficiently indicate the danger spots. Furthermore the east side of the street, not yet under construction, is several inches lower than the paving between car tracks, and autoists unfamiliar with this fact find themselves compelled, when they reach the end of the double track, to bounce off into the unfinished road on the east side of the track.

The reconstruction of a street is expected to occasion some inconvenience to those who use it, but the inconvenience and danger in this case are altogether too great. Somebody has not been "on th job."

AN INCOMPLETE REPORT.

The report of the special committee which has been investigating the Fire Department is not wholly satisfactory. The recommendations given at the end of the report contain earnest suggestions for improving the service in minor details and most of these suggestions might well be followed.

The remainder of the report is unsatisfactory because it is incomplete and might give a wrong impression. Chief Billings may or may not be blameworthy. The committee asserts from sworn testimony that he is. Assuming even that the committee is right on this point the report yet touches on so few aspects of the work of the fire chief, draws its inferences from so few experiences, that it can not fairly be taken for a complete picture. No man is supposed to be perfect, but any man can easily be made out much more imperfect than he really is by emphasizing minor mistakes and ignoring major successes.

We do not impign the good faith of the members of the committee nor the accuracy of their statement of the case; we simply assert that the investigation covered too slight a field to be of much value.

---

There are lots of ways to advertise, but one that caused much comment, and drew lots of attention appeared in a store window of a neighboring town. In one window was a conspicuous notice, "Funeral tomorrow. No flowers. Papers please copy." Further investigation proved that the window was full of rat poison.

KILLING THE JITNEYS.

The Beverly board of aldermen have the right idea on the jitney matter and we hope to see the same extended further. A jitney that would make the run around McKay street and the Shoe would do a good business.

This endorsement is not from a standpoint of either the street car people or the jitney men, but in behalf of the public. The jitneys are slowly but inexorably being legislated out of existence—legislation prompted not by a real desire to solve the problem, but by the tremendous influence of the transportation corporations.

Los Angeles has just passed an ordinance which is a death blow to the jitneys; in Memphis 117 out of more than 500 jitneys operating sixty days ago are left. From all points of the country comes the news of regulatory legislation that is killing. Yet there no longer remains a doubt but the public wants the jitneys.

But that public has grown apathetic, has ceased to urge the rights of the jitneys and its own rights, not because it is really indifferent, but because it has settled down and accepted the auto-bus as an established institution and has beguiled itself into thinking that the traction companies and their cohorts have done likewise.

But they have not. This very condition is what they have sought to bring about—to induce the public to lapse into a state of seeming indifference. They have effective weapons with which to fight the jitneys in plenty, but to combat public opinion is quite another matter. They have, in a measure, succeeded in stilling the clamor of the people for the 5 cent auto, and now they are, everywhere, planning to strike the auto-bus a mortal blow. If something is not done, quickly, some morning you—the people—will wake up and find the jitneys gone from the streets.

Is that your desire?

You should not be misled by the improvement in the transportation service. Street car service has improved certainly, since the advent of the jitneys but will the improvement hold up after they are eliminated? Does past experience lead you to believe so? In this matter we are neither biased nor prejudiced. The function of a newspaper is to stand for the best interest of the community it represents. We want to see the right thing done, want to see sensible action taken upon a matter of tremendous future importance to every city, before it is to late. The primary issue is service for the people, now and hereafter. If that service, in its broadest sense, is to be jeopardized by the jitneys they should be abolished. If the electric lines, as they say will be crippled and their service impaired and the service rendered by the jitneys in return be not adequate, the jitneys should be abolished. The public, or its official representatives, are not interested in the earnings of the street cars nor of the jitney men, save indirectly. That's apart from the issue and will indubitably work itself out in time.

The question is, shall this new method of transportation survive or shall it be permanently strangled, before its worth has been determined, by arrogant Capital?

AS THEY SEE IT ABROAD.

If England is "willing to fight to the last Frenchman," Germany appears as ready to negotinate to the last acre of Austria.—Wall street Journal.

TERRA COTTA.

The Ancient Greeks Used It, as Did Also Michaelangelo.

Terra cotta means literally baked earth. It is usually employed as though it meant only architectural ornaments made of baked clay. Yet Michelangelo made statues of it, the Japanese use it cleverly painted as "imitation bronze" for busts, tea jars and bowls, and the ancient Greek children had terra cotta dolls with movable legs fastened by wooden pegs.

In the trade today pieces of clay work for architectural ornament over eight inches square are called terra cotta. Under that size they are called ornamental brick.

The famous Della Robbia ware of Italy was of terra cotta covered with opaque enamel and painted. England used it much. From the time of Henry VIII. it was popular in large buildings, and since Queen Anne's day it has been used for ornamenting smaller houses.

Terra cotta can be produced in a variety of colors, and, while rains leave stone surfaces dingier, they brighten surfaces made of the clay. It is as durable as stone; it can be produced in more shades and colors; it can be molded into a great variety of designs; it can be given more delicate outlines than stone; it is lighter than stone.—New York Telegram.

CONDORS ROOST HIGH.

There is a splendid specimen of the male condor in a glass case in the bird-room of the Children's museum in Brooklyn. Though he stands three and one-half feet high, the spread of his wings is nine feet.

"The condors live throughout the Andes, principally in Calle and Peru. Their favorite haunts are the level of perpetual snow," writes Miss Anna B. Gallup in the Museum News. "During a portion of the year condors roost in the trees on the lower mountain slopes, but in the breeding season (the summer months of November and December) they retire to the most broken and terrific precipices, 10,000 to 15,000 feet above the sea level, where no other creature can dwell. There on a ledge or shelf of rock the female lays two white eggs nearly four inches in length. Sometimes she places a few sticks around them, perhaps to keep them from rolling out of place.

"After about seven weeks, in February or early in March, the young hatch, entirely covered with soft white down, that afterward turns to a brown color.

Trapping Baboons.

Hagenbeck in his book says that baboons are caught in traps made much like the huts of savages. Food is put into the huts, and once the baboons go inside a trapdoor closes behind them. Outside baboons make a great to do and urge the prisoners to escape. When the trappers come the captured baboons are terror stricken and try to force their heads through the walls of the huts. One baboon was caught three times in the same trap, and several when turned loose got back into the same trap a second time. When the baboons are carried away all their comrades thereabout climb into trees and scream out to the prisoners, who answer in sad, mournful voices. On one occasion some big Arabian baboons were trapped, when 2,000 or 3,000 baboons hurled themselves upon the trappers, who had hard work to save themselves with firearms and clubs. As the trappers were forced back the victorious baboons tore up the trap and turned loose the captured baboons.

Raindrops.

Drops of rain vary in their size perhaps from a twenty-fifth to a quarter of an inch in diameter. In parting from the clouds they precipitate their descent till the increasing resistance opposed by the air becomes equal to their weight, when they continue to fall with uniform velocity. This velocity is therefore in a certain ratio to the diameter of the drops; hence thunder and other showers in which the drops are large pour down faster than a drizzling rain. A drop of the twenty-fifth part of an inch in falling through the air would, when it had arrived at its uniform velocity, acquire a celerity of only eleven and a half feet per second, while one of a quarter of an inch would have a velocity of thirty-three and a half feet.

Wily Talleyrand.

Louis XVIII., complimenting Talleyrand one day upon his abilities, asked him how he had contrived first to overturn the directory and finally Bonaparte.

The wily diplomat replied, with charming simplicity: "Really, sire, I have had nothing to do with this. There is something inexplicable about me which brings ill luck on the governments that neglect me."

CZAR'S TROOPS HALT TEUTONS

Succeed In Checking Fifth Drive on Capital of Poland

INVADERS SUFFER HEAVY LOSS

Defenders Have Had Upper Hand Everywhere During This Week's Fighting, Conditions Still Favoring Them—Germans Make Another Desperate Attempt to Capture Verdun—Many Austrian Prisoners Taken by Italians—Revival of Criticism of Tactics Which Resulted In Terrible Slaughter In Dardanelles—Attack of Turks Repulsed by Allies—Another Drive on Calais and Invasion of England Planned by Kaiser

London, July 8.—Germany's fifth great drive at Warsaw has been definitely checked.

Reinforcements hurried from the north have at last come up with the fleeing troops from Galicia, south of Lublin, and have administered a severe defeat to the Austro-German pursuers in the Krasnik region of southern Poland.

Krasnik is about twenty-five miles south of Lublin, the latter, regarded as the back door to Warsaw, being a most important railway centre on the line through Ivangorod to the capital. The Teutonic plan of campaign, as now interpreted in London, involving a crashing advance through Lublin and Ivangorod to the capital, has thus met with a check a few miles inside the Polish border.

After her precipitate flight from Galicia, Russia has now time to catch her breath, and has the advantage of numbers and of physical conditions on her side.

The stretch of country into which the Austro-Germans have now penetrated is a wild, barren waste, about 150 miles wide, in which there are no railroads and only two towns of any size. The Russians, on the other hand, are backed by a network of railroads over which they can hurry troops and guns to any threatened point.

Unofficial dispatches, coming from Austrian sources by way of Switzerland, admit that in the battling around Krasnik the Russians have everywhere had the upper hand since Monday, and state that the tentative invaders have suffered enormous losses, thousands of wounded having arrived at Lemberg, Przemysl and Jaroslau.

German Effort to Take Verdun

In furtherance of the desperate attempt of the Germans on the western front to draw their lines about the French fortress of Verdun, another big offensive was launched along that portion of the southeastern side of the St. Mihiel "wedge" which extends from the Meuse valley just south of Ailly to a point in the forest of Apremont.

The army of the German crown prince is here on the offensive and is making determined efforts to recapture the ground which it lost in April when the French attempted to rip off the St. Mihiel salient.

In the present attempt they were, for the most part, repulsed, although the movement was preceded by an exceedingly severe bombardment, but at one point they penetrated the first line of French trenches along a front of about one-third of a mile.

Near St. Mihiel, in the Le Petre forest, another German attack was accompanied by the hurling of flaming liquids but the attackers were unable to make headway and were driven back to their original positions.

Artillery combats continue from Arras to the sea, and it is stated that as a result of the German bombardment Arras is in flames. The Germans also claim to have retaken the trenches which they lost to the British north of Ypres.

Italy Reports Successes

The greatest number of prisoners yet taken by the Italian armies operating in the Isonzo valley is reported by the official report from the Rome war office.

During the past two or three days 15,000 Austrians were captured on the Carso plateau, where the Italian forces are slowly pressing forward in an attempt to cut the last line of rail communication left to Goritzia.

On the Carnic front, farther north, Italian bombardments have caused great damage to the Austrian fortifications at Lacorte, Taglia and Tressasi.

Berlin dispatches announce the repulse of the Italian attacks on the bridgehead at Goritzia, declaring that King Victor Emmanuel and Premier Salandra were present when the Italian troops were driven back. They state that the Italian losses were extremely heavy, hundreds of dead bodies being left on the field when the invaders fell back.

The Dardanelles Conflict

A general attack by Turkish troops on the Dardanelles expeditionary force of the allies was repulsed. The Moslems were mown down in masses and failed to drive home the assault at any point, according to the French war office, which gave out an announcement describing the engagement.

The statement declares the attack was the most important delivered since early in May, and that it was launched with the purpose of driving the invaders into the sea. A Turkish cruiser in the Dardanelles took part in the engagement, as did the batteries on the Asiatic shore. Aviators were active, Turkish airmen bombarding the French and British lines and French and British flyers throwing bombs on Turkish positions.

"Unforgivable bungling" is the London Times' criticism of the "naval Balaklava" which preceded the amphibious campaign against the Dardanelles. How any one could believe that warships unsupported by an army could force the Dardanelles is not understandable. Only a simultaneous land and water attack could prevail.

This mistake has cost thousands of lives and will cost many more. The Turks and their German coaches did a good job in fortification and concentration between the time the fleet failed to carry the strait and the time the army arrived. This revival of criticism is aroused by General Hamilton's report of the British landing at the Dardanelles.

German Plans Against England

The Germans are planning to launch a new offensive in the west, their aim being to duplicate their Galician tactics and break through to Calais at all costs.

This news comes almost simultaneously from Zurich, Brussels, Paris and Amsterdam. According to the Zurich information, ten German army corps, which have been recuperating in the interior from the rigors of the Galacian campaign, are moving westward.

Calais in the hands of Germany is a key to world power, according to the von Tirpitz-Bernhardt school of conquest which years ago infected the German emperor. The rage of hate against England, following on the driving of German commerce from the seas and the resistance of the British army in France, crystallized in the cry to capture Calais and doubtless moved the emperor to order it.

Its possession by the Germans is considered guarantee to an easy invasion of England. New guns, having a range of twenty-six miles, according to Teuton enthusiasts, are to smash the defenses of Dover, sweep the channel clear of hostile ships, and cover the landing of troops put ashore in small aluminum boats—which are now held in readiness. The simultaneous air raid is relied on to create such confusion as will permit a rapid advance on London.

This thrust at England is to follow the finish of the Warsaw campaign. The Germans believe that if a landing can be made successfully southern England will fall an easy prey. This is the conviction of many thousands of Germans and of the military and naval forces. It is reported to be a statement of an officer of the German general staff, and is unquestionably true as putting in words the great hope of the German masses. Naturally it is not beyond possibility. The British have considered and provided for it as far as may be in advance of the movement.

HINTS OF COMPROMISE

German Reply to America Not Acceptable In Present Form

Further messages from American Ambassador Gerhard were transmitted to President Wilson at Cornish, N. H., outlining the point of view of the German government on submarine warfare as embodied in a tentative draft of the German reply to the last American note.

The dispatches tend to show that Germany is anxious to bring about a compromise on the question of her submarine campaign and there are indications in official quarters that the proposals in their present form are not acceptable to the United States.

The situation is not regarded in well-informed quarters as hopeless, much encouragement being drawn from the fact that a tentative draft of the note was submitted to the American ambassador.

This, it is believed, indicates that if the preliminary draft is not satisfactory there might be changes made to meet the American point of view on submarine warfare.

According to the opinion in well informed quarters, President Wilson will not enter into any bargaining with Germany as to what her reply should be to the second United States note.

The president stated what the position of the United States is on what she holds to be her rights under international law, and Germany must accept or reject the principles set forth. The president would not modify in the slightest degree the position taken in that note by any such bargaining as Germany seems to want to enter upon.

TYPHOID FEVER IN THE UNITED STATES

An editorial in the Journal of the American Medical Association, April 17th, says in part, "It is evident that Typhoid Fever is on the way to become a relatively rare disease in many parts of the United States. There are two main reasons for this. First, there are now comparatively few large cities in which the public water supply is likely to contain Typhoid Bacteria. Second, the increase in the practice of pasteurization has resulted in a dimunition in the amount of milk borne typhoid."

The Elm Farm Milk Company complying with the general demand by by the Medical Profession and Sanitarians, were one of the first to scientifically pasteurize their milk. This milk is offered at the same price that rules for ordinary milk.

This process is the only one that absolutely guarantees the safety of milk against all of the infectious diseases.

CITY HALL NOTES

A joint meeting of the City Council committees on finance and streets has been called for this evening. Perhaps the deadlock between these two committees will be broken.

---

The orders passed by the City Council Monday night were signed by Mayor Campbell Wednesday morning before he left for California. He will probably send a supplementary budget to the City Council on his return. The supplementary budget however must be passed before the tax rate for 1915 is announced.

---

The Assessors are still at work in the field although it is expected that a few days will see this part of the work completed. They are now at work at Houghs Neck.

---

The City Council committee on licenses will meet Monday evening.

BOYS KILL 8 DEADLY SNAKES

The danger of being bitten by snakes in the Metropolitan Park Reservation in the vicinity of Rattlesnake Hill has been lessened considerably during the past week by the killing of over eight reptiles by three young boys while berrying.

John Fruth, John Kegler and Alois Burkhard started Saturday and caught a four foot three inch rattler with nine rattles. Tuesday they got another large rattler with six rattlers. Wednesday they went after berries but the snake hunting got the best of them and they got no berries but carried home the carcasses of six deadly snakes. In the collection, the largest of which was a seven foot black snake, were three rattlesnakes all over three feet long and two copper heads of about the same length. The boys took great pleasure in showing their trophies and in telling of the manner in which they killed them.

SPORTING COMMENT

Among those who participated in the July 4th sports at Newport, R. I., Monday was Paul H. Wood, of Quincy, a first class machinist on the U. S. S. Arkansas. He secured several prizes. Wood by birth is a Greek and when in Quincy was known as Paul Skevakis. His name has been translated since he joined Uncle Sam's floating palaces and he is now known as Paul Wood.

The committee of the Board of Trade to whom was referred the proposed cross country run is expected to make an early report and is said to favor the event.

"Tack" Hardwick, Harvard's strong man, the unanimous choice of all sporting writers as the All American end, and captain of the base ball team at Harvard this year, starts life in double harness today. He was married at noon.

B. A. A. members and coaches are watching with interest the development of James McLaughlin of Bates avenue, West Quincy, considered the best junior broad jumper of the association.

Two weeks ago Domenico DeEranio known as "Moosie," the three miler, sailed for Italy to join the army. No word has ben received as to whether or not he has since arrived.

A well known young man has presented the members of the police department with a set of regulation quoits and the men are in fine fettle. All records were smashed a few days ago however by Leo Elcock of Marsh street and Al Sheehy of Weymouth. Those fellows competed in three games which lasted only a short while. In one game they twice capped each others' ringers.

The base ball game between the Lowell and Quincy police department will not be played until after the season closes. The game was scheduled for Tuesday of this week. Next Tuesday the local boys play the Boston cops at Boston, and a week from that the game will be at Newton with the Newtons.

STILL FIGHTING JITNEY.

Street Railway Continues Battle on Houghs Neck Line.

The street railway is continuing its policy of running frequent cars on the Houghs Neck line betwen the hours of 4 and 9 o'clock and although the Jitney bus line is still running and carries some passengers it is by no means doing the busines it did at the start. During the past few days the attractive bus that has been run on this line has apparently been replaced by the awkward looking bust that was run last summer. This is a large body built on a truck chassis. It is considerable wider than the chassis and looks top heavy, and as though taking a curve at speed would result in its being capsized.

PAYS FINE.

Among those to pay fines of $5 each in the Dorchester court Wednesday for violation of the automobile laws were Ernest R. Neal of 182 Warren avenue, Wollaston, and William J. Cashman of 137 Cross street West Quincy.

MRS. THAW MUST TESTIFY

Sheriff Has Body Writ to Compel Her to Give Evidence

New York, July 8.—Evelyn N. Thaw will be brought back here on a body attachment and required to appear before a supreme court justice and explain why she failed to obey a subpoena directing her to testify in the proceedings relative to the sanity of her husband, Harry Thaw.

Mrs. Thaw came here from her summer camp in the Adirondacks, but returned after saying that she was too ill to take the stand and that anyhow she did not intend to testify against her husband.

Sheriff Grifenhagen, with two deputies, left last night for Mrs. Thaw's camp with the body attachment signed by Attorney General Woodbury. They expected to bring Mrs. Thaw here on Friday.

ENGINEER CHARGES WASTE OF MONEY

Commonwealth Pier Case Goes to District Attorney

Boston, July 8.—District Attorney Pelletier, Attorney General Attwill and Guy Emerson were in conference at the state house regarding the charges of graft at the Commonwealth docks. Emerson is a civil engineer.

Pelletier has been given a copy of Emerson's report tending to show a tremendous waste of money. The district attorney is prepared to handle any criminal prosecution made necessary on evidence tending to show any wrong done.

He refused to discuss the nature of the conference. He is to report to the attorney general, it is said, any finding of criminality after reading Emerson's report, which charges the waste of hundreds of thousands of dollars in connection with the construction of the $4,500,000 pier at South Boston.

Attwill has decided not to pay the full amount of the $194,000 bill submitted by the H. P. Converse Contracting company, and which is disputed by the present board of directors of the port. He is of the opinion that the contracting firm is entitled to some part of this; just how much, he has not definitely decided as yet.

CLARK IS RE-ELECTED

All but One of Christian Endeavor Officials Are Bostonians

Chicago, July 8.—Rev. Francis E. Clark, who because of illness was unable to attend the Christian Endeavor convention here, was re-elected president of the society.

Rev. H. B. Cross was elected vice president; A. J. Shartle, treasurer; H. N. Lathrop, clerk; J. J. Arakelyan, auditor; William Shaw, general secretary, and Karl Lehmann field secretary. All five in Boston and all are re-elections except Lathrop.

Lehmann reported that $250,000 of the $300,000 needed for a headquarters building in Boston has been raised.

PUT DYNAMITE ON STEAMSHIP

Holt Planned to Blow Up Saxonia or Philadelphia

GLIMAX TO DRAMATIC EVENTS

Navy Department Wireless Stations Enlisted to Prevent Threatened Disaster—Dynamiter Who Killed Himself Now Known to Have Been Muenter, Who Murdered His Wife

New York, July 8.—The dead hand of Frank Holt, assassin, bomb-maker and wife murderer, reached out over the Atlantic and menaced with dynamite two transatlantic liners with nearly 1000 men, women and children aboard.

Somewhere on the ocean, so Holt wrote his wife, the liner Saxonia or the Philadelphia—he wasn't sure which—would be destroyed July 7. A dynamite bomb, containing thirty pounds of explosive which Holt is known to have received and which has not been accounted for, is believed by the police to be the means Holt had chosen to destroy the ship.

While Holt lay a suicide in his cell at Mineola, L. I., where he was taken after his attempted assassination of J. P. Morgan, the wireless crackled a warning over the Atlantic telling of his threat to blow up a ship; and the mystery of his life was cleared away with his positive identification as Erich Muenter, the wife murderer who fled Cambridge, Mass., in 1906. He was an instructor at Harvard university at the time of the murder.

Nothing more dramatic in the last few crowded days of Holt's life has come to light than the warning of destruction that was uncovered after his death.

His confession that he placed the bomb in the Capitol at Washington on July 2, his attempted assassination of J. P. Morgan, the growing belief that he was Erich Muenter, culminating in his positive identification—in death—as Muenter, and his sensational suicide by leaping eighteen feet from the top of his cell to the floor, formed a series of events to which the threatened destruction of the Philadelphia or the Saxonia fitted as a startling climax.

The powerful wireless stations of the navy department were enlisted in the effort to prevent the threatened disaster at sea.

In answer to the warning there was received a message from the captain of the Philadelphia which said that everything aboard had been identified and that all was well.

Later in the day a similar message was received from Captain Biggle of the Saxonia.

However, the tension caused by Holt's warning was not entirely relieved because of the uncertainty whether he had not left explosives aboard other steamers.

The warning was issued to the steamers as the result of a note written by Holt to his wife a short time before he took his life in Mineola jail.

An autopsy established the fact that Holt committed suicide by leaping head foremost from an iron bar on the side of his cell to the concrete floor in the Mineola, L. I., jail while the keeper's back was turned.

Walter R. Jones, the Mineola coroner, issued a statement after an autopsy had been performed by the prison physician. He said: "Holt came to his death by a compound fracture of the skull and cerebral hemorrhage caused by a fall."

Investigation is in progress to ascertain whether his suicide was due to negligence of any jail official. The shipment to New York of Holt's trunk containing dynamite enough to destroy a city block is also the subject of inquiry.

Police officials inspected the cottage at Central Park, L. I., where Holt had spent two weeks conducting experiments in the manufacture of infernal machines and in target practice with a revolver.

SEVEN GUILTY OF ELECTION FRAUDS

Change of Venue Asked by Over a Hundred Others

Indianapolis, July 8.—Seven of the 132 men who are facing charges of election frauds in the registration, primary and election of 1914 pleaded guilty when arraigned in criminal court here.

One hundred and thirteen others, including Thomas Taggart, Democratic national committeeman; J. E. Bell, mayor of Indianapolis, and Samuel Perrott, chief of police, asked for a change of venue from Judge Collins.

Of the defendants, some are in prison, some sick, one dead, others have not been arrested and three were not ready for trial.

Collins told those who had asked for a change of venue that he would select five memebrs from the Marion county bar, from which list one would be chosen to try the cases.

SALE BY FORECLOSURE

Woodstock, Vt., July 8.—A petition to vacate the decree of the federal court ordering the foreclosure sale of the Wabash railroad was denied by United States Circuit Court Judge Adams of St. Louis after a hearing at his summer home here. The sale will take place on July 21, as originally ordered.

In announcing his decision Adams said that opportunity would be given the railroad to come in at any time after the sale and redeem the properties by paying the purchasers the amount at which the sale was made.

EQUAL SUFFRAGE NOTES.

Every one of the fifty-four public schools of Portland, Ore., has a Parent-Teachers' Association connected with it; and the press reports comment upon the unusually large number of fathers who are taking an active part in these organizations.

In Oregon, women vote. A young man from that state visited the national capital a few months ago, and was invited to a number of parties. One of his hostesses asked him if he did not find the Washington girls pretty.

"Pretty? Yes," he answered. "But don't they ever talk about anything except dress and flirtation?"

"Why, what do the young people talk about anywhere?" said the lady. "What do they talk about in Oregon?"

In all the equal suffrage states one of the marked results has been to broaden women's minds, and lead them to take a more intelligent interest in public affairs. This has made them better comrades for their husbands and sons. The experience of Portland looks as if equal suffrage tends to broaden men's interest also and led them to take a more intelligent concern in matters relating to their children. This must make them better comrades for their wives, besides being a very good thing for the children and the schools. A. S. B.

"A VICTORY FOR SUFFRAGE"

"The lure of 'politics" has not yet made the suffragist women quite forego their domestic accomplishments, as was shown by the manner in which they 'swept things before them at Marion yesterday, where the Massachusetts State Federation of Womens Clubs voted 203 to 99 for suffrage. The two hours' debate on the resolution was full of fire but was orderly and dignified. Indeed, the splendid manner in which many women publicly argue that members of their sex should keep out of public life is conclusive proof that they are fitted for just such careers. However, the desire to have the legal, as they have every other right to vote as men vote, does not mean that women are eager to plunge into 'politics.' All men who vote are not politicians. If wishing to have every means of securing civic betterment of all kinds—better schools, playgrounds, police protection; cleaner stores, purer food, and more wholesome conditions of life generally—means 'politics,' then every woman, as well as every man, should be a politician. This as we understand it, is the sort of politics in which a very large percentage of women are interested, as indeed, all should be. And their very logical conclusion is that the ballot will help to gain such ends."

FARMELAR STILL BIG MYSTERY

Police Fail to Find Anything Against Him

Two Italians were before Judge Avery this morning charged with being tramps. One was Joseph Farmela, claiming to be from Waterbury, Ct., the well dressed young man who was brought in from Milton Wednesday for trying to borrow money from Mrs. Charles Minot and who still remains a mystery although he has been investigated.

The other Nicolas Budda who was arrested in the West Quincy railroad station where he was found asleep by Patrolman Dahlberg on Wednesday evening. He was charged with drunkenness and the case was placed on file.

Farmela was given six months in the House of Correction. Judge Avery advised him to appeal so that he could withdraw it next Tuesday if nothing turned up against him and receive a suspended sentence.

Farmela was as well dressed today as yesterday while Budda had the appearance of a rough and ready fellow afraid to tackle anything. Both were born in the south of Italy, only Farmela has lived here 13 years and got what education he has through correspondence school courses.

Maurice Pierce, chief of police of Milton, took the young man to various places in Boston Wednesday but found nothing against him. His photograph was not found at Boston police headquarters, his fingerprints were not in the files and unless information is uncovered before Tuesday he will be released, after being confined for seven days for being a tramp.

His remark "I don't see why they should keep me here when they have nothing against me," brought the answer from Judge Avery, "Perhaps they didn't go far enough." In the meantime a complete investigation will be made of the young man.

DANISH FRANKNESS

Mme. de Hegermann-Lindencrone, the American wife of a Danish diplomatist, tells a bathroom story. "I was dreadfully puzzled when first I arrived in Stockholm. Right opposite my window was a sign, 'Dam Bad Rum!' I said, "How queer! People generally cry up their wares, not down. Whoever heard a seller saying that his rum was as bad as that?" I found out afterwards tht the sign was merely to let people know that a ladies' bathroom was to be found there."—London Chronicle.

STRAIGHT TALK TO MOTHERS.

A mere man, Frank Barkley Copley, calmly makes his revolutionary statement in Outing. Then he proceeds to pump any amount of hot shot into the paralyzed phalanxes of maternity.

"Do you realize," demands this self-admitted bachelor, "that whereas nearly every child comes into the world healthy, about two thirds of them die before reaching their third year? How many babies do you know that do not have to be hushed to sleep?

"How many do you know that are not habitually fretting and whining? How many do you know that are not howling at all hours of the night and day at some one to come and amuse them? Precious few.

"But, you object, have not babies whined and howled and had to be hushed to sleep since time immemorial? Yes, that's true. Dosen't that prove it is perfectly natural? It does not. It simply proves that babies since time immemmorial have been spoiled.

"Now look here. How many babies do you know that are rapidly developing into little devils of greed and selfishness—bad tempered, impudent, self-willed and as stubborn as balky mules? A great many, it is to be feared."

Whew! Bachelor Copley waits for the tottering mothers to get breath and accuse him of not knowing the first thing about babies. Then he reveals the fact that he is loaded with information gained at the babies' hospital of New York city, an institution which during eighteen years has cared for six thousand infants—an experience, as he truthfully intimates, which no mere mother can hope to equal.

Having once more reduced them to a condition of collapse, he proceeds to give the mothers a few points, some of them, are, briefly, as follows:

Babies should not be rocked. You have often heard it said that the hand that rocks the cradle is the hand that rules the world. The new science boldly declares that the hand that rocks the cradle is the hand that spoils the world.

Begin training the baby as soon as he is born. Establish at once regular hours for his feeding and sleeping. For the first four weeks feed him every two hours between 6 A. M. and 6 P. M., once at 10 P. M. and once at 2 A. M.

After a month he should be fed every 2 1-2 hours between 6 A. M. and 6.30 P. M., with two feedings at night as before. When he is two months old he presumably requires stronger food and more of it, and from that time on he needs to be fed only every three hours from 6 A. M. to 6 P. M., with an additional feeding at 10 P. M.

Stick to this system though the heavens. A large amount of the fretfulness and moaning of infants is due to stomach disorders brought on by feeding at irregular intervals in irregular quantities.

If he is asleep when feeding time comes around don't hesitate to arouse him. Keep him strictly to business during his meal, but if at any time he shows a disposition to stop short of the customary allowance let him. Babies have rights. Their little "tummies" know better than you when they need a rest.

Do not sterilize the milk. Nothing has been found that will quite take the place of mother's milk. Therefore, a mother should nurse her baby if possible.

When it is not possible the best substitute is pure cow's milk raw, after it has been duly modified in accordance with the age of the child. Raw milk, however, is unsafe for baby during warm weather on account of the germs sure to develop in it.

Pasteurization, therefore must be resorted to in the summer, but don't sterilize the milk. Sterilized milk is now under a ban.

It has been discovered that in the process of sterilization the bone-forming qualities in the milk are destroyed along with the germs and that infants fed upon it for any length of time are likely not only to have soft bones, but rickets, scurvey and the most distressing diseases of the joints.

Under no circumtances try to coax him to go to sleep. Never sing to him, rock, or walk with him, never lie on the bed with him—never resort to any device whatsoever to put him to sleep and you will never have to.

But, you say, suppose the baby cries when he is put down to sleep? Ah! Now we've come to a highly important part of our subject.

Well, there are cries and cries. They may be divided into six classes, the normal cry and those in pain temper, illness, hunger and indulgence or habit.

The cry is nature's provision to expand the little lungs. To do this the baby must go on screaming from fifteen to thirty minutes a day. If the mother interferes she is ruining the child to humor her own nerves.

Among the baby's rights is the right to a good, old-fashioned, red-faced bawl, and please don't forget it.

Suppose it is the cry of pain? Well find out what is making him uncomfortable.

Now as to the cry of temper and the cry of habit and indulgence. You don't have to be told, little mother, what these cries indicate. You know perfectly well they indicate you have made a false start.

You know that blessed baby is crying for a light in his room, to be rocked, to be carried about, for a bottle to be sucked, or to be indulged in some other bad habit you have been the means of his acquiring. Well, the thing has got to be checked right here and now.

"What! Let him cry?" Exactly. "But he will go on crying!" Well, God bless his little soul, let him cry it out! "But he may hurt himself!" No, he won't.

If he is a very young baby, you will see that his abdominal band is properly applied, and then there will be not the least danger of rupture. If he is more than a year old there will be no danger of rupture under any circumstances.

"What will happen if he goes on crying for three hours?" That's easy—he will stop. What's more, it is ten to one that the next time he cries from temper of indulgence, he will keep it up for not longer than ten or fifteen minutes.

Don't show off the baby. Do you realize that his brain grows more during his first year than in all other years combined?

That means don't ever play with him during his first year, or let any one else play with him. "Kitchee coo!" cries the visitor. "Oh, oo swe et, precious 'ittle dear!" And poor baby gets poked in the ribs and tossed up in the air. Very bad.

It is a great mistake to handle an infant any more than necessary, not only on the score of its nerves, but on that of his bones. Baby's bones, you know, are soft; thus constant handling tends to destroy the shapeliness of his body.

The greater part of his early life should be spent on the bed. When he gets tired of lying in one position gently roll him over without picking him up.

When it is strictly necessary to lift him, there is only one way to do so without subjecting any part of his body to pressure or strain that may endanger a delicate organ. With your right hand grasp his clothing just below his feet, and then spread out your left hand and extend it along his spine until your pa lm is supporting his back and your three middle fingers his neck and head. In this way baby's clothing is made to form a hammock in which he comfortably lies.

You say that your baby was born nervous. In that you are mistaken; but he may have inherited nervous tendencies.

If that is the case there rests upon you a double duty to shield him from excitement. One good way to overcome his nervous tendencies is to over come your own nervousness.

A nervous mother infects her baby. She should practice rigid self-control for his sake if not for her own. Many women are nervous because they take pride in it. They have a silly idea that nervousness indicates some sort of superiority—refinement, delicacy or some other such rot.

If the average nervous women, instead of going around whining, "Oh, dear, I'm so nervous!" would brace up and say, "I won't be nervous!" she would be cured in short order; and her baby's chances for success in life would be greatly increased.

Meanwhile, take care of yourself. As you are so is your child likely to become. It is useless to teach your child to be one thing and remain another thing yourself. The child is influenced by what you are, not by what you say. May this be your motto: My baby first and last, but myself for my baby's sake.

A LATE SUMMER SUGGESTION

Chintz as a Fabric For Dresses Is Meeting With Much Favor.

Now we are quite used to chintz as a fabric for home decoration, and most of us are well acquainted with the beauties of this dainty fabric. But only a clever woman would think of dressing herself in the same fabric in which she decorates her furniture and windows. And yet chintz as a dress material is altogether delightful, having cheapness as well as beauty to recommend it.

A chintz chosen for a gown is in one of the new Poiret designs, with a white background, upon which black lines in check design are drawn. A tiny red and a tiny purple flower fills the white squares. The skirt is made quite plain like a tennis model and comfortably full, so that walking in it is easy. Its only ornamentations are two huge gathered pockets, which are placed on either side of the hip, a little above the knee.

Chintz of a very charming and new pattern can be purchased for 35 cents a yard, and three yards will be quite enough to make the entire costume. This makes the actual cost come to about a dollar. A good skirt pattern can be bought for 10 cents, and this will make things easy. From the scraps left after the skirt is cut out and made collars and cuffs for a last year's shirt waist can be devised. This will give the blouse a new air and will make it correspond with the chintz skirt. If you have a last year's straw hat that looks quite hopelessly old cover the brim with the same chintz and edge it with ball furniture fringe, which is 5 cents a yard. The result will be as smart an outfit as could be desired for a sum which will not exceed $1.50.

NEW AND NATTY BELTS.

Black and White Has Invaded the Domain of Beltdom.

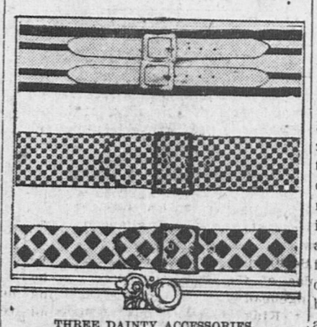
The lower two belts shown in this illustration are made of white kid and are stamped in black in a checkerboard or block design. They come in various patterns and in several widths.



THREE DAINTY ACCESSORIES.

The third or top belt is a striking white kid belt, decorated with narrow stitched bands of black suede in two widths. Two stitched straps of the white kid with covered buckle ends form the fastening.

Hint For Buttonholes.

When working buttonholes on bias material or goods which ravel, first starch the material stiff and then iron dry. The material will then neither stretch nor ravel.

SUMMER DANCE DRESSES.

Washable Dresses In Demand For Summer Dancing— Smart Economy That Does Not Look Cheap—Convertible Collar Blouses—Vogue of Brilliant Color.

Since dancing has become a universal pastime, and all the world trots, and hesitates wherever the provocative strain of music is heard, dance frocks are needed in greater profusion than ever before, but as these have partaken of the informality that now accompanies the dance, one can have a lot of pretty frocks for the price of one of the former formal gowns, built of costly materials. There are no end of dainty cottons that make the most fascinating little dance dresses—really washable ones, that emerge good as new from the hands of a skillful laundress, though most women are able to get a season's wear out of these dainty dresses before they require freshening.

One of the popular women's publications shows a series of up-to-date frocks, made by their wearers that cost less than three dollars for materials and with the present fad for net, a very little yardage makes up modishly if the net is used as a foundation, and the remnant for bands or frills well spaced on the skirt, and for a sleeveless smock reaching just below the waist as a bodice garniture.

TRANSPARENT SLEEVES.

The use of transparent or semi-transparent sleeves of net or chiffon is so general that practically every other frock one sees has this pretty and comfortable feature. The sleeves are generally, but not invariably of the set in variety, and are apt to finish at the wrist with a frill.

LITTLE SILK COATS.

The little silk coats that everyone wears, matching or contrasting with the dress, are lately apt to boast of the old time "bell" slee sleeves, beloved of the belles of the '60's. Taffeta is the best liked material for these, though one often sees the lighter weight failles and satins. Newer than the scalloped edges for these, are points and battlements and ruched frills that are either hemmed or have picot edges, while pinking and pin fringes are revised for such trimmings with excellent effect.

6557

LONG COVER ALLS.

Long bag shaped "Slip overs" or "cover alls" that protect a thin frock laintily are made up in brilliant changeable taffetas and trimmed all around with full double ruchings of the material. A soft green silk shot with pale gray looked liwe sea foam, and a rose color in similar combination was fascinating topping a pearl gauze gown.

WRAPS FOR ALL OCCASIONS.

Nowadays one's wrap outfit is as varied as one's purse can compass, though careful selection will make a few wraps go with anything one owns. Sweaters are increasing in variety and attractiveness. Some of the two-toned, reversible ones, white with colored trimmings or the other way round as preferred, are an excellent investment. Pongee or linen dusters and rubber coats for motoring, with fur and fur trimmed garments to slip on chilly evenings. Fur was never before so much worn as this season and Fox scarfs are ridiculously in evidence even when the mercury climbs though they are often singularly comfortable when a fresh breeze springs up at the shore. No matter how light and dainty the material of the summer evening wrap, it is chic to have a touch of fur in its garniture. They are all wide and ample, often cape like, hung from a yoke or with huge baggy sleeves. A collar like a narrow scarf that throws over the shoulder and ends with long tassels is one of the 1915 features and most of these garments are shorter in front to show the frock well.

ONE PIECE GOWNS.

One piece gowns of linen are especially well worn, white and pink in the lead though all shades are used. The new features are set in sleeves at the normal armhole, the half high collar of the little white chemisette—usually removable, and the placing of plaits at the front of the dress rather than at the back where they crush badly. Belts are a distinct feature and are as often of the linen, as of fancy leather. Combinations of blask patent leather and white kid forming stripes or polka spots are popular belt garnitures.

POLKA SPOTS FADDISH.

As the season advances polka spots of large size widely spaced are noticeably worn. A dress of blue foulard with spots the size of small marbles made up with matching blue chiffon, had the chiffon as the basis, and the foulard forming the wide trimming band at the foot and graduated narrower bands above to some twelve inches below the waist. At this point the full gathered chiffon produced a yoke effect over the white taffeta foundation. A little stole jacket of the dotted silk had the upper part of the set in sleeve of blue chiffon over white and the deep cuff reaching from wrist to elbow of the silk.

LATE HAT FREAKS.

As usual at this time of year, one sees freakish but fetching hats built all of black velvet, or with straw or gauze rims and velvet crowns also a lot of white felts replacing Panama straws for sport wear. Very new are wide shapes of straw netting that are no protection whatever from the sun, but novel and becoming to many of their wearers.

Fannie Field.

New York July 6, 1915.

HANDSOME TAILLEUR.

Blue silk gabardine was selected as the material for this charming tailleur. The skirt is full and the coat short waisted, with a belt and cord ornaments at the waist line. A high collar gives it style distinction.

May Have Started Him.

"I wonder how Columbus got the idea that the world was round?"

"I don't know that there is anything remarkable about his deductions. Any man along in middle age begins to get the idea that the world is not exactly square."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

THE SWISS SYSTEM

The Swiss and Australian systems of national militia are now much discussed in the United States. They show that a soundly democratic people is not swerved from its ideals of democracy by preparedness to defend those ideals. Of course while these systems of national militia meet admirably the conditions which Switzerland and Australia have to face, they are unsuited to the United States whose military problems are altogether different. For one thing, both these systems provide for placing in the field the whole manhood of the country which is called on to bear a duty equally distributed. This altogether a democratic arrangement and therefore fundamentally in accord with all democratic principles, but it has no place in a proper programme of defence for the United States. It would give us a force of ten million or more men, which is far in excess of our actual needs, so that we may say that while the principle underlying the Swiss and Australian systems of national militia is one which a republic like ours can approve without thereby suffering any taint of militarism, the application of that principle would give us a force out of all proportion to any possible need. On the other hand they would fail in exactly the opposite sense. They could not give us enough men to meet certain cases which we have to provide for, though Switzerland and Australia do not. The Swiss is the better of the two systems, and we may limit the argument to that.

Placed as she is, Switzerland is strictly limited to a system of defence She requires large numbers, because of the power of her neighbors, but has to hold down the cost of her military establishment very closely. She therefore relies on a large infantry militia, well trained in musketry, but very slightly in tactics and framed in an officer's corps a little higher in standard. The artillery though great pains are taken with it, is of necessity weak. Yet the army is fairly good in its purpose. With a few weeks' warning for getting the troops together, and with magnificent and endless mountain positions to defend, the Swiss army would probably put up a very stubborn resistance against any invader. Yet all this does not mean that the Swiss is a good army, it merely means that is adequate to the situation and policy of Switzerland, a very different matter. If it had to undertake an active campaign at short notice, it could stand no chance on even ground with equal numbers of French, German or Austrian troops.

Now our situation is wholly dissimilar from that of the Swiss republic. So far as powerful neighbors are concerned it is not in the least probable that any of them would venture to land on our coast if we could muster, not our armed citizentry, but two or three per cent of it only, say two or three hundred thousand men. But those men should be highly efficient, and in a machine capable of immediate response in an emergency.

But we have another need. At any moment problems may face us that require the immediate presence of seasoned troops outside our borders. It may be a matter of a few hundred marines in some West Indian island, of a few thousand soldiers in the Philippines, or of even larger forces in eventualities we do not seek but that may be thrust upon us. For all such cases, unlike Australia and Switzerland, we must have a first-line army, seasoned troops. We cannot send militia and waste their lives and our efforts. We therefore conclude that just as the Swiss system is too large for our needs in that we are under no necessity of arming all our men, so it is too small in that it does not provide us with the proper means for meeting problems that are, unfortunately, always before us:—Boston Transcript.

THE FORESTER'S DAUGHTER

A Romance of the Bear Tooth Range

By HAMLIN GARLAND

CHAPTER XVII.

A Matter of Dress.

"WELL, now," Wayland went on as they stepped off at the hotel, "I am in command of this expedition. From this on I lead this outfit. When it comes to hotels, railways and the like o' that I'm head ranger."

Mrs. McFarlane, tired, hungry and a little dismayed, accepted his control gladly, but Berrie could not at once slip aside her responsibility. "Tell the hostler"—

"Not a word!" commanded Norcross, and the girl, with a smile, submitted to his guidance, and thereafter his efficiency, his self possession, his tact delighted her. He persuaded the sullen landlady to get them supper. He secured the best rooms in the house and arranged for the care of the team.

Berrie was correspondingly less masculine. In drawing off her buckskin driving gloves she had put away the cowgirl and was silent, a little sad even in the midst of her enjoyment of his dictatorship. And when he said, "If my father reaches Denver in time I want you to meet him," she looked the dismay she felt.

"I'll do it, but I'm scared of him."

"You needn't be. I'll see him first and draw his fire."

Mrs. McFarlane interposed. "We must do a little shopping first. We can't meet your father as we are."

"Very well. It is arranged. We get in, I find, about noon. We'll go straight to the biggest shop in town. If we work with speed we'll be able to lunch with my father. He'll be at the Palmer House at 1."

Berrie said nothing, either in acceptance or rejection of his plan. Her mind was concerned with new conceptions, new relationships, and when in the hall he took her face between his hands and said, "Cheer up! All is not lost!" she put her arms about his neck and laid her cheek against his breast to hide her tears. "Oh, Wayland, I'm such an idiot in the city! I'm afraid your father will despise me."

She woke to a new life next morning—a life of compliance, of following, of dependence upon the judgment of another. She stood in silence while her lover paid the bills, bought the tickets and telegraphed their coming to his father. She acquiesced when he prevented her mother from telephoning to the ranch. She complied when he countermanded her order to have the team sent back at once. His judgment ruled, and she enjoyed her sudden freedom from responsibility. It was novel, and it was very sweet to think that she was being cared for as she had cared for and shielded him in the world of the trail.

In the railway coach Wayland tactfully withdrew, leaving mother and daughter to discuss clothes undisturbed by his presence.

"We must look our best, honey," said Mrs. McFarlane. "We will go right to Mme. Crosby at Battle's, and she'll fit us out. I wish we had more time, but we haven't, so we must do the best we can."

"I want Wayland to choose my hat and traveling suit," replied Berrie.

"Of course. But you've got to have a lot of other things besides." And they bent to the joyous work of making out a list of goods to be purchased as soon as they reached Chicago.

Wayland came back with a Denver paper in his hand and a look of disgust on his face. "It's all in here—at least, the outlines of it."

Berrie took the journal and there read the details of Settle's assault upon the foreman. "The fight arose from a remark concerning the forest supervisor's daughter. Ranger Settle resented the gossip and fell upon the other man, beating him with the butt of his revolver. Friends of the foreman claim that the ranger is a drunken bully and should have been discharged long ago. The supervisor for some mysterious reason retains this man, although he is an incompetent. It is also claimed that McFarlane put a man on the roll without examination." The supervisor was the protagonist of the play, which was plainly political. The attack upon him was bitter and unjust, and Mrs. McFarlane again declared her intention of returning to help him in his fight. However, Wayland again proved to her that her presence would only embarrass the supervisor. "You would not aid him in the slightest degree. Nash and Landon are with him and will refute all these charges."

This newspaper story took the light out of their day and the smile from Berrie's lips, and the women entered the city silent and distressed in spite of the efforts of their young guide. The nearer the girl came to the ordeal of facing the elder Norcross the more she feared the outcome, but Wayland kept his air of easy confidence and drove them directly to the shopping center, believing that under the influence of hats and gloves they would regain their customary cheer.

In this he was largely justified. They had a delightful hour trying on millinery and coats and gloves.

Silent, blushing, tousled by the hands of her decorators, Berrie permitted hats to be perched on her head and jackets buttoned and unbuttoned about her shoulders till she felt like a worn clothes horse. Wayland beamed with delight, but she was far less satisfied than he, and when at last selection was made she still had her doubts, not of the clothes, but of her ability to wear them. They seemed so alien to her, so restrictive and enslaving.

"You're an easy fitter," said the saleswoman. "But"—here she lowered her voice—"you need a new corset. This old one is out of date. Nobody is wearing hips now."

Thereupon Berrie meekly permitted herself to be led away to a torture room. Wayland waited patiently, and when she reappeared all traces of Bear Tooth forest had vanished. In a neat tailored suit and a very chic hat, with shoes, gloves and stockings to match, she was so transformed, so charmingly girlish in her self conscious glory, that he was tempted to embrace her in the presence of the saleswoman. But he didn't. He merely said: "I see the governor's finish. Let's go to lunch. You are stunning!"

"I don't know myself," responded Berrie. "The only thing that feels natural is my hand. They clinched me so tight I can't eat a thing, and my shoes hurt." She laughed as she said this, for her use of the vernacular was conscious. "I'm a fraud. Your father will spot my brand first shot. Look at my face—red as a saddle!"

"Don't let that trouble you. This is the time of year when tan is fashionable. Don't you be afraid of the governor. Just smile at him, give him your grip, and he'll melt."

"I'm the one to melt. I'm beginning now."

Notwithstanding his confident advice Wayland led the two silent and inwardly dismayed women into the showy cafe of the hotel with some degree of personal apprehension concerning the approaching interview with his father. Of course he did not permit this to appear in the slightest degree.

It pleased him to observe the admiring glances which were turned upon Berrie, whose hat became her mightily, and, leaning over, he said in a low voice to Mrs. McFarlane: "Who is the lovely young lady opposite? Won't you introduce me?"

This little play being over, he said, "Now, while our order is coming I'll run out to the desk and see if the governor has come in or not."

Wayland returned with an increase of tension in his face.

"He's here. I've sent word saying 'I am lunching in the cafe with ladies.' I think he'll come round. But don't be afraid of him. He's a good deal rougher on the outside than he is at heart. Of course he's a bluff old business man and not at all pretty, and he'll transfix you with a kind of estimating glare as if you were a tree, but he's actually very easy to manage if you know how to handle him. Now, I'm not going to try to explain everything to him at the beginning. I'm going to introduce him to you in a casual kind of way and give him time to take to you both. He forms his likes and dislikes very quickly."

"What if he doesn't like us?" inquired Berrie, with troubled brow.

"He can't help it." His tone was so positive that her eyes misted with happiness. "But here comes our food. I hope you aren't too nervous to eat. Here is where I shine as provider. This is the kind of camp fare I can recommend."

Berrie's healthy appetite rose above her apprehension, and she ate with the keen enjoyment of a child, and her mother said, "It surely is a treat to get a chance at somebody else's cooking."

"Don't you slander your home fare," warned Wayland. "It's as good as this, only different."

He sat where he could watch the door, and despite his jocund pose his eyes expressed growing impatience and some anxiety. They were all well into their dessert before he called out, "Here he is!"

Mrs. McFarlane could not see the newcomer from where she sat, but Berrie rose in great excitement as a heavy set, full faced man with short, gray mustache and high, smooth brow entered the room. He did not smile as he greeted his son, and his penetrating glance questioned even before he spoke. He seemed to silently ask: "Well, what's all this? How do you happen to be here? Who are these women?"

Wayland said: "Mrs. McFarlane, this is my father. Father, this is Miss Berea McFarlane of Bear Tooth Springs."

The elder Norcross shook hands with Mrs. McFarlane politely, coldly, but he betrayed surprise as Berea took his fingers in her grip. At his son's solicitation he accepted a seat opposite Berea, but refused dessert.

Wayland explained: "Mrs. McFarlane and her daughter quite saved my life over in the valley. Their ranch is the best health resort in Colorado."

"Your complexion indicates that," his father responded dryly. "You look something the way a man of your age ought to look. I needn't ask how you are feeling."

"You needn't, but you may. I'm feeling like a new fiddle, barring a bruise at the back of my head, which makes a 'hard hat' a burden. I may as well tell you first off that Mrs. McFarlane is the wife of the forest supervisor at

She Was So Transformed That He Was Tempted to Embrace Her.

Bear Tooth, and Miss Berea is the able assistant of her father. We are all rank conservationists."

Norcross senior examined Berrie precisely as if his eyes were a couple of X ray tubes, and as she flushed under his slow scrutiny he said, "I was not expecting to find the forest service in such hands."

Wayland laughed.

"I hope you didn't mash his fingers, Berrie."

She smiled guiltily. "I'm afraid I did. I hope I didn't hurt you—sometimes I forget."

Norcross senior was waking up. "You have a most extraordinary grip. What did it—piano practice?"

Wayland grinned. "Piano! No—the cinch."

"The what?"

Wayland explained. "Miss McFarlane was brought up on a ranch. She can rope and tie a steer, saddle her own horse, pack an outfit and all the rest of it."

"Oh! Kind of cowgirl, eh?"

Mrs. McFarlane, eager to put Berrie's better part forward, explained: "She's our only child, Mr. Norcross, and as such has been a constant companion to her father. She's not all cowhand. She's been to school, and she can cook and sew as well."

"Mrs. McFarlane comes from an old Kentucky family, father. Her grandfather helped to found a college down there."

Wayland's anxious desire to create a favorable impression of the women did not escape the lumberman, but his face remained quite expressionless as he replied:

"If the life of a cowhand would give you the vigor this young lady appears to possess I'm not sure but you'd better stick to it."

Wayland and the two women exchanged glances of relief.

"Why not tell him now?" they seemed to ask. But he said: "There's a long story to tell before we decide on my career. Let's finish our lunch. How is mother, and how are the girls?"

RECRUITING IN UNITED STATES

Montenegro and Britain Said to Be Chief Offenders

CLOSE WATCH IS BEING KEPT

Case of Men Charged With Violating Neutrality Laws by Inducing Their Countrymen to Return Home to Fight Will Go Before Federal Grand Jury—"Holdups" May Proceed

Washington, July 8.—Although department of justice officials are confident they have nipped in the bud a plan to ship numbers of Montenegrins back to their native country to join the colors, there is no present intention of preventing the departure of Montenegrins who already have been induced to start for home.

Officials here, therefore, were not surprised to learn that 147 recruits held up in Portland, Ore., had been allowed to proceed. It is said the efforts of the government are to be directed chiefly toward the conviction, on charges of violating the neutrality laws, of the three or four representatives of the Montenegrin government charged with inducing their countrymen to enlist and to return home.

The cases proably will be laid before the federal grand jury at Chicago, where much of the evidence was obtained from recruits held up on a railroad train bound for Canada.

Evidence so far discovered points to violations in enlistments for the British and Montenegrin armies, and government agents are keeing close watch on reported attempts to recruit for Italy.

Word was received at the department of justice that indictments were expected in San Francisco against five men charged with acquiring recruits in the United States for the British army.

It became known that B. Martinovitch, one of the Montenegrins arrested in Bisbee, Ariz., spent some time in Washington about a month ago, and talked with Sir Cecil Spring-Rice, the British ambassador, about the observance of American neutrality in endeavoring to have Montenegrins return for military service.

Martinovitch was told of laws covering such matters and also was informed that during previous foreign wars reservists had left the United States in large nurmbers.

PTOMAINE IS SUSPECTED

Investigation of Poison Epidemic at Westerly Is Under Way

Westerly, R. I., July 8.—Thirty-eight persons are seriously ill, and a rigid official investigation was put under way to determine the responsibility for the epidemic of ptomaine poisoning here.

Timothy Sullivan died Tuesday, and his daughter, Julia, is reported to be near death. Five of the cases now under treatment have just been reported.

The inquiry is being conducted by F. A. Strickland, state chemist, and F. A. Jackson, both members of the state pure food and drug commission. These men, with Dr. Scanlon, local medical examiner, visited a restaurant from which the poison is thought to have come, and took away samples of the ingredients with which pies were made. Liquid and powdered insect killer, thought possible to have been accidentally mixed in the pies, was also taken away.

Several of the cases now under treatment are said to be critical, but recovery in the majority of them is anticipated.

ROBBED WOMEN CLIENTS

Missouri Attorney Sentenced to Ten Years In Prison

Chillicothe, Mo., July 8.—Oscar L. Smith, an attorney who is alleged to have defrauded women clients in Chillicothe out of $75,000, entered a plea of guilty to embezzlement here and was sentenced to ten years in prison.

Most of the attorney's victims were school teachers and widows who had placed their money with Smith as a loan agent. The interest always was promptly paid. However, early in June, one of his clients desired to collect the principal of a loan of $8500. Smith could not pay and fled. He was captured in Philadelphia.

A joint campaign for Frank O. Lowden, farmer-politician, for governor, and Thompson for Republican committeeman was launched.

An Episode Of the Big European War

By ESTHER VANDEVEER

Wilhelmina Bischoff, a volunteer nurse in a hospital for sick and wounded soldiers in Germany, entered upon her service with an admonition from her father in this wise:

"My daughter, I desire that you do not permit yourself to confine your nursing to any one patient. There is no more prolific field for love affairs than nursing. A young man, grateful for the attention he receives, falls in love with his nurse, the nurse pities her charge, and pity is akin to love. I wish you to remain fancy free because of this proposed match between you and your Cousin Adolf in America, a match desired as much by my brother, his father, as by myself. The American branch of our family has grown rich, while we have remained poor. It is therefore desirable that you should marry your cousin, who, as you know, will come over from America for the purpose as soon as this war has ended."

"Yes, father," replied Wilhelmina, "you will find me a dutiful daughter in this respect as in all others. We German girls know what is due to our parents, but I have heard that in America it is different—that in that country there is but little respect for age or parental authority, and young people consult their own wishes instead of those to whom they owe obedience."

This dialogue, which illustrates the difference between foreign and American marriages, was satisfactory to Herr Bischoff, who felt sure that his daughter would heed his admonition. But the old man's reasons for caution were stronger even than he had stated them. A young soldier who had been wounded in Belgium came under Wilhelmina's care, fell in love with her, and the pity she felt for him as well as the love he offered her caused a reciprocal feeling to arise within her own heart. He asked her all about herself, her name, the place in which she lived and told her that as soon as he was convalescent and should be granted a brief leave he would go to her father and ask for her hand. To this she replied that she was to marry a cousin who was to come from America as soon as the war was over.

"What," exclaimed the soldier, "marry one who takes no part in the defense of the fatherland and refuse one who has given his blood for it? I am astonished that so lovely a girl should do such a thing."

To this Wilhelmina replied that she owed the same duty to her parents that she owed to her country and whatever her father bade her she would do. The soldier insisted that he would go to her father and represent to him his want of patriotism and was sure that he would relent. But the lover added that Wilhelmina must be at home when he came, that she might add her supplications to his. Wilhelmina consented to this, but averred that without her father's consent she would not accept her soldier suitor.

When the young man became well enough to totter forth from the hospital he was given a month's leave, and Wilhelmina preceded him to her home to break the matter to her parents. When the lover came he found the father obdurate. Wilhelmina had represented the matter to him, and he replied that it was the soldier's duty to serve his country and he was not entitled to a reward, especially such a reward as he asked. The American to whom Wilhelmina was engaged had been born in another country, and his duty was to his own state. Therefore no more should be said about the matter. Wilhelmina should await the arrival of the man whom she was to marry.

When the soldier arrived and was informed of the situation he made matters worse by declaring that he would marry Wilhelmina in spite of her father, her mother and all her American relatives, including the cousin.

"You don't talk like a German at all," said Herr Bischoff angrily. "You talk like an American, for I have understood that in America there is but little respect for age and parental authority. Get you gone back to the army, and it is hoped that your country may get rid of you on the battlefield."

"I will marry Wilhelmina first," the soldier retorted.

"You will do no such thing."

"Well, at least give me five minutes' parting conversation with her alone; then if she wishes it I will give her up."

This promise induced Herr Bischoff to grant the interview, after which the soldier bid them all goodby. That night he eloped with Wilhelmina and in the morning neither of them put in an appearance. Herr Bischoff hunted high and low for them, but was unable to find them. However he learned that they had been seen together going back in the direction from which they came, and he followed them. Overtaking them, he upbraided his daughter and cursed his son-in-law.

"I told you," said the latter, "that I would marry Wilhelmina, and I have done so. In marrying me she has obeyed you, for I am William Bischoff, a citizen of the United States. Desiring to see something of this big war, I came over at its commencement instead of at its end to enlist in the German army as well as to marry my cousin."

U. S. PRODUCES MOST PAPER.

The United States is the greatest paper-producing country in the world, by a very wide margin. In 1909 the total value of the products of the American paper mills was nearly $270,000,000, and if the rate of increase recorded for a half dozen years previous to 1909 has held good since, the present annual production is well over $300,000,000, and that total is nearly three times the value of the product of the next great producing country—Germany.

As an exporter of paper, however, the United States has not been a very important factor except in such nearby markets as Canada and Cuba, the total value of the paper products sold abroad during the fiscal year 1914 amounting to only $21,000,000 and even that sum includes over $9,500,000 for books, music, engravings, etc., not included in the $300,000,000 worth of products previously mentioned.

In the past our manufacturers have had about all they could do to supply the home demand, and, excepting the next-door markets, their attempts to sell paper abroad have been incidental. The war in Europe has been interfering with the trade of some of the principal paper-exporting countries to such an extent of late, however, that American paper makers are now looking into the possibility of establishing good connections in markets that were previously monopolized by European concerns. To throw as much light as possible on the paper trade of the world the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce has just issued a report on the subject entitled, "Paper and Stationery Trade of the World." This report, which makes a book of some 450 pages, is made up of reports from American consuls in nearly every country in the world, and for the most part these reports are concerned with trade conditions as they existed previous to the war, thus making it possible for the exporter to determine just the nature of the competition he may expect in any given country when normal times return.

So far the most gratifying increases in paper exports have been to England and Argentina, and the only noteworthy falling off in sales has been to Australia. As a whole the exports of paper proper have shown an increase during the first ten months of the present fiscal year, although, as might have been expected, the sales of books, music, engravings, and other products that are sometimes included in the total exports of paper have fallen off.

The report may be obtained at the nominal cost of 50 cents from the Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office, Washington, D. C. It is designated Special Consular Report No. 73.

POLICE AID BOYS FROM E. BOSTON

Two 16 year old boys from East Boston, tired from tramping to all parts of the city in search of employment called at police headquarters Wednesday evening and said they were unable to get home because they had no money. Sergt. John T. Larkin who was in charge furnished the money for the trip.

The boys appeared shortly after roll call. Their clothing, probably neat when they left home, was covered with dust. Their faces were grimy and their shoes lacked lustre. Both wore faded flowers in the lapels of their coats.

Their frank explanation of their experiences, gained in visits to several factories and the shipyard, enlisted the sympathies of the sergeant.

Each question brought an accurate answer until they were asked the number of the police station in East Boston. They knew the names of the police in the vicinity of their homes and spoke of places with a familiarity which would have disarmed suspicion.

"Well," said Sergt. Larkin, "If you were bad boys you would know the station number and wouldn't come here for assistance. Have you any objections to my phoning over and asking a few questions?"

"No sir," quickly answered the boys, but instead a hearing the cracking of telephone wires the sound of jingling silver struck their ears, enough for carfare and luncheon. Two grateful young Americans shook the sergeant's hand as they bade him goodbye.

A pretty surprise party was tendered to Mrs. Walter Anderson, a bride of a month, at the home of Miss Mildred Byron, Quincy Avenue, Wednesday evening.

While the young woman was recovering from her surprise Miss Byron presented her with a handsome parlor lamp. A highland fling was given by Misses Mae Robertson and Isabelle Main, two well known Scottish daneers. Vocal solos were rendered by Misses Catherine Barrett, Katherine Hurley, Helen Delano, accompanied by Miss Mildred Byron.

Among those present were Misses Catherine Barrett, Isabelle Main, Helen Delano, Katherine Hurley, Nellie Murphy, Lillian Cross, Maud Soutron, Essie Grange, Mae Robertson, Annie Cotter, Hazel Grant, Mary Corcoran and Elizabeth Carney.

BRIEFS

Miss Eva Reed has accepted a position as assistant clerk in the office of the Board of Trade.

The annual picnic of the Loyal Orange lodges of the state in celebration of the 225th anniversary of the "Battle of the Boyne" is to be held Monday at Rossons grove, Wakefield, on the shores of Lake Quannapowitt. ### FRAME WAS NEW.

Visitor—That painting is by an old master, I see.

Mrs. McShoddle (apologetically)—Y-e-s, but the frame is new.—Pathfinder.

Johnny—What does it mean to say "seeing the humorous side of things," dad?

Father—Well, let us take an example. How many sides has a banana-skin, for instance?

Johnny—Two.

Father—Exactly. And when some other man steps on the banana-skin he sees the serious side of it, and you see the humorous side—Pathfinder.

A NEW VERSION.

The following version of "Mary Had a Little Lamb," appeared, according to a Corning, New York, reader of the Pathfinder, among the papers presented in response to a teacher's suggestion that her fourth-grade pupils write an essay on animals:

Mary had a little lamb;
She put it on the shelf.
Every time it wagged its tail
It spanked itself.

LARCENY CHARGE IS DISMISSED

A larceny charge against Margaret Kelliher of Houghs Neck was today dismissed by Judge Avery. The complaint was brought by members of the Seneca Social club of South Quincy who sought to have $50, part payment for rent of a cottage at Houghs Neck, returned because they claimed the house was not habitable.

Robert Booth, treasurer of the club, was the only witness heard. He told of the experience of the boys, the conditions of the house and said he told the defendant he wanted the money back and she could then rent the cottage if able to.

In cross examination he said all but $10 was taken from the treasury of the club and that the balance of $50 due for the season rent was to be contributed by members. Judge Avery in dismissing the case said the defendant was the agent and did not own the cottage and suggested the matter be brought to the civil side of the court.

Arrangements have been completed for the annual trolley trip of English Ivy lodge, Order Daughters of St. George. It is to be held at Revere beach and special cars will leave Brewers corner Saturday at 2 P. M. returning, leave Revere at 10 P. M. Tickets are selling fast, so come early and avoid the rush.

INJURIES NOT VERY SERIOUS

"Unconscious" Man Does Not Wait for Ambulance

The Quincy police ambulance responded to a false alarm call to the Wollaston railroad station just before seven o'clock Thursday evening.

The call was put in because a man was found lying on the platform, apparently in an unconcious condition. It was thought he had fallen from a rain and some one phoned for the ambulance and a physician.

A bystander remarked that the ambulance was coming and that the fellow would be taken to the hospital. A sudden twitching of the eyelids, followed by the opening of the eyes greeted the remark. Several bent over the man to ask what assistance they could be and quickly drew their heads away. It it said the reason was a strong smell of intoxicating liquor. The man was taken away in a private auto before the ambulance arrived.

FALL RIVER AND TAUNTON DISBAND

The Taunton and Fall River clubs of the Colonial league will be disbanded Saturday and all the games of the Pawtucket club will be played on the road. The changes are the result of poor support given the teams which have been losing ventures this season. The best of the players will be distributed among the other six teams and the league will continue with six clubs. George Barry has been with the Taunton team all season.

NILS NELSON PASSES AWAY

Nils Nelson, one of the best known residents of West Quincy, passed away at his home on Hall place, Thursday evening, after a lingering illness. He was in his 73rd year. He was born in Sweden and came to this country more than thirty-five years ago. He was a stone cutter by trade. He was a very active man for his age and worked up to within a year. He is survived by a widow, two sons, Nils Jr., who resides at home, Daniel, who is in the U. S. Navy and one daughter Mrs. James Duffy. The funeral will be held Sunday afternoon from his late home. Services will be held at St. Mary's church at 2 o'clock.

NO MEETINGS NEXT MONTH

Reliance Rebekah lodge, I. O. O. F., after its meeting in Odd Fellows hall, Thursday evening, suspended meetings until September. Two applications were received and Mrs. Mamie Johnston was appointed chairman of the committee in charge of the picnic at Merrymount park Saturday. George Ela is completing arrangements for a trolley ride in August for the members.

These warm mornings when preceded by sultry nights, you will find your temper improved and your appetite freshened by sitting down to breakfast in a dainty kimona purchased at the little Grey Shop.

EYESORE ON ADAMS STREET IS DESTROYED

District Engineer Badger while passing through Adams street Thursday afternoon discovered a fire in the old building situated off Adams street, near Common street, owned by the Adams Temple and School Fund. He telephoned the West Quincy station which responded. Chief Billings was also notified and taking a half dozen men in his car he also responded. The fire which was evidently of incendiary origin is said to have been burning for some time before discovered so that there was but little left of the building when the firemen arrived.

The building was one of the old land marks on Adams street. Years ago before the lines of the street were changed, and at the time when Adams street was known as the turnpike road between Plymouth and Boston, this building was located near the street, and was one of the stopping places for the old stage coaches. Its last occupant was Joseph McLaughlin, who recently died at the City Hospital. The building which was fast going to decay was looked upon as an eyesore and perhaps someone bent on improving the appearance of the landscape touched a match to it.

YACHT CLUB WHIST BEGINS.

Despite Stormy Weather Goodly Number are Present.

The weekly whist parties at the Quincy yacht club house began Thursday evening and although the weather was against a large attendance there was a goodly number present, although but few of the party came from Quincy, most of them being summer residents of Great Hill. The parties will be continued through the summer every Thursday evening until September.

"TRAMP" HAS 84 NECKTIES

Wardrobe Also Contains 10 Suits

Joseph Famelar, the mystery man who claims to be from Waterbury, Ct. was allowed to call at his lodging houes in Readville Thursday while he was being taken to the county jail at Dedham where he will be held for several days for being a tramp at Milton. The officers who had him in charge was somewhat surprised at the extent of his wardrobe.

They say there were ten good suits of clothes, apparently of the same size as the suit he wore: about seven dozen expensive neckties made from cheeny silk of modest patterns, plenty of good quality shirts and other paraphenalia.

In the room was also what appeared to be a complete kit of barber's tools and the theory is now advanced that he is a barber by trade and is taking a chance on being a mechanical draftsman on education he received through a course in a correspondence school.

Famelar maintained a lock box at the Readville post office and was allowed to get mail there. One letter contained a $5 bill from a friend in Waterbury. He paid $2 due for room rent and repaid a loan of $1 to his landlady. He retained the balance.

Famelar, was arrested at the home of Mrs. Charles Minot on Brush Hill road for trying to borrow money to pay his car fare to Waterbury. His story was that his pocket had been picked at Forest Hills the previous night and that the dollar in his possession was borrowed from his landlady.

The young man has furnished a long list of references and they will be interviewed before Tuesday when it is expected Famelar will withdraw his appeal, accept a six months sentence for being a "tramp", and receive a suspended sentence.

BILLINGS HAS EVIDENCE ON RINGING OF ALARMS

Turns Apprehension of Malefactors Over to Police

Chief Billings has completed his investigation of the ringing of false alarms from Box 58, and believes that he has secured sufficient evidence for the police to act. Just what evidence he has secured or to whom it points to he refuses to state.

There have been ten false alarms of fire from this box during the past few weeks, usually coming during the early evening. The box is located on the corner of Adams and Beale streets near the Milton line. There are no buildings very near the box. There are, however, a number of shade trees and it is an easy matter for one to open the box and sound the alarm and get away without being seen.

A watch was put on the box and from evidences thus secured Chief Billings feels warranted in turning the matter over to the police department.

DAMAGE TOTALS ABOUT $1000

Clouds of gas floated out of the hold of the British submarine H-14, built at the Fore River shipyard, when workmen this morning opened the hatches which had been battered down to suffocate the fire discovered in the forward battery compartment Friday noon and it was some minutes before an appraisal of the damage could be estimated.

It was said at the offices of the company this morning that the damage will probably be about $1.000. No water was poured into the compartment so the battery system, valued at about $50.000 would not be ruined. There was no trace of fire when the hatches were lifted.

The company is satisfied that the fire was the result of a short circuit in the electric system igniting fumes from a can of varnish. The craft was launched last Saturday and is one of the ten built at the shipyard for Great Britain. Heavy smoke rolled from the vessel and the Central station fire apparatus was summoned by telephone by a man passing the gates. The apparatus did not enter the yard.

Souvenir postals have been received from Rev. Adelbert Lathrop Hudson of the First Parish church who is spending his vacation in the White Mountains.

PROUD PARENTS OF TWIN BOYS

Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Ready of Cross street, one of the best known French families in the section, are receiving congratulations on the birth of two husky twin boys on Thursday. An odd coincidence is the fact that a niece of Mr. Ready in the next house gave birth just four months ago to a boy and girl. Dr. Blanchard who was in attendance states that the children are in excellent health.

MANY FROM QUINCY ATTEND WEDDING OF H. R. HARDWICK

Famous Harvard Athlete Marries Miss Margaret Stone at Marion

Mr. and Mrs. Huntington Reed Hardwick are now on a five days' honeymoon trip, after which they will spend a day at Marion, and will then start for the Pacific coast. Mr. and Mrs. Hardwick were married Thursday noon in the magnificent Stone Mansion at Marion.

A private train with seven coaches filled with happy guests left Boston at 9.15 A. M. stopping at Quincy, and arriving at Marion's little station a little after 11. From there the guests were conveyed to Great Hill, four and a half miles away by numerous automobiles.

Several hundred of the guests had already arrived by automobile from Boston, Brookline, the bride's winter home, and various places along the South Shore and Cape.

Although pouring in Boston when the party left, hardly a drop had fallen in Marion at eleven, but about noon it settled down for a good hard rain.

"Tack" Hardwick, the groom has won a lasting fame at Harvard as an all round athlete, as its baseball captain. All American football end, shot putter, and as the strongest man in college.

It is said that the romance started from the bride's admiration of him on the gridiron. Their engagement was announced at a tea in Brookline in the winter of 1913.

Mr. Hardwick is the youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. C. Theodore Hardwick of Chestnut street, this city.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Galen L. Stone, whose winter residence is on Buckminster road, Brookline. Mr. Stone is a member of the firm of Hayden, Stone & Co. of Boston. The bride's sister, Katherine, married Frank Hoyt about two years ago in the same room which was the scene of Thursday's wedding.

The ceremony took place in the main hall of the mansion amid nearly 1000 guests, who thronged the large

EXPECT KAISER'S ANSWER SOON

(By United Press)

Washington, July 9—Athough the administration showed pique at the suggestion of secret diplomacy when the recent stories appeared to the effect that unofficial negotiations were in progress between the United States and Germany to aid the latter in framing her answer to the last American note there is nevertheless a very definite understanding between the two governments, it was confidentially asserted today by an official in close touch with international developments.

The German answer, it was admitted, will not be satisfactory as previously expected would be the case. It would have been, however, it was stated but for the publication of the story of preliminary negotiations. Sec. Lansing denied that anything was ""underhnd" in progress and President Wilson was understood to hve notified the Berlin foreign office that he did not wish to talk matters over until he received a formal German answer to his note.

Germanys answer is expected to be handed to Gerard sometime today or tomorrow.

CRUCIAL STAGE OF THAW CASE

(By United Press)

New York, July 9—Harry K. Thaw had reached the crucial stage of his nine years fight for freedom when he resumed the stand in his own sanity trial today, according to the freely expressed opinion of legal men connected with the case. That Thaw realized it himself was evidenced by his set face.

Deputy Atty. Gen. Cook began his second day's grilling, before the eyes of four hostile alienists who will follow him to the stand.

Legal men are of the opinion Thaw must prove a more controlled and collected witness today than yesterday if he hopes to help his case.

Malone, N. Y., July 9—Evelyn Thaw this morning was barricaded in Jack Clifford's camp. Deputies sent to bring her here to New York appear optimistic and were awaiting word when she was ready to start.

WHO SHOULD PAY?

There has been a fierce battle within and outside the City Council on the question whether the money required for the reconstruction of some streets which need it badly shall be paid out of the general tax levy or out of funds raised by a loan.

It is a generally accepted principle in municipal finance that the expense of improvements shall be borne by those who are to benefit from them. In the case of a permanent improvement it is only fair that those who are to benefit in the future should assist those who are to benefit in the present. On the other hand the cost of temporary improvements, which benefit only men and women of the present, should not be saddled on those of years to come.

This obvious fact is stated vigorously in a booklet entitled "Permanent Paving," published by the Granite Paving Block Manufacturers' association of the United States, which says:

"For instance, $100,000,000 of 50 year bonds have been issued by the State of New York to build highways of composition and manufactured materials when the engineers who build these roads know the action of the elements and the wear and tear of the traffic they will carry will undoubtedly destroy these materials in from six to twelve years.

"Why should this generation saddle a burden of debt on the second generation to follow when the improvement will have to be replaced before the children are born who must pay for our folly? It is a crime against the progress of civilization."

It would seem that the City Council should have had little difficulty in determining the proper method of raising the money. It should not be a question of politics but of engineering It should not be a question for politicians but for engineers. Quincy has men competent to say what will be the probable life of a street. The method of raising the necessary funds should be based upon the answer to that question.

GOOD ADVICE.

Commenting on an editorial in this paper some weeks ago, in which the statement was made that the Thomas Crane Public library had become a trysting place for lovers on Sunday afternoon the Barre Times says:

"What effect would a few rules and strict enforcement of those rules have on such practices? We have heard of few complaints about the Boston public library becoming a trysting place for lovers, to the inconvenience of patrons who go there for mental pabulum rather than heart thrills. Possibly a little of the systematic regulation of the great Boston institution might be put into practice in some of the libraries of suburban cities with good results. At any rate, the practice should not be allowed to interfere with that for which the public library is intended; the readingroom is intended as a place where anyone may spend a few hours in mental development or mental recreation. If Quincy had exercised a somewhat stricter hand possibly the ignominy of being forced to close the public library on Sundays because of love-making would not have been forced upon the community."

It sems to us that the comments of our up-to-date contemporary while not over complimentary are full of sound sense.

A trustee of the library stated in our letter box shortly after the appearance of the editorial in question that the experiment had not been a failure but had been discontinued because of the approach of summer and in accord with the original plan of the Trustees.

Without venturing to dispute the assertion of a man in a position to know we can at least say that if the experiment was not a failure neither was it a complete success. It is a well known fact that the library on Sunday afternoons was a trysting place for lovers. The question can be dropped for the time and we can wait to see if the library is reopened Sunday afternoons next fall. and if this should be the case we can observe whether the advice of the Barre Times is followed. If the advice is not followed we feel that the failure will be so pronounced that the Trustees will be compelled to give it recogniton by discontinuance.

AN UNJUST BURDEN.

This is an appropriate time to start an agitation for state built highways in the city of Quincy.

The city is face to face with a hard problem in the crying demands of many of its streets for reconstruction. The various street orders which have come before the City Council at the last two meetings show little prospect of passing. The real hitch comes not precisely on the orders themselves but on the method of raising the money to pay for the street repairs whether it shall come out of the general tax levy or be raised by a loan. The City Council has no business to hold up important, almost essential, work in a controversy over this question. The streets need to be repaired and they should be repaired.

It should be said in this connection, however, that the city has been shouldering a larger burden in the maintenance of its streets than it rightly should. Washington street, particularly, should be maintained, at least in large part, by the state, because this street is used principally by out of town autoists on the way to the South Shore. The same applies in lesser degree to Hancock street from Adams to School street. It is manifestly unfair that Quincy should construct roads for the use of persons who pay no taxes and otherwise contribute nothing to the city. An energetic agitation should be started and the aid of our representatives on Beacon Hill should be enlisted.

Melrose had adopted some good ordinances for the regulation of the jitney bus and it would be well for other cities to follow her example.

The ordinances are: a $1.00 fee, every jitney driver shall file a bond or a policy of insurance for at least $5000, no car shall be operated by a driver under 21 years, the driver shall have a chauffeur's license, the jitney must be approved by the Master Mechanic of the Fire department and no more persons shall be carried at one time than can be seated according to the maker's design of the car.

MERELY A SUGGESTION.

If the recommendations of an investigating committee are adopted, our neighbor to the southward, the city of Quincy, will amend and improve her fire department methods. It is not for Boston, which has a first-class department, to interfere with the housekeeping problems of other municipalities, much as some of them like to view with alarm, and suggest remedies for, our obvious shortcomings, but may we suggest—merely suggest—that it ought not to be necessary for Quincy or any other city to wake the living and disturb the dead at all hours of the night by sounding every fire alarm four times, on bells and whistles, to the discomfort of the physically fit and to the annoyance and possible injury of those who are ill.

Quincy is one of several cities that, having many call members of their fire departments, assume that their entire population as well as that of their neighbors must wake and listen to every four-times-sounded alarm, genuine or false. To insist that there is no other way of rousing the firemen is not unlike the argument of those who contend that the noblest method of expressing one's patriotism is by discharging shotguns at street lights and endangering life with giant crackers. —Boston Journal.

THE TRANSPORTATION BATTLE.

The street railway companies that are being hit by the jitney service may find, as one or two have already found, that the way to fight the jitneys and put them out of business is to put their own lines beyond successful competition. For instance, the trolley line running out of Quincy, Mass., met the jitneys successfully by improving the street car service to such an extent that the jitneys found the demand for them all but eliminated. The jitneys had reaped a harvest by running over a certain section between times of the operation of street cars, the interval being 15 minutes; and the trolley line met the competition by running cars every five minutes instead of every 15 minutes, the traffic thereupon shifting back to the street cars to such an extent that "it is doubtful if enough fares were collected (on the jitneys) to pay for the gasoline." The public will go where the accommodations are the best at the most reasonable rates, regardless of whether the transporting company is a corporation or an individual; if the street railway companies offer more prompt service, if they charge less than the jitneys, the public will immediately transfer their patronage to the regular lines of transportation. There is little sentiment in the attitude of the public; sentiment merges into feasibility and economy of service. And the transportation lines that get the business are the ones that give the most for the money.—Barre Times.

UNCLE SAM IS IN FULL CHARGE

Will Operate the German Wireless Plant at Sayville

BULLARD PLACED IN CHARGE

Naval Radio Expert Will Continue Operation of Station With Naval Forces—Alleged Violations of Neutrality by Sending Messages In Code—Activity of German Experts

Washington, July 9.—The government has taken over the Sayville, L. I., wireless station, the only privately operated, direct means of communication between the United States and Germany.

Secretary Daniels issued a statement in which he said he had directed Captain Bullard, as the expert of the department, to take over and operate the station. There will be no change so far as the public is concerned. Messages will be accepted as heretofore. The only difference will be that naval operators instead of commercial employes will man the keys. The charges collected by the navy will be paid to the owning company.

It has been charged that when the navy censors had left the wireless room for a minute or two unneutral messages had been sent and that only by a difficult and trying supervision could neutrality be strictly preserved.

Both the wireless station at Tuckerton, N. J., and the Sayville station now are able to communicate direct with Germany, but there has been from the start a restriction prohibiting the sending of cipher messages unless code books were deposited with the naval censors. The same rule will be continued.

It is said that messages which violated the neutrality of the United States have been sent, despite the censors. So flagrant have been the violations, according to repeated complaints, that recently the force of censors was increased. The censors, however, are unable to prevent code messages, which seem to be innocent communications, from going out.

Complaints have doubled since the mysterious arrival of Captain Zenneck, said to be one of the two greatest wireless experts among German scientists. The presence of Zenneck has been a continual thorn in the side of the administration since the latter part of May, though his presence was not discovered until some time later. An inquiry was made by agents of the department of justice.

While all details as to the results of this investigation are refused, it is believed disclosures made in it have had something to do with the decision to take over the Sayville station.

Just why such an expert on wireless as Zenneck should be needed at Sayville, where there were already enough operators to keep the plant going to capacity, has been a mystery—a mystery increased by the fact that Professor Braun of the University of Strassburg, another expert on wireless, was also sent to the station. The only apparent explanation was that the men were adepts at devising code messages which would deceive the censors.

It has been on this theory that many of those who suspected the station have traced out what they believed to be the workings in conveying military information to the Germans.

RUM FOR AFRICANS

Cargo of More Than 200,000 Gallons Being Shipped From Boston

Boston, July 9.—New England rum will form one of the principal items in the cargo to be taken to the west coast of Africa by the four-masted schooner Estelle Kreiger, now loading at Constitution wharf.

The shipment of rum amounts to about 210,000 gallons and is the largest sent from here to Africa in recent years. Three hundred barrels, 1000 puncheons and 3000 kegs contain the immense consignment of liquor, which always finds a ready market.

Another valuable item in the freight will be 2000 barrels of flour and there will be quantities of tobacco, provisions and general merchandise.

TWELVE LIVES LOST

Fifty Persons Hurt as Trolley Car Plunges Into Gully

Niagara Falls, Ont., July 9.—Twelve persons were killed and fifty injured, some probably fatally, as the result of a trolley wreck on the slope of Queenston Heights.

Racing to catch a steamer for Toronto, a special car of the International railway, loaded with 121 passengers, left the rails on a sharp curve and plunged into a gully fifteen feet below.

The car struck a tree as it toppled over and was nearly cut in two. All the dead were residents of Toronto.

Bird Won't Be Candidate

Boston, July 9.—Charles S. Bird, in a letter to the Progressive state committeee, turned down the formal request of the committee that he become a candidate for both the Progressive and Republican nominations for governor.

FOUNTAIN IN CITY SQUARE

Dr. Gordon Objects To It's Removal

Editor of the Ledger:

I saw in your Ledger of Tuesday that the city appropriated two hundred dollars for the removal of the fountain in the square. a sum so small as to indicate that the fountain was only to be taken up and carted away.

Besides being an ornament to the city the fountain represents one ideal of human sympathy for the horse which should not be disregarded, and I trust it will not be ruthlessly consigned to the scrap heap without careful consideration by the inhabitants who so generously presented the gift to the city and who fully expected the city would faithfully maintain the trust. They should certainly be granted a hearing by the council before this act of vandalism is carried out.

Up to 1891 there were no facilities for watering horses in Quincy except the old Town Pump, opposite the present Greenleaf Block. Hundreds of thirsty animals passed through the city every day suffering from want of water. Under the influence of the humane sentiment, developed by Dr. Angell in his wide world propaganda for the prevention of cruelty to animals, the Quincy Village Improvement society, which flourished from 1884 to 1892, undertook to supply the need. By the remarkable persistence of Mrs. Annie E. Faxon the sum of seven thousand dollars was contributed by the people of Quincy for the purpose. Henry H. Faxon, Miss Nancy Brackett and Charles Francis Adams were large contributors. Mr. Adams also presented the bronze plate with the inscription:

THE FOUNTAIN
1891

By the advice of Mr. Olmstead, the noted landscape artist, Mr. Williams, architect of Boston, if I recall the name correctly, was selected to draw plans and specifications. His design was enthusiastically accepted as it thoroughly fulfilled the requirements of a public fountain for man and beast. It was simple, majestic and artistic and harmoniously adapted to the surroundings. It was built by Gordon McKenzie in his usual thorough manner and the plumbing was done by Patrick Gavin. A well was dug twenty-five feet and at the bottom was placed a large copper tank through which the water is cooled before rising to the drinking faucet.

The fountain was placed in a triangle of the church green in a beautiful setting by the side of a magnificent elm tree, probably a hundred years old, with wide spreading branches. But, alas! to our great consternation and dismay the beautiful old elm was cut down one summer morning before the people were out of bed, and later the church green was carted away to make room for a loop of the Street railway between the fountain and the church. The loop of railway was never built but the relative beauty of the fountain was destroyed forever.

It was hoped that some generous individual or society would decorate the fountain with the statue of some celebrated Quincy citizen. Instead of that however the City Fathers surmounted it with a triangular sign board pointing the way to Weymouth Landing, North Weymouth and Hingham.

Although the automobile has largely supplanted horses and the Board of Health has prohibited the use of a common drinking trough for horses and cattle I do not consider that the fountain has entirely lost its usefulness Every day as I pass by I see numerous people and horses there drinking its cool waters. This will be more in evidence during the hot, dry season

It is said that the position of the fountain interferes with the straightening of the street railway as it enters the square. I would sugest that the street railway be first straightened, as it certainly should be, and then if the position of the fountain proves it to be a nuisance its removal can be considered. I feel assured it will be found not to be in the way.

If necessary it can be moved a few feet to the east and south where it will be out of the way of traffic or it could be removed to some other suitable place where its usefulness would be maintained. If such a change is not feasible and no suitable site can be found then it will be time enough to consider the alleged recommendation of the Planning Board to place it in the cemetery.

I believe a certain amount of sentiment is valuable and necessary in planning and maintaining a City Beautiful.

I thank you for giving me so much valuable space in your esteemed paper.

Yours truly,
J. A. Gordon.

AUTOMOBILE TURNS TURTLE

Palisi Brothers' auto truck turned turtle on Pleasant street near the Wadsworth school Milton, early Wednesday evening, when John and Antonio Palisi, the fruit dealers in East Milton and West Quincy, were on their return trip from Scott Woods. "Tony" was at the wheel when the stearing gear broke and the auto turned completely over, with the bottom up. Ice cream, vegetables and fruit were strewn over the road and furnished extreme enjoyment to the crowd of children, who had gathered.

"Tony" suffered a severe cut on his left arm, but John escaped with no injuries. The truck was turned right side up and taken to a garage.

Of the May, 1915, imports, 60.0 per cent entered free of duty, compared with 62.8 per cent in May, 1914, and 51.6 per cent in May, 1913.

In the eleven months ending with May, 1915, imports aggregated $1,516,474,600 and exports $2,499,592,079, the figures representing in the case of imports a decrease of $219,921,607, or 12.5 per cent, and in the case of exports an increase of $292,084,975, or 13.2 per cent when compared with a like period a year earlier.

The figures for the eleven months ending May 31, 1915, show a favorable balance on merchandise transactions of $983,117,479. As thirteen ports which ordinarily handle 90 per cent of the country's foreign trade show for June an export balance of approximately $60,000,000, it is now known that the excess of exports over imports of merchandise has at this date exceeded $1,000,000,000 surpassing by nearly $400,000,000 the highest record heretofore made.

Inward flow of gold which became pronounced about the commencement of the current year continued in May at an accelerated rate, imports amounting to $31,136,311, against $1,972,411 in May, 1914. Gold exports totaled $1,277,554, compared with $16,835,202 in May 1914. In the eleven months ending May 31, 1915, gold imports totaled $119,227,015, an increase of $56,505,468; while gold exports aggregated $143,402,160, an increase of $79,470,695 over a like period one year ago.

ALMOST RUNS INTO YOUTH

A large lumber truck driven by George Smith, ran into an electric light pole on Brook road, Milton, near the playground, late Wednesday afternoon. The pole broke off, about six feet from the base and fell on the ground. Smith was driving towards Mattapan square, at a moderate when an unindentified boy, riding a bicycle came across his path. He had his choice of running down the boy or smashing into the pole. He took a chance on the latter and received no injury. The truck was but slightly damaged and within a short time continued on its way.

FISH SHOULD REPLACE MEAT

Weekly Market Review

According to the general market reports there is a scarcity of ground fish, with the result that prices are high, comparatively about the same as during the winter months. Large cod are selling at 9 and 12 cents by the hundredweight. There is no scarcity of ground fish for the fishing grounds are alive with fish that have been driven in by the dog fish, but they are a little too far inshore to be readily reached by the fishermen. Coupled with this the weather conditions have been such that many of the fishermen did not go out. It is believed however that by the end of the week that there will be a good supply in the markets and that prices will drop. Swordfish is also a little shy at the present time. Tinker mackerel are coming in fairly well and they are reasonable. The demand for salmon has also fallen off and the prices of this variety of fish is back again to its normal condition. Lobsters continue to be scarce, that is the chicken variety, although the demand continues brisk.

A writer on foods arises to ask the question: "Why don't people eat more fish? It is more nourishing, more tasty and costs much less than land grown flesh." The same writer says: "We buy beefsteak, (those that can afford it) mainly for its protein, although we think we buy it for its flavor, but if the flavor was there without the nutrient values, we'd probably soon seek some other dish."

With the supply of beef being controlled by five men, Armour, Cudahy, Morris, Sulzberber and Swift, no matter what excuses may be offered the fact remains that the price is going up. Still people continue to draw upon the scant pay envelopes and two-fifths of the foodstuffs budget is composed of meats. It is claimed by the same writer that if more fish was used and less meat the average family would save about $60 a year in food expenses.

Right on top of this comes the news that the price of potatoes is now going skyward at almost aeroplane speed and furthermore that the supply this year will not only be high but scarce. There are occasional stories drifting through that in Aroostock county, Maine potatoes are left to rot in the fields because it does not pay to send them to the market, this is of but poor consolation to the consumer, who has to part with his hard earned money for a few "Murphy's."

It was only a few months ago that the newspapers were telling about the great supply of potatoes and on account of their cheapness, advising that potato flour be used as a substitute for wheat flour in the making of bread.

However, just at the present time the householder can laugh at the trusts, if such they may be called, and can eat vegetables which are very plentiful and cheap. The markets at the present time are abounding with vegetables of all kinds, most of them native raised. Strawberries have scarcely ever been as delicious and as cheap as this season. The famous Dighton berries are now in the markets and large handsome berries can be bought at reasonable prices.

Following are some of the prices quoted in the local markets for spring vegetables, etc. Summer squash from 10 to 15 cents each, according to size, new apples 10 cents a quart, cucumbers 5 cents each, peas 40 cents a peck, butter and string beans 5 cents a quart, tomatoes 15 cents a pound for natives and 10 cents a pound for Southern, asparagus 15 cents a bunch.

In addition to this watermellons are selling for 50 cents each, cantilopes three for 25 cents, currants 10 cents a basket, pineapples three for 25 cents, blueberries 20 cents a basket.

Bananas, lemons and oranges remain about the same as last week. They are fairly cheap and plentiful.

PRATT'S BREAD is always in favor because delicious in flavor. Your grocer.

GARDENING OUTFIT.

The Summer Girl Wears Becoming Clothes When She Works.

GINGHAM GOWN AND CAP.

The summer girl is following the example of her English sister and goes in for gardening. Not "any old thing" will do for this business. Milady must be clothed in natty, becoming and up to the minute garments. So gingham gowns and caps are shown in the shops which just meet her requirements. And one outfit is shown here built of striped gingham.

GOLDEN SILENCE.

Twenty Women College Graduates Pit Intelligence Against Immigrants.

Twenty women, good and true, lost one vote for suffrage because, arrayed in college caps and gowns, they visited the United States district court in the old postoffice building in New York to see how foreign born men are transformed into citizens of the United States and to silently protest that American women ought to have the same privilege.

It was on the street in front of the postoffice building, where the women in caps and gowns had been inveigled by various photographers and moving picture men, that they lost the vote. One of the men in the encircling throng was roused to red hot rebellion by the sight. He was shocked beyond endurance. He bubbled and boiled with indignation at the thought of women so demeaning themselves. He would let the red Indians, the Chinese and any old man who wanted to vote before he would those brazen women.

"I was going to vote for them," he said in real angry tones, "but after they have acted in this way—never!"

The women gained two votes upstairs after they reached the courtroom, so they marked the downstairs man off the slate and went home happy after all.

It was a dignified gathering of women that got out of hats and coats down on the main floor of the postoffice building, got into caps and gowns, sent frivolous flowered millinery outside to be held in an automobile under guard and mounted to room 235 of the building to let the citizen makers of the community know that the women were looking for rights as citizens too.

The demonstration was under the direction of the Empire State campaign committee, but it was made by the Collegiate Equal Suffrage league because its members represented women in different professions and businesses as well as the women of so called leisure. Mrs. Charles L. Tiffany, president of the league, led the demonstration. There were two lawyers in the number, one doctor, one teacher of dancing, one photographer, one sculptor and one actress. When Mrs. F. T. Ackerman was asked her profession she answered:

From 150 to 200 men were gathered in the courtroom, would be citizens and their witnesses, and Judge Augustus N. Hand was turning aliens into citizens as fast as the law allowed, and that looked like great speed to women who recalled that their campaign for the vote had been on for the last sixty-eight years, and they were not sure they were on the last lap yet.

Dictates of Fashion.

Foulard seems never to be out of fashion.

All white is quite as fashionable as black.

Bordered chiffons are revived for this summer.

Black and white stripes compose many blouses.

Some navy gabardine suits have tan buttonholes.

Gathered skirts frequently have shirred waist lines.

Many buttons are of pierced gilt or oxidized silver.

Old Zeb White

He Tells How His Career Was Cut Short

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

"Thar was a time in my life when I thought I owned this hull stait of Tennessee and was the biggest man in it," said old Zeb White as he was in a story telling mood one evening. "That was a good many yrs. ago and jest befo' I got married, and perhaps it was a powerful good thing that sunthin' happened to me when it did."

"Waal, when I was a young man I hadn't no sense in my head. I jest reckoned that the critter who could wrestle and jump and fight and yell was a smarter man than the governor. When I was twenty-three years old thar wasn't nuthin' human in this yere Cumberland mount'in which could stand up to me. One day I fell in love, but that didn't settle me down any. Mebbe I was even wuss artet that. I wanted to show off to the gal, yo' know, and so I continered my mad career."

"The girl is the present Mrs. White, I take it?" I said as he waited to fill his pipe anew.

"Jest so, sah," he answered, "and she had mo' hoss sense in her leetle finger than I had in my hull body. She knowed I was making a fule o' myself, and she knowed it would take strong medicine to cure me. She didn't say much one way or t'other, but jest waited till the sign cum right. One day she went down to Spottsville, and when she cum home she sez to me, sez she:

"'Zeb, thar's gwine to be a circus down at Spottsville tomorrer, and I reckon I'd like to go. Will yo' promise to behave yo'rself?'

"'As to how?' I asks.

"'As to raisin' a fuss.'

"'If nobody steps on my heels thar won't be any fuss.'

"We made all our plans for an early start the next day.

"She didn't say no mo' till we wus on the road next forenoon, and then she suddenly turns on me with:

"'Hev yo' ever been licked since yo' becum a fighter?'

"'Never, and thar' ain't a thing as stands on legs as kin do it.'

"'I want to ask a great favor of yo', Zeb,' she sez as we walks along. 'Thar's gwine to be an elephant at that circus.'

"'And what of it?'

"'Nothin', I hope, but bein' he's bigger'n yo' are I didn't know but yo'd git mad and tackle him. Don't do it, Zeb. Don't do it, fur my sake.'

"If she hadn't spoken as she did I'd never thought of tacklin' the critter," said Zeb as he softly rubbed his knee, "but them words sorter stirred me up, and I begun to git mad. We didn't say nuthin' mo' till we got to town, though I was doin' a heap o' thinkin'. We seen the elephant a-walkin' along the street with the purceshun, and my wife sez to me, sez she:

"'Zeb, he don't look to be very hefty on the jump, and he can't wrassle, but he 'pears to be an awful fighter.'

"'Shoo,' sez I, 'but I don't reckon he kin fight fur shucks.'

"Bimeby the parade was over and we went into the circus. I'd kept gittin' madder and madder all the time, and now I was ready to bust. The elephant was chained up in the middle of the tent, and I walked around him and felt dangerous. The missus was watchin' me and purty soon she sez:

"'Zeb, he's as big as a hill, ain't he?'

"'Mebbe he are,' sez I, 'but that's got nuthin' to do with it. The bigness of a man don't count fur much in a fout. I jest consider to reckon I kin make that critter beller fur mercy in about two minits!'

"'But yo' won't try it? Yo' are the awfulest fightin' man on the face of this airth, but yo' won't tackle a critter like that.'

"If she'd kept quiet mebbe my madness would a gone off, but her words hurt me, and all of a sudden I peels off my coat and whoops a whoop. I was usin' both fists on his head when he winds that trunk around my body and lifts me off my feet and begins to play with me. He slams me on the ground and agin cages and wagons, and when he finally lets go they picks me up and carries me out fur a dead man.

"That critter broke purty nigh all the bones in my body, and I'm feelin' the effects to this day. It was two weeks arter the fuss befo' I got things straight in my mind. I kept thinkin' all the time that this yere Cumberland range had slid down on me. One mawnin' I axed the ole woman how it was, and she sorter laughed and said:

"'I jest led yo' up to it, Zeb, kase I wanted to see yo' git some sense in yo'r head. I knowed yo'd git whopped, but I reckoned thar'd be nuff of yo' left to build up ag'in. Yo' ar' the whoppedest, lickedest man in all this world, and 'tain't no use to fool around no mo'. When yo' git up jest let the fightin' bizness alone and 'tend to the cow and horses.'"

"And did that adventure effect a cure?" I asked.

"The biggest kind, sah," he replied. "When I got outdoahs ag'in I wasn't eatin' grass for anybody, but I jest quit yellin' and steppin' high and lookin' fur a fuss, and I hain't had a fout since. No man likes to be whopped, but I'm tellin' yo' that when a man gits so puffed up that he thinks nuthin' on the face of this earth kin down him it can't help but do him good to run up agin an elephant who's bin feelin' mad for a week."

MANY DEATHS IN BIG STORM

Rain and Tornado Sweep From Ohio to Nebraska

TWO SCORE REPORTED DEAD

Heaviest Blows Struck In and Around Cincinnati, Causing Great Destruction of Life and Property—Kentucky May Have Suffered Even More—Heavy Loss In Nebraska

Cincinnati, July 9.—Storms of hurricane proportions which have visited the middle west, from Ohio to Nebraska, and which have centred about Cincinnati, have caused the loss of about forty lives, from such information as has been received, and millions of dollars of property.

Several small towns in the Mississippi valley have been practically wiped out. A similar storm has played havoc at Binghamton, N. Y., where the streeets are flooded so deeply that boats are used, and where many dwelling houses have been isolated.

Of the dead twenty-two are known to have been killed in and about Cincinnati, where the heaviest blows of the tornado were struck. Within an hour of the outbreak of the storm the city was in darkness and street car and telephone service destroyed.

Two steamboats went down, 100 houses were blown to pieces and six church steeples toppled into the streets. In the country outside the city hundreds of trees were uprooted stopping all traffic.

Detailed reports have not been received of storm damage in Kentucky. It is feared that it may be even greater than in Cincinnati, and recovery from the damage will be slower. Louisville is practically isolated, railroad tracks being washed away or rendered impassible, and the Grand Central station wrecked.

Crops have suffered tremendous losses in Nebraska and neighboring states. Calloway, Neb., and Mound City, O., were hard hit by the storm, but little news has been received of the damage done.

At St. Charles, Mo., a city of 11,000 people, 162 buildings were destroyed and three lives lost. Gilmore, with 100 inhabitants, was practically wiped out of existence, one death being reported, and St. Peters, a village of 300 souls, fared little better.

NEW ENGLAND'S SHARE

Railroads, Farms and Shipping Suffer From Tremendous Downpour

Boston, July 9.—Floods, washouts and cloudbursts, resulting from yesterday's tremendous downpour, inundated a large portion of northwestern Massachusetts and southern Vermont and New Hampshire, tying up traffic on the railroads and causing damage running into the thousands.

At the same time a terrific gale off the coast of Massachusetts created havoc with shipping, driving a number of craft ashore and forcing others to take shelter in the nearest ports.

Streams became rivers, and rivers, swollen far beyond their normal proportions, swept away bidges, tore away walls and flooded highways, making passage impossible.

In Boston and vicinity the storm was less severe, but through Arlington, Lexington, Bedford and Concord farms sustained serious damage. So heavy was the rainfall that all records for the entire month of July have already been broken in this vicinity.

CLARK'S WIDOW LOSES

Sued For Damages For Engineer's Death In Railroad Wreck

New York, July 9.—A verdict in favor of the New York, New Haven and Hartford railroad was returned by a jury in the federal court, in the suit of Mrs. G. F. Clark for $25,000 damages as the result of the death of her husband.

Clark was the engineer of the second section of the Boston and Albany express, which was wrecked at a cross-over at Westport, Conn., Oct. 3, 1912. A coroner's investigation resulted in the indictment of several New Haven railroad officials.

The contention of the plaintiff was that the roadbed was defective, causing the wreck. The jury was out forty minutes.

KILLED WIFE'S PARENTS

Jury Concludes That Warner Committed Double Murder

Woodstock, Vt., July 9.—George Warner of Andover was found guilty of murdering his wife's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Wiggin of Andover. The couple were shot to death last November.

The defense was based on a plea of insanity. Warner was alleged to have committed the double murder because of his belief that the Wiggins were responsible for his wife leaving him.

The Dundee Courier has this laconic war note:

"Soldiers can be as laconic as sailors. The late Sir George Groves used to tell of an old soldier who went about begging, bearing a placard: 'Actions, 7; wounds, 9; children, 8; total, 24.'"

MANY FROM QUINCY

reception hall and gazed down from the spacious balcony overlooking the room. The hall which one enters from the main drive, is carved and paneled in oak and was beautifully hung with Carolina vine and mountain laurel which were carried down into a bass at the last where the two were joined in marriage by Rev. Dr. William H. Lyon of the First Unitarian Parish, Brookline. The single ring service was used. Mr. Stone gave his daughter away.

The bridal party came down the branching stairway at the west end, the six ushers forming a white-ribboned aisle, through the crowd to the green sanctuary. The aisle was formed by placing tall, gold, trumpet vases of Miller roses along the way, each vase being joined to the next by white satin ribbon.

At the end stood still larger vases, containing white roses and sprays of white orchids, while at either side were trellised boxes of Caroline vine, behind which stood Mrs. Stone and others of her family on the one hand and Mr. and Mrs. C. Theodore Hardwick, father and mother of the groom, on the other.

The bride wore a gown of white satin and tulle with a real lace veil in long court train, embroidered with orange blossoms, which flower also caught her veil at the forehead. She carried a shower bouquet of orchids and lilies of the valley.

Miss Barbara Stone, younger sister of the bride, led the way as flower girl in a white muslin over pink silk dress and hat, scattering forget-me-nots and Cecil Bruner pink roses from her basket.

Thomas Chandler Hardwick, the groom's brother, was his best man. Mr. Hardwick graduated from Harvard in 1913. While in college he, too won athletic honors being captain of the second football eleven. He is now employed in New York.

HUNTINGTON REED HARDWICK
(Courtesy of Boston Globe)

Four of the six ushers were also Harvard athletes of renown—Walter Trumbull, better known as "Wallie," was acting captain of the Harvard Varsity eleven last Fall and All-American tackle; Fred T. Bradlee was star halfback on the same team. From the baseball team came Russell "Minnie" Frye, pitcher and outfielder, while Morgan Phillips, was a hockey star. All of these are "H" men and classmates of Hardwick's T. Emerson Murphy, another classmate, and Robert Stone, brother of the bride, were the other ushers.

Immediately after the ceremony the couple, assisted by Mr. and Mrs. Stone and Mr. and Mrs. Hardwick, Sr., commenced to receive their friends in front of the beautiful altar of roses, orchids and greenery.

Mrs. Stone was becomingly gowned in flesh-colored pink satin covered with old lace. Mrs. Hardwick wore an exquisite gown of white satin and lace. Mrs. Edwin T. Baldwin, the groom's maternal grandmother, was a member of the receiving line for a short while. She looked the lovely lady she is in a black gown trimmed with white lace and a little white lace cap.

A wedding breakfast was served in the dining room, the breakfast room and on the broad piazzas which overlook lovely terraced garden stretching down to the waves of Buzzard's Bay.

Some risked a wetting by the rain to visit the greenhouses on the estate, which was well worth the risk, while others danced in the living room, music being rendered by musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Outside of the main hall, the decorations were simple but effective. There were lilies of the valley, white orchids and white roses on the serving tables, pink Countess Spencer sweet peas in vases in the library and blue delphinian (larksjur) in the living room. Over the mantel it was heavily banked. In the chambers were huge bunches of pink roses and sweet peas.

The gifts were displayed in a room on the third story. There were many and very beautiful ones.

Among the prominent guests were Ex-Gov and Mrs. Eugene N. Foss, Percy Haughton, Harvard's football and baseball coach and Mrs. Haughton, ex-Congressman and Mrs. Samuel W. McCall and Mr. and Mrs. Clarence W. Barron of Boston.

Guests from Quincy were: Mr. and Mrs. Eben W. Sheppard, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Drake, Mr. and Mrs. Theophilus King, Mr and Mrs. George E. Pfaffmann, Fred B. Rice, Mr. and Mrs. William H. Doble, Mr. and Mrs. Henry M. Faxon, Hon. Russell A. Sears and Mrs. Sears, Dr. and Mrs. E. E. Davis, Marguerite Davis, Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Angier, Mr. and Mrs. Carl Lane, Mr. and Mrs. William R. PUBLIC LIBRARY NOTES.

Just at present the Children's Room of the Library is a pleasant place to visit; as the spirit of vacation is evidenced by the happy faces of the boys and girls sitting at the tables. They are now much interested in the "Vacation Reading," which is a carefully selected list of two hundred books. Those centering the little contest are expected to read at least five of the list and as many more as possible. A careful record is kept of books read by each person, and at the end of the vacation season the names of those who have read the required number will be put upon the "Roll of Honor."

The children not only enjoy the books which they take for home reading, but spend many pleasant hours at the Library, enjoying the pictures, picture books, and puzzles. The puzzles are an innovation which seems most successful, as they are not only a source of pleasure, but carry out the spirit of the present day of law and order and quiet amusement. A number of these games have already been donated and their mission is certainly a happy one.

SPORTING COMMENT

It is highly probable unless there is a change of front on the part of the managers of the Panama-Pacific Exposition that no Eastern athletics will compete in the national championship. Those who qualified at the recent tryouts will refuse to go because $150 is the largest amount appropriated, not enough for them to make the trip. It was formerly agreed that the A. A. U. would receive $15,000 from the managers, but this sum has been cut in half. The action in a sense confirms the rumors which have come East that the Eposition is not paying expenses.

The feature attraction of the meet, and one that is the talk of the athletic world today, is the scheduled three-cornered match race between Ted Meredith of the Meadowbrook Club of Philadelphia, Leroy Campbell of Chicago University, and Joseph T. Higgins of the Irish-American A. A. of Boston.

Campbell is the Western Conference champion. Meredith the world's record holder and Intercollegiate double winner of the quarter and half-mile runs, while Higgins won the half-mile at the New England Intercollegiate and tryouts at the Harvard Stadium. This race is sure to test the speed of the Chicaggo runner, who is reported to have run wonderful time in meets in that vicinity. Meredith will no doubt start a favorite, but Higgins and Campbell will make the Penn flyer show all he possesses in order to break the tape a winner.

The St. Louis Browns develop umpires instead of players. Bill Dineen, Bob Wallace and Harry Howell make up their trio. All three have made good so far.

Torrents of rain drenched the golfers in the Metropolitan open title matches at Clifton, S. I. Thursday. Walter C. Hagen, Rochester, N. Y., last year's open champion is leading the first half of the course with 145. His 70, the second trip, establishes a new competitive record for the links. Mike Brady of Wollaston is not entered.

James J. Corbett has retired from the stage to develop Tom Cowler, his young heavyweight. The course is about to commence.

Jess Willard, side stepped the theatre stage but is now touring New Hampshire with a Wild West show. At Windsor he stole all the crowd from Pres. Wilson.

TORPEDOED BY BRITISH CRAFT

Petrograd's Report of Sinking of German Cruiser

ITALIAN NAVY SUFFERS LOSS

Austrian Submarine Destroys Cruiser Amalfi In the Adriatic—German Undersea Boat Reported Sunk by French Warship—Russians Halt Teutons by Arrival of New Regiments and Fresh Supply of Munitions—German Trenches Taken by French In Desperate Bayonet Charge

London, July 9.—The British admiralty stated that it was officially announced at Petrograd that the submarine which made a successful attack on a German warship in the Baltic was a British boat.

The statement of the British admiralty contained the first public announcement intimating that British submarines were operating in the Baltic sea. It is presumed that the undersea boat passed through the Cattegat from the North sea to the Baltic sea and then traveled eastward for 200 miles to Danzig, where the warship was attacked. The distance from an English port to Danzig is about 900 miles.

The Russian official communication announcing that a German warship had been sunk by a submarine said that the battleship was steaming at the head of a German squadron at the entrance to Danzig bay July 2, when she was blown up by two torpedoes fired by a submarine.

Italy Loses a Warship

The Italian armored cruiser Amalfi was torpedoed and sunk by an Austrian submarine in the Adriatic. Official announcement of the destruction of the warship was made by the Italian ministry of marine. The Amalfi carried 684 men, almost all of whom were saved.

The Amalfi was a vessel of 9958 tons, was 426.5 feet long and was capable of making 22.5 knots. She had an 8-inch armor belt amidships and a 3-inch belt fore and aft. The main turrets were protected by an 8-inch belt and the secondary turrets by a 7-inch belt.

Because of the strength of her armor and armament she was regarded by some authorities as a battleship. She carried four 10-inch guns, eight 7.5-inch, sixteen 14-pounders and two 12-pounders. The ship was equipped with three torpedo tubes.

This is the second allied warship to fall a victim to an Austrian underwater craft, the French cruiser Leon Gambetta having, earlier in the war, been caught in the Ionian sea.

As an offset, it is claimed that a French warship has sunk a German submarine in the channel.

All the belligerent powers are rapidly building submarines, and it is reported that Austria has nine at Pola alone. Thus the Italian ships will run serious risks in moving about the waters of the Adriatic, which are well suited for these craft.

Russians Are Strengthened

Fresh supplies of ammunition for the grand duke's armies have halted the Austro-German drive on Warsaw and von Linsingen's eastward sweep through Galicia, according to a report from Petrograd.

The Russians south of Lublin not only have been strengthened by the arrival of new regiments, but have received trainloads of shells. The production of war munitions in the past fortnight has speeded up since the committee on army supplies conferred with leading manufacturers. Within a few weeks, Russian officials declare, the Slav armies will be prepared to resume the offensive on all fronts.

The official statement emphasizes the fact that Russian shell fire halted Mackensen's advance between the Bug and the Vistula. In several sectors along this front the Slavs took the offensive, capturing 2000 prisoners in the fighting around Krasnik.

The Austrians make the admission that before superior Russian forces they have withdrawn to the hills to the north of Krasnik.

Further heavy fighting must occur in this region, but the Russian military writers express confidence that any effort of the German allies to deliver a lightning blow has been discounted.

While this is going on, it is believed that there is little probability of the Germans detaching any part of their eastern armies for a renewed offensive in the west, and that if such a move is made it must be undertaken by fresh troops.

Germans Annihilated

In a bloody bayonet struggle north of the Souchez railway station, a French battalion slaughtered the defenders of a German trench and occupied the earthworks, permitting an approach to the village itself. Paris reports that dispatches from the front reported that a single Tenton soldier escaped alive.

All along the region north of the Bethune-Arras road, Germans and French are locked in a fierce infantry struggle. The battle followed a heavy bombardment from batteries on both sides.

Both sides are bringing up reinforcements around the German wedge at St. Mihiel. The enemy is making desperate attempts to rush the French positions at the tip of the salient. The French official communique reported "lively fighting in the entire region between the Meuse and the Mostelle."

GERMANY JOCKYING

Scraps of Proposed Note Are Not Acceptable to United States

President Wilson is believed to have told Germany he objected to unofficial negotiations with the Berlin foreign office, as a preliminary to completion of the kaiser's formal note to the United States.

Assuming this theory's correctness, in is doubted if a settlement between the United States and Germany will come as soon as had been supposed.

The difficulty is understood to be that the German foreign office is submitting to Ambassador Gerard successive scraps of its proposed note and asking that the president comment on them separately. There is the possibility, it is pointed out, that a fragment which looked innocent enough might, when all were assembled, constitute a surrender by the United States of fundamental principles she has been contending for.

TWO AMERICANS KILLED

Were on Anglo-Californian When Sunk by German Submarine

Two Americans were killed when a German submarine shelled the Allan liner Anglo-Californian, July 4, Consul Skinner informed the American state department from London.

Eight members of her crew and her captain were killed and eight were wounded.

JURY HEARS STORY OF THAW'S CAREER

Prisoner Is Under Cross Examination For Seven Hours

New York, July 9.—The jury which is to pass on the sanity of Harry K. Thaw had an opportunity to study him for seven hours under the cross examination of attorneys for the state, who are trying to prove that he is suffering from paranoia and should be sent back to Matteawan insane asylum.

Every incident of his life—from his school days to his marriage to Evelyn Nesbit, from the slaying of Stanford White to his trials for murder and his life in Matteawan—was thrust before him in an effort to let the jury observe his mental attitude.

Briefly he answered the first questions about his name and age, which he gave as 44 years, but ten minutes later, when asked a simple question, his answer rambled on for several minutes and covered, as the typewritten transcript of the court stenographer's notes showed later, more than two solid pages of the ordinary typewritten paper.

FINE POINT INVOLVED

May Be No Law For Prosecuting War Recruiting Agents

Washington, July 9.—Although it was understood the government would not let technicalities prevent prosecution of agents who have gathered army recruits in this country for belligerent governments, the justice department is said to be looking carefully into the latest technicality raised by the British embassy. It is tacitly admitted that a fine point is involved.

From the embassy's comments it was taken for granted that the five British officers indicted in San Francisco would say they did not actually engage anybody to go to Europe to fight. They simply furnished various individuals with money for the trip and left it to them to find their way into the army after their arrival.

Montenegrin officials involved in trouble with the federal authorities on the same account are understood to plan a similar defense.

Regardless of all this controversy, justice department officials say they are centering their attack on the recruiting officers—not the recruits.

TRAGEDY ON COUNTY FARM

Employe Charged With Killing Head of the Institution

Dover, N. H., July 9.—Edward A. Willand, superintendent of the Strafford county farm, was shot twice in the abdomen and died from the wounds. Rhody Merchant, a fireman in the lighting plant connected with the farm, was arrested, charged with the shooting.

It is alleged that Merchant got into an altercation with Walter Whitehouse, the engineer. Willand separated the two men and led Merchant into the latter's room, when, it is alleged, the fireman snatched a revolver from beneath his pillow and fired three shots at Willand.

Bryan Favors Woman Suffrage

San Francisco, July 9.—William J. Bryan declared in favor of universal suffrage here and told an audience of women that he had not espoused their cause sooner because he had been busy with other subjects.

BOY IS SUSPECTED OF STEALING GEMS

Believed to Have Worked With Two Professionals

Philadelphia, July 9.—Uncut diamonds and other precious stones valued at $10,000 were stolen from the jewelry store of E. J. Hertz, in the central shopping district.

The theft took place during the rush hour, and is believed to have been committed by a 7-year-old boy, who acted as a tool for professional gem thieves.

Hertz told the detectives that two women, two men and a small boy came into his store and asked to see some diamonds and sapphires. While the men and women were looking at the stones, he said, the boy, who carried an umbrella, ran back and forth behind the counter.

The boy disappeared shortly before the others left, and an hour later a box containing the gems was found to be missing.

WALSH'S WATERLOO

Investigator Says He Met It When He Struck New York

St. Louis, July 9.—Chairman Walsh of the federal industrial relations commission, in an address here, held himself personally responsible for all the criticism which has been directed against the commission. "My duty was to investigate the truth, not smother it, and I did my duty," he said.

Adverse criticism, Walsh said, did not really appear until the commission reached New York. The commission discovered, he said, that 70 percent of the labor employed in basic industries was controlled on Manhattan island.

"We wished to ascertain," he said, "whether these employers took as much thought of human machinery as they did of cost reports and inanimate machinery. It was there I met my editorial Waterloo."

THIRD DEATH RECORDED

Husband and Wife Succumb to Effects of Ptomaine Poisoning

Westerly, R. I., July 9.—Three deaths from ptomaine poisoning, said to have resulted from eating cocoanut custard pie at a restaurant a few days ago, have been reported.

Mrs. Francis T. Brightman died a few hours after the death of her husband from the same cause.

The first death, that of Timothy Sullivan, was reported Tuesday. Forty-nine persons, all of whom are said to have eaten at the restaurant, are ill from ptomaine poisoning.

Marriage Quickly Follows Divorce

New York, July 9.—Mrs. Grace B. Guggenheim, who was granted a final divorce Wednesday from M. R. Guggenheim, was married yesterday to Norton E. Shellenburg.

Bomb Kills British Flyer

London, July 9.—Squadron Commander Soames of the royal flying corps was killed by the explosion of a bomb with which he was experimenting.

AMUSEMENTS

BOSTON THEATRE.

Mary Miles Minter, the famous "Virgie" of Edward Peple's "The Littlest Rebel," and one of the cleverest and most delightful child actresses upon the American stage, will be the headline attraction at the Boston Theatre, New England's roomy, airy, refreshing motion picture palace de luxe, the week of July 12th, in a dramatization of Charles K. Harris great ballad, "Always In The Way." The beautiful story of the motherless child who is always in the way, played by little Miss Minter and a superb all-star cast, appeals to every man, woman and child, and the story of this delightful romance is entirely different from anything previously filmed in the world of motion pictures. Caroline B. Nichols and the Fadettes, the greatest, and most expensive musical attraction ever engaged for a picture palace, will continue their wondrously popular daily promenade concerts, with entirely new selections, and there will of course be new Charlie Chaplin and Mary Pickford comedies, in addition to the tenth installment of "The Goddess." This great serial from the pen of Gouverneur Morris' has all America talking and guessing what is going to happen next. There will be a new scenic picture, and numerous other features as yet unannounced.

CASTLE SQUARE THEATRE.

"The Blue Mouse," the three-act farce adopted from the German version by Clyde Fitch, will be the next offering at the Castle Square Theatre next week by the Craig Players. The plot of the piece is screamingly funny. Paulette Divine, known as the Blue Mouse, is engaged by an ambitious young man to pose as his wife and flirt with his amorous old employer. Then the aspirant youth hopes to catch his supposed wife in a compromising situation with his employer and as a reward of his silence he will ask to be made Division Superintendent of the Railroad. Of course the real wife suspects, also the wife of the victim of this conspiracy. Everybody who means anything in the plot meet at an auction the Blue Mouse has periodically at her apartments. There is the usual mistaken identity comedy and two men are forced to leave covered with the parlor rugs when their wives enter unexpectedly. Miss Eleanor Gordon has been retained for a second week and she will play the title role. William F. Carleton, Kate Ryan, Mrs. George Hibbard, Betty Barnicoat, Theodore Tricbus and the other favorites of the company will be seen.

MAJESTIC THEATRE.

By presenting for the coming week the full strength of the Lonergan Players in Wm. C. DeMille's play, "The Woman," which was seen three seasons ago at the Park Theatre, the management of this excellent stock company at the Majestic Theatre, Boston, hopes to prove that the popularity achieved this season does not rest solely upon the success attained through co-operation with an established star, but rather upon the merits of individual members of the company.

Jim Blake, Congressman from Illinois, and a typical political boss, is the leader of a movement to push a crooked bill through Congress. Opposed to him is Mathew Standish, a young Congressman, who leads the so-called insurgent members.

So strong has Standish become in the House that it is evident some desperate means must be taken or the bill will fail. Bribery and intimidation are unavailing, and it is finally decided that the only way to insure the passage of the measure is to discredit Standish in the eyes of his followers.

By the help of detectives they discover in his early life an affair with a woman which can be made to look dishonorable. All that is needed is the name of the woman. Standish is trapped into warning the woman over the telephone, and Blake and his followers atempt to learn her identity through Wanda Kelley, the telephone operator, in the hotel in which they all live. But they do not know the little telephone operator. How she battles with the whole "gang," refuses their bribes and laughs at their threats, solely because she is fighting for another woman and that woman's good name, makes the play.

B. F. KEITH'S THEATRE.

A stupendous quardruple-feature vaudeville bill, with half a dozen big star attractions, will be offered at B. F. Keith's Theatre the week of July 12th. Belle Blanche the late star of George M. Cohan's "Hello, Broadway," and the famous prima donna impersonator, will make his first vaudeville appearance in two years. "The Meistersingers," in their new scenic spectacle, "The Flag Station," with the new musical programme, new solos and soloists, and the wonderful mechanical effect showing the flight of the White Mountain Express, will be seen for the second week, and another great feature will be Ben Welch, the world's greatest Hebrew comedian and monologist, direct from a tour of the entire United States at the head of his own company. Mr. Welch brings an entirely new repertoire of original stories, and will also introduce some of his remarkable Italian character impersonations. Another big spectacular feature of the week will be offered by Horelik's Great Gypsy Family, a remarkable organization of native dancers, singers and musicians, who introduce pastimes in the forest and gypsy camp, with complete scenic effects. Another big star will be Julie Ring and her company in the one-act oddity, "Twice A Week."

PARAGON PARK.

In all its history Paragon Park at Nantasket has never been so popular as this season and every afternoon and evening finds the immense Palm Garden, seating 3000, taxed to its utmost capacity. From 6.30 to 8.30 and from 9 to 11.45 every evening Cabaret and Dansants alternate in keeping the guests entertained. The Cabaret comprises the Broadway Musical Revue with twenty-five pretty girls taking part, and beginning tomorrow there will be in adition to this Revue as part of the Cabaret the Mazanette Trio of Singers, direct from Shanley's Restaurant in New York; those two popular Cabaret entertainers. Art Spaulding and Mlle. Camilla and Alice De Garmo, the sensational trapeze performer.

A special feature the coming week in the free open air circus will be the Great Zech Trio of acrobats in marvelous feats of strength and agility. Always popular with the patrons is the exhibition of Alber's 8 trained polar bears while the young folks take great pleasure in a visit to the monkey mansion with its many rare simian specimens from all parts of the world.

The hourly band concerts by Mace Gay's military band outside the Palm Garden, the Italian illumination on Sunday nights and the fireworks displays on Wednesday and Saturday nights are other free features. The last boat back to Boston leaves the wharf at Nantasket Beach at 10.45.

THE POPS.

No announcement in the way of summer amusements has had a warmer welcome than that issued by the management of the Pops at Symphony Hall that these concerts would be continued for a supplementary season of two weeks ending Saturday, July 17th. Since the establishment of these popular concerts no season has been so successful as the present. The audiences has been uniformly larger than ever before and the house on Wednesday night, June 30. "Request Night," broke all records in point of attendance. It was in response to a very general desire on the part of the public that is was decided to continue the concerts for two weeks. This year, for the first time, it was possible to keep the orchestra together after July 4th. During the present week Clement Lenom is acting as conductor and his programmes show the characteristic attractiveness which has always marked them.

Next week, which will be absolutely the final week of the Pop season, Ernest Schmidt, assistant conductor of the Symphony orchestra, will have charge of the concerts and he will begin his week with a Wagner programme which he made so popular earlier in the season.

TYPHOID FEVER IN THE UNITED STATES

An editorial in the Journal of the American Medical Association, April 17th, says in part, "It is evident that Typhoid Fever is on the way to become a relatively rare disease in many parts of the United States. There are two main reasons for this. First, there are now comparatively few large cities in which the public water supply is likely to contain Typhoid Bacteria. Second, the increase in the practice of pasteurization has resulted in a dimunition in the amount of milk borne typhoid."

The Elm Farm Milk Company complying with the general demand by by the Medical Profession and Sanitarians, were one of the first to scientifically pasteurize their milk. This milk is offered at the same price that rules for ordinary milk.

This process is the only one that absolutely guarantees the safety of milk against all of the infectious diseases.

A Romance of the Bear Tooth Range

By HAMLIN GARLAND

CHAPTER XVIII.

The Private Car.

ONCE, in the midst of a lame pursuit of other topics, the elder Norcross again fixed his eyes on Berea, saying, "I wish my girls had your weight and color." He paused a moment, then resumed with weary inflection: "Mrs. Norcross has always been delicate, and all her children—even her son—take after her. I've maintained a private and very expensive hospital for nearly thirty years."

This regretful note in his father's voice gave Wayland confidence. His spirits rose.

"Come, let's adjourn to the parlor and talk things over at our ease."

They all followed him, and after showing the mother and daughter to their seats near a window, he drew his father into a corner, and in rapid undertone related the story of his first meeting with Berrie, of his trouble with young Belden, of his camping trip, minutely describing the encounter on the mountainside and ended by saying, with manly directness: "I would be up there in the mountains in a box if Berrie had not intervened. She's a noble girl, father, and is foolish enough to like me, and I'm going to marry her and try to make her happy."

The old lumberman, who had listened intently all through this impassioned story, displayed no sign of surprise at its closing declaration, but his eyes explored his son's soul with calm abstraction. "Send her over to me," he said at last. "Marriage is a serious matter. I want to talk with her—alone."

Wayland went back to the women with an air of victory. "He wants to see you, Berrie. He's mellowing. Don't be afraid of him."

She might have resented the father's lack of gallantry, but she did not. On the contrary, she rose and walked resolutely over to where he sat, quite ready to defend herself. He did not rise to meet her, but she did not count that against him, for there was nothing essentially rude in his manner. He was merely her elder and inert.

"Sit down," he said, not unkindly. "I want to have you tell me about my son. He has been telling me all about you. Now, let's have your side of the story."

She took a seat and faced him with eyes as steady as his own. "Where shall I begin?" she bluntly challenged.

"He wants to marry you. Now, it seems to me that seven weeks is very short acquaintance for a decision like that. Are you sure you want him?"

"Yes, sir; I am." Her answer was most decided.

His voice was slightly cynical as he went on. "But you were tolerably sure about that other fellow—that rancher with the fancy name—weren't you?" She flushed at this, but waited for him to go on. "Don't you think it possible that your fancy for Wayland is also temporary?"

"No, sir!" she bravely declared. "I never felt toward any one the way I do toward Wayland. He's different. I shall never change toward him."

Her tone, her expression of eyes stopped this line of inquiry. He took up another. "Now, my dear young lady, I am a business man as well as a father, and the marriage of my son is a weighty matter. He is my main dependence. I am hoping to have him take up and carry on my business. To be quite candid, I didn't expect him to select his wife from a Colorado ranch. I considered him out of the danger zone. I have always understood that women were scarce in the mountains. Now don't misunderstand me. I'm not one of those fools who are always trying to marry their sons and daughters into the ranks of the idle rich. I don't care a hang about social position, and I've got money enough for my son and my son's wife. But he's all the boy I have, and I don't want him to make a mistake."

"Neither do I," she answered simply, her eyes suffused with tears. "If I thought he would be sorry"—

He interrupted again. "Oh, you can't tell that now! Any marriage is a risk. I don't say he's making a mistake in selecting you. You may be just the woman he needs. Only I want to be consulted. I want to know more about you. He tells me you have taken an active part in the management of the ranch and the forest. Is that true?"

"I've always worked with my father—yes, sir."

"You like that kind of life?"

"I don't know much about any other kind. Yes, I like it. But I've had enough of it. I'm willing to change."

"Well, how about city life—housekeeping and all that?"

"So long as I am with Wayland I shan't mind what I do or where I live."

"At the same time you figure he's going to have a large income, I suppose? He's told you of his rich father, hasn't he?"

Berrie's tone was a shade resentful of his insinuation. "He has never said much about his family one way or another. He only said you wanted him to go into business in Chicago and that he wanted to do something else. Of course I could see by his ways and the clothes he wore that he'd been brought up in what we'd call luxury, but we never inquired into his affairs."

"And you didn't care?"

"Well, not that exactly. But money don't count for as much with us in the valley as it does in the east. Wayland seemed so kind of sick and lonesome, and I felt sorry for him the first time I saw him. I felt like mothering him. And then his way of talking, of looking at things, was so new and beautiful to me I couldn't help caring for him. I had never met any one like him. I thought he was a 'lunger'"—

"A consumptive. That is, I did at first. And it bothered me. It seemed terrible that any one so fine should be condemned like that, and so I did all I could to help him, to make him happy. I thought he hadn't long to live. Everything he said and did was wonderful to me, like poetry and music. And then when he began to grow stronger and I saw that he was going to get well, and Cliff went on the rampage and showed the yellow streak and I gave him back his ring—I didn't know even then how much Wayland meant to me. But on our trip over the range I understood. He meant everything to me. He made Cliff seem like a savage, and I wanted him to know it. I'm not ashamed of loving him. I want to make him happy, and if he wishes me to be his wife I'll go anywhere he says—only I think he should stay out here till he gets entirely well."

The old man's eyes softened during her plea, and at its close a slight smile moved the corners of his mouth. "You've thought it all out, I see. Your mind is clear and your conscience easy. Well, I like your spirit. I guess he's right. The decision is up to you. But if he takes you and stays in Colorado he can't expect me to share the profits of my business with him, can he? He'll have to make his own way." He rose and held out his hand. "However, I'm persuaded he's in good hands."

She took his hand, not knowing just what to reply. He examined her fingers with intent gaze.

"I didn't know any woman could have such a grip." He thoughtfully took her biceps in his left hand. "You are magnificent." Then in ironical protest he added: "Good God, no! I can't have you come into my family. You'd make caricatures of my wife and daughters. Are all the girls out in the valley like you?"

She laughed. "No. Most of them pride themselves on not being horsewomen. Mighty few of 'em ever ride a horse. I'm a kind of a tomboy to them."

"I'm sorry to hear that. It's the same old story. I suppose they'd all like to live in the city and wear low necked gowns and high heeled shoes. No, I can't consent to your marriage with my son. I must save you from corruption. Go back to the ranch. I can see already signs of your deterioration. Except for your color and that grip you look like upper Broadway."

She flushed redly, conscious of her new corset, her silk stockings and her pinching shoes. "It's all on the outside," she declared. "Under this toggery I'm the same old trailer. It don't take long to get rid of these things. I'm just playing a part today—for you."

He smiled and dropped her hand. "No, no. You've said goodby to the cinch. I can see that. You're on the road to opera boxes and limousines. What is your plan? What would you advise Wayland to do if you knew I was hard against his marrying you? Come, now, I can see you're a clear sighted individual. What can he do to earn a living? How will you live without my aid? Have you figured on these things?"

"Yes. I'm going to ask my father to buy a ranch near here, where mother can have more of the comforts of life, and where we can all live together till Wayland is able to stand city life again. Then, if you want him to go east, I will go with him."

They had moved slowly back toward the others, and as Wayland came to meet them Norcross said, with dry humor: "I admire your lady of the cinch hand. She seems to be a person of singular good nature and most uncommon shrewd"—

"Here! Here!" A look of pain covered the father's face. "That's the fist she put in the press."

They all laughed, and then he gravely resumed: "I say I admire her, but it's a shame to ask such a girl to marry an invalid like you. Furthermore, I won't have her taken east. She'd bleach out and lose that grip in a year. I won't have her contaminated by the city." He mused deeply while looking at his son. "Would life on a wheat ranch, accessible to this hotel by motorcar, be endurable to you?"

"You mean with Berea?"

"If she'll go. Mind you, I don't advise her to do it," he added, interrupting his son's outcry. "I think she's taking all the chances." He turned to Mrs. McFarlane. "I'm old fashioned in my notions of marriage, Mrs. McFarlane. I grew up when women were helpmates, such as, I judge, you've been. Of course it's all guesswork to me at the moment, but I have an impression that my son has fallen into an unusual run of luck. As I understand it, you're all out for a pleasure trip. Now, my private car is over in the yards, and I suggest you all come along with me to California"—

"Governor, you're a wonder!" exclaimed Wayland.

"That'll give us time to get better acquainted, and if we all like one another just as well when we get back—well, we'll buy the best farm in the North Platte, and"—

"It's a cinch we get that ranch!" interrupted Wayland, with a triumphant glance at Berea.

"Don't be so sure of it," replied the lumberman. "A private car, like a yacht, is a terrible test of friendship." But his warning held no terrors for the young lovers. They had entered upon certainties.

THE END.

ATTRACTIVE LINGERIE GOWN.

Futuristic lace motifs are sprinkled thickly over net, which is also barred with insertion and edged with lace about the hem of the skirt. The blouse ends in a wide belt, with futuristic blue flowers showing bravely upon it. The collar and cuffs are of lace and the blouse of net, the entire costume worn over a pink satin princess slip.

CHIC TENNIS COSTUME.

The athletic girl is well provided for in the way of costumes this season. Shown here is a chic tennis costume of cream eponge, built very simply, with moderately full skirt, buttoned and pocketed in approved fashion, as is the blouse, which is also yoked. A red patent leather belt and a red silk stock lend color to the costume.

Perfume.

When you use perfume and call it such, do you think how the name came about? It means, in Latin, "from smoke," and the name proves that the first perfumes were only aromatic woods or gums that scented the air when burned.

Housewife's Timely Tips

A Meatless Diet.

Often for dietary reasons as well as expense the meat allowance must be cut down.

Substitutes which lend variety and possess the same energy producing qualities are the following: Whole wheat flour, dried beans, peas, lentils, peanuts, walnuts, pecans, peanut butter, oatmeal, cracked wheat, whole wheat, cheese, eggs, butter, cream, olive oil, milk, macaroni and rice. These are a few of the many foods which, singly or in combination, make a wholesome diet.

Dried fruits and nuts are valuable foods as well as the fresh fruits, which are indispensable in a well balanced diet.

Whole wheat, if soaked overnight, then cooked long and slowly, makes, with thin cream or rich milk, a meal of itself. Beans, peas and lentils should be soaked, then cooked in water and softened by a pinch of soda.

Rice Croquettes With Grated Cheese.—Cook a cupful of rice in two and a half cupfuls of milk, with a teaspoonful of salt, until tender, adding more milk if needed. Season with two tablespoonfuls of butter, a dash of paprika and mix with two beaten egg yolks, then chill. When cold and stiffened mold into cones, balls or cylinder forms, dip in crumbs, then in egg white and in crumbs again. Brown in hot fat and serve with grated cheese.

Cheese Sauce.—Take three tablespoonfuls of butter, add four of flour when the butter is bubbling hot, mix well, add a half teaspoonful of salt, a few dashes of paprika, one and a half cupfuls of milk and a cupful of chopped cheese. Cook the sauce well before adding the cheese and serve as soon as it is melted.

Cheese Savory.—Prepare some thin slices of toast. Cover each slice with one-half inch pieces of good flavored cheese. Lay in a baking pan and place an egg carefully in the center of each piece. Bake in a hot oven until the eggs are set. Season with salt and a dash of paprika on each.

Parsnip Croquettes.—These are especially well liked by those who are fond of parsnips. Cut the parsnips in halves and cook until tender, remove the skins and any tough portion and mash until perfectly smooth, and butter, pepper, salt and set aside to cool. When cool enough to handle mold into balls, dip in crumbs and egg, then crumbs again and fry a deep brown. Use as a garnish for a roast.

Indian Loaf Cake.

Mix a teacupful of powdered white sugar with a quart of rich milk and cut up in the milk two ounces of butter, adding a saltspoonful of salt. Put this mixture into a covered pan or skillet and set it on the fire till it is scalding hot. Then take it off and scald with it as much yellow Indian meal (previously sifted) as will make it of the consistency of thick boiled mush. Beat the whole very hard for a quarter of an hour and then set it away to cool. While it is cooling beat three eggs very light and stir them gradually into the mixture when it is about as warm as new milk. Add a teacupful of good strong yeast or one compressed yeast cake dissolved in the liquid and beat the whole another quarter of an hour, for much of the goodness of this cake depends on its being long and well beaten. Then have ready a tin mold or pan with a pipe in the center. It must be well buttered, as Indian meal is apt to stick. Put in the mixture and set in a warm place to rise for about four hours. Then bake it two hours in a moderate oven. When done turn it out with the broad surface downward and send to the table hot and whole. Cut into slices and eat with butter.

Drop Hermits.

Cream one-half cupful of butter; add one and one-half cupfuls of brown sugar and cream; now add two eggs; beat in one at a time until very light; sift three and one-half cupfuls of bread flour with two heaping teaspoonfuls of baking powder and one-half teaspoonful of soda (scant) several times; alternate with one and one-half cupfuls of milk to first mixture. Flour two cupfuls of raisins (the seedless are best). Beat all together five minutes and drop on flat buttered biscuit tins and bake in hot oven until a nice brown. If butter is lightly salted put in a pinch of salt.

Russian Sauce.

Yolks of two eggs mixed with one teaspoonful of dry mustard, same amount of sugar and salt and a dash of cayenne pepper. When this is thoroughly mixed add one-half cupful of olive oil and either lemon juice or vinegar to taste. To this may be added one teaspoonful of chopped pimento and two of chili sauce. In making rub the inside of bowl with garlic or onion before making the dressing.

Eggs Virginia.

Butter a deep baking dish. Break in as many eggs as needed, allowing two for each person to be served. Season lightly with salt, cover with a thick layer of coarse breadcrumbs, dot thickly with tiny squares of bacon, sprinkle with a little finely minced parsley, add a light layer of the breadcrumbs, season very lightly with salt, dot with more bacon and bake in a moderate oven for ten minutes.

RAIN CAUSES MUCH DAMAGE

Gutters Overflow Into Streets

Just as Commissioner Brown had fixed up the damage done to the streets by the heavy rains early in the week along comes another heavy storm and does a lot more damage The storm of Thursday which at times was very heavy, washed hilly streets badly. Gutters on the sides of streets and drains were inadequate to take care of the large volume of water. Gutters were overloaded sending the water into the streets which rushed along the sand and loose gravel on the streets and was carried into drains filling them up.

The Telephone company had quite a number of its lines put out of commission by the wind in the afternoon but immediately sent out trouble men so that there was but little interruption in the service.

The worst damage the Telephone company suffered was having one of its trunk cables between Quincy and Boston put out of commission by water getting into the conduits. A gang of men was kept at work all night on the cable and it was in working order this morning.

COURT DISMISSES BIG RAILROAD SUIT

Stockholders Wanted $102,000,000 From New Haven

Boston, July 9.—The full bench of the supreme court dismissed the $102,000,000 restitution suit brought against the New Haven railroad and certain of its former directors.

The suit was filed by Sherman L. Whipple, as counsel for certain New Haven stockholders. Some of the defendant directors, as named in the bill, were William Rockefeller, Lewis C. Ledyard, R. W. Taft, C. S. Mellen, former president of the New Haven; Alexander Cochran and J. P. Morgan.

Chief Justice Rugg wrote the opinion, which says in part:

"A stockholder of a corporation has no personal right of action against directors who have defrauded it and thus affected the value of his stock. Such wrongs are against the corporation itself, and except through that have no relation to the stockholder."

SAYS HOLT SHOT SELF

Ryan's Story Disagrees With That of Other Prison Officials

New York, July 9.—Jeremiah Ryan, who was Frank Holt's (Erich Muenter's) guard in the Mineola jail when Holt killed himself, refuses to subscribe to the account of the circumstances of Holt's death which is put forward by District Attorney Smith, Coroner Jones and Warden Hults.

Ryan says very emphatically that he believes Holt shot himself; that he will never believe Holt committed suicide by plunging head first from the roof of the cell block.

Buying "on tick" is not new slang, but goes back to the seventeenth century. It is stated in a letter dated 1661, "The Mermaid tavern is lately broke, our ticks amounting to £1,500." And in another document a little later it is said. "Every one runs upon tick."

"MINNEHAHA" REACHES PORT

(By United Press)

Halifax, July 9—The steamer "Minnehaha" arrived at Queenstown here today, shortly before 11 o'clock. The vessel was not allowed to dock and no one from the shore was permitted to go aboard the ship. Capt. Clarett will make no statement before noon.

BRIEFS

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Kenyon and daughter of Wollaston have concluded a visit with Mr. and Mrs. Frank E. Sweet of Bridgewater.

The Boy Scouts of Memorial church are to have a big lawn party Saturday proceeds to be used for their camp the last of the month.

Many of the yachts of the three Quincy yacht clubs will participate in the annual open race under the auspices of the Winthrop yacht club Saturday afternoon off the club house at Winthrop. A race for all classes is also scheduled to be held by the Quincy Yacht club Saturday. It is doubtful however if this is held on account of the Winthrop race.

RECEIVED STOLEN GOODS.

Junk Dealer Pays Fine of Fifteen Dollars.

Abram Ginsbrg, a junk man, was fined $15 his morning for receiving stolen property at Weymouth. It is alleged he purchased an auto radiator from two boys.

GRANITE CONCLAVE MEETS.

Granite conclave, I. O. H., at its meeting in Protection hall Thursday evening discussed the annual outing. The members divided in their opinions some favoring a joint outing within a few weeks with the East Boston conclave and the others favoring an outing in the fall when the East Boston members would be the invited guests. It is probable the latter will prevail because vegetables and other articles which make clam bakes a success cannot be obtained for several months.

FAST GAME SATURDAY.

Andrews and Chapman will be the battery for Makaria, while Michael and Connell will do the honors for the visitors.

CITY HALL NOTES

The Board of Health has taken no action as yet in the matter of changing the location of the dispensary for incipient tuberculosis patients. A meeting of the Board will be held at an early date when action will be taken.

Acting Mayor Crane had no report to make this morning. "Nothing doing in the Mayoralty line," was his reply to the question as to what news he had to give out.

Chief Billings of the Fire Department has nothing to say in regard to the scoring which he received at the hands of the special investigation committee. He is not even willing to express an opinion of the report. He however did say that when the Mayor returned from California he would make a report to him.

The creation of the Fire Prevention Commissioner has resulted in putting a large amount of extra work upon Chief Billings as well as upon every fire engineer in the state. Some idea of the work that has devolved upon the chief may be had when it is said that during the present year he has issued over 1200 permits for grass fires, and garages and has made over 700 inspections of business places to see if their cellars are kept in conformity with the rules of the Commission.

Some 5000 People Gather At Wollaston Beach

The band concert on Wollaston beach at the foot of Beach street, postpond from Thursday night, was given last night and was attended by 5,000 people. The concert was given by the Naval Brigade band and was most enjoyable.

WONT TAKE UP SCHOOL PLANS FOR 6 WEEKS

The chances are that it will be the latter part of August at least before the School Committee gives any consideration to the sketches for the new school buildings at Quincy Point and Nortolk Downs.

This is the vacation period and some of the members of the School Board are out of town and others are likely to go soon. Dr. Bushnell is in Vermont for a brief visit and Dr. Hunting is with the Harvard Unit in London. Dr. Hunting is the oldest member in point of service on the Board, and as he has had considerable experience with school plans his advice is desired before any action is taken. Supt. Barbour is also away for a month or six weeks. Dr. Hunting is expected home by the latter part of August and the School Committee will take up the plans for consideration at that time.

JUNE REPORT OF M. S. P. C. C.

During the month of June the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children was asked to investigate 442 new cases Agents of the Society completed work upon 332 cases involving 604 different children. There were 61 case prosecuted in court on behalf of 228 children. 976 cases were carried over for work during July. In 21 different families negligent parents were forced through court action to support their children. The society is more and more endeavoring to induce parents through moral suasion as well as legal process to care for their own children thus relieving the town and State and incidentally the tax payer of the expense.

The society hopes in the near future to establish a Branch in Framingham and if funds are forthcoming one in the Cape district where some of the most serious cases are found. Mr. E. S. Kavanagh, financial secretary, is devoting part of his summer to organizing the Cape work while Mrs. Philip Rockwood as agent of the society is attempting to solve some of the problems which this section presents.

The Quincy National Band, W. M. Warvikko conductor, will give a concert at Houghs Neck at 2 and 5 o'clock Sunday afternoon, K. W. Fagerlund of 28 Albertina street is manager.

FAVORS PAY AS YOU GO POLICY

Councilman McGrath Comments on Editorial

Editor of the Ledger:

It was pleasing to read in last night's Ledger two editorials treating of city affairs, even though one might disagree with the conclusion reached. it is to be hoped that the Ledger will keep up the good work of agitating these questions of policy to the end that when enlightenment comes to us we may adopt the method that will make easier our municipal problems.

In the article "Who Should Pay" was raised the old question of who should pay for public improvements. This has been a moot point in all the council deliberations over the pending street loan order and like all questions that allow opinions to enter into their solution is now as ever some distance from solution. But to apply another test to the treatment of the question may perhaps clearly show the superiority of one method over another.

We will assume from the temper of the present Council that a loan order of $15,300 is the only sum that has a chance of passage this year. On this particular order some members of the Council believe that the amount should run for five years and other members believe that it should be, if possible a budget charge or mature not later than two years from issue. To put this sum in the budget this year might be attempting just a bit too much, since the increased cost of operating the departments of the city more than offsets the increase in valuation. If put in the budget it would mean on the basis of a $40,000,000 valuation a little less than 39 cents increase in the tax rate.

If we borrow this sum on a five-year basis the interest charge would be $1,860 for the whole period. If we borrow the money on a two-year basis the interest charge would be $918. By the budget plan we would be doing what is without question a maintenance and therefore a current expense work without any further cost to the people of Quincy. By the five year plan we lose the sum of $1860 in interest, and by the two-year plan $918.

The essential point in the discussion of this principle is the loss to the city in interest charges. This loan order is relatively small and the interest charge is not much, but in a city that is so hard pressed to provide for municipal needs the interest charge by either of the loan proposals could be profitably spent in productive work.

The street orders are not the only proposals before the present Council. We are to build a schoolhouse this year, perhaps start the contagious hospital and, just to impress upon the people of the city that the end is not quite in sight, may attempt to do something with Beale street and with many other problems. Not even the most sanguine members of this year's Council believe that a pay-as-you-go policy can go beyond street work, but they do believe that if any relief is to be had that this work should be put upon this basis.

Assuming that the new school building and the Beale street matter are the only projects to be started this year aside from what has already been authorized, we will have added at least one hundred thousand dollars to our debt. This will make a total approximately or $150,000 for the year and will just about offset the maturing debt. This means that we start 1916 with about the same amount of total indebtedness as we had the first of this year and we will have accomplished nothing toward decreasing the immense interest and debt account. This is the reason why the Council is working so hard over the street loan order.

"The City Council has no business to hold up important, almost essential, work in a controversy over this question. The streets need to be repaired and they should be repaired." So runs your criticism. The Council is not holding up important work. The Ledger would not like to see us log-rolling over the proposition or submit whatever may be ascribed to principle to the clamor of expediency. There is an honest difference of opinion in the Council, and the proponents of each method are earnestly striving to do the right thing for the city. Undoubtedly our streets are in need of repairs, but before this or any work is done we must approximate a right method, and this right method appears to some of us to be to put street-work on a pay-as-you-go basis or as a substitute method to borrow only a small amount each year on short-time loans.

Thomas J. McGrath.

ONE KILLED AND TWO INJURED WHEN AUTOMOBILE TURNS SOMERSAULT ON QUINCY AVENUE FRIDAY

Mystery As To Exact Cause Of Accident Which Caused Death Of Dr. Edward M. Currier of Brookline

AUTOMOBILE GOES ONTO SIDEWALK

An automobile owned by J. Herron of East Milton got beyond control of its driver about 11 o'clock Friday evening, turned completely around, and came to a stop on the sidewalk on Hancock street, a few feet from the fence on the top of the high wall at the Dorothy Quincy House, near High school. Three men in the machine escaped injury.

The machine had just been taken from a garage and was on a test run. The driver sat in the seat, a passenger in a rumble seat and another man rode on the running board. The machine was proceeding towards Neponset, in the railroad tracks. The rear wheel was pulled off and the machine shot toward the sidewalk. The tire on the right forward wheel blew out as it struck the curbing and the machine turned completely around and when it settled on the sidewalk was headed toward City square. The machine was taken to a garage.

CLOUD RESTING ON FAMELA BEGINS TO LIFT

Joseph Famela, who is now in the Dedham jail for failing to furnish sureties on an appeal from six months sentence for being a tramp at Milton, a charge brought because he tried to borrow money from Mrs. Charles R. Minot of Brush Hill road, will be absolved of all suspicion if the letters received by Probation Officer Fahy are to be considered.

The name Famela, the letters say, is the English translation of the Italian name Famghietti. The best of references have been sent to Quincy by professional and prominent business men of Waterbury, Ct., the home of the young man. A former employer, rated Famela an expert mechanical draftsman and said he has done estimating in many parts of Connecticut.

Famela who appealed from his sentence is expected to come to court Tuesday, to withdraw his appeal and receive a suspended sentence.

DISTRICT COURT.

George S. Gibbs, 40, 71 Park street, Roxbury, pleaded nolo to a charge of exceeding the speed limit in the Blue Hill Parkway and was assessed $10 costs.

Michael Gavares, born in Turkey, pleaded guilty to violating the Lord's Day act and was fined $5. He was charged with selling pop corn from a cart on Sunday.

Ezra Robinson, 47, pleaded guilty to larceny and was fined $25. He had three hens, alleged to have been stolen from unknown parties, when arrested.

William Robinson, colored, pleaded guilty to drunkenness and was fined $15. Sentence was suspended to Sept. 30.

KINDERGARTEN SCHOOL OPENS.

The sumer kindergarten school under the auspices of the Educational committee of the Quincy Women's club opened this week at the Lincoln school. This is the third year of the school and its need and appreciation was shown by the large number that applied for admission. The seating capacity was filled to the uttermost and many applicants were turned away for lack of room.

From her bed in the hospital, Mrs. Alma E. Currier of 1761 Beacon street, Brookline, on Friday evening said reckless driving was not the cause of the accident on Quincy avenue, Friday evening in which her husband, Dr. Edward M. Currier, was instantly killed, and herself and mother, Mrs. Jessie A. Lewis of Shreveport, Louisiana, seriously injured. It was faulty mechanism of the machine she told Dr. Walter L. Sargent.

Although suffering internal and spinal injuries she was conscious and told how the splendid seven passenger Pierce Arrow got beyond control, rolled completely over and righted itself, killing her husband in its violent whirl and throwing herself and mother under it.

Dr. Currier was operating the machine and his wife was riding on the front seat. She said the machine commenced suddenly to go from side to side. She asked her husband if the machine was coasting. He said it was and asked her to operate a certain lever. She did as she thought he meant but he said it wasn't right and kicked it back. The machine then careened.

Mrs. Lewis in addition to multiple bruises and contusions has a fracture of the shoulder. Both are in fair condition this morning and are critically but not necessarily fatally injured.

The body of the doctor, was under the car when it righted itself. Medical Examiner Fred E. Jones is at West Point and his assistant, Dr. W. G. Higgins of Randolph viewed the body. The head of Dr. Currier was crushed in, and had apparently been caught under the wind shield when the machine rolled. The body was taken to Brookline today.

An examination by people who saw the machine pass say it was not racing with another machine. Millard Fillmore Newcomb said it was travelling at excessive speed when he saw it on Quincy avenue, just before it entered the state road. He said from where he was standing it looked as though an attempt had been made to skirt a hollow in the street and that the front of the machine seemed to leave the ground, turn at right angles roll over and come to a stop when its four wheels struck the street again.

George M. Barker of Plymouth explained what occurred just before the accident. He was repairing a valve in his "dead" auto about 200 feet distant and saw the machine approaching. He said he saw it swerving from side to side and as he wondered how he could back his machine from the street on less than 100 pounds of steam pressure he heard three explosions like pistol shots. The machine he said then leaped into the air and somersaulted.

George Holden of Main street, South Weymouth, happend along on a motor cycle just at that time. He road to the Central fire station, a distance of a mile, and from there Dr. Sydney C. Hardwick, Dr. C. J. Lynch and D. F. Ramon Burke were summoned. Dr. A. K. Paine of 366 Commonwealth avenue, Boston, who was passing rendered first aid to Mrs. Currier.

The police ambulance carried the injured women to the City Hospital but it was nearly 25 minutes later that a patrolman arrived to take charge of the situation, regulate the heavy traffic and keep back th crowd from the rubber blanket which Faxon Billings, chief of the fire department, had thrown over the body of the doctor.

Valuable jewelry was found on both women at the hospital and was turned over to the police. The collection is thought to be worth close to $6000. and was in two chamois bags, each woman having one. The assortment included handsome solitaire diamond rings and diamond brooches and a gold watch with a hand beaten case, the design on which was a little girl with braided hair, while the rim was a wreath of laurel. The sizes of the diamonds ranged from three-fourths of a caret to three carets.

All three were on their way to Point Allerton, Nantasket, to call on the mother of Dr. Currier before leaving on a two weeks auto trip. They were then going to stop at Bryantville, where they have a summer home at Oldham Pond, called the "Log

CITIES AND TOWNS FIX TAX RATES

Cities and towns of the commonwealth are beginning to announce their tax rates for 1915.

Waltham, a city in the same class with Quincy will have this year of $19.80 the highest in the history of the city. It is an increase of $1.80 over 1914. The real estate valuation is $22,995,600 an increase of $814,440 and the personal estate $8,889,500 a decrease of $229,400. The increase in the tax rate is laid to the removal from the city of a number of its wealthy citizens.

Gloucester announces its rate as $21.60 a decrease of 40 cents from 1914. The total valuation of the city is $26,229,746, an increase of $311,000.

Stoneham, a town north of Boston, gives its rate this year as $23.30 an increase of 50 cents from 1914. The total valuation is given as $6,067,430 an increase of $162,068.

Dana, a small town, has a tax rate this year of $18.50 a drop of $3 from 1914.

HAD DULL TIME IN PATROL AUTO

William Robinson, a colored man who said he was 65 years old but didn't look it and who claimed to live on Pleasant street, Boston, was arrested in Norfolk Downs after midnight on a charge of drunkenness. Robinson showed up about 11.45 at Billings road. He was seen loitering on the sidewalk and then suddenly disappeared. Patrolman James McNamara shadowed him and took him into custody.

Chauffeur George Philips brought the auto patrol back to police headquarters at moderate speed. Robinson got anxious as to his destination.

"Where in de good Lawd, does we go?" he asked Wagon Officer Halloran "O down to Virginia" was the reply.

"Well I'll stay where you gwine, but the time, it ju' lags."

"I always use two glasses," said Robinson, just as two small whiskey glasses were set on top of the desk at headquarters. "Don't you? Mr. Officer My eyes are not always the same."

FIREMAN GO TO WRONG PLACE

Through a mixup in receiving a telephone call at the central fire station at 3.45 Friday afternoon the chief and Auto Chemical made a useless run to Atlantic. The call received stated that there was a fire in the rear of Music hall, Atlantic.

The fire was on the roof of the blacksmith ship in the rear of Music hall block, Hancock street. While waiting for the apparatus to arrive occupants of buildings in the vicinity attached the line of hose kept in the rear of Hall's stable to the hydrant in the rear of Kincaide's furniture store and this stream did the trick. In the mean time word was again sent to the Central Fire station and the combination hose wagon sent down.

THE COUNTY SHOULD HELP.

Some months ago the matter of receiving help from the county in the widening or rebuilding of what are called county, or turnpike roads was brought up in the Board of Trade, in the form of a resolution looking to an amendment of the city charter.

When the city charter was adopted the entire control of streets in the City of Quincy was put in the hands of the City Council and Mayor. It has been claimed this clause in the charter has prevented any assistance being received from the county in the building or widening of streets. Some former city officials claim that this clause in the charter does not prevent the county from assisting. The fact remains, however, that no assistance has been received from the county in the matter of streets since Quincy became a city, although the city through its county tax has contributed its proportionate share toward street work in some of the towns of the county. The Board of Trade committee has held several meetings on the matter but nothing definite has as yet been accomplished.

Under the general law regarding streets a petition could be presented to the County Commissioners, setting forth that a certain street in the city, like Adams street for illustration, was badly in need of rebuilding or widening. Acting on this petition the County Commissioners would view the street. The Commissioners would then enter a decree that public necessity did not demand the rebuilding or widening or that it did demand it. If the latter the decree would order the city to do it and would state just what portion of the expense the county would bear. Whatever amount was decreed would of course be apportioned throughout the county.

While on general principles we are opposed to constantly tinkering with the city charter if some slight amendment could be made which would make it possible for the county to share a part of the expense of putting the turnpike roads, so called, in god condition, the quicker it is done the better.

LONG CREDIT TRADE

If the American people could but pay for their household supplies day by day, one of the big costs of living could be reduced. The money is often lying idle in the consumer's pocket while he pays an extra charge to enable the retailer to pay interest on stock bought on credit or with borrowed money.

A farm bureau expert, in an address a few days ago, pointed out how a great many farmers are increasing their costs by the policy of buying supplies on long terms of credit. The supply company practically becomes a bank. It not merely makes a profit on the goods, but it gets a banking profit too. If the farmer could but buy for cash, he would save one liberal profit.

As a community grows in prosperity it ought to get rid of long credits. The retail merchant may think he is not paying anything for the use of capital locked up in his stock. But if he could get at the cost books of the manufacturer, he would find that not merely is he being charged up interest on his delayed account, but that a percentage is added for risks of credit trade. The man who pays cash buys cheaper.

The subject was suggested by the advice that has just been given at the Pan-American financial conference at Washington, of the necessity of extending long terms of credit, if the United States wants South American trade. The proposition is adverse to our temperament. The American business man believes that "short accounts make long friendships."

But this is a case where the boot is on the other foot. The United States is now the richest creditor nation in the world. It can reflect that creditors usually profit handsomely for extending accommodation, where same is based on careful investigation of business standing. Wherefore our business men can well afford to humor the South American whim for slow payments, and to adjust themselves to the financial customs of the tropics which everyone wishes to see disappear at home.

It was a pleasure to read and to print the letter from Dr. Gordon anent the fountain in City square. We of the present generation are all too prone to sacrifice sentiment and everything else to a pseudo-progress which in reality is nothing more than a pursuit of the God Mammon. There are other residents of the city, who remember the sacrifices, and indeed participated in them, which brought the fountain into existence. The fountain means more to them than to us. Let us, however, not forget what they did nor how they feel and let us not without deliberation proceed to the removal of what was once the pride of many makers of Quincy.

Chief Billings is reported to have secured evidence leading to the disclosure of the identity of the fire fiend or fiends who have been ringing in Box 58. Good! The police should leave no stone unturned to continue the work to a successful conclusion, to apprehend and prosecute these degenerates.

The many friends of the physicians and nurses from this city who formed a part of the Harvard Unit must have rejoiced to learn of the safe arrival of the party in London the other day.

Isn't it about time for someone to suggest that Famela, Quincy's man of mystery, is a German spy and that his 84 neckties and 10 suits of clothes form a part of his wardrobe of disguises?

STAND BY THE PRESIDENT.

If our memory serves us aright it was our martyred President Lincoln who made historic the old homily that it is "a perilous undertaking to swap horses while crossing a stream."

That is as true today as it was over fifty years ago, but if one of the team "kicks over the traces" or "lays down in the harness" and seems not to care if his pig-headedness swamps the whole outfit, the only salvation is to cut loose from him and drive him where his heels will not endanger the passage to safety.

This country is passing through a crisis no doubt more important and perilous than any since the days of the Civil War.

If Col. Bryan with his extreme, "peace at any price even with dishonor" views cannot suscribe to the course laid out for his country to pursue, perhaps he is justified, to a certain extent, in "throwing down his cards" and "withdrawing from the game" but he need not "slam the door" and then kick it after he is out.

However, his action in the matter only strengthens our belief that the retiring Secretary of State has never measured up to the office, but has been a burden and a hindrance from the very first and that his retirement will prove a blessing to both the President and the Nation and, even at this crucial time, will not be a calamity but rather will help to strengthen the "ship of state."

We all hope and pray for peace and are filled with horror at the thought of the possibility of war. There is, however, a limit to national as well as individual endurance and it would seem as though that limit had been reached.

The fact that this Government stands for its rights and international honor should not mean even the danger of war, nor do we believe that it does.

However, our standing as the leading neutral, yes, the greatest nation on earth today, is in the balance. Our honor is at stake. It must not be "weighed in the balance and found wanting" no matter where our firm stand may lead us.

Every true American citizen should and we are confident will, Stand By The President in this crisis.—Dedham Transcript.

CZAR'S FORCES TRAP AUSTRIANS

Archduke Ferdinand's Army Meets Disaster In Poland

DID NOT WAIT FOR GERMANS

Over-Confidence From Victories In Galicia Led Invaders to Press on Toward Warsaw—Russian Success Followed by Renewal of Offensive All Along the Line—Botha Accepts Unconditional Surrender of Kaiser's Troops In German Southwest Africa

London, July 10.—Dispatches from the east indicate that through blundering over confidence on the part of Archduke Joseph Ferdinand, the main army of the dual monarchy has been annihilated between Krasnik and Lublin, in Poland.

In his haste to press on toward Warsaw before he had effected a junction with the German forces under Field Marshal von Mackensen, the archduke has fallen into a trap, has lost at least 15,000 men, has received a severe check, has delayed the Teutonic advance for days, and has given the Russian commander an opportunity to assume the offensive on the southern Poland front for the first time in two months.

There is no doubt that the Russians have soundly thrashed the Austrians on even terms in that portion of Russian Poland between the Vistula and Bug rivers, in the district just south of Lublin, regarded as "the back door of Warsaw."

As gathered from Petrograd dispatches, the Austrians, over confident from their joint victories in Galicia, could not remain at Krasnik to wait for the Germans with their heavy guns, which have been the effective agents in this campaign, but struck north at will towards Lublin, believing that the Russian morale was destroyed, and that it as only necessary to advance in order to conquer.

The Austrian commander lost entire touch with the Germans and was thus exposed and the Russians saw their opportunity.

The Russian forces were turned and concealed in a dense wood, alongside of which the Austrians were advancing. The Austrian forces passed by this wood, after which, with their flank thus turned, they were in a serious predicament when the Russians assumed the offensive. The Austrians' left wing was crumpled up and fell back on the main body.

A French Victory

A notable French success on the western field is recorded. In the Vosges, on the Alsatian frontier, the report from the Paris war office says the conquered positions in the Vosges had been organized, but the earlier announcement tells the story of a desperate artillery bombardment and charge in the region of Ban de Sapt, where the French uprooted the Germans from trenches taken by them at a heavy price on June 22.

When quiet had been restored it was found that the French infantry had made an advance of nearly a half mile, on a front little more than 500 yards long.

In other words the French have thrust a wedge through the German position which will permit them to enfilade the enemy.

Germans Give Up In Africa

All German troops in Southwest Africa have surrendered unconditionally, the whole colony passing into British possession. Louis Botha, premier of South Africa and commander-in-chief, is returning to Pretoria and Cape Town, resting on his laureis, which include the rebellion against his authority crushed, De Wet in jail, German forces in Southwest Africa conquered, and that German colony no longer under the German flag.

If there were not giants at war in Europe, Botha's achievements would resound all over the world. When Great Windhuk, the capital of the colony, fell to Botha's army last May, the second German colony in area—of Germany's four African possessions—but far and away the first in white population and importance, practically slipped from the German grasp.

The capture of Windhuk was a dramatic surprise. Botha at once raised the Union Jack and proclaimed in the king's name the colony to be under effective occupation of the arms of South Africa. Generals Smuts and Myburgh and Colonels Mentz and Alberts, all Dutch, rendered able assistance. The Germans gave up without resistance. Satisfaction in England is universal and also in Holland.

German Southwest Africa extends from the Orange to the Cunen river, about 900 miles. The area is 322,450 square miles.

ENGLAND NEEDS MORE MEN

Kitchener Says Military Situation Is as Serious as Ever

A call for recruits was sounded by Lord Kitchener when he appeared at Guildhall, London, and addressed a great mass meeting. Crowds almost equal in size to coronation throngs lined the route from the war office to the hall and cheered as Kitchener motored to the scene of the meeting. The hall was packed and a crowd of 50,000 jammed the streets.

Kitchener plunged almost immediately into a discussion of England's needs in the war.

"We require more men and still more men," said Earl Kitchener, "but the situation in this respect is immeasurably better now than it was ten months ago. The military position today, however, is as serious as it was then."

This was the keynote of the war secretary's speech to influence recruiting.

APOLOGY FROM AUSTRIA

Discountenances Newspaper Attack Upon the United States

The Austrian government apologized to American Ambassador Penfield because The Neuse Wiener Tageblatt printed an attack upon President Wilson and the United States because of the American protest against Germany's submarine warfare.

The apology was made after Penfield had inquired whether the newspaper voiced the opinion of the government. In addition to disclaiming that such was the fact, the government warned the censor that no such articles could appear in the future.

"FULLY AND SENSIBLY"

How Court Thinks Thaw Answered Question of Prosecution

New York, July 10.—Harry Thaw told from the witness stand his story of the actual murder of Stanford White. When he had finished his recital of the dinner party which preceded the murder, details of the shooting itself and his arrest, he was asked by Deputy Attorney General Cook to continue his story.

"I think," interposed Justice Hendrick at this point of the insanity hearing, "he has answered the question very fully and sensibly."

At the afternoon session the state finished its long questioning of Thaw. He had sat in the witness chair testifying almost steadily all of the day before.

BOSTON DIRECTORY HAS 343,260 NAMES

Smiths, Sullivans, Murphys and Browns Are the Leaders

Boston, July 10.—That the time is not far distant when the Boston directory will have to be published in two volumes is indicated by the corpulency of the 1915 edition. Including the advertising matter, there are more than 3165 pages.

Last year's directory had 337,958 names, but the new one contains 343,260 names, or a gain of 5302 for the year.

The Smiths lead in number, there being about 3000 of that family. Next come the Sullivans, some 2000 of them, the Murphys to the number of 2300, and 2000 or so of Browns.

Other large representations are those of the name of Johnson, Jones, Clark, Cohen, Davis, McCarthy, Walsh, Kelley or Kelly, O'Brien and White. Under each classification are more than 1000 names.

LAST DAY FOR PAYMENTS

Treasury Department Expects Income Tax to Total $85,000,000

Washington, July 10.—The personal and corporation income tax is still turning money into the treasury coffers, and officials are hopeful that the total at the close of business today, the last day on which payments may be made, will be well over $85,000,000.

About $2,230,000 has come in from this source since the close of the fiscal year, June 30, bringing the total to over $81,000,0000; but officials believe that today will show much larger receipts.

FORTUNE GOING TO WASTE

Fruitless Efforts to Cap Great Gas Gusher on Pennsylvania Farm

McKeesport, Pa., July 10.—A rush of gas and oil men who wanted leases near the new great gas gusher on the Spiegel farm in North Versailles township carried great crowds to the vicinity of the new find. They found, however, that the land for miles around already had been leased.

For several hours the new gusher has been shooting off gas at the rate of $7000 worth a day, all attempts to cap it having failed.

CROWDS ATTEND SPECTACLE.

"Birth Of A Nation" Strong Magnet To Theatregoers.

David W. Griffith's great historical and romantic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is now in its fourteenth week at the Tremont Theatre, Boston. The present cool weather makes it an exceptionally favorable time to visit Boston and attend this play which is being performed in one of the best ventilated and coolest theatres of the city. The crowds the past week have been enormous. The attendance on Independence Day ranks with the greatest in the history of the playhouse.

Parties are being organized from many towns and cities to witness this extraordinary attraction. Persons having charge of parties of fifty or more theatregoers should communicate with Henry MacMahon, Manager Booking Department, Tremont Theatre, and special arrangements will be made for their visit and for reserving the choicest seats. The prices range to suit all purses, and a pleasant feature for the out of town visitors is that the matinee prices are one-half those charged at night. It has been definitely announced that "The Birth of a Nation" will not be played elsewhere in New England for many months to come, probably not until the season of 1916-17. Therefore those who desire to see it should not neglect the attractive opportunities presented by the Boston run.

TYPHOID FEVER IN THE UNITED STATES

An editorial in the Journal of the American Medical Association, April 17th, says in part, "It is evident that Typhoid Fever is on the way to become a relatively rare disease in many parts of the United States. There are two main reasons for this. First, there are now comparatively few large cities in which the public water supply is likely to contain Typhoid Bacteria. Second, the increase in the practice of pasteurization has resulted in a dimunition in the amount of milk borne typhoid."

The Elm Farm Milk Company complying with the general demand by by the Medical Profession and Sanitarians, were one of the first to scientifically pasteurize their milk. This milk is offered at the same price that rules for ordinary milk.

This process is the only one that absolutely guarantees the safety of milk against all of the infectious diseases.

Elm Farm Milk means SAFETY, SERVICE, SATISFACTION.

POSTPONE BURNING OF HOTEL.

The burning of the old Reed hotel and barn at Squantum has again been postponed. It was first planned to burn the buildings on the morning of July 5. Then it was postponed until today. Just when it will be burned has not been decided. A moving picture company desires to take the building when it is burning and the date will probably be fixed to suit the convenience of this company.

How, and Why,—the GOODRICH "Fair-List" Propaganda now saves Car-Owners, yearly, over $25,000,000 on Tires

THERE are 1,923,951 Automobiles now State-licensed, and running, in the United States. Of these, 1,803,951 are Pleasure Cars,—i. e., exclusive of Trucks, etc.

More than 90% of them, or about 1,623,555, use Pneumatic Tires.

Each car will wear out and replace, on average, about one Set of Four Tires per year.

Therefore, the interests of each Car-Owner, as well as each Car-Manufacturer, each Car-Dealer, and Salesman, are vitally and personally affected by the price of Tires to Consumers.

Because,—Tires and Gasoline are the two big items of consumption in the operation of Motor Cars.

The Owner who used his Car 1,000 Miles less, per year, than he would have done, because of "the high-price of Tires and Gasoline," received that much less return from his entire investment in the Car proper.

The potential, or prospective, Car-Owner who fails to buy a Car because of "the high cost of Tires and Gasoline,"—he who sells his Car and does not buy again because of "the high cost of Tires and Gasoline"—or he who, for the same reason, stores his Car and does not run it during a considerable part of the year, is a direct loss to—

—1st—Automobile Manufacturers as a class,

—2d—Automobile Dealers, as a class,

—3d—Garage Owners, as a class,

—4th—Lubrication & Gasoline Manufacturers, as a class.

But,—he is a greater loss to TIRE Manufacturers, and Dealers, as a class, than to any others.

Because,—

—Gasoline and Lubricants, for instance, can be sold to the Owners of Motor Boats, Stationary, and other Motors.

But,—Automobile Tires can only be sold, in the ultimate, to the man who OWNS a Car, and who wears out Tires through using it.

EVERY mile that each Automobile runs, means an automatic Sale of Tires to replace that mileage with new Tires.

But, all the Salesmanship, and all the Advertising, under the Sun, could not increase, by a single Tire, the total sales of Tires beyond the number of Cars owned by Consumers, and the number of Miles each Consumer runs his Car yearly.

The Market for Tires is therefore limited, inflexibly, to the number of Cars running, and the Mileage which each Owner is induced to run yearly.

Therefore, we opine that to promote greater Sales, and greater use, of Automobiles, few better incentives can be offered than markedly-lowered cost, TO CONSUMERS, for Tires and Gasoline.

Just as we recognize that the only legitimate expansion open to the Tire Industry, as a whole, would be due to the Sale of more Automobiles each year to Consumers, with a greater average Mileage USE, per year, of each Car by each Owner.

That is why we favor the lowest possible price for Tires,—to Consumers, consistent with maintenance of high quality and a fair profit to Dealer and Mfr.

So this, then, is a leading reason why WE initiated, and propagated, that Goodrich "Fair-List" Movement which we publicly announced in the press on Jan. 31, 1915, and which caused practically every Pneumatic Tire Manufacturer in this Country to follow our lead and bring his prices down to a fairer level.

THIS is also the reason why some Tire Manufacturers, who could not, or would not, "meet" our BASIC prices for Pneumatic Tires (even though our "Fair-List" Propaganda obliged them to make heavy reductions off their former Lists) might erroneously suppose that "Goodrich" Tires have been cheapened in Quality, as well as in price.

Hence this explanation (to the Public, to Car-Manufacturers, Dealers, Car-Salesmen, Garages, and Tire Dealers generally) that we deem it "good business" to sell the best Goodrich Tires (of fabric construction) we have ever made, at the fairest price possible for such quality.

Hence, too, the following TEST offer to Consumers.

—We will cheerfully pay for any Goodrich Safety "Non-Skid" Tire, sold since our "Fair-List" price-reduction (announced on January 31, 1915,) which when cut open shows any reduction in quality, in number of layers of Canvas, in thickness, or quality of Rubber, when compared with any other Goodrich Safety "Non-Skid" made by us, and sold at our higher prices current before the Goodrich "Fair-List" Movement.

And,—this is further to authorize any Tire-User to extend this Offer (at our expense) to any Tire Dealer, or Manufacturer.

We ask Car-Owners, and Tire Consumers, in their own interest, to see that no "implication" of lowered quality in Goodrich Tires goes unchallenged,—just as we have protected their interests, for our own sake, through our "Fair-List" Propaganda.

BECAUSE of that GOODRICH "Fair-List" Propaganda, every Car-Owner who now buys any make of Tire sized 37 x 5, now saves, on each set of 4 Tires, an average of about $46.27.

—Every Car-Owner who uses 34 x 4 Tires of any make, now saves, through the Goodrich "Fair-List" Propaganda, an average of about $26.15 per set of 4 Tires.

—Every Car-Owner who uses 30 x 3½ Tires, now saves, through the Goodrich "Fair-List" Propaganda, an average of about $14.70 per Set of 4 Tires.

Other sizes in proportion.

The 1,623,555 State-licensed Car-Owners who use Pneumatic Tires now save about 20% of what they last year paid for ANY make and size, whether they be Goodrich or competing brands,—equal to more than $25,000,000 per year.

And, don't forget that this giant saving to Car-Owners was never mentioned to the Public by other Tire Manufacturing Concerns until the Goodrich "Fair-List" Propaganda made it imperative that they extend the Saving to Consumers on their Tires, or lose business to the Goodrich Co.

But, notwithstanding all this,—the fact which should loom largest to TIRE-USERS is the contrast of 10% to 40%, in prices, that still exists between the low price of the best Non-Skid Tires (of fabric construction) that money can buy, or the largest Rubber Factory in the World produce,—(to wit, GOODRICH Non-Skid Tires) and all other "responsible" Tires in the field.

Compare these prices and see!

Then, if you are not already a Goodrich User, do yourself (and us), the justice to buy at least one GOODRICH "Non-Skid" Tire.

Test that out for Quality, Mileage and Resilience against any other Tire, at any price, which you are now using.

The result of such test will cause you to wonder why you ever paid more for Maximum Quality, Mileage, and Resilience than the Basic price of Goodrich Non-Skid Tires?

THE B. F. GOODRICH CO.

FIERCE ATTACK ON PRES. DUNCAN

Quincy Italian Writes Open Letter

The following open letter has been sent to James Duncan, international president of the Granite Cutters Union, by Loreto D. Tocci of 167 West street, West Quincy:—

Having in my veins the so-called Italian blood I cannot let your insulting article, "In Acknowledgement," attacking the loyalty of the Latins, pass unheeded. Ah, Mr. Duncan you are leading yourself to your doomsday. As head of the Union you should be the leader to promote good feelings amongst our brother members but instead you are leading the agitation in creating disruption within the Union and, bear in mind, the less you say as regards our Latin brothers the better it is for your advantage.

You, together with a large percentage of men in the public eye, through narrow mindedness have the wrong impression as to the Latin race. Open your eyes, Mr. President, look about you and gaze at the wonders we Latins have accomplished. We are far from Revolutionists, creating furore and breaking up meetings or laying plans to fine and depose those who oppose our sentiments, or by hook or crook to defeat you for re-election. We are far from it. Our objective point is that we shall all be equal with a fair day's return for a fair day's work, but when we find that we are being persecuted on all sides can you blame us if it is next to impossible to proceed along constitutional lines? Have we not the right to issue a four page paper dealing with absolutely nothing but the affairs of the association and in connection with the election of international president?

This, you say, shows our disregard and contempt for our constitution, but how are we to defend our rights when our requests as to the publishing of the truth through the Granite Cutters' Journal is ignored by you as editor. No wonder those gentlemen from Barre, Louis Salvucci and D. Ossola, cared nothing about your constitution. The same is very cleverly framed up to satisfy your own personal ambition and those few limited loyal followers dearest to your heart. Yes, Mr. Duncan you have too many constitutional reasons in support of your action. No wonder their visit was a failure. Ah, Brothers, are we to tolerate such Czarism? Never.

Come forward Mr. President with your articles exposing this conspiracy (as you claim it is.)

I will be only too glad to go over this controversy in detail as our brother members must know the truth. Quite me a few instances whereby you have benefited the Granite Cutters' Union.

And, for these reasons we have immigrated to these free United States, (the same as you have) to better our conditions and why then do you wish to take a step backwards? Is this why you call us disturbers and rebellious members from that sunny country? Cover your face for you are blushing with shame. Is the American Federation of Labor to be trusted by such a traitor?

Why are you so liberal? Why not bar every Italian vote that has been cast in rank violation of your constitution? We dare you.

Now, as to the article "Law and Order or What" by your executive council. Oh! what a beautiful work! The work of a well educated master signed by his scholars.

Yes, we glorify in calling ourselves Latins. I shall not attempt to explain the meaning of the word to our brother members, for it explains itself.

Have not the two individuals under the initials of A. P., and L. S., got the right to aplaud the editorial outbursts of the editor of the New York I. W. W. paper and vice versa? Or, shall your loyal followers have the only right to applaud your discriminating article attacking the good intentions of us Italians?

Yes, if the uncomplimentary remarks about President Duncan were eliminated from the different issues of the paper "Lo Scalpellino" it would be minus most of its reading matter. Yes, it will make a volume by the time we get through publishing the history of the president of the Granite Cutters' Union.

Why no publish the truth as regards the young member from Barre, reported to be distributing the stone cutters' paper in the sheds of Quincy? What right has our president to impose on him a fine of ten dollars? Only after said persecution did the young member tear up the constitution and can you blame him? And why should he know you? A man using such tactics as you is not worth knowing and who cares to know you? If, as you say, we are responsible for the depleting of the treasury to the extent of $207,000. then for what purposes is that money, for your own personal use or for the use of a strike, as in this case? Why, then, are we paying $1400 a year? To accomodate you? Are we to tolerate such inquisitive statements?

Now, our president takes the liberty to levy upon broken shoulders an extra assessment of fifty cents per week during the months of June, July and August.

A fool is that member who pays the above mentioned assessment. Again I warn you to ignore his pronunciamentos, for your family needs every cent you earn.

We have all come from a distant country sooner or later to better our conditions and when you make the statement that we are introducing racial contention and religious bigotry it plainly shows on your part that you are still ignorant as to our sentiments and creating ill feelings amongst our brother members.

Space forbids me to dwell on other topics of interest to our members. I will welcome a reply from our president as I have a desire to give the members full detail of this conspiracy.

I dare you Mr. Duncan to publish the same in the next issue of the Granite Cutters' Journal, otherwise different steps shall be taken.

Respectfully yours,
Loreto D. Tocci.

BUILDING ACTIVE THROUGHOUT CITY

Inspector of Buildings Issued 85 Permits During Last Month

Weekly Building Review

Quincy was experienced thus far an unusual activity in building. Especially has this been true in regard to business blocks. During the early part of the spring there was hardly a week but what the building of some new business block was announced. In addition to business blocks an unusually large number of dwellings have been built or are now building. While the Wollaston and Wollaston Park districts have experienced the greatest boom many new homes have been erected in Atlantic and in the Quincy Point district.

For that matter a visit to any ward of the city will disclose many buildings in the process of erection. Some of these are built for investment but in the great majority of cases for occupancy by the owners.

In addition to new building there has been considerable activity in real estate and local agents report the transfer of many estates. One agency in City Square, J. F. Burke & Co., report that within the past ten days they have sold ten houses and six lots of land. Other agents also report activity.

The records of Inspector of Buildings Thomas show that during the month of June 85 permits of various kinds were issued, involving an expenditure of $130,612. In June 1914, 82 permits were issued, involving an expenditure of $94,027, showing in a way how business is increasing this year.

Of the permits issued last month 29 were for dwellings involving an expenditure of $84,250; three for cottags, $1,6000; three for mercantile buildings, $30,280; one for manufacturing, $1,000; fifteen auto houses, $2,382; 24 alterations, $6,375; and eleven miscellaneous $44,625.

With what is already in sight for the month of July, the returns for this month should show a large increase in estimated cost, the new Fore River ship tool building, for which a permit was issued this week, alone being $400,000.

DARING ROBBERY IN NEW ORLEANS

Lone Thief Secures $100,000 From Bayou State Security Bank.

POLICE WITHOUT CLUE

Bold Bandit Forces President to Cash Personal Check at Point of Revolver, Then Makes His Disappearance.

New Orleans.—One of the most daring daylight bank robberies ever recorded in this city was committed this morning when the Bayou State Security bank was looted of $100,000 in currency by a lone robber. There is absolutely no clue to the thief.

As has been the custom for some time of the president of the bank, Mr. Andrew Galbraith, entered his private offices in the rear of the main banking apartment at ten o'clock. Shortly after a young man of prepossessing appearance quietly opened the door and entered the room.

When the president looked up he found himself gazing into the muzzle of a revolver and heard the cool demand for $100,000 under penalty of death for refusal. Mr. Galbraith immediately realized that the robber would carry out his threat should he make any outcry or disturbance. He was calmly told to write his personal check for the amount named and indorse it. He was then ordered to take it to the paying teller while the mysterious visitor followed him closely with the revolver leveled at him under his coat.

When President Galbraith presented the check the young robber stepped to the window and requested $1,000 in small bills and the rest in paper of large denomination. He stuffed the loose bills carelessly into his pocket, put the package containing the $99,000 under his arm, nodded to the president, backed swiftly to the street door and vanished.

For further particulars regarding this daring robbery read the new serial, "The Price," by Francis Lynde, soon to appear in this paper.

ASK PROBE OF HOLT MYSTERY

Nassau County People Have Long List of Questions

ALL OF GREAT IMPORTANCE

Hole In Dynamiter's Forehead, Removal of Body Before Inquest and Other Features Unexplained—Many Many Reasons Why Life of Criminal Should Have Been Prolonged

New York, July 10.—Increasing public suspicion in Nassau county of the brief official statement that Frank Holt, later identified as Erich Muenter, the Capitol dynamiter and Morgan assassin, jumped to his death in Mineola jail, blazed forth into a general demand that Governor Whitman order a full investigation of the Holt mystery and of affairs at the jail generally.

The questions now raised—especially by a new statement from Jerry Ryan, the jail guard—include the following:

Did Holt die from a bullet? Ryan says he was first told Holt shot himself.

Was any other person than Holt concerned in the killing? Police Commissioner Woods was reported to have wired Washington that night that the bullet was fired from outside the prison.

In the confusion at the jail immediately following the discovery of Holt's body questions like these were heard: "Where did he get it?" and "Who gave it to him?" Were these references to a weapon?

Was a round putty-filled hole high up on Holt's forehead caused by a bullet? Reporters and others who saw the body have declared it was more like a bullet hole than anything else. Ryan says there was no such wound or mark in that particular spot on Holt when he arrived at the jail.

Why has the principal exhibit in the mystery—the body itself—been released from the local authorities by being shipped to Texas for burial, even before the inquest?

Why was an expert pathologist not called in to examine the body? This was repeatedly suggested to the county officials.

Why does Ryan's revolver carry four old bullets and one new, shiny one? Ryan, while scouting the death-jump theory, declares that there is no significance in the one new bullet and that his revolver has not been fired for two years.

Why have important inquest witnesses been allowed to leave the county? Warden Hulse of Mineola jail has suddenly started for the Adirondacks on his vacation. Sheriff Pettit has gone to the Elks' convention at Los Angeles.

Was anyone, so far unknown to the public, interested in having Holt's lips sealed? He had said he would tell the police of his plans and his explosives Wednesday morning.

Was a weapon smuggled in to Holt? Ryan says there were a "lot of jail visitors Tuesday. It would not have been difficult for someone to slip a revolver to Holt."

If Holt shot himself, what became of the weapon?

These are the chief of innumerable questions which are now being hurled toward the county authorities.

Stress is laid on the fact that the Mineola jail had charge last Tuesday night of the head-line criminal of the land at that particular time, a man who had tried to blow up the Capitol, who had pumped two bullets into J. P. Morgan, and who, when fully identified, was revealed as a man wanted six years for wife murder. Holt, or Muenter, was under the burden of an amazing achievement in crime.

There were scores of weighty reasons why his life should have been prolonged. But he obtained death apparently as easily as the most casual down-and-out might jump off a dock.

That his finding will be that Holt ended his life without assistance or connivance by any other person was indicated by Coroner Jones when the inquest into Holt's death was adjourned.

Several more witnesses will be examined next Friday, including prisoners in the county jail.

CAUSED BY HOLT'S BOMB

Minnehaha Almost Sent to the Bottom by Explosion

Halifax, July 10.—A bomb placed aboard the Atlantic transport liner Minnehaha as she lay at her pier in New York caused the explosion and fire at sea, in the opinion of the officers of the steamer, which put in here for examination.

The explosion occurred in No. 3 hold, and was of terrific force. Flames followed quickly, and for two days and two nights the crew battled heroically to save the ship, which Erich Muenter (Frank Holt) had boasted he would send to the bottom.

There is no doubt in the minds of the officers that Muenter or confederates were responsible for the explosion which, well timed, occurred at 4:15 on the afternoon of July 7, the date upon which the dynamiter predicted that some vessel, the name of which he appeared, uncertain, would be destroyed.

Care of the Baby In Summer

After Weaning the Baby.

[Prepared by the children's bureau, United States department of labor.]

After a mother has weaned her baby she is very apt to begin to give him "tastes" of various kinds of food. He is often brought to the table as soon as he is old enough to sit up in a high chair and offered bits of the family meal. In this way he soon has his appetite spoiled for the simple food which should satisfy him at this period—namely, milk, cereal, toast and the like. But a far more serious result of this haphazard method of feeding is that it is very apt to make the baby sick. It is not reasonable to suppose that a baby who has been fed almost exclusively on milk for the first nine months of his life can all at once begin to eat solid food of various kinds and not suffer any ill effects from it. The fact is that feeding at this period is hardly less important than in early infancy, and it is because so many mothers fail to realize this and make so many mistakes in the choice of food for the baby at this period that the "second summer" has gained an undeserved reputation for peril to him.

The mother is also apt to be making these experiments in feeding at the time when the baby is cutting his teeth and when, on account of the possible pain of teething, he is not as well able to digest his food as usual. On this account it is especially important at this time that the baby should have the right food in suitable quantities at proper intervals and no other way.

If, on the other hand, the mother realizes how important it is to take great pains with the baby's feeding at this period much of the illness which is popularly supposed to be necessary to the second summer will be prevented.

It is not true that this is a particularly dangerous time for the baby. The fact is that about five times as many babies die in the first year of life as in the second and that the majority die in the first three months.

Both the first and second summers of a baby's life are hard on him. Excessive heat alone is sufficient to make a baby sick, and even properly fed babies may suffer in this way, but it is far worse for those who are already sick from other causes, the chief of which is improper feeding.

The following food is suitable for a baby of nine months of age, in addition to the milk prepared as directed in the last article:

Strained orange or prune juice may be given once a day after the baby is eight or nine months old unless his bowels have a tendency to looseness. It should be given midway between feedings—for instance, if he is fed every four hours the juice is given two hours after a bottle feeding or nursing. It is best to begin with a small amount, say two or three teaspoonfuls, and to increase slowly till one to three tablespoonfuls are given daily.

At nine months he may be given beef juice, beef tea or plain mutton or chicken broth once a day.

At ten months he may have one to two tablespoonfuls of cereal once a day. Wheat preparations or farina may be used, either of which should be well cooked for at least three-quarters of an hour in a double boiler.

At ten months he may have a small piece of toast or zwieback or a crust of bread to chew immediately after his midday feeding.

At twelve months he may have cereal twice a day. If oatmeal is used it must be cooked for three hours and strained.

The following diet may be recommended for a child at twelve or thirteen months:

6 a. m.—Milk, 8-10 ounces.
8 a. m.—Orange juice, 1-3 tablespoonfuls.
10 a. m.—Cereal, one or two tablespoonfuls with milk or stale bread and zwieback with milk, 6-8 ounces.
2 p. m.—Broth with stale bread or beef juice, one ounce with breadcrumbs.
6 p. m.—Same as 10 a. m.
10 p. m.—Milk, 8 ounces.

Give the baby only one new article of food at a time and watch its effect very carefully. If the bowels are disturbed, or the baby vomits withdraw the new food altogether until the attack is over.

Begin with very small quantities of any new food and increase it very slowly if it suits the baby. In this way the baby is gradually taught to eat new articles of food and to digest them properly, without having to suffer from needless illness.

Never give a baby sirup or molasses, candy, cake, doughnuts, pork or tough meat of any kind, bananas, pickles, tea or coffee. Do not let him eat between meals, but give him all the cool drinking water he wants.

Hanging Baskets.

Don't forget to suspend hanging baskets as near the light as possible, in windows or on porches. Remember that they are exposed to air on all sides and so dry out quickly and, therefore, need more water than boxes.

Many of the plants suggested for window boxes, especially the hanging ones, will do well in baskets. Do not have too many kinds of plants in one basket. You will find one or two more pleasing. For instance, the new weeping pink lantana, "Mrs. McKinley," makes a lovely basket by itself. So does asparagus plumosa or Sprengeri. Lobelia may be used alone, either the pale blue (Gracilis) or the pure white (White Gem).

ONE KILLED

Cabin." On going through City Square heavy black clouds gathered in the sky and a few drops of rain fell. It is thought they were trying to beat out the storm when the upset occurred.

Dr. Edward Merrill Currier was abou 60 years of age. He was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph M. Currier of Chelsea. His medical degrees were obtained from Boston University in 1881 and the University of Heidelberg, Germany, in 1883. He graduated from the Harvard Dental school in 1885.

In his early practice he was with the famous Dr. Duboll in Paris. In the 90's he returned to Boston and had an office at 3 Hamilton place.

He was affiliated with no dental associations and was not widely known in the profession. His practice was large, however, and included many theatrical people. He was an ardent "first nighter" and had many friends among the theatrical "old timers."

Dr. Currier was a wealthy man. His business income was large and two years ago he inherited property on the death of his father. He had summer homes at the Cape and in New Hampshire and owned many parcels of Boston real estate.

His mother is living at Point Allerton, Hull, and his only near relative is Mrs. Georgianna Nyman, wife of Rudolph F. Nyman of 991 Main street, Melrose.

The accident occured just below the home of Councilman Albert J. Williams, near the Kelliher estate and a short distance from where the auto chemical struck and broke a pole and plunged over a 14 foot embankment some weeks ago.

It is thought possible that when the car began to slew Dr. Currier told his wife to switch off the ignition. She turned the switch the wrong way and he then kicked it off with his foot. This might account for the explosions in the muffler. It is believed Dr. Currier applied the emergency brakes at the same time.

The machine was little damaged and was towed to the Central garage. Charles M. Hodgkinson, the proprietor, took the wheel and steered it down. This morning he said the only damage was to the mud guards, top and radiator. The steering wheel was bent back a little and the windshilde was smashed to bits. None of the four tires blew out.

BRIEFS

Instead of the evening sermons at Christ church during the summer months hymns will be sung.

Joe Clark and Edward A. Bean of Beacon street enjoyed a hundred mile automobile trip to Marlboro and back on Tuesday.

Newell O. Parker of Belmont street is slowly recovering from a severe attack of arsenical poisoning, caused by spraying trees.

A strong breeze was blowing off shore this morning which promises to give the sailing craft all the air they want for the yacht races this afternoon.

A special meeting of Quincy lodge of Elks is to be held Tuesday evening to hear and act on reports of nine applications for membership.

The regular monthly meeting of the Granite City club usually held on the second Saturday of the month will be ommitted this month.

The City Council committee on Ordinances meet Monday evening to act on proposed amendments to the building ordinance and the matter of establishing an inspection of wires ordinance.

FOREST FIRES.

Washington July 10: With the opening of the season of fire danger on most of the national forests the forest service is sending broadcast a warning that more than half of the forest fires in the United States are due to carelessness or other preventable causes, starting from campers, railroad locomotives, brush burning, incendiaries, and sawmills.

This statement is based on an analysis of statistics compiled from the forest fire records of the last season, when more than 7,000 fires were reported on national forests alone and approximately 10,000 on state and private holdings in the eighteen states which received federal cooperation in fire protection under the Weeks law, namely, Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts Conneticut, New York, New Jersey, Maryland, West Virginia, Kentucky, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, South Dakota, Montana, Idaho, Washington and Oregon.

Forest fires destroy millions of dollar's worth of timber and other property every year, and in some years cause considerable loss of life. It has been estimated from the best information obtainable that forest fires last year burned over an area of approximately 6,000,000 acres with a total loss of at least $9,500,000.

LUMBER FOR PHILIPPINES.

The Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce has issued a short monograph on "Philippine Markets for American Lumber," by Commercial Agent Franklin H. Smith, who is investigating the lumber trade in the Far East. The Philippine market, so far as imports are concerned, is dominated by American lumber. The Islands provided a market for more than $500,000 worth of forest products in the 12 months ended June 30, 1914, and practically the entire quantity represented by these figures was shipped from the Douglas fir mills of Washington and Oregon and the redwood mills of California.

Mr. Smith found, however, a sharp competition by native woods, and it is his opinion that this will inevitably become keener. Each succeeding year, he thinks, will witness an increasing cut of Philippine woods. The conclusion reached is that the prospective demand for American lumber in the Philippines is not particularly encouraging.

This publication may be obtained for 5 cents from the Superintendent of Documents, Washington, D. C. It is Special Agents Series No. 100.

"THE PRICE."

"The Price" the new serial story to be run in the Ledger combines interest of plot and adventure with a psychological element of profound significance. The hero, a sensitive young literary man of ideals, brought through failure to the point of starving, borrowing, or stealing, enraged by the terrible suffering of the poor in New Orleans, decides coolly to steal for the benefit of those in want. His own want, and the cruelty to the poor acting on his strong but impressionable nature, too proud to borrow, make him a sincere anrchist. Had he not been sincere he would never have been the courageous and forceful robber he was.

The crime committed, the story becomes one of flight and pursuit, on the surface; of the hero's gradual recogniton of the true significance of his act, beneath it, a story that is daringly original and bewilderingly rapid.

A surprising series of adventures follows, during which concealment and escape necessarily become the idealist's sole concern and thus contribute to his rapid moral disintegration. How he is saved both materially from the police and morally from himself, so that he pays "The Price" and voluntarily expiates his crime, is an absorbing study.

His rescuer is one of the most charming and original girls of fiction—American to the core and with a combined elevation of character and executive ability that constitutes a winning as well as effective type.

CARE OF BABY IN SUMMER.

The Second Summer.

A wide-spread and deep-rooted belief prevails among mothers that the "second summer" is an especially perilous time for the baby, and consequently, one to be greatly feared.

The facts, however, do not support this belief. Official figures show that about five times as many babies die in the first year of life as in the second, and that nearly two-thirds of the babies who die in the first year of life die in the first three months. These figures show conclusively, therefore that the great loss of infant life takes place among very young babies, and that if a baby has survived this early period his chance of living to grow up is greatly increased.

The reason the "second summer" has acquired this partly undeserved reputation for danger lies very largely in the fact that babies are often made sick because mothers make many mistakes in feeding a baby after he is weaned and before his digestion is able to deal with ordinary family meals.

The fear of the second summer results also from the fact that the baby is getting his teeth at this ime. Although the teething process some times is unjustly blamed for causing illness, babies are, no doubt, often upset by the pain of teething and do, therefore, suffer more readily from mistakes in feeding.

A third reason why the second summer makes babies sick applies equally to the first summer, that is, the excessive heat affects them badly both directly and indirectly. Heat often spoils the milk and makes it unfit for the baby's use. But even a properly-fed baby may be made sick when the weather is very hot.

A long continued spell of extreme heat is very hard on babies of all ages, and the greatest care is needed to avoid every other cause of illness at this time and to prevent by every possible means an attack of summer diarrhea.

The greatest safeguard which the mother can throw about her baby in the second summer is to see that he has proper food, at regular intervals in suitable quantities, and to keep him cool. A baby who is about 9 or 10 months at the beginning of summer should, if possible, continue at the breast until September, because even two or three breast feedings a day may be enough to keep his digestion in good order; and in case he becomes ill, to save his life. The breast milk should be supplemented with two or three bottles of cows' milk properly prepared as directed in a former article in this series.

In addition, some other food may be given, but it must always be remembered that care in feeding the baby at this age is as important as in early infancy. Changes in the diet in summer should be made very cautiously. Only one new article of food should be added at a time. It should be given at first in very small quantities, and its effect on the baby carefully watched meanwhile.—Children's Bureau—U. S. Dept. Agriculture.

MAD DOG SCARE ON MOON ISLAND

Employees of Sewer Station Drive Him Into Room

SHOT BY DOG CATCHER

A small pet dog, suffering apparently from rabies, ran over the property of the City of Boston at Moon Island Sunday afternoon and alarmed the employees. They armed themselves with clubs and through strategy worked the canine into a small room where it was kept a prisoner until the police arrived and shot it.

The dog was brought to Squantum by a man and his wife who were spending the afternoon resting in the shade trees on the park at Squantum head. All three shared the large package of luncheon and shortly after the dog performed several funny stunts and then started for Moon island, over a mile away. Running at a good rate of speed the dog could plainly be seen as he traversed the mile road from the park to the gate house at the sewer station. The arrival at the station created consternation. Pick handles and large sticks were hurriedly seized for use and the dog was driven into a room. Timothy Callahan, superintendent of the island, summoned the police. Dog catcher David Gordon shot the animal.

Two other dogs met death in various parts of the city Sunday, the result, it is thought, of having been struck by automobiles. One body lay at Brook and Farrington streets and the other behind a fence on Revere road. The bodies were promptly removed by the police on notification.

POLICE SPEED TO SAVE BANK

But It Was Only Another False Alarm

The ringing of the burglar alarm in front of the rooms occupied by the Granite Trust Company at 2.30 Saturday afternoon caused a large crowd to collect in front of the banking rooms. Excitement was added when the police patrol with a squad of officers arrived. It was then learned that the door was no wholly shut and jarring open started the alarm.

The police made the run in less than 2 1-2 minutes, taking Elm street to Bigelow to Chestnut streets because of the confusion on Hancock street due to street repair work.

KAMP KWINZY BOYS HAVING GREAT TIME

Sunday was a gala one at Junior Kamp Kwinzy down at Oldham Pond for it was visitors day and parents and friends took their first opportunity to see their lads in camp. General Secretary Gaskell and Vice-president Pierce returned this morning after spending the week end there and report a satisfactory camp for the first year. The population is already fourteen and several more are planning to be on hand for the second week.

The boys were guests on Chapel Island at church service when Mr. Jones of Boston University spoke on "Earmarks of a Man." The singing also appealed to the boys.

Mr. Humphrey who is in charge of the camp has adopted the following schedules of activities. At 7 A. M. comes setting up drill, followed ten minutes later by the morning dip; and at 7:30 breakfast is in order. After breakfast comes a half hour of Bible study and then two hours of camp duty and sanitation, these are followed bp the morning swim. This much apparently has grown a good appetite for the 12:30 lunch. The early afternoon is consumed in sport and hikes and at 4:30 another swim is enjoyed. Supper comes at 5:30 and after supper there is a walk to the shore, a sing, etc., until 9 P. M., when lights are out.

Saturday morning the camp baseball team lost to the team from the Malden Congregational camp 10-2, are sure that they will win to-day in the second game. Davis and Mullen were in the points for Quincy

The party left Quincy at 2 o'clock and Revere beach was reached in good season.

Some spent the afternoon and evening in visiting the various places of amusement with which the beach abounds, some enjoyed a dance at one of the dance halls and others joined the crowd in bathing. The party left for home at 10 o'clock.

BOY SCOUTS LAWN PARTY

Memorial Church Co. Score Big Success

The lawn party of the Boy Scouts of Memorial Congregational church last Saturday on the Glover lot between Billings and Walker streets looked like a large Boy scout camp with the many small tents and the one large tent that were scattered around the lot. But each tent had some special feature conducted by at least two boys and in a few cases assisted by a mother or sisters.

The boys sold much more ice cream than they expected and ran out of cream long before the party closed. The home made candy tent was popular and was under the supervision of Miss Marjorie Young and Mrs. Thomas Peacock, assisted by Horace Young, George Burr and John Peacock.

The ice cream tent was under the supervision of Miss Augusta McMahon and Miss Colina Brown, assisted by Scouts Robert McBirnie and Ralph Coombs.

The pop corn tent was under the care of Scout Emerson.

The tent with fish pond was under the care of Scouts Ross, Rich and Young.

The lemonade tent was under the care of Mrs. Burton Pray assisted by scouts Wilmot Pray and Arthur Burr.

The mystery tent was under the direction of scout drummer and bugler Roland Newcomb and Sheldon Heap. Assistance was given by Assistant scout master Lawrence French and by Deacon John La Tour.

The boys took in close to fifty dollars.

Under the direction of scout Master George Brown a large tent had been purchased which will be used by the boys at their camp in Hanover.

ATLANTIC MENS CLUB OUTING

The annual outing and dinner of the Atlantic Mens club held at Salem Willows Saturday had the same enthusiastic party as the outing of a year ago.

The men sat down to dinner at Chase's restaurant at 2.15 and had a menu of clam chowder, fried perch, fried clams and lobster, chipped potatoes and French fried potatoes, rolls, coffee and ice cream.

After dinner Harry W. Read and William Coulson challenged each other to choose sides and have a bowling match. William Coulson's team was seven ahead at the end of the first string and the second the two teams were tied.

The men voted their satisfaction of Mr. Read's arrangements, and stated that next year, they hoped for an auto trip to the Wayside Inn.

MARK J. MERLINE.

Mark J. Merline, a well known Italian young man of Atlantic, died Sunday at his home, 383 Hancock street. He was in his 25th year. He is survived by four brothers and three sisters.

MAPLEWOOD INN AGAIN RAIDED BY POLICE OFFICERS

The Maplewood Motor Inn at East Braintree was suddenly closed at three o'clock Sunday morning when Braintree and Weymouth police raided the premises and seized what liquor was in the place. Chief Galvin said he would today apply for a warrant charging John Griffin, the proprietor, with violation of the liquor law.

The raid was made in true military style. The officers dashed up in autos, and while they surrounded the house, the chauffeurs turned the machines and blockaded the drive so the guests couldn't escape in ten high powered cars parked in the yard. The police cohorts were recruited from surrounding towns.

Chief Galvin led the party in and the 30 men and women guests, who the police say were wining and dining, singing and dancing, were thrown into a high state of excitement. Some screamed, some ran from room to room, and others attempted to flee through doors and windows.

One of the officers says an employee of the place seized what liquor he could and started throwing it to the cellar through an open fireplace. They say he was informed it was contraband and neutrality must be preserved.

The police carted away the liquor found, consisting of three cases of beer and five quarts of cocktails.

Chief Galvin of Braintree planned the raid. He took the names of all of the guests and said today he may use them as witnesses.

The premises assumed an unusually quiet appearance after the men and women realized they were not to be arrested. All are said to have been from Boston. The inn is located on the Amory estate on Quincy avenue, midst fine surroundings.

JUDGE AVERY ADVISES POLICE

Judge Avery gave the police officers a little friendly advice this morning when he suggested it was the best policy not to talk over cases before court with defendant's counsel.

The advice was given during the hearing of the case of Domenico Diuto of Braintree, charged with assault on Patrolman Shay of the town, when William Good of Randolph, counsel for Diuto, asked Chief Galvin if he didn't say on the way from the station that "Shay had no love for the Italians?"

The remark was denied by the chief. Judge Avery permitted a complete explanation at the close of which Chief Galvin said: "I didn't suppose you were going to use a friendly conversation in court. The next time you won't slip it across." "Well," answered the attorney, "You got away with it."

Patrolman Shay's evidence was objected to by Atty. Good but Judge Avery said Shay was a conscientious officer and his word should bear more weight than the interested parties.

The court then imposed a fine of $25 on Diuto and suspended sentence to July 36, 1916. A charge of drunkenness was filed. L. Bardini, arrested with Diuto, was fined $15 for drunkenness and sentence was suspended for the same term.

FAMELAR IS EXONERATED

Judge Avery Discharges Case Against Him

The charge of being a tramp in Milton was dismissed when Joseph Famelar , a Waterbury, Ct., mechanical draftsman, came into court this morning to withdraw an appeal from six months sentence in the House of oCrrection. Famelar expected to be placed in probation but because of the references from prominent business and professional men of his home city Judge Avery exonerated the young man.

Famelar has had an unusual experience. Tuesday he tried to borrow money from a stranger in Milton and was picked up as a tramp. The police could not substantiate his story Investigations by Probation Officer Fahy put him in the right light before the court after he had been a prisoner for seven days.

Until the references were received Famelar was quite a mystery. He had ten suits of clothes in his room at Readville, plenty of high priced shirts and seven dozen neckties, but he had no money. He claimed he lost the latter in a crush at the Forest Hill station last Monday night, and needing funds he attempted to borrow some, offering a pin set with a diamond as security.

He said he picked out a prosperous looking dwelling in Milton, believing his story would gain him assistance. The circumstances aroused the suspicion of Mrs. Charles Minot, whom he called upon, and she had the young man detained by the police. He was given six months on the charge of being a tramp and appealed on the suggestion of Judge Avery who also ordered an investigation. Today the fruits of the investigation became public and the young man was discharged. The references said he was energetic and ambitious and an expert draftsmen. New employment awaits him in Waterbury. His brother, who came here in response to a letter, accompanied him to his home.

POLICE MAKE TWO LIQUOR RAIDS SUNDAY

Inspector Goodhue said the supply in both houses was well iced up.

HOLD ANNUAL PICNIC.

The annual picinic of the parish and Sunday school of the Swedish Congregational church was held Saturday at Merrymount park. It was very largely attended and a good time enjoyed. The participants brought basket lunches which were placed on one large table. During the afternoon there was a short religious service. There were also games and out of door sports by the picnickers.

The feature of the afternoon was a baseball game between the single and married men. The game was a virtual see-saw from the fourth inning to the end of the game. The single men forged ahead when C. Manson hit a home run in the fourth inning and were not headed until the eighth inning. In the first of the ninth the single men won the game. Herb Johnson singling and winning his own game, scoring two runs.

The game was interesting from beginning to end on account of the numerous errors that were made by both sides. The mostinteresting feature of the game came in the first of the ninth. With three balls and two strikes on Carl Leander he hit the next ball at Paul Palmgren at about a mile a minute almost knocking him off his feet. The final score was 7 to 6.

Major F. E. Jones of the 5th regiment, who has been at West Point with the officers of the state militia, returned home this morning.

FORE RIVER IS BUILDING SUBMARINE FOR SPAIN

Is Of Latest Design And Will Be Delivered On Completion

The Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation has started to construct a submarine for Spain, to be delivered as soon as completed. The displacement of the craft will be about 750 tons and will be about the same size as the submarine M-1, being built at the shipyard for the United States.

The awarding of such a contract by Spain indicates activity in its naval circles and an attempt to keep up the submarine standard set by the countries of Europe, most of whom have now under construction submarines of about 800 tons.

The new submarine will have a radius of action of about 3000 miles, a surface speed of about 18 knots and a submerged speed of about 12 knots. By using her storage batteries alone she will probably be able to travel under water practically a whole day. On her deck she will carry rapid fire guns, designed to be completely closed when the vessel dives beneath the surface and it is understood that she will combine the directable torpedo tubes, making it unnecessary to maneuver the ship to aim at an enemy and adding enormously to the craft's offensive power.

How extensive the naval program of Spain is to be is not at present known, neither has the company announced the contract price involved but it is said to be close to a million dollars. The company, it is said, does not expect to establish a new record in turning out the new craft but they perhaps will lose no time in getting her off the ways.

QUINCY BOATS AT WINTHROP

The best of racing conditions prevailed Saturday at the annual open race of the Winthrop Yacht club. There was a steady breeze from the southwest, a smooth sea and a clear sky. A fleet of 70 yachts took part in the race, the largest of any of the open races thus far this year.

In Class A the "Areyto" of ex-Commodore Drew of the Squantum Yacht club led her class on the first leg, but lost ground on the home stretch and finished in fourth position. In Class I the "Dorchen II," of A. W. Findlay of the Quincy Yacht club carried off the honors with a lead of over a minute at the finish. In Class S, the race was between the "Waweenock" of the Wollaston club and the "Zoe" of Squantum club, the former winning by a good margin.

Local interest as usual centered in the Class D boats, composed wholly of boats hailing from Quincy waters. All of the scrappers were out and as usual the race was an interesting one. The "Almira" of Dr. H. A. Jones got the gun at the finish but lost first position to the "Clara" on time allowance by 37 seconds. The "Dartwell" was a good third. The summary of this class :

The fourth race in the series under the auspices of the Squantum Yacht club for the Hayes cup as well as a regular club race was held Sunday by the club. Both races were called in the morning. The first race was the club race which was sailed in a fluky wind over a triangular course of 7 1-2 miles. Six yachts participated in the race and the "Sinbad" was an easy winner on both actual and corrected time.

Immediately following this a race of the 18-footers for the Hayes cup was held. The race was easily won by the "Cheroot" with the "Reina" second. The "Dorothy" and "Miladi II" crossed the line neck and neck. The summary of the two races.

ARREST SPEED MANIACS

The terrible accident on Quincy avenue Friday evening points at least one very clear moral. Although the exact circumstances of the accident are not known, perhaps never will be known, it is perfectly apparent that the chief cause was excessive speed. The automobile must have been travelling at a rate of at least 50 miles an hour to cause it to turn turtle and regain its upright position.

Now, there can be no question that such a speed within the limits of a city is fraught with danger not only to those within the car of the speed maniac but to passing vehicles and pedestrians. We do not know what speed the machine in question maintained when it passed through the business section of the city. We do know that automobiles daily travel through main streets of this city at too fast a rate. If Quincy had a reputation for enforcing the speed laws the accident probably would not have happened, at least until the car had passed beyond our boundaries.

The town of Hingham by an absurd, over-zealous administration of the speed laws has made itself the automobilist's nightmare. It is not necessary to go to such an extreme, nor indeed is it desirable. Signs which order a speed of not more than eight miles an hour are usually set up by persons with more zeal than brains. A reasonable speed, taking into account the time of day, the state of the traffic and other necessary features, should be permitted in Quincy. But the police of this city are failing in their duty if they permit automobiles to speed along Hancock and Washington streets at 30 miles an hour. A few arrests would stop a practice all too prevalent.

COUNCILMAN McGRATH.

We were especially pleased to receive the communication from Councilman McGrath which was printed in Saturday's issue. The councilman wrote of the street loan orders, over which the body to which he belongs have been deliberating without result, for some time. Mr. McGrath is a distinct addition to the City Council. Meaning no disrespect we term him "the watch-dog of the city treasury." Sometimes the city treasury badly needs a watch-dog. With all of Councilman McGrath's conclusions we do not happen to agree. We feel, however, that his conclusions are those of a man always seeking the best for the city. Able, earnest, impartial, ever striving for the best interests of his fellow citizens, Councilman Thomas J. McGrath is a public servant of whom the city should be proud and whom the voters should long seek to retain in office.

STOP THIS CHILDISHNESS.

Encouraging word comes from Providence, R. I. to the effect that Mrs. Richard Percival of that city, a recent bride, has brought action for $10,000 damages against three former friends, who, for a joke, abducted her on the night of her wedding and kept her imprisoned until the following day. The three abductors take the suit as a joke. They may change their minds when they come to face a court trial. It would be a salutary lesson for these grown-up children and for others of their ilk if they had to pay a good substantial sum. This kind of horseplay should not be permitted in a civilized community and persons who are not weak or silly enough to put up with it should be permitted to appeal with success to the courts.

WANTS AERO CORPS

Both the War and Navy Departments, realizing the necessity of forming an aeronautical reserve composed of volunteers, are planning for the eventual organization of fifteen aviation squadrons for the National Guard and twenty-two squadrons for the Naval Militia of the states.

The Navy, while anxious to provide all the aeroplanes necessary to form aviation corps for the Naval Militia, is handicapped through its limited appropriations, and has asked the commanding officers to cooperate with the Aero club of America in raising a fund by public subscription; and in getting suitable men to volunteer their services for these corps. The Navy is willing to train these men at its own aeronautical centre.

The freedom with which any old jitney can chug its way about the city suggests that Quincy's talented representatives on Beacon Hill should seek to push through the legislature a bill regulating aeroplanes, or some morning we will wake up to find the Quincy Consolidated Aeroplane-Jitney Service Co., plying its trade in the pure air above us, unhampered by rules and regulations.

The death of the former chief of the Boston Fire Department, John A. Mullen, will be a cause of grief to many admirers throughout the state. This famous fire fighter has a record almost unequalled in the roll call of his profession. His death was not a surprise because the ex-chief has steadily failed in health since his retirement in March, 1914. John A. Mullen felt life hardly worth fighting for since his life's work was done.

The four columns of social items in Saturday's Ledger indicate that despite the weather the city's social life is by no means standing still.

Nothing else has improved so much as the grammar and the literary style of the former writers of best sellers who now compose film dramas.

Wall street ought hto have made things so pleasant for Huerta that he would not have been tempted away by the martial music of Mexico.

Owing to the pressure of circumstances the sob specialists who used to haunt the Thaw Trials have largely adopted other and better callings.

Secretary Lansing's quiet and uneventful past is going to give the muckrakers some hard digging.

PARENTS AND MORALS.

It is a pertinent inquiry which the New York World makes in asking, "What are mothers doing while their daughters are at the dances and picture shows?" This is the question which could be asked fittingly in a great many cases where young people have reached a stage of morality which calls for the attention of the police.

The small indiscretions, the early neglect that leads later to alarm, are things which parents are too ready to accept as part of the inconvenience of children. But the responsibility of parents cannot safely be shifted. The old fashioned companionship between children and their elders is a thing that should be encouraged. One good point that has been claimed for the new dances is that they have appealed to young and old alike and have kept together the diverging tastes of family life.

Of course, there will always exist the natural differences between youth and age, and the conservatism that is more or less inevitable with advanced years will find something of contrast in the rash impetuosity of the young. But both elements have possibility of attraction and mutual enjoyment. The parents who find pleasure in the society of their children, who are sympathetic but not unreasonably indulgent, will have a moral influence that no other artifical arrangement of life can effect.—Haverhill Gazette.

GETTING THE NEWS

Do you know that an editor or a reporter for a newspaper can in his rounds stop and ask a hundred persons, "What is the news?" and ninety out of the hundred will reply, "Nothing special," and yet 50 out of that number know something that, if not found in the next paper, will astonish them greatly and disappoint them more, and perhaps make them madder than hornets. Don't be afraid to let the newspaper man know it.—Mansfield News.

Washington Favors Rejection of Germany's Suggestions

DESIRE TO AVOID ULTIMATUM

May Be Only Means, However, by Which Deadlock Can Be Broken—Unsatisfactory Note to President Believed to Have Been Influenced by Resignation of Bryan

Washington, July 12.—Consideration of the next step to be taken by the United States to impress upon Germany the fact that no further trifling will be tolerated by the American government engages the grave and earnest thought of official Washington.

Now that the first shock caused by the document from the kaiser's government has been succeeded by calmer analysis of its proposals, sentiment in Washington is unanimous and strongly in favor of an immediate rejection of all its suggestions.

Just what form the notice to the kaiser that the United States cannot entertain his proposals will take will be decided by President Wilson at a conference with Secretary of State Lansing, which will be held at Cornish.

The trend of discussion in Washington indicates that the third note to be sent to Berlin by President Wilson will be a brief restatement of the American position, coupled with a refusal to consider the German counter proposals, and a formal notification that the United States realizes the nation's duties toward American citizens and will fulfill those duties without flinching, whatever course of action may become necessary.

The president is known to be desirous of avoiding the appearance of delivering an ultimatum to Germany. In the situation that now exists, however, diplomatists do not see how the deadlock can be ended unless a sharp rejoinder is made to the latest German note in which a request will be made for prompt answer to the American demands that American citizens shall not again be endangered by German methods of sea warfare.

Germany's evasion of this issue and her silence on the subject of disavowal of the sinking of the Lusitania are regarded as most discourteous. It is not customary for a great power to refuse to answer a plain question put by another great power.

Anger was openly expressed in official circles in Washington over the persistent reports from Berlin that the German government was influenced in sending an unsatisfactory reply to President Wilson by the belief that the resignation of William J. Bryan had weakened the support given to President Wilson by the American people.

There is little doubt that these reports are correct and that the kaiser's diplomatists have believed that Bryan's objections to the president's policy of protecting citizens in their rights has had the effect of dividing public sentiment in the United States.

The question as to whether James W. Gerard, American ambassador to Germany, will be recalled will not be decided until after the president's third note has been sent to Berlin. All of Germany's actions since the sinking of the Lusitania have revealed a disposition to gain time rather than to meet the issue squarely.

THE HOLT INQUEST

Neither Warden Nor Sheriff Are Expected to Testify

New York, July 12.—While a sweeping investigation into the conditions in the Nassau county jail, at Mineola, L. I., where Frank Holt, assailant of J. P. Morgan, committed suicide, is promised, there is no intimation as to the nature of the probe.

The board of county supervisors formally announced that only through gross negligence was it possible for Holt to kill himself. District Attorney Smith says "there is nothing to investigate."

On Friday the inquest will be resumed. Five prisoners are to testify, but as far as can be learned Warden Hults, who was in charge at the jail on the night that Holt killed himself, has not been recalled from his camp in the Adirondacks. Sheriff Pettit, now at the Elks' convention in San Francisco, has not been informed of the developments in the case.

Archbishop Quigley of Chicago Dies at Home of His Brother

Rochester, N. Y., July 12.—James E. Quigley, Catholic Archbishop of Chicago, died at the home of his brother, Chief of Police Joseph M. Quigley, here. One of the physicians said that death had resulted from paralysis, pneumonia and oedema (filling up) of the lungs.

Quigley was known as a profound logician, a scholar and a linguist, and one of the most unostentatious and conservative prelates of the Catholic church in the United States.

He was born in Oshawa, Ont., in 1854. When he was 3 years old the family home was established in Rochester. He was the eldest son of a large family and a relative, Rev. Edward Quigley of Buffalo, took a great interest in him and directed his education from his first school days.

INCREASE GRANTED 16,000 CARPENTERS

Compromise Ends Great Labor Struggle at Chicago

Chicago, July 12.—The strike of 16,000 carpenters, on since May 1, and which has resulted in economic and actual loss of millions, is over.

The settlement was a victory for the men. They were granted an increase to 70 cents an hour under a uniform agreement, to continue in force three years.

The settlement is regarded by both sides as a compromise. The carpenters had demanded a sliding wage scale of 70 cents for the first year, 72½ cents for the second and 75 cents for the third. The men, previous to the strike, had been paid 66 cents an hour.

LED ADVENTUROUS CAREER

George D. Morgan, Cousin of Financier, Dies In Spain

New York, July 12.—After an adventurous and romantic career, George D. Morgan of New York and Paris, cousin of J. P. Morgan, dropped dead in Seville, Spain. His death was announced by the American consul at Seville.

He had traveled much abroad, and many stories were told of his escapades in Paris and of his rich gifts to acquaintances of the moment. His gaming adventures, it was said, led him into such financial straits that he was a tramp at one time.

He married Miss Yuki Kato at Yokohama, Japan, Jan. 21, 1904. When Morgan brought her to New York the cold shoulder was turned to them, although his father received them, the family disapproving of the marriage. Mrs. Morgan was a Buddhist.

DRESSER A SUICIDE

Former Power In Financial World Had Lost His Fortune

New York, July 12.—Failure to recoup his lost fortune is held responsible for the suicide of Daniel Le Roy Dresser, formerly a power in the financial life of this city.

President In Motor Crash

LARGE NUMBER AT CITY PLAYGROUNDS

The city playgrounds made a new record for attendance for the opening week despite the fact that they were open but 3.1-2 days. The grand total was 4146, Ward 3 leading with 2316, on one day having over 700 youngsters on the field.

Atlantic made a fine showing indeed for a new playground, having a total of 700, with no apparatus at all but a slide and base ball as attractions. It is hoped to have all of apparatus in shape this week.

It is planned to organize a league among the different playgrounds taking in Ward 2, 3, 6 and the new Massachusetts Field Grammar school grounds. Games will be played at the various home fields and the final one at Merrymount park.

Ward Two has already elected its captains for its local league selecting the following bdys: Tigers, W. Moody; Red Sox: J. Gamble: Athletes, R. Greer; Indians; J. Gallagher.

BLACKHANDER IS UNDER RESTRAINT

Frank Zeni, the Austrian who was before the district court a month ago charged with sending black hand letters to his Italian father-in-law, John Corella of West Quincy, was sent to police headquarters Saturday evening and was immediately taken to the Taunton Insane Hospital for observation. He was taken over by auto and his custodians said he appeared to have enjoyed the ride as much as anyone.

SUFFRAGE RALLY.

The prospects of carrying out the proposed suffrage rally Saturday evening at the foot of Beach street at the junction of the Boulevard became doubtful when the question arose as to whether the traffic at this busy corner would be blocked. The rally was held, however, through the generosity of Mr. and Mrs. McNamara who gave the use of their veranda and fawn to the speakers.

When the suffrage auto arrived flying the familiar orange and black banner it was greeted by a cheer from those who had gathered to hear the address. Mrs. Gertrude Newell of Brookline, chairman of the Norfolk County Campaign, introduced Miss Helen Goodnow also of Brookline who spoke for half an hour or more along the lines of democracy applied to Equal Suffrage.

Mrs. Newell finished the address speaking of the effect of suffrage on the woman in the home, also answering a number of questions bearing on the subject asked her by individuals. At the conclusion of the rally pledge cards were signed and a number of buttons sold.

This evening the Norfolk County Campaigners will be in North Weymouth.

WORK WEARS ON THE KIDNEYS

Doan's Kidney Pills Have Done Great Service for People Who Work in Quincy

Many Quincy people work every day in some strained, unnatural position—bending constantly over a desk—riding on jolting wagons or cars—doing laborious housework; lifting, reaching or pulling, or trying the back in a hundred and one other ways. All these strains tend to wear, weaken and injure the kidneys until they fall behind in their work of filtering the poisons from the blood. Doan's Kidney Pills are for weak kidneys and bad backs. Their effective work in Quincy is convincing proof of merit.

Mrs. Frank G. Pratt, 22 Edward St., Quincy, says: "I had weakness of the kidneys and severe attacks of backache. I was so tired in the morning that I could hardly attend to my work. I was about discouraged and hardly knew what to do. Doan's Kidney Pills did me more good that I expected. I have kept Doan's Kidney Pills in the house ever since and I know that they are a reliable kidney medicine."

TYPHOID FEVER IN THE UNITED STATES

An editorial in the Journal of the American Medical Association, April 17th, says in part, "It is evident that Typhoid Fever is on the way to become a relatively rare disease in many parts of the United States. There are two main reasons for this. First, there are now comparatively few large cities in which the public water supply is likely to contain Typhoid Bacteria. Second, the increase in the practice of pasteurization has resulted in a dimunition in the amount of milk borne typhoid."

The Elm Farm Milk Company complying with the general demand by the Medical Profession and Sanitarians, were one of the first to scientifically pasteurize their milk. This milk is offered at the same price that rules for ordinary milk.

FIGHT FOLLOWS DISPUTE OVER HAT OWNERSHIP

A dispute over the ownership of a straw hat resulted in the arrest Saturday night at Houghs Neck of Herbert W. Farnum of Brockton and Francis Blake of Dorchester. The dispute is said to have started in a dance hall and was discontinued when Patrolman Fallon advised them to leave the premises. Both men went up the street a short way and commenced to "mix it up." Farnum was arrested on a charge of drunkenness.

This morning his case was filed on payment of $5 costs. Blake ran when he saw the officer approaching. Patrolman Connolly gave chase and caught him. Blake was charged with assault and battery, because he hit Farnum. His case was also filed on payment of $5 costs. The same initials in the hat are said to have caused the disagreement.

AUTOMOBILES OUT IN FORCE

Sunday was a beautiful day for automobiling and thousands of cars of all makes passed through Quincy. There was a constant stream going in both directions on Adams street all day until late in the evening. It is said that Adams street is the second heaviest travelled street in the commonwealth The street is rather narrow between Presidents bridge and Hancock street and to the credit of the drivers of the cars, it can be said that no great speed is attempted and that they drive with caution. At times Sunday the cars were so numerous it was almost impossible for pedestrians to cross the street near the junction of the two streets.

ROMANCE HAS HAPPY ENDING

A romance which had its beginning at the time the commission of the Argentine government was at the Fore River yards during the building of the superdreadnaught Rivadavia, was consummated Sunday when Joseph Curtis Gonzales of 128 Upland rd. was united in marriage to Miss Pearl Russell Graham of 200 West street

Mr. Gonzales was a clerk in the office of the Argentine commission while it was in Quincy, taking his meals in a City square restaurant, where Miss Graham was employed. The friendshiv formed here ripened into love and Sunday they were married by Rev. D. B. McLeod of the United Presbyterian church. Mr. and Mrs. Gonzales left immediately after the ceremony for a brief wedding trip to New York.

Young Conquerors.

Napoleon said that a man ages quickly on battlefields. Speaking of one of his generals, he said at Austerlitz that Ordener was worn out, adding: "One has a short time for war. I am good for another six years, and then I shall have to stop."

"Strangely enough," says Lord Rosebery in "The Last Phase," "his judgment was exactly verified. Six years and a month from Austerlitz (which was fought on Dec. 2, 1805) would have brought him to 1812, to the Russian campaign, which, if he had observed his own rule, he would have avoided."

When his "star" was eclipsed for ever at Waterloo he was but forty-six years of age, but he had been a broken man in body, and to an increasing extent in mental power, long before. Wellington fought his last battle at forty-six, Ney at forty-five, Nelson at forty-seven. Alexander the Great was only thirty-three when death ended his career of conquest. Hannibal was in his forty-sixth year when he was finally defeated at Zama by Scipio.

A Pair of Eminent Grave Diggers.

The profession have a saying that parts make actors. When the $20,000 benefit to Lester Wallack was given in New York, with one of the historic "Hamlet" casts of the century, the public, of course, expected to see a performance that could never be forgotten because of its all round greatness. There was disappointment for the expectant innocents. All star casts want proportion, and this particular performance of the sublime tragedy was "queer."

For example, Joseph Jefferson and William J. Florence played the gravediggers, and in their dressing room after Horatio's "there crack'd a noble heart," Mr. Jefferson said to his companion:

"Billy, whose lines were you speaking, anyway?"

"Bacon's, I guess," Florence replied.

"Perhaps," mused gentle Joe. "I knew they weren't Shakespeare's."—Detroit Free Press.

The Firlinfoens.

At Brianza, in Lombardy, there flourishes a very curious sort of band, all the members of which play the same kind of instrument, known as the "firlinfoens." This corresponds to what we know as "panpipes" and is constructed of reeds fastened side by side, the bass pipes being often several feet long, while the others gradually decrease in size.

The "firlinfoens," as the players are called, after their instruments, are as a rule ignorant of music and they learn their tunes by ear, often from a phonograph. It is said that the panpipe players experience all the sensations of intoxication after a march due to the energetic blowing and the constant wagging of the head to and fro. The music, although conveying to the stranger at first a most curious effect, is said to be not unpleasant.—Washington Star.

The March to Mecca.

The great caravan which every year sets out from Cairo for Mecca has a conductor on a camel leading the way. Day and night, whatever the weather is, he remains without any covering, naked to the waist. With him march men with large torches, which are kept alight during the night and illuminate the column of smoke above them, so that it appears a pillar of fire. During the day, when the head of the caravan is difficult to see on account of intervening hills and mounds of sand, the torches are kept burning, so that instead of the light which served during the night a column of smoke indicates to the straggling caravan from afar the direction of the march and the time and place of a halt.

The Professor's Reproof.

During a certain athletic event at a big university the students of a certain professor's class, well aware that their studies had been neglected, were prepared for reproof, but not for just the way in which it came.

At the end of the hour the professor slammed down his book on the desk and exclaimed:

"That's the worst recitation I ever listened to. Why, I've actually done nine-tenths of it myself."—Exchange.

Repudiated.

"I'm a self made man," said Mr. Cumrox.

"Didn't your wife have something to do with your career?"

"She used to say so. But after seeing how I behave in society she refuses to take any of the blame."—Brooklyn Citizen.

Two Definitions.

Bobby—Pop, what is reason? Fond Parent—Reason, my boy, is that which enables a man to determine what is right. Bobby—And what is instinct? Fond Parent—Instinct is that which tells a woman she is right whether she is or not.—Exchange.

A RARE DECORATION.

The grand cross of the order of Maria Theresa is today one of the most exclusive as well as one of the most brilliant of surviving orders. It was founded by the great empress of that name in 1757 in honor of the victory of her troops over Frederick the Great at Kolin. Its members are elected by ballot on the part of the chapter, the sovereign having no voice in the matter unless he happens to possess the order, although he is the instrument of its bestowal and the signer of the patent.

In the past hundred years, until August, 1914, only fifty-eight members had been thus admitted to the order, and at the beginning of the war in 1914 there were but three knights left, all of the third and lowest class. One was the Emperor Francis Joseph, who won the cross in 1848 on the battlefield of Santa Lucia against the Italians. The second was the Duke of Cumberland, father of the sovereign Duke of Brunswick, who received the cross for gallantry at the battle of Langensalza, where as crown prince of Hanover he helped his father, the blind King George, to direct the operations of his troops. The third was Prince Alphonse de Bourbon, claimant to the throne of the two Sicilies and popularly known as the Count of Caserta. He won his cross by the part he played in the superb defense of Gaeta, the last stronghold of the Bourbons.

The eldest son of the holder of this coveted decoration is entitled to free education in Austria's military academy.—Argonaut.

HOUDON, THE SCULPTOR.

Known In This Country Mainly by His Statue of Washington.

Since the days of the cathedral builders France has never been without great masters of the chisel. Traditions and an ever accumulating skill have been passed on as from father to son through generations immemorial. With all that "apostolic succession" of genius we of another race are strangely unfamiliar. One name, however, we associate with that of our first president, and for this reason, and not because Jean Antoine Houdon was the leading sculptor of his time, is he sometimes mentioned in the United States.

As the "first sculptor of his day" Houdon was invited in 1784 by Thomas Jefferson, representing the state of Virginia, to make a statue of General Washington. On July 28, 1785, the sculptor with three assistants sailed in the company of Benjamin Franklin from Southampton, bound for Philadelphia. The journey required nearly two months and Houdon did not arrive at Mount Vernon until Oct. 2.

Two weeks were occupied in modeling the bust, making a life mask, and taking many measurements, with all of which the artist departed rejoicing, and, thanks to the rapid ocean service of the time, was home again on Christmas day.

The result of this trip was the notable marble which stands in the state house at Richmond, our most trustworthy portrait of the first president.—Scribner's.

The Popular Craze.

"Sir," said the young man, "I want to marry your daughter."

"You do, eh? What have you got to offer?"

"Myself, which includes a fair education, a good state of health, a reasonable amount of ambition, a creditable appearance, a modest salary and a strong desire to come into your office and get useful."

The older man shook his head.

The young man smiled.

"Now for my trump card," he said. "Everybody is eloping. We will elope and save the expense."

The old man caught his hand.

"Yes; not only that, but he believes that ages hence they will be able to converse with one another."

"Oh, that's old!"

"What's old?"

"Vegetables conversing. I've often heard 'Jack and the Beans-talk!'"

TRY THIS ON YOUR PIANO.

The following little song was taken from a circular issued by the Hearthstone of Chicago and is by E. F. McIntyre. They do not state whether or not it is to be sung to the tune of "The 5.15." Neither do we, but you might try it.

There was an old geezer and he had a lot of sense;
He started up a business on a dollar-eighty-cents—
The dollar for stock and the eighty for an ad
Brought him three lovely dollars in a day, by dad!
Well, he bought more goods and a little more space
And he played that system with a smile on his face.
The customers flocked to his two-by-four
And soon he had to hustle for a regular store.
Up on the square, where the people pass,
He gobbled up a corner that was all plate glass.
He fixed up the windows with the best that he had
And he told 'em all about it in a half-page ad.
He soon had 'em coming and he never, never quit
And he wouldn't cut down on his ads one jit.
Well, he's kept things humping in the the town ever since
And everybody calls him the Merchant Prince.
Some say it's luck, but that's all bunk—
Why, he was doing business when the times were punk.
People have to purchase and the geezer was wise—
For he knew the way to get 'em was to advertise.

BETHANY CHURCH.

In these times when so many people think that churches should close during the summer months it is worth while to vote that Bethany church finds it worth while to keep open so that its own members as well as the stranger or visitor in our city over Sunday may have a place to worship and to attend the Bible school.

Both the morning and evening services of Bethany church are well supported and the attendance at the Bible school is breaking all summer records as to numbers, and a few figures may be of interest. The average attendance for the past six months was 515. The average attendance for the four Sundays in June was 419. The attendance Sunday, July 4th, was 349, and last Sunday it was 368, showing that many are pleased to avail themselves of the privileges and enjoy the benefits of Bible study in Bethany Bible school.

FOR ORCHARD OWNERS

Washington, D. C. July 10—"Worming" and painting the trunks of the trees are recommended to owners of apple orchards as efficient methods of dealing with the roundheaded appletree borer in a new Farmers' Bulletin, No. 675, of the U. S. Department of Agriculture. A heavy application of some paint that will not hound the trees but will remain in an unbroken coat on the bark for two or three months is effective in preventing the female from laying her eggs in the tree, and greatly reduces the amount of worming or the removal of the insects with a knife and wire, that must be done.

The roundheaded apple-tree borer, the most destructive of a number of similar pests, lays its eggs in or under the bark of apple trees. After hatching the larvae feed upon the inner bark and wood to such an extent that the tree is seriously weakened or killed. The pest is found over the whole of the eastern portion of the United States and as far west as Nebraska, Kansas and New Mexico. In addition to fruit trees it feeds on service, wild crab and mountain ash trees, which maks it advisable for orchardists to remove these varieties for a distance of at least a hundred yards from their orchard.

The female lays her eggs, one at a time, in an incision she has made in the bark, usually just above the surface of the ground. About 15 or 20 days later the eggs hatch and the larvae appear. When full grown these are nearly an inch and a half in length They first attack the inner bark, eating out broad, more or less circular galleries and thrusting out through small holes in the bark castings which form little heaps of reddish wood fragments around the base of the tree. During the winter the borers are quiescent but early in the folowing spring they attack the solid wood, while some of them work their way up the trunk. These last spend one or more winter in the tree and then, having passed through the pupal stage, dig their way out and emerge as adult beetles. Three years are required for the insect to complete its development from egg to adult.

Ordinarily, the beetle lives about 40 or 50 days. It is aboutthree-fourths of an inch in length, light brown in color above, with two broad white bands, joined in front, extending the full length of the back; the underparts and front of the head are white. The females rarely fly any considerable distance, so that if the immediate vicinity of an orchard can be kept free from them, there is little danger of a serious infestation.

The most common method of ridding an orchard of these pests is to cut away the bark sufficiently to trace the burrows made by the borer. A hooked wire is then inserted into the burrow and the insect pulled out. If made with care, the wound in the tree caused by this process will heal rapidly. The castings at the base of the tree serve as an indication of the presence of the borers. Where the burrows are curved or obstructed in some way so that the wire can not be inserted, cotton batting dipped in carbon bisulphid should be inserted and the hole then plugged with moist earth. The gas from the carbon bisulphid will penetrate all parts of the burrow and kill the borer.

In addition to worming, as this process is called, paint is often used to prevent the beetles laying their eggs. Pure white lead and raw linseed oil, mixed rather thick, will not injure the trees, and when applied to young, smoth bark, will form a protctive coat during the egg-laying season. It is probable that this is a more eeffective method than wrapping the trees with building paper, cotton batting, cloth or other materials sometimes used for this purpose. Before painting, however, the earth should be removed from the base of the tree for a depth of from 3 to 4 inches. The surface of the trunk thus exposed should be first scraped and painted and the earth then replaced. This is necessary, for the beetle occasionally lays her eggs under instead of above the ground.

SHOW IMPROVEMENT.

Mrs. Jessie A. Lewis of Shreveport, Louisana, and Mrs. Alma E. Currier, wife of Dr. Edward M. Currier, injured in the automobile accident on Quincy avenue Friday evening in which Dr. Currier was killed, were reported at the City Hospital this noon as showing steady improvement. Dr. W. L. Sargent says although too early to state definitely he believes they have a good chance for recovery. They are still on the danger list.

MANUFACTURERS TEAM RESULTS

Gen. Electrics 2, Gray & Davis 0.

The Fore River team took the lead in the Manufacturers league Saturday by defeating C. H. Bird & Son's aggregation at East Walpole by a score of 5 to 1. Both teams were tied for first place with seven wins and one loss when the game started.

The Fore Rivers believe they will go through the rest of the season undefeated and that the championship is practically assured. The Bird and Sons team faces teams the rest of the season which have been defeated by Fore River. From now on the second division teams will fight hard to be thorns in the sides of the leaders.

Saturday's game early developed into a pitchers battle between Knight of Fore River and Larry Donovan, the centre of the Bird fortifications, with the former having a slight advantage.

Gorman, Galvin and Duggan, excelled for the winners and Wilson, Smith and Dana for the losers.

Gorman played a particularly brilliant game, and was faster than he was at any time while playing with Weymouth High schol this season. In the second inning he started a double play, which pulled his team out of a pinch, by taking a hard liner off Smith's bat and throwing out Walsh at first. In the last inning he handled Rice's grounder in fine style and made a pretty play.

When Rice grounded the ball Smith who was forced, raced to second. Gillis planked himself on the bag to take the throw but Gorman, wishing to make the third and last out of the game, sprinted toward the sack. He slid into the bag and reached before the runner.

Duggan hit like a shot, all his singles going over second. Galvin excelled on base running. Bradley in the first inning pulled Fore River out of a hole. Wilson the first man up doubled and took an immediate lead off second as the ball was being chased. Bradley got the ball, relayed to Gillis and Wilson was run down by Gillis and Cain. Desmond played well at first.

Lefty Ford made an unusual catch of a long drive between left and centre. He and Galvin were both playing deep when Hawkins poled it out. They ran like demons to cut off the smash. Ford reached it, making an elegant catch.

McCune, a former New England leaguer and chief of police at Medway, umpired the game. Knight fanned 10 and allowed three hits. Donovan struck out eight and was hit for five safeties. Five errors by Bird were costly.

The Birds' only run came in the fourth innings. Dana doubled to right field and went to third on a play by Desmond to get Hawkins at first who hit near the initial sack. Walsh followed McCarthy who fanned, and sent the ball down the third base line. The ball hit Cain on the leg, rolled away and Dana scored.

The Fore Rivers made their first scores in the fourth inning. Duggan started the session with a single. Ford reached when Donovan hit him. Galvin singled fast between first and second and the ball went by right field. Duggan and Ford scored.

With two out in the eighth inning Fore River added another run. Cain hit to short where the ball was fumbled. Duggan singled to left and Cain went to third. While Duggan played off and Donovan pegged across trying to catch him, Cain stole home.

The ninth inning brought two more runs. Galvin led off with a single and Bradley hit through Hawkins at second. Galvin went from first to home on it beating out the throw from the outfield. Knight hit to Hawkins and Bradley crossed the plate on a fielder's choice. The summary:

GREEK COLONY MUCH EXCITED

Vendetta at Lynn Is Assuming Serious Aspect

STABBING OF MISS PAPPAS

Followed by Killing of Alleged Betrayer, Whose Uncle In Turn Shoots Brother of Slayer—Neither the Wounded Man or Woman Expected to Recover

Lynn, Mass., July 12.—Five hundred Greeks in this city are on the verge of civil war as a result of a vendetta which has broken out between the families of James Pappas and Charles Hatgetakis, principals in the killing of Hatgetakis, an occurrence which had a sequel in the probably fatal shooting of Pappas' brother Charles by John Lamprepoulo, an uncle of Hatgetakis.

To date the developments have included the stabbing of Annie Pappas, 17, who is not expected to recover; the fatal shooting of Hatgetakis, and the arrest of James Pappas and the shooting of Charles Pappas and arrest of Lamprepoulos.

Last night's shooting, which will in all probability have a tragic end, occurred in a coffee house on Andrew street.

Lamprepoulos, who is 30 years old, entered the place and saw the brother of the man who had shot his nephew sitting at at a table. He walked up to him, and with no other greeting than "I see you're here yet," whipped out a gun.

He then, as the police say, shot Pappas in the back, the bullet taking an upward course and reaching the right shoulder. Pappas is now at the Lynn hospital, on the danger list.

The beginning of the feud which from its developments thus far may lead to three tragedies, lay in the friendship of Annie Pappas, sister of Charles and James Pappas, for Charles Hatgetakis. James Pappas, who is 19 years old, found his sister in her room Saturday afternoon and stabbed her four times.

He then went to the bootblack stand where Hatgetakis was employed and called him to the door. Hatgetakis was working on a customer, but came to the door at once. There Pappas leveled at 32-calibre revolver at him and fired, killing him almost instantly.

Pappas fled up the street, firing as he ran, but was overcome by John R. Allen and the police put him under arrest. He told the police that Hatgetakis had betrayed his sister, and that he had therefore stabbed his sister and killed the man.

"KIDNAPPED" BY GUESTS

Bride Accuses Facetious Friends of False Imprisonment

Providence, July 12.—Kidnapping a bride may prove a costly joke to Burdett White, Carroll Linton and Jesse Drabble, defendants in a suit for $1500 brought by Mrs. Richard Percival, who declares she was spirited away by the three men after her wedding and driven to Boston in an automobile, where she was locked up for a while in a hotel. The specific charge is false imprisonment.

Mrs. Percival, the 19-year-old bride, was about to leave her house on her honeymoon trip when a group of guests and participants in the wedding seized her and, lifting her over a fence, put her in an automobile and drove her to Boston.

They went to a hotel, it is alleged, and locked the bride in a room, one of them giving a $5 bill to her in case of emergency. It was several hours later before Mrs. Percival succeeded in making her predicament known. Her friends were communicated with and they took her home in an automobile.

END OF USWOCO STRIKE

Mill Workers to Receive Reasonable Wage For Extra Work

Lawrence, Mass., July 12.—Compromise has been effected in the strike at the Uswoco mills of the United States Worsted company. The 300 striking trimmers and perchers have agreed to return to work.

The company has agreed, according to the state board of conciliation and arbitration, to restore the strikers to work without discrimination.

Under the terms of the compromise, the mill owners have also agreed to pay the employes a reasonable wage for work they now perform without salary. This system of unpaid extra work caused the strike.

Chicago's Busy Divorce Mills

Chicago, July 12.—Chicago's divorce mills ground out 3458 divorces, 119 annulments of marriage and thirty-seven decrees of separate maintenance in 1914, according to the first annual report of County Clerk Sweitzer.

Flames Kill Smoke Inspector

Malden, Mass., July 12.—William H. Gerrish, state smoke inspector, was fatally burned in a fire which swept through a garage. Nine automobiles were destroyed and a total damage of more than $25,000 is estimated.

GAINED GREAT FAME AS A FIRE FIGHTER

Former Chief Mullen of Boston Department Dies Suddenly

Boston, July 12.—John A. Mullen, who for forty years was known as the greatest fire fighter in the country, died suddenly at the Adams Nervine hospital.

The death certificate records that he died of heart failure. But his friends know that he died of a broken heart.

From the day when his resignation as chief of the Boston fire department was handed in Mullen was never again the same man. His iron nerve was gone. He had become the wreck of his former courageous self. He trembled like a leaf if a fire gong clanged within his hearing.

For the Children

Every year in Brooklyn, now a part of the city of New York, a Sunday school parade is held. It is a very large affair, about 150,000 children taking part this year. For such an immense number to take part in one procession is, of course, impossible. The city is divided into districts and in each district the children of the Sunday schools have full sway for that day. The parade or walk is accompanied by bands of music and life and drum corps and the little folks enjoy themselves hugely. After the walk the paraders are regaled with ice cream and cake at the various churches to which the Sunday schools belong. Sometimes the participants appear in costumes of various periods of history and very pretty they look. The girl in the picture is dressed in the apparel of the old Colonial times, before the United States were organized into a separate and free government.

The Snapping Turtle.

As the snapping turtle is by far the largest of the fresh water tortoises, often attaining a diameter of two feet and a weight of 100 pounds, he is no mean antagonist. A single snap of his horny jaws will sometimes remove a finger or a toe, so it is well to beware of him, says St. Nicholas.

As might be expected from his nature and armament, the snapping turtle does not live exclusively upon plant life, as do other members of his family, but displays great fondness for a meat diet. Young ducks, frogs, fish and muskrats are all dainties to be added upon occasion to his bill of fare. While he is capable of some speed in the water, his favorite method of hunting seems to be to lie quietly until his victim comes within reach and then with a lightning-like dart of his long neck seize his prospective dinner. He varies this in the case of ducks and other water fowl by rising silently beneath them—a snap of the iron jaws on leg or wing, a despairing flutter in the water, and the luckless bird is dragged beneath the surface to be speedily drowned and eaten at leisure.

Advice to Swimmers.

Every one knows enough not to go in swimming right after a meal. Most boys know enough to wait an hour after an ordinary meal and longer after a particularly hearty one. But not all of them know enough not to go into the water while they are overheated. If you have been playing baseball or tennis don't throw off your clothes and plunge into the lake, as a severe cold or chills may result. Wait a half hour to cool off, and then undress slowly and take your swim.

Word Puzzle.

I am a word of two letters. My first letter represents that which is dearer to me than house or lands. My second letter is the name of an article that cheers my life and adds to me enjoyment. My whole is the most definite and the most indefinite words in the English language, which may apply to anything in the universe and yet can designate only a single thing.

Answer—I, tea—It.

The Butterfly.

Dainty butterfly, do tell
Where you flit and hover,
Seeking in each glade and dell
Fragrance to discover.

For an instant now you gleam
On a blossom yellow;
Fluttering you always seem
Such a busy fellow.

Morning, noon and even night,
Ever midst the flowers,
Like a human errant knight
Haunting beauty's bowers.

Stealing sweets from every one,
And with pollen laden
Fleeing after love is won
To another maiden.

Fickle, gay in summer time,
Where are you, I wonder,
When the merry sleighbells chime?
Fast in deepest slumber.

ALLIES TO SOON TAKE OFFENSIVE

Decisive Battle May Be Fought In Northern France

RUSSIANS' UNEXPECTED STAND

It Has Upset German Campaign Plans In Western War Area—Serious Defeat Administered to Austrian Main Army—Attacks by German Crown Prince Come to Sudden Halt—Italian Armies Encountering Stiffer Opposition From Austrians

London, July 12.—There are well-defined reports in official circles that the long-expected smash of the allies against the German lines in northern France has been thoroughly mapped out and may start at any time.

A terrific concentrated artillery fire upon the point selected for the attack will be the prelude to what will probably be the greatest move in the western area of the war thus far. Military critics are agreed that this point will be between Ypres and Arras, where both British and French troops are in the greatest masses, where an immense accumulation of the heaviest field guns of both nations has been made, and where, since the opening of the spring campaign, the allies have made steady and important gains.

It was generally understood that the Germans had planned to take the offensive in the west, probably in the vicinity of Verdun and towards Dunkirk simultaneously, as soon as they had finished with the Russians.

But they are far from finished with the Russians, and it now looks as though, after having administered a sound drubbing to the Austrians, the Russians had brought Marshal Mackensen's forces to a standstill southeast of Warsaw.

Austrians Fare Badly

It becomes more and more evident every hour that the Austrian main army has been beaten back below Lublin, Poland, and is probably now retreating towards the Galician frontier.

Such a disaster is to be inferred from the sullen tone of the official dispatches from both Vienna and Berlin. The Austrian war office, usually so boastful in its bulletins, issues a single line saying there is no change on any of the fronts. The German staff briefly alludes to a "local fight" in the Lublin district and states that otherwise nothing has taken place, with the significant tag, "as regards the German troops." This unmistakably points to Austrian misfortune.

There is even a possibility that Mackensen has withdrawn his support from the Austrians to the south of him in order that he may prepare for another drive at Warsaw from the north. Petrograd announces that a big battle is developing in the Przsiyzs region, north of Warsaw, and it may be possible that the Germans are strengthening their lines there.

Crown Prince's Attacks Fail

One significant result of the Teuton discouragement in the east is that the German crown prince, who had begun to show renewed activity in the Verdun section of France, where he has been beaten several times during the war, has again retired into his shell. It is likely that some of his troops have been drained off to meet the growing embarrassment in Poland.

The prince's recent attacks in the Woevre district, to the east of the St. Mihiel salient, were widely heralded in the German press as the commencement of a general move forward. If so, this move has come to an abrupt halt.

Conflicting Reports

What little fighting occurred on the western front in the last few days was largely confined to artillery actions, and was at scattered localities.

The British, according to the French report, have repulsed a German attack, presumably north of Ypres. The German reports, however, refer to this as a British attack, and Berlin says it was repulsed with considerable loss.

In fact, the French and German reports are generally contradictory in respect to what fighting has taken place, but from the trend of them it is evident that neither side has yet attempted anything of a decisive nature.

Italians Face Great Obstacles

Italy's armies operating in three directions, towards Trent, Triest and Villach, are now encountering stiffer Austrian opposition, and are consequently moving slowly.

One of the forces which is pressing northward through rugged country towards Inoichen, where their objective is to cut the Franzeenfeste railway, one of the lines running to Trent, has begun the bombardment of the Austrian fortifications at Landro. They have established a battery of heavy guns at Monte Piano, at a great elevation, and from this height are hurling shells across the Rio Bianco valley against Landro.

One of the notable isolated feats of the Italians is the capture of Mona Toffano by a detachment of the famous Alpirini. These intrepid mountain troops scaled precipices on the side of the peak opposite to that occupied by the Austrians, and fell upon the latter like a bolt from the clouds. The discomfited Austrians, who had been carefully watching all the regular roads, fled in disorder, leaving all their military paraphernalia behind.

The Rome war office reports that the Austrians have established numerous batteries of medium calibre in the Osonzo valley, and although these are being successfully engaged by the Itlian artillery, their mere presence has considerably slowed down the advance upon Goritzia and Trieste.

GARMENT WORKERS QUIT

Eighty-Five Thousand Inaugurate General Strike at New York

New York, July 12.—Eighty-five thousand workers in the men's clothing industry here quit work today, inaugurating a general strike which is expected to dopulicate the conditions of the great garment workers' labor tie-up of 1913.

Officials of the Cloakmakers' union say that the 75,000 cloakmakers of the city may be called out within the next few days. This would swell the total of strikers to 160,000 as a beginning for the general movement.

Reduced wages and the indictment of East Side labor leaders as a result of the confessions of "Dopey Benny" Fein on charges of terrorism, murder and assault are the prime reasons for the walkout.

The strike promoters say that wages have been steadily on the decline ever since the 1913 settlement and that they have now reached the point where the workers have become desperate.

BECKER'S DOOM SEALED

Osborne Sets Date For Electrocution For July 28

New York, July 12.—Coincident with the refusal of Supreme Court Justice Hughes to entertain a writ of error by which Charles Becker hoped to have his case reviewed by the highest tribunal, Warden Osborne of Sing Sing set Becker's execution for July 28.

Unless a reprieve is obtained Becker will go to the chair along with two others—Sam Haynes, who killed Mrs. John Harrison at Patterson, and Harold Branowitz, principal in an East Side trunk mystery.

Becker's counsel, W. B. Cockran, will apply to the United States district court judge for a writ of habeas corpus and thereby seek to secure stay of execution. It is considered unlikely that the hearing on the writ will avail Becker anything.

THREE ARRESTS IN FARMHOUSE KILLING

Shotgun Fired at Close Range Causes Barnaby's Death

West Townsend, Mass., July 12.—Constables arrested three men suspected of the murder of William Barnaby, who was killed by a charge from a shotgun in the farmhouse of the Blood family. Medical Examiner Buckley found that the gun was fired at a range so close that the wadding lodged in Barnaby's throat.

James Brown, James Smith and Byron Blood are under arrest. They were in the house, with Moses Blood and three sisters, Alice, Susie and Ida Blood, and other residents of the neighborhood when Barnaby was killed. No one who was present when the shooting took place was able to tell the authorities how Barnaby was shot.

The Blood brothers run a cider mill. Barnaby was 50 years old and had lived with the Blood family since his own house burned, some months ago.

RIDER WALSH IS KILLED

Three Other Motorcycle Racers Seriously Hurt at Hartford

Hartford, July 12.—Flying over Charter Oak park track at the speed of seventy-five miles an hour four motorcycle racers entered in a ten-mile event went down in a heap.

John Welsh, 21, died as he was being hurried to a hospital. Edward Richmond, whose machine caused the accident, when the rear tire burst, is in a serious condition, his skull being fractured.

William Leahy sustained severe bruises and cuts, and Thomas Croce is suffering from shock and minor cuts and bruises.

Death Overtakes War Veterans

Augusta, Me., July 12.—The bodies of two veterans of the National Soldiers home at Togus, John Drummey and Frank P. Morse, were found in the vicinity of the reservation. The medical examiner decided that death in each case was due to accident.

Panic on Trolley Car

Portsmouth, N. H., July 12.—Several persons were injured when they jumped from a rapidly moving trolley car at Rye Centre, when the controller of the car became short circuited, sending out clouds of smoke and sparks.

A Friend of the Family

ALL things being equal, the newspaper that goes into the home and is read there is the most valuable advertising medium.

A paper like this, in a community like this, is really one of the best advertising mediums in the country. It goes into the home and is thoroughly read there.

This newspaper acts as a salesman in the home.

ROCKS MAKE HOLES IN ROOF

West Quincy Residents Object To Blasting

Flying rock which crashed through the roofs of their houses have aroused the Isabella and Albertina streets residents and some declare they will apply for an injunction to prevent blasting in the quarries in the neighborhood.

The smashing of the roof of the three apartment house occupied by M. Tuomikoski on Albertina street and C. Tangherlini on Isabella street is given as the cause of the objection.

The heavy missile which went through the roof of the Albertinas street house knocked the laths and plaster from the pantry ceiling, filling the place with broken joists and scattering utensils on the floor. No one was injured.

The plaster was knocked from the ceilings of the Tangherlini house during the absence of the family. Other houses are said to have been in the path of the falling rocks.

The residents claim the danger could be removed by covering the blasts with heavy timbers and say they have asked that this be done.

One of the officials of the company interested in the quarries said today that every care and precaution had been taken and that the damage is not as heavy as claimed. He said residents have started a court action.

SOUNDS PUBLIIC SENTIMENT

President Seeks To Know Feeling Toward Germany.

(By United Press.)

Windsor, July 12—President Wilson was sounding public opinion today over the recent German note. He was reading excerpts from editorial comments and personal letters addressed to Washington and forwarded to Cornish. Before his conference with Sec. Lansing he hopes to have an accurate idea of the sentiment. The official text of the note had not reached him today.

HEARING AT CITY HALL.

The Industrial Accident Board will hold a hearing at City Hall July 20. in the matter of Joseph Lemieux and the Birnie & Diack granite company.

MAY NOT SEE PRES. WILSON

(By United Press.)

Washington, July 12—Cancellation of Sec. Lansing's trip to Cornish, N. H., to discuss the German note with Pres. Wilson, seemed certain today. The change of program was sudden. Sec. Tumuity said a short time ago, he understood Sec. Lansing would go soon. Sec. Lansing refused to confirm the report that the trip had been called off but admitted there were no immediate plans for a conference and that he had no knowledge whether the trip would be made at all.

THE PYRAMIDS ENTERTAIN.

"The Pyramids" of Dorchester entertained Ed. Morgan of Pittsfield and Miss Winnie Conley, the famous swimmer of Tenean beach, at their summer cottage at the Willows Houghs Neck, Sunday.

FIRE ON BRIDGE.

The Atlantic Combination was called out Sunday afternoon for a slight fire on the Neponset bridge, probably caused by a lighted cigar or cigarette There was no damage. These fires will probably be numerous from now on.

BIDS FOR SIDEWALK.

Commissioner Brown stated this morning that he would advertise for bids this week for building the granolithic sidewalks in the several wards of the city, provided for in the general sidewalk order passed by the City Council June 21.

SELLING FIREWORKS.

The sale of fireworks is each year hedged about with more and more restrictions and precautions and it is well that it should be.

Fireworks are the customary part of the celebration of Independence Day, but the wisdom of cutting down their sale to the less dangerous kinds and putting the sale of these under the most careful supervision has been shown by the steadily decreasing list of deaths by accident and losses by fire on the Fourth and the days immediately preceding and following it.

The safe and sane celebration idea has become widespread and Young America, while it may not enjoy the liberty and license and the same amount of noise that it did a generation ago, comes through the affair in better physical, mental and moral condition as a result.—Taunton Gazette.

FRANCIS LYNDE

Since this popular American author embarked upon a literary career in 1893 he has written several books which have won for him a high place in the world of fiction. Among the best of his stories is "The Price," because of the measure of its insight into human character and its motives. The theme is original and the action is rapid and bewildering. We have secured "The Price" for our next serial, and will publish it in installment form beginning in an early issue. You will enjoy reading it.

Reminiscence of a Star.

My first experience with professionals was at the Empire theater. The dressing rooms there were all on the right side of the stage, with the exception of one in a remote corner, which was given me. I had been told that in a regular company the actors were notified at the half hour, the quarter hour and the overture; but, as it happened, there was no overture on that occasion. I didn't want to go on without being called and seem to be an amateur, and they forgot all about me until I was missing from the scene, and I was sent for in what might be mildly termed a hurry. It was a very hot afternoon in May, and I was sitting "made up" with my hat on and a negligee instead of a dress. Distractedly throwing on a skirt and seizing a feather boa and a jacket I dashed for the stage and entered through the lake, much to the amusement of the audience and the consternation of the manager, who told me what he thought of me, and I was ill for a week with mortification and decided to abandon forever a profession fraught with such perils.—Margaret Anglin in American Magazine.

New York's Volunteer Firemen.

Before the paid fire department system was installed in New York there were among the volunteers some of the most powerful politicians in the city. Richard Croker belonged to the "big six," of which William M. Tweed was the organizer and foreman. Success in fire fighting opened upon a career in politics. No body of men had more social affairs than the volunteer firemen. There were parades of fire companies, chowder parties, picnics, annual balls, water throwing contests and at times bitter fights between the rival organizations. So intense was the political feeling at times that it was related that when Chief of Engineers James Gulick was removed from office for political reasons men who received the news when they were fighting a fire quit their work and could only be induced to return when they were deceived into believing that the rumor was false.

The legislature passed the law creating the paid fire department on March 30, 1865.—New York Times.

Shooting Civilians.

According to the laws of war, any civilian who is found with arms in his possession is liable to be shot without mercy. Although this seems a very severe rule, it is absolutely necessary for the safeguarding of the whole civilian population.

The rules of war say that no men will be recognized as combatants unless they wear a distinguishing badge, which can be easily recognized. If it were not for this any number of men could at any time band themselves together and say they were belligerents. If this were allowed therefore invading troops would safeguard themselves against surprises by killing every man in villages through which they marched.

This particular rule is so stringent that even a noncombatant who took up arms to defend his wife against some drunken soldier would be liable to be shot.—London Opinion.

Just Once.

It was Charley's first game of golf. His patient friend had taken him sadly around the eighteen holes and watched him hack the ball into small bits and cut up the green as though it had been plowed by shrapnel. After the game Charley and his patient friend were talking to a few of the golfers on the clubhouse veranda.

"That was a beautiful shot you made this afternoon, Charley," said his patient friend.

Charley brightened up and flushed happily, while the young woman looked at him admiringly. "Which one?" he asked eagerly.

"Why," said the patient friend, "the time you hit the ball."—Chicago Tribune.

The First Patent on Matches.

Before 1833, when wooden matches with phosphorus were made in Vienna, people were dependent upon flint and steel to secure a light. The first patent for a phosphorus match in the United States was taken out in 1836 by A. D. Philipps of Springfield, Mass. For many years people refused to use them, but by 1845 the ill smelling and clumsy old tinder boxes were generally discarded and are preserved, like snuff-boxes, as curiosities.

Rainbow Currency.

The most striking paper currency in the world is the 100 ruble note of Russia, which is barred from top to bottom with all the colors of the rainbow, blended as when a sun ray passes through a prism. In the center in bold relief is a finely executed vignette in black. The remainder of the engraving on the note is in dark and light brown ink.

"Why, he understands all about banking."

"And that's why I can't understand the appointment."—Kansas City Journal.

No Empty Compliment.

Miss Phortee—I told Mr. Beach I was twenty-eight, and he said I didn't look it. Her Brother—Well, you don't; you haven't looked it for twelve years. —Boston Transcript.

STEALS $150 OUT OF CASH DRAWER

Mystery Surrounds Disappearance of Sum From Fruit Store

POLICE HAVE NO CLUE

Over $150 in bills and silver mysteriously disappeared from the cash drawer in the fruit store of J. Cacicia in the Sutherland block, Doble's corner, Monday. The proprietor is at a loss to explain the mystery and is inclined to believe a robbery was perpetrated in his absence.

The money consisted of $50 in silver and over $100 in bills of all denominations. The silver was rolled up in small bags and the money wrapped in packages, all marked with the names of tobacco and fruit men who were to call during the day to collect for merchandise delivered at the store.

When Cacicia left for Boston in the morning the money was in the drawer. His sister was in charge of the premises. The disappearance of the money was discovered when Cacicia returned from Boston, and after his sister had left for the "movies." Her absence held up the start of the police investigation for several hours because it was thought that she had taken the money from the cash drawer and placed it in a safer place, forgetting before leaving to tell her brother of the change.

She was as surprised on hearing the story as her brother was on finding the money gone, and was unable to clear up the mystery.

The money drawer is situated in the counter in the rear of the store in such a way that it could not be reached by anyone standing on the opposite side. It was said at the store that the ordinary amount of business had been handled by the sister and that no one hung around the front of the store or staid inside longer than was necessary to make a purchase.

The only entrance, aside from the main doorway, is through a small door in the rear of the store and the police say the passage is so small that a person of average size would have considerable difficulty in getting in without being seen, the small door being built for ventilating purposes.

Several theories have been advanced and the most likely one is that a small boy entered the store while the sister was attending to customers, hid behind the counter until he had the opportunity to rifle the cash drawer, and then escaped the same way he came in. It is not clear as yet how such a thing could occur without coming to the attention of the sister.

The police commenced an immediate investigation of the story but up to date have made little progress.

DISAPPEARING UNDERSEA RIFLE

Fore River To Install New Submarine Gun

The first disappearing rifle for American undersea craft has been shipped from the gun factory at Washington and ere many days will be delivered to the Fore River for installation on the submarine M-1. The gun was developed after a prolonged study and tests by Naval ordnance officials.

The new gun—of threeinch caliber—is said to weight, with its carriage, only 1800 pounds, and to have developed the maximum of efficiency and accuracy. Automatically it disappears into the submarine's hull after each discharge. All submarines built in the future are to be equipped with such weapons.

CLAN MACGREGOR HOLDS MEETING

An important meeting was held by Clan MacGregor Monday evening at which time there was an informal discussion of the several amendments proposed to the constitution which will come up for action at the Royal Clan Convention in San Francisco, the third week in August. The delegates from Clan MacGregor to the convention are Alfred O. Diack and Angus Martin, past chiefs of Clan MacGregor, and the discussion of the amendments was in order that these delegates might be informed of the views of the local clan, and they could act accordingly. A copy of all the proposed amendments will be obtained before the next meeting, at which time they will be fully discussed.

ARRESTED AS PICKPOCKETS

Abraham Freidman, said to belong in Quincy, was the leading character in a general mixup Monday evening at the Dudley street terminal. Freidman was about to board a car for Quincy when two alleged pickpockets tried to rob him. He grappled with the two men and two plain clothes policemen also came to the rescue. There was a general mixup and considerable confusion which no one for a time seemed to understand. The suspects struggled desperately for freedom but were taken to police headquarters, where they gave their names as William Riley, aged 30 years, and John McDonald, aged 28 years. Both claim to live in the vicinity of the Dudley street terminal. The name of Abraham Freidman does not appear in the Quincy directory.

ORANGEMEN IN ANNUAL PICNIC

Orangemen from all over the state participated in the annual picnic of the order at Lake Pearl, Wrentham, Monday, in commemoration of the 225th anniversary of the "Battle of Boyne." In the morning there was a grand parade which started from Copley square at 8.45 and marched to the South Station where trains were taken for the lake. The parade is said to have been the best in the history of the order.

J. J. Strong was the chief marshall and Bay View lodge of Quincy headed by the Quincy band paraded in the Orange division. Ex-Councilman Murdock A. Campbell of Quincy served on the committee on arrangements.

Bay View lodge paraded in City square Monday before leaving for Boston. One familiar face was missed in the parade and that was of Past Master Andrew Stewart. For many years Mr. Stewart has always taken a prominent part in all of the functions in which the local Orange lodges participated, and it was a source of regret to his many friends that illness prevented his presence on Monday.

BABY ELECTED TO MEMBERSHIP

Delta Sigma Club Honors Brockton Infant

Baby Jeannette Woodbury Smith, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Smith of Brockton, was chosen an honorary member of the Delta Sigma club at its meeting at the home of Miss Dorothy Packard on Hancock street Monday evening. The little girl came into the world on July 5th.

Mrs. Smith, her mother, before marriage was Mabel Damon of Quincy one of the organizers of the club, a prominent young woman of the city and the first member of the club to be married. A copy of the resolution conferring the membership on Little Jeannette was mailed to the parents today.

NEAR PANIC IN RESTAURANT

Some of the patrons of Thompson's restaurant were thrown into somewhat of a panic this noon, especially the waiters, when a cloud of black smoke poured out of the kitchen into the main dining room. Men at work in the kitchen could be seen trying to extinguish a blaze. A telephone call brought the central station apparatus to the scene and sent the crowds about City square rushing to the restaurant.

The fire, however, did but little damage. It was caused by one of the stoves in the kitchen becoming too hot, setting fire to some of the food that was being cooked. The burning fat made a dense smoke giving the impression that there was a much more serious fire than proved to be the case.

Again at 1.40 the Central Station apparatus. The firemen let the fire die taurant for the same stove fire. After the first call the fire in the stove was not drawn but was allowed to die out of its own accord. It did not go out fast enough however and the proprietor becoming alarmed sent for the apparatus. The firemen let the fire die out.

SOLD BEER TO YOUNG BOYS

Two 14 year old boys were in court this morning ready to testify, the police say, against John Carbone of 2 Baxter place, charged with violation of the liquor law. On a plea of guilty Judge Avery declined to hear the evidence on account of the tender ages of the boys. Carbone was fined $50.

Carbone's house was raided Sunday afternoon by Inspector Goodhue and 50 bottles of beer and a bottling outfit was seized. The raid was unaccompanied by sensational features. Several complaints were made to the police about the place but not until Saturday night were they able to secure the necessary evidence.

The police say the evidence was secured from a 14 year old boy who went there and purchased beer in such a large quantity he was intoxicated when he left the house Saturday night. Other boys they say, made a practice of buying beer there.

Carbone pleaded guilty this morning although it was thought up to last night he was going to make a contest. Inspector Goodhue told the court that Carbone was a hard working man but earned small pay and that he was trying to get enough money to send his wife to a hospital for needed treatment. He said the house did not indicate they were in prosperous circumstances and that despite the viciousness of the situation he thought the ends of justice would be served if Judge Avery treated the case as an ordinary one.

Carbone said when fined that he could not pay but a friend in the court room stepped forward with the money.

ATTACK WITH GAS BOMBS

(By United Press.)

Paris, July 13—By a frightful fire of heavy explosive shells the Germans attempted to blow the French out of the position in the "Labyrinth," southeast of Neuville, during the night. Artillery attacks failed to wreck the strong concrete and metal works. The Germans then released the asphyxiating gas bombs and under cross fire of the high explosive shells the enemy troops attempted to rush the French out of the entrenchment. The attacking forces were shortly engaged in hand to hand fighting under ground, the war office announced this afternoon.

FRENCH AIRSHIPS MAKE BIG RAID

(By United Press)

Paris, July 13—Thirty-five aeroplanes participated in a great raid of the important German strategic station at Vigneulles-Les-Haptonchapelle, the war office announced this afternoon, starting several fires believed to have destroyed munition supplies. From Vigneulles the railway line leads to the German army near Calonne, in the Apremonte woods. In the big station were stored great supplies of munitions and food awaiting transfer to the front.

The air raid was accomplished successfully under great difficulties. The French bird men braved high winds that threatened their destruction and made it necessary for them to drop within close range of the enemy's anti-air craft to make sure that their bombs would not be miscarried by the wind.

THAW IS SURE OF FREEDOM

(By United Press)

New York, July 13—Harry K. Thaw today entered on what he and his attorneys considered the last day of his nine year fight for freedom. By night the matter of Thaw's sanity will be in the hands of the jurors from whom they expect nothing but a representation that the slayer be liberated as a sane man.

Actual liberating rests on Justice Hendricks as a jury can only recommend what action is to be taken. Thaw's counsel were jubilant when court opened today. They had feared more than anything else, it was admitted, the testimony of Dr. Austin Flint, state veteran alienist, who has figured so prominently in the prosecution of Thaw. Dr. Flint they contended today has proved one of the best witnesses for Thaw, especially in his admission that: "Thaw has shown no signs of paranoia during the present trial and one who did not know the history of the case might feel Thaw was sane now." Thaw was elated and admitted he passed the night planning an auto trip to California.

SECRET SERVICE SEEK TERRORISTS

Government Suspects Anti-Allies Conspiracy In U. S.

EVIDENCE NOT COMPLETE

(By United Press)

Washington, July 13—That the United States secret service suspect a wide spread anti-Allies terrorist plot in this country was learned today on good authority. That this supposed conspiracy included an attempt to kill Ambassador Spring-Rice on his way by auto from J. P. Morgan's to Willard Straight's residence on Long Island Monday night could not be verified.

The British embassy denied absolutely that anything of the kind happened and secret service officials said nothing of the kind had been reported to them. There was also an official denial that the embassy was especially guarded.

It is a matter of fact that both secret service and Washington police were keeping closer watch on the embassy although it was being done as unostentatiously as possible. Persons in close touch with the police were not sure whether this was the result of an actual attempt against the ambassador or a general precaution.

FRIENDS TENDER LINEN SHOWER

Mrs. A. S. Wingrove Pleasantly Surprised

Mrs. A. E. Wingrove, Bertha Pearson of Sherbrooke, Que., formerly of Wollaston, was pleasantly surprised by the Internos club Monday evening at the home of her sister, Mrs. G. A. Dickey of 235 Fayette street, Wollaston. The members of the club, to which the young bride formerly belonged, tendered her a linen showr.

The table looked beautiful in blue and gold, the club colors. A huge basket of blue and gold adorned the centre of the table, resting on a centrepiece of pink ramblers, and being filled with pretty and useful gifts. A ribbon streamer was tied to each place card. Ices and cake were served and games and music were enjoyed. The evening closed with three cheers for the bride and groom.

FOYITES WILL PLAY WEDNESDAY

The clerks in the stores of R. E. Foy are busily preparing for the annual outing to be held at Glen Echo Park on July 21st. The stores will close at 11 o'clock and the trip will be made in autos. A complete program is being arranged.

On Wednesday the ball team plays the Braintree grocers at Merrymount park. Drinkwater and Thayer will be the battery for the visitors. Don Berry will do the catching for the local boys. David Littlewood, one of the team is now enjoying his vacation but it is thought he will be available for the game. William McGrane, is also enjoying his annual vacation but has delayed leaving for New Hampshire until Thursday so as to participate.

MANY ATTEND RECEPTION TO FR. MARK E. MADDEN

Present Check For $700 To Houghs Neck Pastor

An ordinary envelope, containing a check for nearly $700, was presented to Fr. Mark E. Madden, pastor of the new parish of the Most Blessed Sacrament of Houghs Neck, at a reception tendered to him by over 600 members of his parish in the Taylor hall, Monday evening. The money has been contributed within a few days by the summer and permanent Catholic residents of that section. Additional contributions were made at the reception and were given him today.

Fr. Michael J. Owens, pastor of St. Johns parish to which Houghs Neck was attached as a mission station since the church was erected, made the presentation. All knew it was to be made but the amount proved to be a welcome surprise.

The reception gathering numbered distinguished people of Boston, Quincy and the South Shore. The committee comprised well known Houghs Neck people, and the program included a high class entertainment. Entrance to the affair was complimentary and the hall was used through the courtesy of the management. Dancing, with Wilson's orchestra, brought the evening to a close.

The guests of honor were Monsignor Peter Ronan of St. Peters parish of Dorchester, Fr. Michael J. Owens of St. Johns parish, Fr. John A. Kelliher of Campello, Fr. Henry P. Madden of Houghs Neck. The clergy arrived early in the evening and as each entered he was roundly applauded.

Father Madden was escorted to his seat immediately on his arrival. The handclapping was thunderous, the people standing as they tendered their tribute.

The presentation followed the entertainment program. Father Owens in making the presentation spoke highly of Father Madden. He said their friendship had extended over a period of years and that Fr. Madden's future was a bright one. He said he was an exemplary priest and congratulated the people of Houghs Neck on the good fortune that came to their parish through his appointment.

Father Madden made a short speech of acceptance. In it he spoke earnestly of his appreciation of the warm welcome given him since he assumed the pastorate. He said if he was a zealous and respected priest as Father Owens said it was in part due to the fine example set by the speaker and other clergymen in the diocese when they were seniors at Brighton seminary and he one of the younger students.

He said the gift was only one of the many kindnesses extended to him since he was appointed.

Mgr. Ronan, one of the most revered clergymen in the diocese and a summer resident of Houghs Neck for many years, spoke highly of Father Madden. He said he was one of the most highly respected priests of the diocese and congratulated the people of Houghs Neck on the good fortune they would enjoy under his direction.

In addition to the presentation of the purse a handsome bouquet of roses was presented Father Madden by Miss Veronica Gerrior.

The evening program included vocal solos by Joseph Maguire of Boston, William McDevitt, a deputy sheriff of Suffolk county, Miss Anna Walsh of Quincy, William Healey of Roxbury, agent of the State Board of Charity. There were readings by Miss Katherine Haney and Sidney Straghan and violin solos by Miss R. Murphy.

A pretty feature was the offering of three children, pupils of Bernadette Masterson. Ruth Totten danced the Highland Fling, Helen Tobin danced the Whirl of Gold and with Paul Kearns sang a solo and gave solo dancing to "Teasing." The accompanist of the evening was Miss Corinne LaBrecque.

Father Madden received the best wishes of all before leaving the hall and more applause echoed throughout the district as he stepped into an auto to be whisked away to the parish house.

The committee of arrangements was F. J. Coughlin, chairman, Walter H. Buchan, secretary; George Toomey, Miss Corinne LaBrecque, Mrs. Staples, James J. Powers, and James E. Wall.

The reception committee was James E. Wall, chairman; Mrs. Walter H. Buchan, Miss McDonnell, Miss Margaret Leary, Mrs. J. J. Quigley, Mrs. F. J. Murphy, Senator James P. Timilty, John Countie, Dr. John H. Ash, Patrick F. O'Brien, Mathew Connor, Daniel J. Maloney, Michael F. Curran, Patrick A. Cleary, Frank Leonard, Eugene O'Connell, S. J. Gerrior, Achilles LaBrecque, John Monahan, A. C. Helfrich, J. Hallahan, Bernard A. Wenners, Dennis J. Driscoll, Charles Shea, William McGinty, Neil Regan.

MAD DOGS.

A news story in Monday's Ledger related how a small pet dog created a lot of excitement at the Moon Island Sewer station among employees who feared he was mad. The dog was driven into a room and shot. While that particular dog probably was afflicted with rabies as he was killed by Dog Catcher David Gordon yet there are innumerable occasions when dogs supposed to be mad are not nearly so mad as the persons whom they frighten. There are comparatively few mad dogs; there are many dogs which to the ignorant bear all the symptoms of madness.

In the Letter Box of the Boston Herald Monday appeared an illuminating letter along these lines. The letter read:

"It was a fortunate circumstance for one falsely accused dog which led John Rowlinson kennel master of the Animal Rescue league, by a drug store on Dudley street last Sunday. Mr. Rowlinson noticed an excited crowd about the door and naturally stopped to see what had happened. "There's a mad dog in the store," some one said. Inside two police officers were waiting, revolvers in hand, to shoot the "mad dog," which had taken refuge in the stock room. Mr. Rowlinson has had some experience in handling so-called mad dogs, so he entered the stock room. It was very hot and in total darkness, no one daring to step in far enough to turn on the light. The dog cowered in one corner of the room. Mr. Rowlinson with difficulty got a rope on the collar, but the struggles of the dog broke both the collar and the rope. He then telephoned to the league for assistance. Another Agent came, went into the room, took the dog in his arms and carried him out of the building. The dog was then too weak to walk, so the agent hired a carriage and brought him to the league. A brief examination disclosed the fact that some practical joker had given the dog a large piece of sticky candy and the dog's jaws were stuck together so closely that he could not open his mouth. The fright and excitement caused him to have a fit and to foam at the mouth. The practical joker probably ran away when he saw what he had done and left the dog to be shot at and clubbed to death, as dogs supposed to be mad usually are. The dog a mongrel cocker spaniel is now at the league, waiting for a good home."

Mrs. Huntington Smith.

LIGHT THAT STREET.

An automobile bearing a New York number plate and coming from the direction of Plymouth stopped in front of Walsh's drug store on Hancock street Monday night. The driver dismounted, went in front of his machine and carefully viewed the street which he must traverse. He told a bystander he was completely confused by the few dim street lanterns, that he realized the street was under construction but that he was unable to tell from his seat in the car what was the safe portion of the road.

His experience is likely to be that of any autoist ignorant of the lay of the land at this point. We have touched on this matter several times in this column and the other day the commissioner of public works advised the contractor that it would be well to provide more adequate lights. The lighting is better than it has been but it is far from sufficient. The fact that there are no street lights for a good portion of the street under construction makes it all the more necessary to provide plenty of lanterns.

The matter is up to the contractor and we intend at the risk of being tedious, to bring this matter to the attention of the public until the contractor either of his own accord or because of the pressure which should be exerted by the commissioner of public works, takes steps to ensure the public safety.

HUMOROUS FICTION.

A leading magazine is advertising that it wants to buy humorous short stories. It seems willing to pay very liberally. A work of short fiction with real humor is an oasis in the desert of life, and tired people reach it with joy. But most of the magazine short stories bear too plainly the marks of the machine. They seem to be written by authors who have to grind out a certain literary output every week in order to support their families. It often seems much like skim milk.

The best humorous writing today is found in the newspapers. But the best humor is not produced by sitting down at a typewriter and undertaking to grind out a daily column of sparkling paragraphs all at once. Humor is more of a by-product. The man who has an eye for it finds it as he walks along the street, in the people he meets and talks with. The reporter with an observant eye should come back to his office with a note book full of the contradictions and incongruities of life, while the professional humorist at his typewriter is vainly trying to grind out his regular humorous story for the maagzines.

THEATRICAL CRITICISM.

A decision has just been handed down by a justice of the New York Supreme Court to the effect that theaters have no right to exclude dramatic critics from their playhouses. Great interest has been excited in newspaper circles over this case, resulting from the exclusion of the New York Time's dramatic critic from a certain theater because of an unfavorable review of a play.

In these days when motion picture theaters are spreading out into remote country villages, the right of the newspaper to give the opinions of its staff and of its readers on such performances is a very vital one.

It is the business of a dramatic critic to see, or try to see, that the public gets good returns for its money. Judging the character of a play by advance notices is exceedingly difficult. Almost any play can get some good press notices. A great many people buy tickets for performances at which they feel their time and money were wasted. Country people will travel long distances into large cities for an outing, in which theater going is the principal amusement. They often go home feeling that they have been deluded by the allurements of the press agent.

Of course there is a good deal of incompetent criticism. Many writing for the big city papers enjoy slashing away at players who are serious minded workers, and in the main clever actors. But as a whole the press is probably too laudatory rather than too critical. Many a critic is won over by flattering attentions from actresses and managers.

MOVING THE TRAMPS.

The New York Evening World urges that tramps be driven out. It says:

"It has taken the city authorities a long time to find out what every village knows—that penniless arrivals who are determined to eat but refuse to work are undesirables of the first water. Farmville either makes them work or gets rid of them. Is New York too stupid to do likewise?"

To make every one work is, of course, desirable. But if work be not available, is there any more futile procedure under heaven than simply to drive undesirables to the next town? Could anything be more selfish? It makes the wanderers more and more incompetent, more and more at war with society. It leaves each town in turn to struggle with an increasing problem.

Farm colonies where such men could be made to earn their keep for a time might to some extent furnish a solution. The root of the matter goes down into our methods of education. Many men who will not labor have grown from children who were made to labor before their time. Or they are tradeless men, unskilled, ignorant. It is the fault of society that men should be allowed to develop in such directions. What were our public schools doing when these men were young? What are they doing now to prevent the making of future tramps?

All these questions and many more are worth study by those who have to deal with the stragglers from the great army of itinerants roving up and down the land. Just moving tramps on to the next stopping place answers none of them.

Although the financial condition of the city may not be of the best it would seem as if at least it could afford to keep road signs in readable condition. Take the sign at the corner of school street and Quincy avenue which is designed to inform tourists what towns may be encountered by proceeding in a southerly direction. It is necessary for the autoist equipped with ordinary eyes to brush his nose against the dimly gilded letters in order to make out what the sign says.

Wilson's Policy Toward Germany Still Firm and Deliberate

BERLIN IS MISLED BY BRYAN

Gained Impression That American Sentiment Is Not Unanimous—Germany Handicapped by Our Refusal of Informal Dickering—Situation One of Diplomacy Minus Diplomats

Washington, July 13.—"Firmness and deliberation," the policy which delayed the last rejoinder in the Lusitania case for a month, continues to be the watchword of the administration in the present crisis. President Wilson is taking his own time in studying the German note and is keeping in intimate touch with the state department.

The German note of July 8 interested Washington keenly, but the most noteworthy feature of the situation created by it is the complete absence of alarm.

The comment is made generally that the Bryan resignation and Bryan's literary output since his retirement has exercised a more or less direct effect upon the German reply, by indicating to Germany that American sentiment is divided and that she might assume any attitude she pleased toward the demands of the United States so long as she did not force us into war.

The progress of negotiations toward a final settlement of the Lusitania controversy have been seriously hindered by the unwillingness of the United States to enter into informal discussions. It is known that officials of the German government were confident they could reach a satisfactory adjustment over the Lusitania affair if they were not compelled, as they have expressed it, "to bark at the United States across the ocean," but the attitude of the administration has been that all diplomacy must be kept in the open and that public opinion in this country would tolerate no private dickering over an issue so grave as that of the right of American citizens to remain alive.

Whatever may be the merit of the German hope or the wisdom of the American insistence, both countries now, it is clear, must conduct their correspondence in the public eye. The result of this condition has been to force Germany, at least, to frame her notes for home consumption and to forward to the United States as apparently final conclusions statements and proposals which in informal exchanges she would have offered as only tentative.

American newspaper men on duty in Berlin have tried to inform their papers that so long as informal conference was impossible, a settlement with the Berlin government never could be reached, but as this information failed to get by the German or the British censor, through both of which it must pass, the people of the United States were unable to learn the real inwardness of the situation.

Thus the whole situation has presented the anomoly of diplomacy without diplomats. The two governments have been negotiating directly and without either making the slightest use of its accredited ambassador.

These facts give point to the news from Berlin that Germany, through the press, is offering additional concessions to the United States and that she would tender the use of the largest of the German transatlantic lines detained in this country to transport Americans to Europe, if by that means the comfort and safety of American passenger travel "might be assured."

To the American mind, which is seeking first apology and reparation for the killing of American men, women and children by a German submarine, this offer counts for nothing, but to the German mind the "concessions" proffered in the German note of July 8 and informally supplemented through the press are regarded as genuine and as conciliatory.

TRAGEDY ON STEAMER

Peruvian Naval Officer Kills Passenger and Himself

New York, July 13.—The steamer Tennyson, Captain Simons, arrived here from South American ports with a double tragedy on her log, and the body of one of her victims.

Ceseare Bravo, captain in the Peruvian navy, and graduate of the naval academy at Annapolis, shot and killed a passenger, Henry J. Conery of Duluth, and then committed suicide.

Captain Simons and Dr. Osterhaus, the steamer's surgeon, believe the Peruvian was insane. Conery was connected with a Buffalo house and had been to Peru on linseed oil business. Bravo was bound here on business.

Fire Causes Big Explosion

Lily Bay, Me., July 13.—An explosion, the force of which was felt more than a dozen miles, occurred when the storehouses, containing nearly a ton of dynamite and a large quantity of gasoline, belonging to the Great Northern Paper company, were burned. The loss is $30,000.

Financial Review

New York, July 10, 1915.

Again the war asserted its depressing influence upon this market, and this despite favorable domestic factors such as a sound business situation, a satisfactory crop outlook, a redundant money supply and special activity of the steel trade. This week the tendency of prices on the Stock Exchange was downwards; partly owing to liquidation connected with the British war oan, and partly owing to the apprehensions incident to our relations with Germany and Mexico.

If those of ultra-optimistic tendencies have underestimated the duration and the appalling consequences of this war, it follows they have also underestimated its financial effects. An early ending is not yet in sight. The Allies are still preparing on a gigantic scale for their supreme effort, which has not yet been attempted. Next autumn the world will probably find one side materially weakened by continuous superhuman struggle, while the other has been strengthened by prolonged preparation. As for the end, that cannot be expected until one side or the other is thoroughly exhausted.

The best estimates are that the struggle will cost Europe from $18,000,000,000 to $20,000,000,000 yearly until the finish. Such terrific waste cannot but profoundly affect the worlds capital markets, and the adjustment of values to these abnormal conditions is still progressing, and the most important problem of the day, financially considered, is the paying of Europe's debt to the United States. Foreign holdings of Americans have diminished considerably; it being estimated that over $200,000,000 have already been returned to this side, and the third selling movement this year which is now on will probably continue until preparations for the new British loan are discounted.

Great Britain's obligations to this country must be enormous, since she is financing not only her own war but also giving very material financial assistance to her Allies. It is estimated that about $500,000,000 in war orders have already been received in this market, and that another billion dollars is in prospect. The shipments of these vast amounts of munitions will come next autumn, when the outward movement of our agricultural products is at its zenith. The effect of the war upon British trade is shown in the statement that her excess of imports over exports for the year amounts to about $2,240,000,000, compared with her usual excess of $650,000,000. Britain generally pays for much of her excess imports by her foreign investments; but this means of adjustment is now shut off, and the enormous burden which she has shouldered can be appreciated by the fact that on March 1, 1916, her national debt will have risen to $6,466,000,000, at the present rate of increase.

The weakness in railroad shares was mainly due to foreign selling, especially in St. Paul and a few other standard stocks. At the same time American railroad earnings, outside of a few Eastern and transcontinental lines, are not satisfactory in spite of better rates. The adverse influences are dull business; diversion of traffic through the Panama Canal; slow movement of cotton; effect of the Missouri Pacific collapse, and the financial condition of some of the weaker lines. It may be that these mishaps and the new British loan have been fully discounted for the time being and they are cited merely in explanation of this weeks fall in values.

On the favorable side of the account is the steady growth of activity in the steel industry, which if continued will soon run into a veritable boom. Under either peace or war the American steel industry must benefit for some time to come. When peace arrives there will be an immense demand for tools and semi-fabricated steel for reconstruction purposes. Foreign plants with impaired facilities and a general scarcity of skilled labor will be utterly unable to meet requirements; all of which will be of advantage to the American manufacturer and exporter. Our textile trades also continue fairly busy, and the general conditon of business, though quiet, is sound.

The Government crop report was better than expected, considering the lateness and coolness of the season. Abundant moisture, however, in June has had a beneficial effect. The indications now are for a reeord wheat crop of 963,000,000 bushels, or 72,000,000 more than last year. Corn, owing to increased acreage, promises a yield of 2,814,000,000 bushels, which is 142,000,000 more than last year. The yield of oats is estimated at 1,399,000,000 bushels, or 258,000,000 more than a year ago. Allowing for ordinary deterioration during the remainder of the growing season, the outlook is for ample crops, including cotton, and good prices for the American farmer, upon whom Europe must depend to a greater extent than usual for food during the coming year.

For the time being caution is necessary in all financial transactions. Our relations with Germany and Mexico are in an exceedingly uncertain and sensitive stage. The scene shifts daily and so do the possibilities.

ICE MEN ARE ALL HONEST

Not One Complant Of Underweight Received

The annual reweighing of ice was commenced today by James N. Cantfill, sealer of weights and measures, but not under conditions usually connected with such work because, strange as it may seem, not a single complaint has been filed at his office in City Hall.

The records of past summers, during June and July, show that people suspected their ice was not of standard weight, and several drivers were brought to court and convicted.

Sealer Cantfill is prepared to operate extensively throughout the city, but unless there is a sudden change in the methods of drivers no court cases are expected to result.

When asked today, just before he started his campaign, how much a 10 cent piece of ice should weigh, the sealer said 27 pounds if cut in a block 9x9x10 inches. He said a cubic foot of ice, 12x12x12 inches, weighs 57 pounds, 8 ounces. A cubic inch of ice weighs .532 ounce. A cake 23x22 and 1 inch thick weighs 16 pounds, and for each additional inch in thickness the weight will increase 16 pounds. A cake 22x32 and 1 inch thick weighs 23 pounds and for each additional inch in thickness the weight will increase 23 pounds.

He furnished the following table of weights of ice of various sizes. For other sizes multiply length by width by height, and the product by .532 and divide the result by 16. The table:

The C. E. society meeting at the Baptist church was led by James Lewis, his subject being: "Making Life Worth While."

The annual picnic of the First Baptist S. S. was held Saturday at Houghton's pond and proved a great success. Two carloads left East Milton square at 9 o'clock and met three barges at Hillside street, which transported them to the pond. Here boating, swimming and all other sports were engaged in. Free lemonade, bananas and watermelons were furnished and under careful direction of Supt. Leatherbee and his able assistant B. V. Porter no one missed having a good time. After luncheon there were races for all ages. The big feature was the 100 yard dash for women which was won by Mrs. J. H. Leatherbee, with Mrs. James Lewis a close second. At six o'clock the party started for home after having one of the best picnics ever held in the history of the Sunday school.

LETTERS FROM OUR READERS

To the Editor of the Ledger:

Your editorial in last night's paper was of more than usual interest, and may it be confessed satisfaction to one member of this year's Council. But such magnanimity of spirit and gracious words cannot be taken in a personal sense. Although the Ledger may in its kindness single out an individual for commendation, the essential fact must not be overlooked that the Council is a body of twenty-three members and that whatever is accomplished is the result of collective action.

It is no divulgement of secrets to say that in all our deliberations there has hardly ever been any controversy concerning the final treatment of any problem, since all seemed to be essentially of one mind and purpose, and that mind and that purpose has been to give the city the best possible result. Many of us feel that the record of the year will be good and praiseworthy, and we likewise know that if these hopes are realized that every department of the year's government, executive, legislative and administrative, will have contributed its share toward the achievment.

CHAPTER I.

At Chaudiere's.

It was at Chaudiere's that Griswold had eaten his first breakfast in the Crescent city, and it was at Chaudiere's again that he was sharing a farewell supper with Bainbridge of the Louisianian. Six weeks lay between that and this; forty-odd days of discouragement and failure superadded upon other similar days and weeks and months.

Without meaning to, Bainbridge had been strewing the path with fresh thorns for the defeated one. He had just been billeted to write up the banana trade for his paper. Boyishly jubilant over the assignment, he had dragged the New Yorker around to Chaudiere's to a small parting feast. Not that it had required much persuasion. Griswold had fasted for 24 hours, and if Bainbridge were not a friend in a purist's definition of the term, he was at least a friendly acquaintance.

The burden of the table talk fell upon Bainbridge, and it occurred to the host that his guest was less than usually responsive, a fault not to be lightly condoned under the joyous circumstances. Wherefore he protested.

"What's the matter with you tonight, Kenneth, old man? You're more than commonly grumpy, it seems to me; and that's needless."

Griswold looked up with a smile that was almost ill-natured, and quoted cynically: "'Unto everyone that hath shall be given, and he shall have abundance; but from him that hath not, shall be taken away even that which he hath.'"

Bainbridge's laugh was tolerant enough to take the edge from his retort.

"That's a pretty thing to fling at a man who never knifed you or pistoled you or tried to poison you! An innocent bystander might say you envied me."

"I do," rejoined Griswold gravely. "I envy any man who can earn enough money to pay for three meals a day and a place to sleep in."

"Oh, cat's foot!—anybody can do that," asserted Bainbridge, with the air of one to whom the struggle for existence has been a mere athlete's practice run.

"I know; that is your theory. But the facts disprove it. I can't, for one."

Griswold was a fair man, with reddish hair and beard and the quick and sensitive skin of the type. A red flush of anger crept up under the closely cropped beard, and his eyes were bright.

Bainbridge scoffed openly; but he was good-natured enough to make amends when he saw that Griswold was moved.

"I take it all back," he said. "I suppose the book-chicken has come home again to roost, and a returned manuscript accounts for anything. But, seriously, Kenneth, you ought to get down to bed-rock facts. Nobody but a crazy phenomenon can find a publisher for his first book, nowadays, unless he has had some sort of an introduction in the magazines or the newspapers. You haven't had that; so far as I know, you haven't tried it."

"Oh, yes, I have—tried and failed. It isn't in me to do the salable thing, and there isn't a magazine editor in the country who doesn't know it by this time. I tell you, Bainbridge, the conditions are all wrong when a man with a vital message to his kind can't get to deliver it to the people who want to hear it."

Bainbridge ordered the small coffees and found his cigar case.

"That is about what I suspected," he commented impatiently. "You couldn't keep your peculiar views muzzled even when you were writing a bit of a pot boiler on sugar planting. You drop your fool socialistic fad and write a book that a reputable publisher can bring out without committing commercial suicide, and you'll stand some show."

"Call it what you please; names don't change facts. Listen"—Griswold leaned upon the table; his eyes grew hard and the blue in them became metallic—"For more than a month I have tramped the streets of this cursed city begging—yes, that is the word—begging for work of any kind that would suffice to keep body and soul together, and for more than half of that time I have lived on one meal a day. That is what we have come to; we of the submerged majority. And that isn't all. The wage worker himself, when he is fortunate enough to find a chance to earn his crust, is but a serf; a chattel among the other possessions of some fellow man who has acquired him in the plutocratic redistribution of the earth and the fullness thereof."

Bainbridge glanced at his watch.

"I must be going," he said. "The Adelantado drops down the river at eleven. How are you fixed for the present, and what are you going to do for the future?"

Griswold's smile was not pleasant to look at.

"I am 'fixed' to run twenty-four hours longer, thanks to your hospitality. For that length of time I presume I shall continue to conform to what we have been taught to believe is the immutable order of things. After that—"

He paused, and Bainbridge put the question. "Well, after that; what then?"

"Then, if the chance to earn is still denied me, and I am sufficiently hungry, I shall stretch forth my hand and take what I need."

Bainbridge fished in his pocket and took out a ten-dollar banknote. "Do that first," he said, offering Griswold the money.

The proletary smiled and shook his head.

* * * * * * *

The fruit steamer Adelantado, outward bound, was shuddering to the first slow revolutions of her propeller when Bainbridge turned the key in the door of the stuffy little stateroom to which he had been directed, and went on deck.

"Why, hello, Broffin! How are you, old man? Where the dickens did you drop from?"

It was the inevitable steamer acquaintance who is always at hand to prove the trite narrowness of the world, and Bainbridge kicked a chair into comradely place for him.

Broffin, heavy browed and clean shaven save for a thick mustache that hid the hard-bitted mouth, replaced the chair to suit himself and sat down. In appearance he was a cross between a steamboat captain on a vacation and an up-river plantation overseer recovering from his annual pleasure trip to the city. But his reply to Bainbridge's query proved that he was neither.

"I didn't drop; I walked. More than that, I kept step with you all the way from Chaudiere's to the levee. You'd be dead easy game for an amateur."

"You'll get yourself disliked, the first thing you know," said Bainbridge, laughing. "Can't you ever forget that you are in the man-hunting business? Where are you headed for, Broffin?"

The man who might have passed for a steamboat captain or a plantation overseer, and was neither, chuckled dryly.

"You don't expect me to give it away to you, and you a newspaper man, do you? But I will—seeing you can't get it on the wires. I'm going down to Guatemala after Mortsen."

"You Couldn't Keep Your Peculiar Views Muzzled."

"The Crescent bank defaulter? By Jove! you've found him at last, have you?"

The detective nodded. "I've been two years, off and on, trying to locate Mortsen; and now that I've found him, he is where he can't be extradited. All the same, I'll bet you five to one he goes back with me in the next steamer—what?"

CHAPTER II.

The Right of Might.

Two days after the supper at Chaudiere's the unimpetuous routine of the business quarter of New Orleans was rudely disturbed by the shock of a genuine sensation.

To shatter at a single blow the most venerable of the routine precedents, the sensational thing chose for its colliding point with orderly system one of the oldest and most conservative of the city's banks—the Bayou State Security. At ten o'clock, following the precise habit of half a lifetime, Mr. Andrew Galbraith, president of the Bayou State, entered his private room in the rear of the main banking apartment, opened his desk, and addressed himself to the business of the day. At half-past the hour the president was left alone to read his correspondence.

Being a man whose mental processes were all serious, and whose hobby was method, Mr. Galbraith had established a custom of giving himself a quiet half-hour of inviolable seclusion in which to read and consider his mail. During this sacred interval the stenographer, standing guard in the outer office, had instructions to deny his chief to callers of any and every degree. Wherefore, when, at 20 minutes to 11, the door of the private office opened to admit a stranger, the president was justly annoyed.

"Well, sir; what now?" he demanded, impatiently, taking the intruder's measure in a swift glance shot from beneath his bushy white eyebrows.

The unannounced visitor was a young man of rather prepossessing appearance, a trifle tall for his breadth of shoulder, fair, with blue eyes and a curling, reddish beard and mustache, the former trimmed to a point. So much the president was able to note in the appraisive glance—and to remember afterward.

The caller made no reply to the curt question. He had turned and was closing the door. There was a quiet insistence in the act that was like the flick of a whip to Mr. Galbraith's irritation.

"If you have business with me, you'll have to excuse me for a few minutes," he protested, still more impatiently. "Be good enough to take a seat in the anteroom until I ring. MacFarland should have told you."

The young man drew up a chair and sat down, ignoring the request as if he had failed to hear it. Ordinarily Mr. Andrew Galbraith's temper was equable enough; the age-cooled temper of a methodical gentleman whose long upper lip was in itself an advertisement of self-control. But such a deliberate infraction of his rules, coupled with the stony impudence of the visitor, made him spring up angrily to ring for the watchman.

The intruder was too quick for him. When his hand sought the bell push he found himself looking into the muzzle of a revolver, and so was fain to fall back into his chair, gasping.

"Ah-h-h!" he stammered. And when the words could be managed: "So that's it, is it?—you're a robber!"

"No," said the invader of the presidential privacy calmly, speaking for the first time since his incoming. "I am not a robber, save in your own very limited definition of the word. I am merely a poor man, Mr. Galbraith—one of the uncounted thousands—and I want money. If you call for help, I shall shoot you. It is merely a question of money, and if you are amenable to reason—"

"If I'm—but I'm not amenable to your reasons!" blustered the president, recovering a little from the first shock of terrified astoundment. "I refuse to listen to them. I'll not have anything to do with you. Go away!"

The young man's smile showed his teeth, but it also proved that he was not wholly devoid of the sense of humor.

"Keep your temper, Mr. Galbraith," he advised coolly. "The moment is mine, and I say you shall listen first and obey afterward. Otherwise you die. Which is it to be? Choose quickly—time is precious."

The president yielded the first point, that of the receptive ear; but grudgingly and as one under strict compulsion.

"Well, well, then; out with it. What have you to say for yourself?"

"This: You are rich; you represent the existing order of things. I am poor, and I stand for my necessity, which is higher than any man-made law or custom. You have more money than you can possibly use in any legitimate personal channels; I have not the price of the next meal, already twenty-four hours overdue. I came here this morning with my life in my hand to invite you to share with me a portion of that which is yours chiefly by the right of possession. If you do it, well and good; if not, there will be a new president of the Bayou State Security. Do I make myself sufficiently explicit?"

Andrew Galbraith glanced furtively at the paper-weight clock on his desk. It was nearly eleven, and MacFarland would surely come in on the stroke of the hour. If he could only fend off the catastrophe for a few minutes, until help should come. He searched in his pockets and drew forth a handful of coins.

The invader of privacies glanced at the clock in his turn and shook his head.

"You are merely trying to gain time, and you know it, Mr. Galbraith. My stake in this game is much more than a handful of charity silver; and I don't do you the injustice to believe that you hold your life so cheaply; you who have so much money and, at best, so few years to live."

The president put the little heap of coins on the desk, but he did not abandon the struggle for delay.

"What's your price, then?" he demanded, as one who may possibly consider a compromise.

"One hundred thousand dollars—in cash."

"But man! ye're clean daft! Do ye think I have—"

In the midst of his vehement protests the stranger sprang out of his chair, stepped back a pace and raised his weapon.

"Mr. Galbraith, you are juggling with your life! Write a check while there is yet time!"

The hammer of the leveled pistol clicked. Andrew Galbraith shut his eyes and made a blind grasp for pen and checkbook. His hands were shaking as with a palsy, but the fear of death steadied them suddenly when he came to write.

"Indorse it!" was the next command. The voices had ceased beyond the partition, and the dead silence was relieved only by the labored strokes of the president's pen and the tap-tap of the typewriter in the adjacent anteroom.

The check was written and indorsed, and under the menace of the revolver Andrew Galbraith was trying to give it to the robber. But the robber would not take it.

"No, I don't want your paper; come with me to your paying teller and get me the money. Make what explanation you see fit; but remember—if he hesitates, you die."

They left the private office together, the younger man a short half-step in the rear, with his pistol-bearing hand thrust under his coat. The president did not despair. In the public lobby there would be eyes to see, and perhaps some that would understand. Mr. Galbraith took a firmer hold upon his self-possession and trusted that some happy chance might yet intervene to save him.

But chance did not intervene. There was a goodly number of customers in the public space, but not one of the half-dozen or more who nodded to the president or passed the time of day with him saw the eye-appeal which was the only one he dared to make. On the short walk around to the paying teller's window, the robber kept even step with his victim, and try as he would, Andrew Galbraith could not summon the courage to forget the pistol muzzle menacing him in its coat-covered ambush.

At the paying wicket there was only one customer, instead of the group the president had hoped to find; a sweet-faced young woman in a modest traveling hat and a gray coat. She was getting a draft cashed, and when she saw them she would have stood aside. It was the robber who anticipated her intention and forbade it with a courteous gesture; whereat she turned again to the window to conclude her small transaction with the teller.

The few moments which followed were terribly trying ones for the gray-haired president of the Bayou State Security. None the less, his brain was busy with the chanceful possibilities. Failing all else, he was determined to give the teller a warning signal, come what might. It was a duty owed to society no less than to the bank and to himself. But on the pinnacle of resolution, at the instant when, with the robber at his elbow, he stepped to the window and presented the check, Andrew Galbraith felt the gentle pressure of the pistol muzzle against his side; nay, more—he fancied he could feel the cold chill of the metal strike through and through him.

So it came about that the fine resolution had quite evaporated when he said, with what composure there was in him: "You'll please give me currency for that, Johnson."

The teller glanced at the check and then at his superior; not too inquisitively, since it was not his business to question the president's commands.

"How will you have it?" he asked; and it was the stranger at Mr. Galbraith's elbow who answered.

"One thousand in fives, tens and twenties, loose, if you please; the remainder in the largest denominations, put up in a package."

The teller counted out the one thousand in small notes quickly; but he had to leave the cage and go to the vault for the huge remainder. This was the crucial moment of peril for the robber, and the president, stealing a glance at the face of his persecutor, saw the blue eyes blazing with excitement.

"It is your time to pray, Mr. Galbraith," said the spoiler in low tones. "If you have given your man the signal—"

But the signal had not been given. The teller was re-entering the cage with a bulky packet of money paper.

"You needn't open it," said the young man at the president's elbow. "The bank's count is good enough for me." And when the window wicket had been unlatched and the money passed out, he stuffed the loose bills carelessly into his pocket, put the package containing the ninety-nine thousand dollars under his arm, nodded to the president, backed swiftly to the street door and vanished.

Then it was that Mr. Andrew Galbraith suddenly found speech, opening his thin lips and pouring forth a torrent of incoherence which presently got itself translated into a vengeful hue and cry; and New Orleans the impetuous had its sensation ready-made.

EQUAL SUFFRAGE NOTES.

The rapid strides that woman suffrage is making everywhere has never been better evidenced than on July 4th and 5th. On July 4th, the regular meeting at four o'clock in the afternoon on Boston Common attracted by far the largest crowd on the mall that is given over to free speech. Although there were many orators the entire length of the Common, it was a noticeable fact that the newspapers of the city as well as the public itself, felt that the real interest centered around the woman suffrage speakers.

Miss Willard of the Boston Equal Suffrage Association had the affair in charge, as usual, and made a successful effort to instill the spirit of Independence Day into the affair. In addition to speeches by Arthur L. Weatherly of Nebraska, a former Bostonian, Hon. Herbert C. Parsons of Boston, and Mrs. Frances Kellogg Curtis, there was singing by 12 women, representing the 12 Suffrage states of the West. The assemblage joined heartily in the singing of the Star Spangled Banner, America, and the Battle Hymn of the Republic.

After the speeches were finished Mrs. Curtis stood upon an improvised platform and inserted into the Declaration of Independence, after the word "men," and the two words "and women." This idea was taken from the front page cartoon of "Life's" Independence Day number, issued last week. The audience was very sympathetic, and an unusual number of cards were signed.

On July 5th, when most of the official observances were held throughout the state, there was Suffrage activity everywhere. In scores of large cities and towns the Suffrage leagues participated with decorated automobiles floats and speaking. Miss Foley not only spoke at Clinton early in the afternoon, but made a long trip to Quincy for a speech in the evening Other speakers from Headquarters were busy, everywhere.

After the Americanization observances at Faneuil Hall, workers from Headquarters distributed the circular that was announced in this column last week. Louis D. Brandeis, Esq., the orator of the day at Faneuil Hall declared unequivocally in favor of Equal Suffrage as incidental to the forward march of American independence. His remarks were greeted with unstinted applause.

At the unveiling of the Wendell Phillips monument at 4 o'clock on the Public Garden facing Boylston street, the program of the afternoon was divided between Phillips' love for abolition and his high regard for Woman Suffrage. A beautiful wreath from the Massachusetts Woman Suffrage Association occupied the place of honor on the monument. Two yellow ribbons carried Phillips' famous quotation, "The right of Suffrage for women is the corner stone." The card from the Association read "To the memory of the prophet of liberty on the eve of its fulffillment." Michael J. Jordan, who spoke on "The Evening of Phillips' Life," referred to his wonderful sympathy for the full enfranchisement of women.

What happened in the Massachusetts Federation is typical of what has been happening in the women's clubs throughout the country. The cause of the change was clearly indicated in the report made at Marion by Mrs. Julius Andrews, chairman of the Legislative Committee. She spoke feelingly of the disadvantage inherent in representing "65,000 voteless women." "If I represented 65,000 voting women, oh, what a difference!" said Mrs. Andrews, and the convention applauded warmly. "Voteless women, even 65,000, do not represent much intrinsic value to the politicians on Beacon Hill," she continued. "Our 'indirect influence' means loss of time, energy and money. This committee must protest vigorously against the handicap of being without votes."

When the women's clubs advanced from the study of ancient art and Browning's poetry to the study of the community around them; when they widened their field from amusement and self-culture and began to work for legislation to promote human welfare, they were bound to become suffragists. It is true that they succeeded in doing some noteworthy things, even without the ballot, as the opponents of equal rights are fond of reminding us. It is also true that Columbus discovered America without a steamship, and that David killed Goliath without a gun; but modern workers want modern tools.

SPORTING COMMENT

Waltham has declined to include Quincy High school in its football schedule. It is not surprising for last fall at the last minute they quit. Their excuse was unfavorable condition of grounds. That was admitted to a certain extent, but bigger and faster schools than either Waltham or Quincy have played football for titles under more adverse conditions. The local boys have always declared the word "quit" explains the situation. After all, why should Quincy High school care whether they play Waltham or not. Give Quincy a good season record, so mighty that they will loom above other schools, and public opinion will have more to do with arranging a game with Waltham, that is if they are fast enough, than all the agitation from here to Frisco.

BUSINESS BLOCKS GOOD INVESTMENT

So Says Prominent Real Estate Man In Illuminating Interview

BUILDING FOR FUTURE

A prominent real estate man when asked his views as to the occupancy of all the new stores which have been and are now building in Quincy took an optimistic view.

"People with money to invest are looking ahead and while it may be five years or more before all of the new stores are occupied, it shows enterprise on the part of men of money. It is very doubtful if all of the new stores are occupied immediately, but Quincy is growing fast and with the growth there will come a demand for all the stores that are now contemplated. Business begets business and with so many desirable locations for business, there is sure to come forward men of push who will open up stores.

"These stores will not and are not even now depending on Quincy trade alone, for they are drawing from all of the towns south of Quincy. Take any Saturday night as an illustration. City square is alive with people and the cars from out of town unload hundreds of people in City square who come here to do their Saturday night shopping, and on the whole it will be found that they can buy equally as low in the majority of cases as in Boston. The local stores have a good variety to draw from, the stock is fresh, and the Saturday night shopping can be completed and they can arrive at their homes in good season.

"Therefore, while it may be several years before all of the new stores are occupied, they will be eventually. Even the stores on the east side of Hancock street between Granite street and Cottage avenue, which are not now letting well, will be in demand. With the new granolithic sidewalk that is to be built on this side of the street, and the stores presenting an attractive appearance, trade is bound to go over. Once started there will be no question question as to the future."

CITY HALL NOTES

The assessors who have been in the field since the first of April have about completed their field work. It will take some weeks of office work however before they will be ready to announce the tax rate for 1915. Owing to the general boosting of realty all along the line last year, it has taken the Board much longer this year than usual to cover the city.

The City Council committee on licenses met Monday evening and wrestled with a number of amendments to the building ordinance proposed by the building inspector.

Souvenir postal cards have been received from ex-Councilman Harry G. Studley who is at Atlantic City for a brief visit.

It would seem that some plan might be devised whereby the offices in the basement of City Hall could be ventilated so as to get rid of some of the dampness. No matter how hot the day outside, one entering the basement offices immediately feels a chill. Electric fans are kept in operation in most of the offices and the doors and windows are also kept open, yet for all that there is a dampness which seems to penetrate every part of the body During the summer months it is not uncommon for mould to gather in some of the rooms. The wonder is that the clerks employed in these offices are not on the sick list a good part of the time.

The offices of the Board of Health are located in the basement of City Hall and it would seem as if this Board, whose function it is to look after the general health of the city, should take the matter up and see if present conditons can not be remedied

WIZARD EDISON TO HELP NAVY

Accepts Daniels' Invitation to Render Patriotic Service

WILL HEAD ADVISORY BOARD

Inventive Genius of Americans to Be Utilized to Meet New Conditions of Warfare, With Special Reference to Submarine Problems—Department of Experimentation Is Suggested

West Orange, N. J., July 13.—Thomas A. Edison has accepted an invitation from Secretary Daniels to head an advisory board of civilian inventors for a bureau of invention and development to be created in the navy department.

His acceptance will go forward at once to Washington, where the new plans await word from the man "who can turn dreams into realities."

Daniels' idea of utilizing the inventive genius of Americans, in and out of the military and naval service, to meet conditions of warfare shown in the conflict on land and sea in Europe, is outlined in a letter asking Edison whether, as a patriotic service to his country, he would undertake the advising of the proposed bureau.

The plan is to have several men prominent in special lines of inventive reasearch associated in the work.

Among the great problems to be laid before the investigators, the secretary mentioned submarine warfare, adding that he felt sure that, with Edison's wonderful brain to help them, the officers of the navy would be able "to meet this new danger with new devices that will assure peace to our country by their effectiveness."

In announcing that he would gladly accept Secretary Daniels' invitation, Edison said he believed the proposal so important that it should be attended to at once, while the war in Europe was bringing before the public the importance of encouraging and developing ideas and inventions of Americans, especially officers and men of the army and navy.

"The United States is far behind in these matters," said Edison. "I believe it is highly important for a board of civilians made up of engineers from leading industries to be formed for the purpose of looking into the feasibility of ideas developed by young men. While all ideas that will be submitted may not be feasible, at least they will have the benefit of expert judgment and advice.

"In adition to the advisory board of engineers I would also suggest a department of experimentation where ideas might be tried out. The cost might be nominal. Only a few acres of land would be required with proper buildings and a corps of efficient men calculated to carry out experiments under directions of those suggesting them after they have been approved.

"It is an important matter and should be put underway at once. The European war has served to draw attention to the fact that many American ideas and inventions have been allowed to slip by, and if this matter is put off until the war is over, there is danger of it being forgotten."

New Orleans Police Hold Suspect In Steamship Bomb Case

New Orleans, July 13.—While a score of detectives searched New Orleans for trace of the writer of a letter signed "Pearce," in which was contained a threat against the life of Sir Cecil Spring-Rice, the police authorities centred their personal efforts to obtain a statement from Hans Halle, arrested here because of his implication in a previous steamship plot last December.

Halle will be held until the British steamers Baron Napier and the Dowth Head, now off the coast, dock here. In the Pearce letter the writer declared both would be blown up.

Interest in the Pearce letter was increased when it became known that the writer said it was Muenter who spread broadcast the warning, when the Lusitania sailed, that she would be sunk. The letter declared Muenter had called personally on Charles Frohman to warn him against taking passage on the Lusitania.

Lawson was sentenced to spend the remainder of his life at hard labor in the state penitentiary.

THEORY OF JEALOUSY

Two Men Are Held on the Charge of Murdering Barnaby

West Townsend, Mass., July 13.—That jealousy was the motive behind the shooting of William Barnaby, who was killed at a farmhouse, is the new theory on which the police are at work.

TYPHOID FEVER IN THE UNITED STATES

An editorial in the Journal of the American Medical Association, April 17th, says in part, "It is evident that Typhoid Fever is on the way to become a relatively rare disease in many parts of the United States. There are two main reasons for this. First, there are now comparatively few large cities in which the public water supply is likely to contain Typhoid Bacteria. Second, the increase in the practice of pasteurization has resulted in a dimunition in the amount of milk borne typhoid."

The Elm Farm Milk Company complying with the general demand by the Medical Profession and Sanitarians, were one of the first to scientifically pasteurize their milk. This milk is offered at the same price that rules for ordinary milk.

This process is the only one that absolutely guarantees the safety of milk against all of the infectious diseases.

NAVAL BATTLE DEEP IN JUNGLE

British Monitors Accomplish Destruction of Konigsberg

HAD LONG BEEN A MENACE

Seemed Safe From Detection or Attack but Is Spied by British Airman In East African Forest Retreat—German Asphyxiating Bombs Drive French From Important Strategic Point—Objective Gained by Capture of Lemberg, According to Austria—Italians and Austrians In Desperate Struggle Under Great Difficulties

London, July 13.—The German protected cruiser Konigsberg, last of the Teuton fighting ships left free on the seas, which for nine months has remained mysteriously in hiding, lies a total wreck far up in the jungle of German East Africa.

Late last October the Konigsberg suddenly ended its career of raiding British and French commerce, and, despite insistent search by the English men-of-war, completely disappeared. No word of her came, yet merchantmen of the allied countries sailed in fear of her sudden reappearance, and in the knowledge that the sea had not been cleared of the German menace.

During the conquest of German East Africa by the British, however, an English airman one day discovered a trim, speedy fighting craft in hiding under the interweaving boughs of the jungle trees, above a sharp turn in the Rufiji river.

Her position had been carefully picked best to resist attack; guns from her deck had been mounted on both the banks and at the river's mouth. In her forest retreat she seemed safe from detection or attack.

For two months the British admiralty planned the engagement. It decided upon the small river monitors, craft of the most shallow draft, as the vessels to rid the seas finally of German warships. Then the attack was ordered and the six-hour battle began—a battle unlike any in naval history, for it was a battle deep in the African jungle.

And when the engagement was over the German craft lay in the river bed, a complete wreck, the little monitors sailed away victorious, and the seas again were open to safe passage by merchantmen.

The British casualties were four men killed and six wounded. No mention is made of the German losses.

Setback For the French

From what appeared to be a lull on the western front, has sprung suddenly some of the most severe fighting in months, with the Germans the aggressors and victors.

The Souchez cemetery, seven miles north of Arras, and hardly half that distance southwest of Lens, has been wrested from the French after a German asphyxiating bomb attack, followed by hand-to-hand fighting with bomb and bayonet. The French admit this loss, and are fighting to regain the ground which they had won at such heavy cost.

Slowly the French had been tightening their grip on the village of Souchez, until the Germans, aware that the capture of the entire position would be an important step in the French offensive toward Lens and Lille, launched a terrific counter-stroke, which left them masters of the shattered burial ground. Fighting among the houses which fringe the western side of the town still rages.

There has also been a renewal of activity in other areas of France and Belgium, but nothing comparable with the strategic importance of the Souchez struggle. The Germans lay claim to the destruction of the British position on Hill 60, near Ypres, but this finds no confirmation from either French or British sources.

Lemberg Was Austrian Objective

Petrograd reports continued fighting along the front extending from Josefow, on the Vistula, to Bychawa, approximately thirty miles to the eastward. The Austrians have again become aggressive here, according to the Russian statement, but their attacks were repulsed.

A dispatch from Austrian headquarters in Galicia explains the apparent lull in the Austro-German advance by asserting that the Teutonic allies fixed Lemberg as the objective of the present campaign, with the idea of establishing themselves in the strong defensive positions to the northward, in order to use part of their troops elsewhere. It is claimed that this has been accomplished by establishing lines along the Bug and Ziota Lipa rivers and the Krasnik ridge.

It is further explained that the Austrians proceeded beyond Krasnik, but, encountering unexpected opposition, retired on the positions originally selected, where they have resisted all further Russian attacks.

Battle In Carnic Alps

According to reports from the Italian front the Austrians are making a desperate effort to penetrate Italy through the Carnic Alps. They are relying chiefly upon night attacks which so far have invariably failed.

The Italians have retorted by redoubling their efforts against all the forts protecting the Pusteria valley along the Drave river, as with the occupation of Innischen or Toblach on that river and on the railway line, Trent could be resupplied only through Innsbruck.

After having bombarded Platzwiefe and the newly terraced Fort Landro, the most important system of fortifications closing the great Alemagna road leading to Austria, the Italians are now giving their attention to the forts forming the flank protection of that highway.

These are all armored and each is divided into two sections, one provided with armored casements for long range guns for near defense. All have steel cupolas.

HECKLERS SIDETRACKED

Asquith Refuses to Allow Shell Controversy In Parliament

An effort to secure a discussion of the shell controversy and the differences between David Lloyd George, minister of munitions, and Viscount Haldane, former minister of war, was made in the British parliament, but Premier Asquith firmly declined to satisfy the inquiring members of parliament.

Asquith pleaded that any such discussion in the present circumstances could serve no good purpose and that it would be detrimental to the best interests of the nation.

WAR'S TERRIBLE TOLL

Prussian Casualties Alone Amount to 1,504,523 to Date

The last 16 Prussian casualty lists contain the names of 94,747 officers and men killed and wounded, making the total Prussian losses to the end of June 1,504,523.

This does not include the Saxon casualty lists, 198 Bavarian lists, 211 Wurtemberg lists and 36 navy lists.

Of 40,000 German national school teachers under arms 4900 have been killed in battle.

Failures of Soldiers' Armor.

Many years ago several inventors developed bullet proof cloths or breastplates, and in spite of much advertising their suggestions were never adopted, much to the surprise of civilians. The reason is very simple. If the bullet is stopped its energy is transmitted to the shield, which in turn delivers a blow to the soldier's body. The severity of the blow depends upon the velocity of the bullet, and if the shield is very light the chest wall receives more or less injury. In order to be effective the shield must weigh at least ten pounds.

It is a repetition of the old circus trick of striking with a sledgehammer an anvil on a man's chest. If in place of the anvil we substitute a thin metal plate the blow would be fatal, and the sledgehammer has about the same energy as a bullet at high velocity. If the shield weighs but six or eight pounds the blow of the bullet almost knocks a man down. Soldiers are not to wear armor, but to get behind it, as in armored ships, forts and motorcars. —London Tatler.

ALIENIST UNABLE TO DEFINE NEW TERM

Says Thaw Is Suffering With "Constitutional Inferiority"

New York, July 13.—Dr. Austin Flint, an alienist, testifying at the trial to test the sanity of Harry K. Thaw, gave it as his opinion, on direct examination, that Thaw was suffering with "paranoia or constitutional inferiority with a paranoiac trend."

On cross examination, he said he did not know what "constitutional inferiority" means, but that he had used the term, which he described as being new, because he thought it applicable.

Answering Judge Hendrick's inquiry, how a layman could determine whether Thaw was a paranoiac, Flint thought the layman would have to make his choice "between which alienist he would believe."

Flint declared he was sure Thaw was a paranoiac, but admitted the prisoner had shown no signs of it in court.

BUILDING BOOM IS ON

Chicago Expects to Start $10,000,000 Worth of Work This Week

Chicago, July 13.—With the return to work of thousands of union carpenters who have been on a strike since May 1, Chicago launched a boom in the building industry which, it was estimated, will give work to 150,000 men.

By Thursday it is believed that nearly all of the carpenters and mill men will have returned to work. Building contractors and bankers said construction work amounting to at least $10,000,000 will be started this week.

Boston Dogs to Be Muzzled

Boston July 13.—An order compelling owners to muzzle dogs or restrain them from running at large for a period of ninety days because of reports of rabies was passed at a meeting of the city council.

Old Warship Sold For Junk

Washington, July 13.—Another of the navy's historical wooden men-of-war passed to the junk heap when the department authorized the sale of the frigate Portsmouth to John E. Burke, Boston, for $4689.

China's Great River.

The Yangtze kiang, or Yangtze river, is as long as the Mississippi and is far more important as a highway of commerce. From the great port of Shanghai as far inland as the important city of Hankow, a distance of 600 miles, the Yangtze is navigable for ocean going vessels. For the greater portion of this distance the river is very broad, and for some of the journey a passenger in a boat in midstream would be unable to see either shore distinctly. From Hankow to Ichang, 280 miles farther, the Yangtze is navigable for small river steamers, and from Ichang up to Pingshanhsien, nearly 1,000 miles, it is in great part navigable. Some of the passenger steamers plying between Shanghai and Hankow are exceedingly modern and comfortable. Thousands of sailing craft are seen on the river daily on a trip between these two points and numbers of huge rafts which require each a whole village to bring them and their contents to the distant market. The Yangtze has many important tributaries. One of these, the Hanho, which flows into the Yangtze at Hankow, is itself navigable for 600 miles.

The President's Title.

In spite of our traditions and our pretenses Americans dearly love a title. It's a fair guess that a larger part of the mail that goes to the White House is addressed to "His Excellency" or "His Eminence" or "His Honor." As a matter of fact his title is The President of the United States. That is title so great that the fathers decided that to add to it would be to detract from it. The fathers were wise. Taking their cue from the federal practice the constitution makers nor the statute makers of New York ever gave the chief executive of this commonwealth other title than the governor of New York. Every governor of the state has been content with that. Address him so in letter or in speech and you are right. Decorate him with an "excellency" or an "honor" and you are wrong. The governor of Massachusetts is His Excellency by warrant of the constitution of 1780, but he is the only excellency we have in America.—New York Sun.

Buffoonery In "Hamlet."

The buffoonery once tolerated in provincial theaters is illustrated in an anecdote set forth in the memoirs of Barry Sullivan. Wright, who was the first gravedigger, prepared himself to take the house by storm by having incased his person within a dozen or more waistcoats of all sorts of shapes and patterns. When about to commence the operation of digging the grave for the fair Ophelia Wright began to unwind by taking off waistcoat after waistcoat, which caused uproarious laughter among the audience. But as fast as he relieved himself of one waistcoat Paul Bedford, the second gravedigger, incased himself in the castoff vests, which increased the salvos of laughter, for as Wright was getting thinner Paul grew fatter and fatter. Wright, seeing himself outdone, kept on the remainder of the waistcoats and went on with his part quite crestfallen.

His Best.

A small boy, who had been allowed to run much in the streets, had so improved his opportunities that before he was five years old it was commonly said by the neighbors that he swore like a little pirate. Parental discipline did not avail to break him of the habit. One day when he was to visit his grandmother in the next street he was implored by his mother to behave himself properly, and especially not to indulge in bad language. He promised to try to remember. On his return at night the anxious mother asked if he had been a good boy. He replied emphatically that he had, clinching the statement by adding:

Languages.

The French, Spanish, Italian and Portuguese languages (known as the "romance" languages) are offshoots of the old Latin and are to a considerable extent founded upon it, while the German and English tongues grew up quite apart from the Latin. That is why the Scandinavian, Dutch, German and English languages (which, like the peoples themselves, are closely related) are so scant in Latin words and derivations.—New York American.

Hope.

"Yes, she rejected me, but she did it in a most encouraging way."

"How was that?"

"As I went away she pointed to the footprints that I had made on the carpet and said, 'The next time you come to propose to me I want you to wipe your shoes clean!'"—Der Guckkasten.

China's Tea and Rice.

China has three crops of tea—the spring crop in April, the second in May and the "even flower" crop about the 1st of July. The export season is throughout the year. Three crops of rice are harvested. Export of this product is prohibited.

A Loving Couple.

"How many lumps of sugar, George?" asked the wife.

"Oh, have your own sweet way, as usual, dear," replied the husband.—Yonkers Statesman.

Fountain of Youth.

She—Old Mrs. Butterbus seems to be a fountain of youth in spite of her years. Sheba—At any rate she's always gushing.—Chaparral.

Ask your friends for advice, women for pity, strangers for charity and your relatives for nothing.—Spanish Proverb.

He Had Seen the Play.

While acting in Sir James Barrie's play, "The Little Minister," at a suburban theater Miss Grace Lane was told at the end of the first act that a gentleman, whose name she did not catch, would like to speak to her.

Miss Lane supposed that it was a reporter on a local paper who desired an interview, and she wearily gave permission for the visitor to be brought into her presence.

When, a little later, the manager brought a small, delicate looking man up to her in the wings she smiled upon him condescendingly and opened the conversation by saying she hoped he liked the play.

"Yes," answered the stranger quietly, "I've no very grave faults to find with it."

"I suppose," continued Miss Lane, "that you saw it when it was produced at the Haymarket?"

"Yes, I saw it there more than once," was the reply.

"You seem to have taken a great interest in the play," was Miss Lane's next remark, as she began to show signs of moving off.

"Well, you see," said the quiet little man apologetically, "I wrote it."

The stranger, whose name she had not caught, was James Matthew Barrie. —London Mail.

The Round Robin.

William Henry P. Fyfe in "Five Thousand Facts and Fancies" says that round robin is the name given to a remonstrance or petition signed by a number of persons, generally in a circular form, so as to avoid giving prominence to any single name. He continues:

"This device is said to have been first used by the officials of the French government as a means of making known their grievances. The most celebrated 'round robin' in the English language is the one signed by Burke, Gibbon, Sir Joshua Reynolds and others and sent to Dr. Samuel Johnson, requesting him to amend the epitaph to Oliver Goldsmith in Westminster abbey and suggesting that it be written in English and not in Latin. Johnson accepted the 'round robin' in a kindly spirit, but told Sir Joshua Reynolds, the bearer of the missive, that he would 'never consent to disgrace the walls of Westminster abbey with an English inscription.'"

Great Men and Doubles.

It is said that there is a French soldier who is the living image of Napoleon I. Other instances have been found of persons born many years apart bearing a striking likeness to one another. Mr. Winston Churchill is the "double" of the Emperor Titus, at least according to the bust of the latter at the British museum. "Dion Boucicault," writes George Augustus Sala, "was the very image of Sir Kenelm Digby as he appears in the frontispiece to his 'Choice and Experimental Receipts in Physics and Chirurgery.' Douglas Jerrold was the ikon of Montgolfier, the discoverer of the fire balloon, and the late Montagu Williams, Q. C., if he had donned a flowing black periwig, might well have sat to a Sir Peter Lely of our times for a portrait of Charles II."—London Tatler.

Kinsale.

Kinsale keeps a modest place in the history of Ireland. It was here that Don Juan's fleet landed 3,000 men to join hands with O'Neill, out of which landing grew the story that the cottages at World's End are "still inhabited by the descendants of Spaniards." It was from Kinsale that James II. on March 2, 1689, landed and from Kinsale he sailed after his defeat at the battle of the Boyne. Thirty years ago the house in which he spent the night before his departure was still in existence. Kinsale was greater in the past than now, for we read that "of all the Irish ports it was the best situated for intercourse with France and that in the town Marlborough found a thousand barrels of wheat and eighty pipes of claret."—London Spectator.

A Woman's Way.

"Sir, we are starting a new railroad and want your daughter to drive the first spike."

"I have no doubt she will consider it an honor to officiate."

"Thank you. We have provided a small gold spike, also a silver hammer."

"One minute. I don't think she could drive a spike with a hammer. Better provide a hairbrush." — Louisville Courier-Journal.

Imagination.

"Robert," said the teacher to a small pupil, "can you tell me what imagination is?"

"Yes, ma'am," replied the little fellow. "Imagination is what makes a fellow think a bee's stinger is three feet long after he gets stung."—Pittsburgh Press.

One Way.

Customer—But your competitors, the Skinnem Mining company, have offices twice as large as yours. Promoter—That only shows our superior business organization. We have concentrated our business twice as much as they have.—Boston Journal.

Deeply Hurt.

"Am I the first girl you ever kissed?"

"Well," said he, "I knew I bungled it, but I didn't think I made that poor a job of it."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Deduction.

Lotts—Dobson's peculiar; owns a car and owes me $5! Potts—Only $5? How little he drives it!—New York Globe.

It is always morning somewhere in the world.—Richard Hengist Horne.

REMOVE DRINKING FOUNTAIN.

HAD Adorned Brewers Corner For Several Years.

The granite drinking fountain for several years located at the junction of Granite and Copeland streets, at Brewers corner, was removed Monday and now ornaments the grounds about the city stables. There was a time when these public drinking fountains were much in use by man and beast. The cattle commission have forbidden the use of fountains for animals and the board of health has forbidden human beings to quench their thirst at public fountains. The big fountain in City square will probably oe the next to go.

NORTH WEYMOUTH

Miss Abby E. Bates and Miss Anne Raymond have gone to Intervale, N. H. for the season.

Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Varney of Rockland are at the Autorest cottage, Hunts Hill.

Mr. and Mrs. Paul Brown are to spend the season at their Hunt hill cottage.

Miss Evelyn Tibbetts has accepted a position with Edward Brown.

Mr. and Mrs. Willis Keene have moved to their Norwell farm.

Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Shaw were recent guests of their son Irving Shaw of Wollaston.

Norman Loud is to spend the remainder of the sumer with his aunt Miss Mary Loud.

Mrs. James Donlin has returned from a short visit to relatives in Brockton.

If the enthusiasm displayed at the open air equal suffrage meeting Monday evening is a criterion, the majority of North Weymouth men will vote yes on the question next November at the polls. An auto decorated with the official "Votes for Women" banners arrived at Thomas corner at eight o'clock and an audience of 350 men and women were on hand to greet the occupants. Miss Helen Goodnow of Boston was the first speaker. Her speech was short but to the point and she soon had her audience in the proper mood to absorb the wisdom of the following speaker. Miss Goodnow has spoken at a street meeting every evening during the past two months, weather permitting Miss Minnie Mulry was the next speaker. Miss Mulry has spoken before almost every men's club and Labor Union throughout the State and her reception at her initial appearance in Weymouth proved that her fame had preceded her. For one half hour she held the undivided attention of the gathering and her arguments, forceful in themselves, were presented with such potency and sincerity as to convince the most skeptical. There was more than one "anti" who went home with a more enlightened view of suffrage. Incidentally Miss Mulry will be remembered as the lady who had charge of advertising "Along Came Ruth" of Plymouth Theatre fame when it was presented in the Kincaide Theatre several months ago. J. H. Spitz gave the closing argument, which was along the same line of thought. "Votes for Women" pins were sold and cards distributed for signatures.

He was being piloted in his rounds by Frank J. Shay, formerly of Wollaston, at one time referred to as the second Mayor of Quincy.

FASHIONABLE COIFFURE

The girl of 1915 does her hair low in her neck, parted upon the side and waved from part to knot in large, loose waves. For the evening she wears a jeweled bandeau and, if becoming to her style, wears it very low upon the forehead a la Cleopatra. This coiffure is shown front and back in the illustration.

A Thorough Case.

Every schoolroom is supposed to have its romancer, or boaster.

There was a mild epidemic of mumps in an uptown school not long ago, and a teacher asked the pupils in her room how many remembered having the disease.

A few remembered it, but most of them had never heard of it.

Then the romancer attracted the teacher's attention.

"I get the mumps, teacher," he smilingly said. "I get it around my face so. And I get one by each eye—and one under my neck."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

ORACLE SAYS SOMETHING OF HIMSELF

Many inquiries have been received by the editor as to who the correspondent is who signs himself "Oracle." There have also been requests that if his name can not be made public the Ledger should at least publish his picture. The request was put up to the "Oracle" which brought the following reply:

Dear Mr. Editor:

"It was with feeling of pride that I received your request for a photograph so that my picture might be published for the edification of the politicians of the city. Not for a minute can you imagine how I swelled up with exultation at the thoughts that I had reached a stage where my picture was sought to ornament the page of a daily newspaper. Alas, how sorry I am that I can not comply with this simple request.

It has been years since I dared face a camera, and now I doubt if there is any photographer in the city who has the moral courage to try to transfer my face to a coated glass plate, unless it be Sue Rice, who mugs the criminals for the police department. If I went there I am afraid that something might happen so that my classic face would occupy a place in the rogues gallery. No, the risk is too great.

"Perhaps, however, a word picture of myself will suffice, for readers of the Ledger will have no difficulty in recognizing it. Born at the time when the good old citizens of Quincy never dreamed that the time would come when Quincy would be one of the leading cities of the Commonwealth. Not in Qiuncy, however, but in a good old town of the commonwealth which derives its nickname from an article that was at one time manufactured in large quantities within its borders.

At a tender age I came to Quincy and for the greater part of the time since then I have watched the trend of events in the town and city. Julia Underwood taught me my A. B. C's. and later I sat for a few days under "Lon" Keith in the old building on High school avenue. As I grew up I listened carefully to the words that flowed from the old wisdom corner in the town hall, and thought sometime I, too, might be given a place in that corner. But Quincy progressed and from the town government with its committee of fifteen to study financial questions came a City Council of 23. I sometimes wonder if the change has been for the better.

I believe that the office should seek the man and that is probably the reason why I have never been asked to electrify the halls of the Council chamber, the halls of the big building on Beacon hill, Boston, or the halls of Congress. My light has been hidden under a bushel. I have ears however and have often sat in the Council Chamber and listened to the debates of the local law makers. Sorry am I to say that many times I have not been carried away with the wisdom displayed. Then I have stood about after the meetings and have listened with open ears to the scrapping and back-biting, indulged in by some of the members.

Thus by keeping my eyes open and my ears close to the ground I am able to hear things which the general public are interested in, but which they are not in position to hear. Some of these things I have endeavored in the past to put before the public in the Ledger, and which I shall doubtless continue to do from time to time in the future. We are fast approaching another political campaign, both state and municipal and there are many things likely to develop in which the citizens and voters should be informed.

"This, then, is my word picture. I have no axe to grind. Simply to place before the citizens some of the things in which perhaps they may be interested.

MUSICAL COMEDY COMES TO TOWN

Ben Loring's big musical company which has just completed a twelve weeks engagement in New Bedford lived up to everything which the advance agent promised at the Kincaide theatre Monday. Music and melody, wit and humor, pretty girls garbed in pretty costumes, spectacular and brilliant settings, a screamingly funny farce, "The Fly Inspector," delighted the audiences at both performances.

The plot was not too deep, some musical comedies have been ruined by involved, brain wearying plots. Music, Beauty, Fun and Fantasy were kings. Ben Loring made a marked hit with his song "Coupons" and was obliged to respond twice. A duet, "To Italy," was highly appreciated. One number, "Lasen," although not so loudly applauded as others was no doubt just the touch to give refinement to the program. It was well rendered.

The final number with the pretty girls in swings trimmed with greenery and colored lights, the entire cast on the stage, was attractive and received much applause. Altogether it was a most satisfying production. The show will run the rest of the week.

"The Diamond from the Sky" maintained its interest. The Pathe Weekly had some interesting and instructive pictures.

John McIntosh and John McCormick of West Quincy are leaving this week for Provincetown where they will spend a month's vacation.

THREATENS GOVERNOR WALSH WITH DEATH

Unknown Man Writes That Two Bombs Are Placed In State House And One In Custom House

Boston, July 14—Gov. Walsh was threatened with death and the State House and the Custom House tower were threatened with destruction in a note received today.

Affixed to the note which was received by a Boston paper was a clipping containing portions of a story written by Carl W. Ackerman, United Press correspondent at Berlin, regarding Germany's placing interned steamships at the disposal of the United States in the transportation of neutrals. The note was printed on brown wrapping paper and an attempt at disguise was evident.

The note read:

"2 booms are placed at the State House and one in the Custom House tower. Holt was a spy and so am i. 3 interned ships will leave when the bombs go off. The governor is to be killed. The bombs will go off about Friday. I have fooled the police."

Gov. Wash is now in the west but is due to return home the first week in August. Police headquarters were notified and the note turned over to the department. Acting United States Dist. Atty. Leo Rogers stated after being notified of the receipt of the note that "while it may be the work of a crank and may amount to nothing one can never tell. Nearly everyone thought the warning on the sinking of the Lusitania was a joke."

The Quincy police were defeated at Boston Tuesday by the Boston officers, leaders of the Massachusetts police league. The score was 12 to 8. Boston broke up the game by adding seven runs in the fifth inning. Quincy made 15 hits but the men suffered from the effects of the weather and were unable to run bases with their accustomed ease. Riley and Ferguson were the feature performers. Both batted for 1000. The summary:

AUTOMOBILE AND CYCLISTS COLLIDE

Brothers From Houghs Neck Narrowly Escape Bad Injuries

ARE RUSHED TO HOSPITAL

Donald and George Carmichael, summer residents at Racoon isiand, narrowly escaped serious injury Tuesday evening when they were thrown from a motorcycle which was in collision with an automobile driven by Jacob Grossman.

The accident occurred shortly before six o'clock at Coddington and Newcomb streets. The Carmichaels were travelling in the direction of Houghs Neck and Grossman was about to cross Coddington street and continue along to Woodward avenue. A grain team owned by C. H. and G. W. Nightingale and driven by James McNaughton was coming up Coddington street, toward City square.

The Carmichaels and Grossman, because of the open corner saw each other. The former turned to the left to pass in front of the auto, the latter turned to the right to give them as much room as possible. The motorcycle was driven a short distance when it was turned to avoid the team and the collision took place.

The Carmichaels were thrown, Donald under the team and George to the street. He was under the auto when it was stopped. The machine was carried across the street by its momentum, although the brakes were applied. It was stopped when it struck the curbing on the northerly side of Coddington street.

The crash when the machines came together was plainly heard throughout the vicinity and over a score of residents were drawn to the scene. Several went to the assistance of the Carmichaels, among them Patrolman Jeremiah Connolly who was passing.

He accepted the offer of an autoist and took both men to the Quincy City Hospital where it was found they suffered no broken bones but had multiple bruises about the body.

The police ambulance which had been summoned by telephone made an exceptionally quick run. They arrived just after the injured men had been taken away. Among the doctors who were on the scene just after the accident was Dr. H. E. Diehl of the Board of Health.

The motorcycle was damaged and was taken to police headquarters in the ambulance. The Grossman machine was not damaged but the air was forced out of one of the front tires when it struck the curbing. Nightingale's horse was cut about the legs where it was struck by the motorcycle.

Mrs. Herbert Pratt and Miss Jessie Pratt, who live on Coddington street were in the yard and saw the accident. and other neighbors also saw the affair. All agreed that both machines had been operated in an attempt to avoid the accident and say the attempt would have succeeded if the team had not been in the way.

PLAYGROUNDS ARE IN FULL SWING

Boys And Girls Enjoy Recreation Yards Furnished By City

L. F. LaROSE IN CHARGE

The supervised playgrounds of the city are in full swing and hundreds of children are taking advantage of the companionship they afford. Competition in the various lines of athletic endeavor has started and boys and girls are qualifying for the championship.

The first supervised playground in Quincy was put in operation by the late Mayor Shea, six years ago, and was in accordance with the promise made the residents of his home ward that he would start one on the playground if elected. The system has grown rapidly and this, its sixth year, sees many improvements.

First class apparatus has been furnished by the city, and it is roughly estimated that the value as it stands on the playgrounds is about $3000. It includes slides, swings, teeters, Flying Dutchmen, rope toss, rubber ring sets, quoits and croquet. It is all standard equipment, such as is recommended by the best informed physical directors of the day.

The playgrounds are maintained under the direction of the Board of Park Commisioners on an appropriation of $3000 for this year an increase of $500 over previous years. The appropriation also covers the maintenance of the public bath house at Quincy Point, the upkeep of the base ball diamonds at Ward 2, 3 and 4, the care and improvement of Merrymount Park and the assisting in grammar school base ball and soccer foot ball.

Remarkable results have been achieved annually with this amount of money and it is generally conceded $5000 could be easily spent and most acceptable results obtained.

Playgrounds are being conducted throughout the city this season in Ward 2, 3, and 6. Owing to lack of interest the Ward 4 playground has been discontinued and the apparatus set up in the ward 6. Louis F. LaRose, who was a most popular and successful physical director at the Y. M. C. A., has been in charge of the playgrounds continually since 1911. He is now assisted at Ward three by Miss Alice Lakin and Miss Agnes Reardon, both Sargent school girls, and Frank Tirrell, University of Maine '15; at Ward two by Miss Bass and Wesley Williams and at Ward six by Miss O'Toole and Russell Bates.

The purpose of the playgrounds is to direct the children in the enjoyment of clean, innocent sport and to educate them in the folk dances of various countries, a knowledge close to the hearts of most of the residents of the city. The education is for both boys and girls, divided into three classes, A—for those under 10 years; B—for those 10, 11 and 12 years; C—for those 13, 14, 15, and 16 years. And incidently the main purpose is to keep them out of trouble. That this has been accomplished is claimed by supporters of the system.

During the season two grand events are held, the picnic at Merrymount park and the festival at which the Mayor of the city presents the prizes to the boys and girls having the largest number of points in the different lines of athletics. It has been suggested that these features be held this year on the same day.

When asked about the success of the project, Director La Rose, said that he considered the children's own attitude the fairest test of all. He said that this summer there is a surprising increase in number attending and that the children are most earnestly competing in the games. He said that he has found the same children return year after year and that at present there are 16 year old boys and girls participating who started when he was appointed.

RECEIVE CONGRATULATIONS.

The many friends of Mr. and Mrs. John S. Dolan of 6 Webster road, East Milton, formerly of Quincy, are extending congratulations to them upon the birth of a daughter last Saturday afternoon, July 10, 1915.

MAPLEWOOD MOTOR INN PROPRIETOR FINED $150

Police Who Made Raid Testify They Found Men And Women Drinking, Dancing and Singing

John H. Griffin, proprietor of the Maplewood Motor Inn, was fined $150 in the district court this morning for keeping and exposing liquor with intent to sell in violation of the law. Griffin pleaded not guilty. He was directed to pay $50 today and to make two other payments of $50 each at monthly intervals.

The case was the outcome of the sensational raid of the premises at three o'clock last Sunday morning by the police of Braintree and Weymouth, under the direction of Chief Galvin of Braintree. A small quantity of liquor was seized at the time and the police say their entrance found men and women drinking and dancing and singing.

No direct evidence of sale was introduced by the government. In making his finding Judge Avery said the character of the house as shown was important and that he considered Griffin responsible for what had taken place there in his presence. An important factor was the throwing away of liquor by a man who said he was doing so under the direction of the proprietor and that this was prima facia evidence, that liquor was kept there for sale.

Chief Galvin on the stand told the results of his observations for a period of two weeks, previous to Sunday and admitted that the singing he heard on Quincy avenue and traced to the house was about as good as he ever heard. He said the singing of the guests the next night couldn't have been worse.

Patrolman Ward of Braintree said two 16 year old girls were under the influence of liquor and Patrolman Shay who took the warrant because he was the only man in uniform said a dozen were there and most of them were "pretty well set up."

The police testified Griffin said the property was owned by the American Tool Co., and that George E. Fogg was the agent. They said liquor was claimed by the guests. Griffin it was testified, when asked what kind of a place he ran answered: "You can see for yourself."

The police said there were close to 60 men and women there but in cross examination by William P. Kelly, counsel for the defense, he said those who were under the influence of liquor could not have got intoxicated on the bottled goods and empties on the premises.

Patrolman Ward, in describing the young girls as being pretty drunk said, in answer to a question by Judge Avery that they wore low neck dresses with short sleeves but had no hats.

Patrolman Shay said it seemed as though everybody in the house claimed the liquor, one saying 61 bottles was his, another 40 and another 30 bottles.

QUINCY'S POPULATION OVER 40,000 BY CENSUS

Unofficial figures given out this morning of the recent state census places Quincy's population as 40,314 as against 32,642 shown by the National census of 1910. Quincy passes the City of Everett which led Quincy in 1910 by 786 and now leads that city by 2,709. The population of the state is given as 3,646,768. The increase in the state is substantially 3.3 per cent.

TWO METHODS.

A despatch in this paper the other day stated that President Wilson, in preparation for his answer to the latest German note, was reading the editorials of papers throughout the country together with letters of private individuals, in an effort to ascertain just what was public sentiment

If the President really is following this course he is adopting a different method of procedure than that which guided him in framing the first American two notes to Germany. In those cases if the reports are to be believed the President shut himself up in his study and thought the thing out for himself without consulting the opinions of press, pulpit, laymen or government officials.

We are inclined to feel that the more recent method is the better one. With all due respect to President Wilson he is no more than human and equipped with merely a mortal brain. It is quite possible that valuable help may come to him from his official and unofficial advisers. New points of view are often of great assistance in adopting the best possible course of action to follow in meeting a grave crisis.

NEEDS REPAIRS.

It must have been at least twenty years ago when the rebuilding of the wall in front of the Hancock cemetery was first advocated, but the wall is practically in the same condition today as at that time. If one stands at either end of the cemetery and casts his eye along the front of this wall it will appear anythin ghut symmetrical. It bulges out here and there all along the line. Many of the cap stones are split and are held together by iron clamps to keep the outer side from falling into the street.

The trouble is that the winter's frosts have got in behind the walls and crowded them out so that now if at any time a crowd should gather on the banks the whole business is likely to tumble over into the street. It was but a few years ago that the Grand Army desired to have the school children of the city gather on the embankment back of the iron fence and sing as the Grand Army passed but the authorities would not permit it for far that th wall would fall out.

The Managers of Public Burial Places have called attention several times to the condition of this wall, but as yet the city fathers have not deigned to take any notice of it. Some day the wall will fall over on the sidewalk and then probably something will be done.

OPPOSED TO DIVORCES.

There is an Indian on the Blackfoot reservation, at Glacier national park, who holds a commission as a federal judge. For the last 12 years he has dispensed justice to the members of his tribe as a United States judge. He probably holds the distinction of being the only judge in the country who has never granted a divorce. He is opposed to the separation of husband and wife and has adopted a formula that seems to work well. He sends the offending husband to jail until he promises to mend his ways. When the husband is the plaintiff he orders him to forgive his wife and continue to live with her. He has had many divorce cases brought before him, in some of which affinities figure, but his simple formula seems to have worked well. For obvious reasons his method could not be made effective in this part of the country, but if something like it should appeal to the judges, fewer families would be broken up than present laws and customs make possible—Lynn Item.

WHAT DOES IT MEAN.

In the very last days of the state Legislature, we are informed that an order was put hastily through both houses and signed by the governor, directing the Board of Harbor and Land Commissioners to investigate the practicability and advisability of the state's acquiring the Cape Cod canal. The facts concerning this order seem to have been suppressed and the newspapers have made no comment upon it. In the confusion of the closing legislative days it apparently escaped notice or was designedly suppressed.

We are at a complete loss to know the meaning of this action. It had been anticipated that sometime the Federal government might consider the purchase of the canal, but that the state would make such a move was not contemplated seriously.

That the canal is neither the success that the promoters anticipated, nor the failure that some would have us believe can be positively stated. It cannot be denied that the current through the canal was a serious matter last summer, but the deepening which has been going on has materially lessened it, and further work upon it will result in a still further decrease.

Steamship lines have not as yet shown a disposition to utilize the canal for some reason. Freight traffic is shy of the tortuous channel in Buzzards Bay, and it is probable that until the channel is dredged out and widened, the canal will not reach its maximum usefulness. This is work for the government, and we shall not be greatly surprised to see a move made in the near future for government ownership.—Wareham Courier.

GENUINE PATRIOTISM.

An artist, who has exhibited many times at the Royal academy, who is 50 years old, a man who had never done a stroke of manual labor in his life, who was reared in a circle which has been accustomed to look down upon those who earned their bread by the sweat of their brows, wrote a letter to the London Daily Chronicle which was published on June 17, which should be an inspiration to every Englishman in this time of the country's great need.

In this letter this artist said that he realized it was useless for him to apply to the recruiting officers; he was too old, he was not physically fit but he was inspired by a desire to do his bit. So he looked about for a chance to help somehow, and decided that where he could use his brain and be of some service to his country was in the factories where men were needed to help in the manufacture of munitions of war.

So this man, unaccustomed to such work, left his home, his circle of aristocratic friends and took a place in such a factory. There he learned to run a machine. During the long hours he labored at this humble task doing the work which he believed was so much needed, helping to turn out the shells which the men in the trenches need and he glories in his work.

This artis is wearing no epaulettes; no Victoria cross will be his reward; he will obtain little praise, and his efforts will doubtless be lost sight of in the great sacrifices which are being made, but he is trying to do his best to help England when she needs help. On Sundays and in the evenings he is journeying about the district where he is at work, speaking to laboring men and stimulating them to further effort. This artist whose name is not signed to his letter in the Chronicle, is a true patriot.

If England had more of the same kind, she would not today be trembling at every report which comes to her from the theatre of war in the East, nor would there be any question as to the outcome of this great conflict she has embarked upon.—Taunton Herald-News.

FRAMING REPLY TO BERLIN NOTE

President Wilson and Secretary Lansing Working on Subject

IDEAS IN PREVIOUS MESSAGES

Said to Have Been Supplied In Large Measure by the Then Counsellor of State Department—Situation Not Regarded as Grave—Comes Before Official Family Next Week

Washington, July 14.—Secretary of State Lansing is keeping his own counsel concerning the nature of the reply he is framing to the latest note from Berlin.

So far as can be learned, he has not taken a single person into his confidence. He is quite as reticent, in fact, as the president himself always has been under similar circumstances.

Indications are that when the chief executive returns from Cornish two messages will be ready, the president's and the secretary's, concerning the details of which no one will have a particle of information except their respective authors.

The two will be compared, the president and the secretary will talk them over, and one note or the other, or a compromise, or an entirely new note, will be agreed on.

One thing stated on good authority is that Lansing, as counsellor of the state department, had much more to do with preparing the previous American messages to Germany than he has been given credit for. The current version hitherto has been that President Wilson furnished the ideas and that Lansing put the notes into legal form. The latest account is that the latter supplied many of the ideas as well as much of the language.

Although it is admitted that Germany's latest reply on the Lusitania question is unsatisfactory, administration officials are active in denying there is any signs of a crisis.

It is understood the calling off of Secretary Lansing's visit to Cornish, N. H., to confer with the president is intended to allay public suspense and to show that there is to be no haste. The president does not wish the situation to be regarded as grave.

Word from Cornish is to the effect that a way has been found for negotiating with Germany before a formal reply to the last Berlin note is made.

President Wilson will not take up the matter with the cabinet before next week. As Tuesday is the first cabinet meeting date next week, the president will have several days to consider the German reply before discussing it with his official family.

The judgment of officials who are in the confidence of the administration is that the two governments will deal dispassionately and deliberately with the questions raised in Germany's reply.

Breaking off diplomatic relations is not being considered. The calling of congress into session would imply the possibility of action. This is not being considered at the present time, either.

The first official announcement of the immediate plans of President Wilson for dealing with the situation came in a telegram from Cornish to Secretary Tumulty, stating that the president would return to Washington soon to lay the entire subject before his cabinet. It indicated that the president had not arrived at a decision as to the policy of the government.

FLOODS CLAIM MANY LIVES

Ten Thousand Persons Reported to Have Perished In China

Pekin, July 14.—More than 10,000 Chinese are reported to have been drowned by terrific floods which are the most disastrous that have ever occurred in southeastern China. In Kwangtung province four large rivers are over their banks, inundating vast fields and ruining the rice, tea and sugar crops.

A dispatch from Hong Kong says that the European quarter of that city is under three feet of water. Hundreds are leaving Hong Kong, fearing an epidemic of disease.

Indicted Broker Surrenders

San Francisco, July 14.—John G. Hoyt, shipping broker, under federal indictment for alleged violation of neutrality in connection with the delivery of supplies to German warships, surrendered and gave $2000 bond.

Jailed For Abusing Old Glory

Philadelphia, July 14.—To shield his dog from flies, Samuel Ross draped the canine with an American flag. Neighbors and a magistrate were indignant, the latter giving Ross ten days in jail.

Magazine Censors For Pittsburg

Pittsburg, July 14.—A bureau of censorship has been established to pass upon all magazines sold in Pittsburg. Magazines transgressing the bounds of morality and propriety will be barred.

Weddings Halted by Eugenics

Madison, Wis., July 14.—Under the eugenic marriage law the number of weddings in Wisconsin declined from 21,052 in 1913 to 17,245 in 1914, a decrease of 3807.

Instinct Versus Reason.

There has been current in England of recent years a reaction against reason, an avowed worship of instinct and tradition and even prejudice. The doctrines of this reaction are in themselves fascinating, and they have been preached by fascinating writers. The way of instinct and old habit is so full of ease, so facile and strong and untroubled! Look at the faces of men who are wrapped up in some natural and instinctive purpose. Look at a dog chasing his prey, a lover pursuing his beloved, a band of vigorous men advancing to battle, a crowd of friends drinking and laughing. That shows us, say the writers aforesaid, what life can be and what it ought to be. "Let us not think and question," they say. "Let us be healthy and direct, not fret against the main current of instinctive feeling and tradition."

In matters of art such a habit of mind may be valuable. In matters of truth or of conduct it is, I believe, as disastrous as it is alluring.—Gilbert Murray in Atlantic.

Dangerous Nitroglycerin.

Nitroglycerin is a fearfully dangerous explosive and at a temperature of only 100 degrees—that is, very little more than the warmth of the human body—it begins to decompose.

Tons of nitroglycerin are turned out every day, for it is the explosive from which guncotton is made. But all the mixing vats are artificially cooled by coils of cold water pipes.

The cleaner nitroglycerin is made the less the danger. Consequently it undergoes any number of washings before it is fit for use. In the earlier days of its manufacture nitroglycerin waste water was allowed to run away through open drains, or into streams. It was not realized that this waste constituted a source of danger until, one day, a flash of lightning, striking ground near a factory, which was soaked with this compound, caused a fearful explosion. A cavity twenty feet deep was blown in the earth, and the factory itself, although fully 200 yards away, was practically demolished.—London Answers.

Destroying Guns.

It may be necessary to destroy guns to prevent them falling into the hands of the enemy, or to make captured guns useless. If a small amount of dynamite or other explosive is available, of course this can be done very effectively. If not, the breech of the gun is closed and the hinge joints smashed as much as possible with a handspike or pick. If there is time a few rifle shots fired at the vital points of the gun effectively jam the mechanism so as to make it useless. With rifles, the butts are broken off and the barrels destroyed as much as possible. To do this the rifles are well heated over a fire and smashed up with heavy hammers. Ammunition is destroyed by placing it in a deep pit and setting it on fire. Telegraph wires are cut up into small pieces and the poles cut down and broken up. — London Express.

Let Them Hunt For It.

A minister in a local church known for his absent mindedness by the members of his own family, but not to his congregation, saved himself from complete exposure at a recent service by his quick wit.

He had studied his sermon carefully, but had neglected to make any notations of the number of the chapter and verse from which the text was taken. In the pulpit he announced the text and then stopped short while the congregation waited to hear from what place in the Bible it was taken.

As he noticed absence of notes to this fact he quickly announced, "I'm going to give you a week to find from what chapter and verse this phrase was taken." So was exposure averted.—Columbus Dispatch.

Titles of Victor Emmanuel.

The author of "Rejected Addresses" preserved the name of a certain Mr. Pole, as the longest imaginable, in the well known lines:

Bless every man possessed of aught to give.
Long may Long Wellesley Tynley Long Pole live.

but Mr. Pole's name was as nothing to the titles of the king of Italy, many of which are derived from the older kingdom of Sardinia. Where his titles end it might be difficult to say, but they begin, king of Italy, Sardinia, France, Spain, England, Jerusalem, Greece, Alexandria and Hamburg, ruler of the midway sea, master of the deep and king of the earth.—Christian Science Monitor.

The Word Bible.

The word Bible is derived from the Latin name Biblia, which was treated as a singular, although it comes from the Greek neuter plural meaning "little books." This Greek diminutive was derived from byblus, or papyrus, the famous material on which ancient books were written. The title "Bible" was first used about the middle of the second Christian century in the so called second epistle of Clement, xiv, 2.

Little Children.

The influence of little children is to develop goodness in men and women. Their example teaches love, hope, faith, trust, contentment, joy, delight and cheerfulness, and quickly to forgive and forget unkindness, injustice and injury received from others.

Demonstrated.

"Here's where I show my class," said the professor as he demonstrated the problem on the blackboard.—Dartmouth Jack o' Lantern.

It is difficulties which show what men are.—Epictetus.

Hints for Housewives

Look For Dishonest Measures.

The north plaza of the city hall, New York, which was stacked high with all kinds of weights, must surely have raved in were it not for one thing. The weights were false. They were not as heavy as they looked. They were not honest weights.

That is the reason they were there, for it was weights and measures week, and Commissioner Joseph Hartigan of the mayor's bureau of weights and measures had placed all the dishonest baskets and pails and scoops and balances and other weighing paraphernalia which his inspectors had confiscated in public view that passersby might see and become wise.

One of the prize fakes was a five gallon oil can, so constructed that it contained but one quart of oil. It was said that the engineer who designed this can did not mean to be dishonest. He had a grudge against John D. Rockefeller and figured that he would not let any one use his oil, like the Irishman who bought a ticket and then walked, to get square with the railroad.

Another infernal machine was a large ice scale which gave only thirty-five pounds when it registered 100. When the iceman was arrested he said the ice had melted on the way up the dumbwaiter.

On one side of the exhibit was a pile of baskets, such as are used to measure fruit and vegetables, while on the other a large stack of short weight paper containers gave mute evidence of the fortunes to be made in the ice cream business. A prominent confectioner accused of possessing these containers asserted that he only used them when selling ice cream and water ices to young ladies, as he could not bear to see them injure their complexions.

An interesting balance was one with a wire attached, connected through a hole in the counter with two weights weighing eighteen ounces below. By this device an ostensible five pounds of coffee became in reality only three pounds fourteen ounces.

While this exhibition was exposed to the elements, safely housed on the third floor of the Municipal building, in Commissioner Hartigan's office, was a display of correct and proper scales and measures of all sorts. At this office the commissioner is busy organizing what is known as the Consumers' league. Already 61,000 women have joined this organization, and by the end of three months the bureau expects the enrollment will be more than 200,000. This league, composed of housewives, will spread the propaganda of honest weights and measures by insisting on them when making their purchases.

When Ice Cream Sticks.

Ice cream is sometimes frozen so hard that it does not come out of the mold easily. When this happens let the cold water run over the outside of the can. The water is so much warmer than the ice cream that it melts it sufficiently to start it out and does not melt it enough to spoil the shape of the mold.

How to Clean Matting.

When matting is soiled rub it with a soft flannel cloth dipped in lukewarm salt water. Rub the spots with moistened cornmeal; then go over the whole surface again with salt water, this time cold. Wipe with a dry cloth. This method of cleaning does not turn the matting yellow, as water usually does.

If You Need More Fat.

If your physician advises you to eat more fat see that your diet includes plenty of cream, butter, olive oil, bacon, walnuts, pecan nuts, egg yolks, suet, salt pork, salmon and beef and mutton fat. All these foods contain a very large percentage of fat.

Cleaning Mackintoshes at Home.

Spread the mackintoch out flat on the table and scrub with warm water and yellow soap, in which a little carbonate of ammonia has been dissolved. Rinse in cold water and hang in the air to dry. On no account put it near the fire.

This Drives Mosquitoes Away.

Wind a piece of paper around a pencil and fill the tube so formed with Persian powder. Stand it in a dish of sand and burn it an hour before bedtime. This drives the mosquitoes away and so insures an untroubled night's sleep.

Bran For White Paint.

A plain cloth dipped in hot water and then in a saucer of bran will clean white paint and not injure it. The bran acts like a soap on the paint.

Brightening Rugs.

Throw coarse salt over rugs and carpets before sweeping them to prevent the dust from rising. This will brighten the color also.

To Sharpen a Knife Quickly.

A strip of emory cloth tacked to a small square board will be found useful for quickly sharpening the carving knife.

Ironing a Bias.

Be sure to iron garments with the straight of the goods and thus prevent stretching of the bias seams.

CENSUS ENUMERATORS.

Half of 1200 Employed To Be Paid This Week.

The men and women in Quincy who took the recent state census in common with other enumerators throughout the state who have been anxiously waiting for payment for their work will be pleased to learn that word has come from Director Charles F. Gettemy, that about $27,000 will be distributed among the enumerators by the end of the week. This however is only a partial payment and represents about 50 percent of the claims of the enumerators.

There has been a great deal of censure over the delay in payment of the 1200 employed taking the census. The delay in the payment is laid to red tape as the service was completed early in April.

Director Gettemy is quoted as saying:

"There is plenty of money to pay the enumerators. They will all be paid, and they are being paid at present as rapidly as possible. Most persons do not appreciate the fact that census work is different. It is not like hiring a man to cut a cord of wood. When he has completed his job you can see at a glance whether or not it is satisfactory, and you can then pay him on the spot.

"But here we have 2100 enumeration districts, and the work of each enumerator must be checked up and examined. He collects his names, does them up in a package and sends it to us. He also sends us a voucher for enumerating so many persons at so much per name, and this comes in a separate package.

"At first thought, it might appear that if he sends in 2000 names at 2 1-2 cents per name, he is entitled to $50 in prompt payment. But we are obliged to open his bundle and count his cards. We may have to check up his lists with the assessors' lists, or, in the case of Boston, with the police lists. We have got to satisfy ourselves that he has done his work with reasonable thoroughness and honesty before we feel justified in paying him. The statutes prohibit paying him without checking up."

DONATIONS APPRECIATED.

The Associated Charities of Quincy acknowledge with grateful thanks a donation of twenty-five dollars from the Katharyn Crane Memorial Club and twenty-five dollars from the Sunday school of the First Parish church for the Fresh Air Fund. Also gifts of clothing, new and second hand from friends.

CHAPTER III.

In Triumphe!

Once safely in the street, Kenneth Griswold, with a thousand dollars in his pocket and the packet of bank-notes under his arm, was seized by an impulse to do some extravagant thing to celebrate his success. It had proved to be such a simple matter, after all—one bold stroke; a tussle, happily bloodless, with the plutocratic dragon whose hold upon his treasure was so easily broken; and presto! the hungry proletary had become himself a power in the world, strong to do good or evil, as the gods might direct.

This was the prompting to exultation as it might have been set in words; but in Griswold's thought it was but a swift suggestion, followed instantly by another which was much more to the immediate purpose. He was hungry; there was a restaurant next door to the bank. Without thinking overmuch of the risk he ran, and perhaps not at all of the audacious subtlety of such an expedient at such a critical moment, he went in, sat down at one of the small marble-topped tables, and calmly ordered breakfast.

Since hunger is a lusty special pleader, making itself heard above any pulpit drum of the higher faculties, it is quite probable that Griswold dwelt less upon what he had done than upon what he was about to eat, until the hue and cry in the street reminded him that the chase was begun. But at this, not to appear suspiciously incurious, he put on the mask of indifferent interest and asked the waiter concerning the uproar.

The serving man did not know what had happened, but he would go and find out if M'sieu' so desired. "M'sieu'" said breakfast first, by all means, and information afterward. Both came in due season, and the hungry one ate while he listened.

Transmuted into the broken English of the Gascon serving man, the story of the robbery lost nothing in its sensational features.

It was very evident that the plutocratic dragon did not intend to accept defeat without a struggle, and Griswold set his wits at work upon the problem of escape.

"It's a little queer that I hadn't thought of that part of it before," he mused, sipping his coffee as one who need not hasten until the race is actually begun. "I suppose the other fellow, the real robber, would have figured himself safely out of it—or would have thought he had—before he made the break. Since I did not, I've got to do it now, and there isn't much time to throw away. Let me see—" he shut his eyes and went into the inventive trance of the literary craftsman—"the keynote must be originality; I must do that which the other fellow would never think of doing."

On the strength of that decision he ventured to order a third cup of coffee, and before it had cooled he had outlined a plan, basing it upon a cross-questioning of the Gascon waiter. There had been but one man concerned in the robbery, and the sidewalk gossip was beginning to describe him with discomforting accuracy.

Griswold paid his score and went out boldly and with studied nonchalance. He reasoned that, notwithstanding the growing accuracy of the street report, he was still in no immediate danger so long as he remained in such close proximity to the bank. It was safe to assume that this was one of the things the professional "strong-arm man" would not do. But it was also evident that he must speedily lose his identity if he hoped to escape; and the lost identity must leave no clue to itself.

Griswold smiled when he remembered how, in fiction of the felon-catching sort, and in real life, for that matter, the law-breaker always did leave a clue for the pursuers. Thereupon arose a determination to demonstrate practically that it was quite as possible to create an inerrant fugitive as to conceive an infallible detective. Joining the passers-by on the sidewalk, he made his way leisurely to Canal street, and thence diagonally through the old French quarter toward the French market. In a narrow alley giving upon the levee he finally found what he was looking for; a dingy sailors' barber's shop. The barber was a negro, fat, unctuous and sleepy looking, and he was alone.

"Yes, sah; shave, boss?" asked the negro, bowing and scraping a foot when Griswold entered.

"No; a hair cut." The customer produced a silver half-dollar. "Go somewhere and get me a cigar to smoke while you are doing it. Get a good one, if you have to go to Canal street," he added, climbing into the rickety chair.

The fat negro shuffled out, scenting tips. The moment he was out of sight Griswold took up the scissors and began to hack awkwardly at his beard and mustache; awkwardly, but swiftly and with well-considered purpose. The result was a fairly complete metamorphosis easily wrought. In place of the trim beard and curling mustache there was a rough stubble, stiff and uneven, like that on the face of a man who had neglected to shave for a week or two.

"There, I think that will answer," he told himself, standing back before the cracked looking-glass to get the general effect. "And it is decently original. The professional cracksman would probably have shaved, whereupon the first amateur detective he met would reconstruct the beard on the sunburned lines. Now for a pawnbroker; and the more avaricious he happens to be, the better he will serve the purpose."

He went to the door and looked up and down the alley. The negro was not yet in sight, and Griswold walked rapidly away in the direction opposite to that taken by the obliging barber.

A pawnbroker's shop of the kind required was not far to seek in that locality, and when it was found, Griswold drove a hard bargain with the Portuguese Jew behind the counter. The pledge he offered was the suit he was wearing, and the bargaining concluded in an exchange of the still serviceable business suit for a pair of butternut trousers, a second-hand coat too short in the sleeves, a flannel shirt, a cap, and a red handkerchief; these and a sum of ready money, the smallness of which he deplored piteously before he would consent to accept it.

The effect of the haggling was exactly what Griswold had prefigured. The Portuguese, most suspicious of his tribe, suspecting everything but the truth, flatly accused his customer of having stolen the pledge. And when Griswold departed without denying the charge, suspicion became conviction, and the pledged clothing, which might otherwise have given the police the needed clue, was carefully hidden away against a time when the Jew's apprehensions should be quieted.

Having thus disguised himself, Griswold made the transformation artistically complete by walking a few squares in the dust of a loaded cotton float on the levee. Then he made a tramp's bundle of the manuscript of the moribund book, the pistol, and the money in the red handkerchief; and having surveyed himself with some satisfaction in the bar mirror of a riverside pot-house, a daring impulse to test his disguise by going back to the restaurant where he had breakfasted seized and bore him uptown.

The experiment was an unqualified success. The proprietor of the bank-neighboring cafe not only failed to recognize him; he was driven forth with revilings in idiomatic French and broken English.

"Bete! Go back on da levee w'ere you belong to go. I'll been kipping dis cafe for zhentlemen! Scelerat! Go!"

Griswold went out, smiling between his teeth.

"That settles the question of identification and present safety," he assured himself exultantly. Then: "I believe I could walk into the Bayou State Security and not be recognized."

As before, the daring impulse was irresistible, and he gave place to it on the spur of the moment. Fouling a five-dollar bill in the mud of the gutter, he went boldly into the bank and asked the paying teller to give him silver for it. The teller sniffed at the money, scowled at the man, and turned back to his cash book without a word. Griswold's smile grew to an inward laugh when he reached the street.

"The dragon may have teeth and claws, but it can neither see nor smell," he said, contemptuously, turning his steps riverward again. "Now I have only to choose my route and go in peace. How and where are the only remaining questions to be answered."

For an hour or more after his return to the riverfront, Griswold idled up and down the levee; and the end of the interval found him still undecided as to the manner and direction of his flight—to say nothing of the choice of a destination, which was even more evasive than the other and more immediately pressing decision.

His first thought had been to go back to New York. But there the risk of detection would be greater than elsewhere, and he decided that there was no good reason why he should incur it. Besides, he argued, there were other fields in which the sociological studies could be pursued under conditions more favorable than those to be found in a great city. In his mind's eye he saw himself domiciled in some thriving interior town, working and studying among people who were not unindividualized by an artificial environment. In such a community theory and practice might go hand in hand; he could know and be known; and the money at his command would be vastly more of a molding and controlling influence than it could possibly be in the smallest of circles in New York. The picture, struck out upon the instant, pleased him, and having sufficiently idealized it, he adopted it enthusiastically as an inspiration, leaving the mere geographical detail to arrange itself as chance, or subsequent events, might determine.

That part of the problem disposed of, there yet remained the choice of a line of flight; and it was a small thing that finally decided the manner of his going. For the third time in the hour of aimless wanderings he found himself loitering opposite the berth of the Belle Julie, an up-river steamboat whose bell gave sonorous warning of the approaching moment of departure. Toiling roustabouts, trailing in and out like an endless procession of human ants, were hurrying the last of the cargo aboard.

"Poor devils! They've been told that they are free men, and perhaps they believe it. But surely no slave of the Toulon galleys was ever in bitterer bondage. . . . Free?—yes, free to toil and sweat, to bear burdens and to be driven like cattle under the yoke! Oh, good Lord!—look at that!"

The ant procession had attacked the final tier of boxes in the lading, and one of the burden-bearers, a white man, had stumbled and fallen like a crushed pack animal under a load too heavy for him. Griswold was beside him in a moment. The man could not rise, and Griswold dragged him not untenderly out of the way of the others.

"Where are you hurt?"

The crushed one sat up and spat blood.

"I don't know: inside, somewheres. I been dyin' on my feet any time for a year or two back."

"Consumption?" queried Griswold, briefly.

"I reckon so."

"Then you have no earthly business in a deck crew. Don't you know that?"

The man's smile was a ghastly face-wrinkling.

"Reckon I hain't got any business anywheres—out'n a horspital or a hole in the ground. But I kind o' thought I'd like to be planted 'longside the woman and the childer, if I could make out some way to git there."

"Where?"

The consumptive named a small river town in Iowa.

In Griswold impulse was the dominant chord always struck by an appeal to his sympathies. His compassion went straight to the mark, as it was sure to do when his pockets were not empty.

"What is the fare by rail to your town?" he inquired.

"I don't know: I never asked. Somewheres between twenty and thirty dollars, I reckon; and that's more money than I've seen sence the woman died."

Griswold hastily counted out a hundred dollars from his pocket fund and thrust the money into the man's hand.

"Take that and change places with me," he commanded, slipping on the mask of gruffness again. "Pay your fare on the train, and I'll take your job on the boat. Don't be a fool!" he added, when the man put his face in his hands and began to choke. "It's a fair enough exchange, and I'll get as much out of it one way as you will the other. What is your name? I may have to borrow it."

"Gavitt—John Wesley Gavitt."

"All right; off with you," said the liberator, curtly; and with that he shouldered the sick man's load and fell into line in the ant procession.

Once on board the steamer, he followed his file leader aft and made it his first care to find a safe hiding place for the tramp's bundle in the knotted handkerchief. That done, he stepped into the line again, and became the sick man's substitute in fact.

It was toil of the shrewdest, and he drew breath of blessed relief when the last man staggered up the plank with his burden. The bell was clanging its final summons, and the slowly revolving paddle-wheels were taking the strain from the mooring lines. Being near the bow line Griswold was one of the two who sprang ashore at the mate's bidding to cast off. He was backing the hawser out of the last of its half-hitches, when a carriage was driven rapidly down to the stage and two tardy passengers hurried aboard. The mate bawled from his station on the hurricane deck.

"Now, then! Take a turn on that spring line out there and get them trunks aboard! Lively!"

The larger of the two trunks fell to the late recruit; and when he had set it down at the door of the designated stateroom, he did half absently what John Gavitt might have done without blame: read the tacked-on card, which bore the owner's name and address, written in a firm hand: "Charlotte Farnham, Wahaska, Minnesota."

"Thank you," said a musical voice at his elbow. "May I trouble you to put it inside?"

Griswold wheeled as if the mild-toned request had been a blow, and was properly ashamed. But when he saw the speaker, consternation promptly slew all the other emotions. For the owner of the tagged trunk was the young woman to whom, an hour or so earlier, he had given place at the paying teller's wicket in the Bayou State Security.

She saw his confusion, charged it to the card-reading at which she had surprised him, and smiled. Then he met her gaze fairly and became sane again when he was assured that she did not recognize him: became sane, and whipped off his cap, and dragged the trunk into the stateroom. After which he went to his place on the lower deck with a great thankfulness throbbing in his heart and an inchoate resolve shaping itself in his brain.

Late that night, when the Belle Julie was well on her way up the great river, he flung himself down upon the sacked coffee on the engine room-guard to snatch a little rest between landings, and the resolve became sufficiently cosmic to formulate itself in words.

"I'll call it an oracle," he mused. "One place is as good as another, just so it is inconsequent enough. And I am sure I've never heard of Wahaska."

Now Griswold the social rebel was, before all things else, Griswold the imaginative literary craftsman; and no sooner was the question of his ultimate destination settled thus arbitrarily than he began to prefigure the place and its probable lacks and havings. This process brought him by easy stages to pleasant idealizings of Miss Charlotte Farnham, who was, thus far, the only tangible thing connected with the destination dream. A little farther along her personality laid hold of him and the idealizings became purely literary.

She Saw His Confusion, and Charged It to the Card Reading.

"She is a magnificently strong type!" was his summing up of her, made while he was lying flat on his back and staring absently at the flitting shadows among the deck beams overhead. "Her face is as readable as only the face of a woman instinctively good and pure in heart can be. Any man who can put her between the covers of a book may put anything else he pleases in it and snap his fingers at the world. If I am going to live in the same town with her, I ought to jot her down on paper before I lose the keen edge of the first impression."

He considered it for a moment, and then got up and went in search of a pencil and a scrap of paper. The dozing night clerk gave him both, with a sleepy malediction thrown in; and he went back to the engine room and scribbled his word picture by the light of the swinging incandescent.

He read it over thoroughly when it was finished, changing a word here and a phrase there with a craftsman's fidelity to the exactnesses. Then he shook his head regretfully and tore the scrap of paper into tiny squares, scattering them upon the brown flood surging past the engine room gangway.

"It won't do," he confessed reluctantly, as one who sacrifices good literary material to a stern sense of the fitness of things. "It is nothing less than a cold-blooded sacrilege. I can't make copy of her if I write no more while the world stands."

RODENTS SPREAD DISEASE.

That the migratory habits of rodents have a bearing upon the spread of disease is not generally known, but the United States Public Health Service, as a result of experiments conducted in plague epidemic work at New Orleans, asserts that such is the case. This is but another illustration that the field of preventive medicine is especially broad, and investigators therein must be thoroughly familiar with the life history and habits of flies, mosquitoes, ticks, and even rodents.

Several hundred captured rats were marked for purposes of identification by having their ears punched, care being taken not to render them conspicuous, as fellow rodents wage relentless warfare upon those which appear different from their kind. They were then released in the heart of the city, and allowed to shift for themselves. Trapping was carried on in all sections, and each rat was labeled as to the locality caught. Fully one-quarter of the rats made widespread excursions, that is they were recaptured at points from one to four miles from where they were liberated. In one instance, a rat traveled 19 blocks, crossing one of the widest and busiest streets in the city, where there was no subterranean passage, and was retaken within 60 hours from the time of its liberation. From the experiments it is concluded that the semi-domesticated rat has migratory habits similar to wild animals, and that these habits are influenced by abundance or scarcity of food, facility for harborage, or the presence of natural enemies. It is also believed that certain inexplicable instincts tend to make the rat a wanderer. That in this instance the "homing" instinct was not responsible for the migration was clearly proven.

This migratory habit of rodents explains many facts connected with the dissemination of plague; it will also doubtless prove enlightening to those who have attempted to exterminate rats for economic reasons. The Indian Plague Commission was of the opinion that rats seldom journeyed from one section of the city to another but the conclusion of the Public Health officials is quite the opposite. As a measure of the success of trapping operations, it is interesting to note that over one half of the rodents liberated were recaptured within a month.

TYPHOID FEVER IN THE UNITED STATES

An editorial in the Journal of the American Medical Association, April 17th, says in part, "It is evident that Typhoid Fever is on the way to become a relatively rare disease in many parts of the United States. There are two main reasons for this. First, there are now comparatively few large cities in which the public water supply is likely to contain Typhoid Bacteria. Second, the increase in the practice of pasteurization has resulted in a dimunition in the amount of milk borne typhoid."

The Elm Farm Milk Company complying with the general demand by the Medical Profession and Sanitarians, were one of the first to scientifically pasteurize their milk. This milk is offered at the same price that rules for ordinary milk.

This process is the only one that absolutely guarantees the safety of milk against all of the infectious diseases.

Elm Farm Milk means SAFETY, SERVICE, SATISFACTION.

SPORTING COMMENT

The Fore Rivers will play a league game at Merrymount park Saturday with the Gamewell Fire alarm and Telegraph Co., all other reports to the contrary notwithstanding. Fore River leads the league and has five more games to play. They are now in first position, one game ahead of the Bird & Sons representation and say that the championship is within their grasp. Cool judgment on the part of the management and players should bring home the bacon. Knight the last few games has pitched sterling ball and the fans rather expect he will retain control of the situation. With him in good form there is but little doubt that the team will keep up with its customary standard.

There is one matter which should be driven home with trip hammers to the fans, however, and that is that there should be no objection to contributing 15 cents toward the support of the home team. On the holiday there were nearly 2000 rooters lining the sidelines and most were of the variety which criticise and talk and discuss the relative merits of the players from day to day, but about 1800 of those same fellows forgot the financial end of the day and watched the boys play their heads off without thinking of chipping in.

The Braves divided in the double header with Pittsburg Tuesday. The team proved helpless in the opening contest but made a runaway of the second game until the ninth inning when the Pirates batted hard.

The Red Sox divided with Clevelands. Each game was won in the ninth innings. Errors allowed Boston the first victory and timely hitting won the second for Cleveland.

California Roads.

In his book "At the End of the Trail" E. A. Powell, F. R. G. S., pays the following tribute to California road buildings:

"I am convinced that if the several thousand Americans who go on annual motor trips through Europe, either taking their cars with them or hiring them on the other side, could only be made to realize that on the edge of the western ocean they can find roads as smooth and well built as the English highways or the routes nationales of France, and mountains as high and sublimely beautiful as the Alps or the Pyrenees, and scenery more varied and lovely than is to be found between Christiania and Capri, and vegetation as luxuriant and hotels more luxurious than on the Cote d'Azur, and a milder, sunnier, more equable climate than anywhere else on the globe, they would come pouring out in such numbers that there wouldn't be garages enough to hold their cars."

MAGIC COAL TAR.

Once Despised, It Is Now a Source of Limitless Products.

SPANS THE WORLD OF COLOR.

It Yields Almost Every Shade or Hue and Is Used In Practically Every Industry—In Medicine and Surgery, Also, It Has Worked Wonders.

Among the almost limitless number of natural products of this country coal tar stands well in the lead in the variety of uses to which it may be applied. Evil smelling, it is the rough material from which many valuable substances have been obtained after years of persistence by science and industry.

These substances include a wide range of colors, various burning and lubricating oils, asphalt for pavements, photographic developers and a great number of medicines, flavors and perfumes. Coal tar is used in practically every manufacturing process where dyes are needed, in making cloths, silks, dress materials, colored papers and even colored articles of food.

About a century ago coal tar was considered almost a waste product, and no one had thought it worth while to experiment with it. At that time gas was being introduced as a new light, and Frederick Accum, who wrote one of the first books on gas lighting, suggested the boiling of the tar in a still and the condensation and collection of the volatile products. The experiment was made, and the process yielded two oils. One was heavy and the other light. It was soon found that the heavy could be satisfactorily used as a preservative for wood that had to be fixed underground or submerged in water and was used extensively in preserving piers and wharfs.

Further experiments with the lighter oil were made by a Scotch chemist, Macfarlan, who used it in waterproofing the clothing which still bears his name. It also is used as a solvent in varnish making and as coal naphtha for lighting. Experiments with naphtha disclosed a rich treasury of colors which for centuries had been locked up in coal and its refuse—tar. Benzine was extracted from naphtha and this in turn produced the different shades of violet, green, blue and yellow. Later another chemist made the commercial manufacture of benzine possible. He was experimenting on the artificial production of quinine, and, using a base known as aniline, obtained the coloring matter called mauve.

This laid the foundation for the coal tar color industry which has developed until today almost every color and shade of color is derived from aniline. Aniline had been obtained previously from the indigo plant "anil." The discovery of mauve created a large demand for the artificial aniline base and gave unexpected value to benzine. It yelded aniline by being treated with nitric acid and with the borings of cast iron powdered into dust. Having done its work in the aniline still, the dust was used by the gas maker to cleanse his coal gas from sulphur, and then it passed to the manufacturing chemist, who burned the sulphur out of it and produced sulphuric acid—a cycle of operations whose beginning and end was the utilization of waste.

This method of producing color was responsible for the desolate madder fields of France and Holland and for the loss to the Hindus of their long cherished indigo cultivation. Anthracene, one of the heavier oils of coal tar, caused the fall of the madder growing industry. The madder produced violets, reds, blacks, purples and dark browns. Anthracene was sold very cheaply for lubricating purposes until certain chemists heated it with zinc filings and produced alizarin, and then the secret of the madder plant was discovered.

In this way chemistry displaced agriculture, one pound of alizarin having the coloring power of ninety pounds of madder, and the lubricating oil sold at a trifle as waste became a valuable coloring matter worth $500 a ton, thereby creating a vast industry.

In medicine and surgery coal tar has worked wonders. Saccharin, many hundred times the sweetening power of sugar, is used by diabetic patients. Carbolic acid is separated from the oil of coal tar by successive distillations, and in surgical operations a spray of germ killing carbolic acid is used. Quinoline, antipyrine and other fever assuagers are made from coal tar, and various antiseptics and food preservatives also are obtained from it.

Vanilla flavoring for cooking, which formerly was prepared from a bean, can now be obtained from the vanillin of the gas works, and even this vanillin can be made into a heliotrope perfume by adding oil of almonds, while the latter can be produced by treating benzine with an acid. Huge quantites of this oil are used in the making of scented soaps. As a matter of fact there is scarcely a department of life into which the products of coal tar do not enter.—New York Times.

ONE FIRM GIVES IN

But Gotham Garment Strike May Involve 80,000 More Workers

New York, July 14.—The first change in the strike of the 10,000 pantsmakers which, according to the labor leaders, may involve thousands of other garment workers in affiliated organizations, came when one of the large firms acceded to the union's demands and reinstated 300 strikers at an advance of $2 a week.

Leaders of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America assert that unless an adjustment of the pantsmakers' strike is reached the 10,000 men already out will be joined by 80,000 coatmakers, vestmakers, cutters and children's garment workers.

Endeavorers Adjourn

Chicago, July 14.—Resolutions demanding that all church workers unite to procure saloonless United States of America, and also peace in Europe, were adopted by the World's Christian Endeavor convention at its final session. New York city was awarded the 1917 meeting.

Nicholson Chosen Elks' Leader

Los Angeles, Cal., July 14.—The grand lodge of Elks installed James H. Nicholson of Springfield, Mass., as grand exalted ruler, succeeding Raymond Benjamin of California. Baltimore won the 1916 convention by 770 to 258 for Atlanta.

Federal Probe Is Asked

Westerly, R. I., July 14.—The federal health service was asked by Congressman O'Shaunessy to investigate the recent epidemic of ptomaine poisoning in this vicinity, which resulted in three deaths and nearly sixty cases of illness.

TROOPS PLACED UNDER ARMS

Protect Georgia State Prison From Lynchers' Attack

LIFE OF FRANK IS SOUGHT

Three Companies of Militia Ready to Check Effort to Get Man Serving Life Sentence for Alleged Murder of Mary Phagan—Prison Authorities Are "Well Prepared"

Atlanta, July 14.—Three companies of state militia at Macon were ordered held at their armory in readiness to proceed to the Milledgeville state farm, where Leo M. Frank is confined.

Governor Harris announced the action after reports had been circulated that a plan was under way to attack the prison and lynch Frank.

The orders were issued by Adjutant General Nash, who, the governor explained, had blanket instructions to call out troops to protect state property.

Roads to Milledgeville from Atlanta, Marietta and other towns are guarded by county police.

Frank recently began serving a life term for the murder of Mary Phagan, after his sentence of death was commuted by Governor Slaton.

Major Wheeler, commanding three militia companies at Macon, announced he had received orders from Adjutant General Nash to hold his forces ready to proceed to the state prison farm at Milledgeville. The troops are now under arms in the armory at Macon.

Warden Smith of the state prison farm stated that prison authorities were "well prepared" if any attempt were made to lynch Frank. Extra guards still are on duty at the farm.

GERMANY WELL SATISFIED

No Clash Over Navy Department Taking Sayville Wireless Station

Washington, July 14.—Taking over of the Sayville wireless station by the United States has met with the satisfaction of Germany and no complaint will be lodged with the state department, according to German embassy officials.

Litigation with the Marconi company threatened to close the Sayville station by injunction at one time and it is stated that the German ambassador had considered requesting the American government to take charge. The installation since the outbreak of the war of additional apparatus forbidden under neutrality laws is recognized by German officials as a just ground for the seizure of the station.

It is pointed out that American censorship differs in no way as far as it affects the sending of messages by American naval operators and moreover the official character assumed by the plant makes it safe from interference from private sources.

FIRE ON BATTLESHIP

Quick-Witted Boatswain Prevents What Might Have Been Disaster

Boston, July 14.—Boatswain Murphy was the hero of a fire which started in th forward handling room of the battleship New Jersey, at the Charlestown navy yard, and which placed the ship in great danger.

As soon as the ship's fire alarm was sounded Murphy, with a crew of men, rushed to the room, which is located on the third deck below, and cut the wires that had become short circuited. The room was then flooded and the fire extinguished with but slight damage.

The room is about twenty feet square and from here is handled all the powder used for the 12-inch guns in forward turret.

A new supply of ammunition had just been placed aboard the ship for her guns, and this was within ten feet of where the fire originated.

Woman Kills Son and Self

Boston, July 14.—A woman believed to be the wife of Harmon Powers took her life by inhaling gas in the room of a Revere street house. A boy 7 or 8 years of age, presumably her son, was dead on the floor near the bed.

TELEGRAPHIC BREVITIES

As the result of burns, which she received when a gasoline stove she was lighting exploded, Miss Helen Pappas died at Marlboro, Mass.

A seizure of forty-eight cases of Samaritan Nervine was made at a leading Boston drug store. The shipment was alleged to have been misbranded.

Countess Russell of the British nobility was granted a divorce at London from Earl Russell. The suit was not defended.

Bequests totalling $400,000 were made to mission branches of the Presbyterian church in the will of Edward A. Webb of St. Paul.

DEATH OF ALFONSO COSTA

Long Recognized as One of Portugal's Strongest Men Politically

Madrid, July 14.—Alfonso Costa, leader of the Portuguese Democrats, died as a result of being shot during the recent government upset.

Costa for years had been regarded as one of the strongest men politically in Portugal. He had been premier, minister of finance and minister of justice and was the author of the law providing for the separation of the church and state in Portugal.

He was said to have been an uncompromising advocate of armed revolution and several times was sent into exile. He was imprisoned as the ringleader of the abortive revolution in January, 1908.

COURT SPECTATORS MOVED TO LAUGHTER

Alienist Flint Claims Thaw Tried to Hypnotize Him

New York, July 14.—The state rested in the sanity trial of Harry K. Thaw, the jury's verdict in which, if approved by Judge Hendrick, will determine whether the slayer of Stanford White shall be returned to Matteawan or his liberty restored. The case will reach the jury today.

A new angle as to the mental calibre of Thaw was given by Dr. Flint, an alienist, who resumed the stand. Flint told the court that Thaw had attempted to hypnotize him.

Hendrick regarded the alienist with some interest, then asked if he really believed Thaw was trying so-called hypnotic powers. With great emphasis, Flint repeated his statement, declaring Thaw had stared at him for fifteen minutes. The court's gavel was used vigorously to check the uproar of laughter.

The other witnesses were Dr. Baker, assistant superintendent of Matteawan, and Dr. Kieb, a physician at that institution while Thaw was confined there. They both testified that Thaw was suffering from "constitutional inferiority with a paraoniac trend."

FRANCE CLAIMS DRIVE CRUSHED

Germans Are Hurled Back After a Terrific Onslaught

THEIR CASUALTIES ARE HEAVY

At Least Five Regiments Were Under Command of Crown Prince—Austrian Situation Is Daily Becoming More Grave—Italy Apparently Has Advantage In Conflict With Austria—Seasoned Soldiers Appalled by Sight of Dardanelles Battlefield—Britain Raises $3,000,000,000 For New War Loan

London, July 14.—The army of the German crown prince, attempting a new and terrific drive against the French forces entrenched along the road from Binarville to Vienne le Chateau as far as La Haute Chevauchee, has suffered another crushing defeat, with the loss of men in killed and wounded mounting into heavy figures.

The German artillery opened an incessant fire, using all calibres of guns, on the French positions, and by the use of asphyxiating bombs temporarily drove the French from some of their trenches.

As the artillery fire slackened to allow the German infantry to advance into the abandoned territory, the French, who had been waiting only for the gas fumes to clear, delivered a counter-attack with such suddenness and ferocity that the Teuton forces were thrown back into their original positions.

The French war office declares that a vast number of German troops had been massed for this drive by the crown prince, and that it was pushed with the vigor characteristic of German onslaughts in the earlier days of the war. Five regiments of the Sixteenth army corps, under the personal leadership of the crown prince, were recognized during the brief but deadly close quarter fighting.

From the official reports on the number of German casualties, and the sudden forcing back of the point of the attack, it seems apparent that the vast drive planned has been effectively crushed.

Trapped by the French.

Previous to the great drive the Germans, following their victory in the Souchez cemetery, hurled an enormous number of shells into the French positions in the labyrinth south of Neuville St. Vaast, later charging in great numbers.

The onrushing troops, however, were suddenly trapped in the open, far from cover, by the masked machine gun and rifle fire of the French, and were mowed down by the hundreds. Their losses were so great that the survivors fell back and did not attempt to renew the attack.

Another important move by the French came when thirty-five picked French aviators circled over Vigneulles-Les-Hattonchatel, an important German railway and ammunition station. They dropped 171 bombs of high explosives upon the station and report that, before they were driven away by heavy shell fire, they saw several serious fires start in the group of buildings. None of the airmen was injured, all reaching their camp.

Austrian Front Threatened

While no actual developments came in the eastern theatre of the war, the situation there from the Austrian viewpoint daily is becoming more and more grave. In fact, it is admitted that if within the next few days they fail to check the victorious Russian advances in the vicinity of Cracow, the whole Austrian front will be forced into a rapid retreat.

Since the loss of the positions south of Lublin the revictualling of the Austrian armies in this vast section has become impossible. Large Austrian reinforcements have been rushed to the province of Lublin, but the Russians, though fighting against greatly superior numbers, continue to advance unchecked.

The Austrians have been returning to Galicia since July 10 and are now at Wrzaway. The Russians completely defeated the Austrians at Zamosz and surrounded and captured two Hungarian battalions, with considerable guns, ammunition and supplies.

Austro-Italian Crisis Near

The Austro-Italian situation is rapidly nearing a crisis with the advantage apparently all on the Italian side. A dispatch from Laibach says that a strong Italian cavalry patrol, reconnoitering recently, made a daring dash toward Trieste and arrived within three miles of the town and then retired, unmolested. An Austrian attempt to invade Italian territory at Kreuzberg was repulsed with heavy losses.

At Kellerwald the Austrians succeeded after hard fighting, in forcing the Italian troops back, but the Italians, reinforced, almost immediately regained the position, inflicting further heavy losses on their enemies. At Gargav the Austrian forces attempted to drive the Italians back into the Isonzo, but the attempt was a complete failure. There are daily engagements east of Monfalcone, where the Italians have taken a large number of prisoners.

Describing last week's battle on the Gallipoli peninsula, the Lemnos correspondent of the London Chronicle characterizes it as one of the grimmest engagements of the war.

He declares soldiers who had been through some of the fiercest fighting in France and Flanders were appalled at the terrible spectacle the battlefield presented the morning after a desperate bayonet encounter in a night battle which was "a veritable nightmare of horror."

The correspondent asserts the allies' victory marks a definite stage in the initial work of throwing forces around Achi Baba, one of the strongest fortresses in the world. He adds that the Turkish cruiser Sultan Selim (formerly the German cruiser Goeben) again was active during the fighting, bombarding the British right with shells.

England Raises Big War Loan

Chancellor of the Exchequer McKenna announced in the house of commons that the subscriptions to the new war loan already have reached the unprecedented figure of nearly £600,000,000, or $3,000,000,000, being taken by more than a million persons.

In the house of lords the Marquis of Lansdowne stated that England already has between 420,000 and 440,000 men in the war zone and that the recruits still are flowing in at a satisfactory rate.

SINKS RUSSIAN STEAMER

German Submarine Uses an American Ship as a Shield

How an American ship is alleged to have been used as a shield by a German submarine for the sinking of another vessel, is the story related by members of the crew of the American bark Normandy, which has arrived at Liverpool from Gulfport, Miss.

The story is that the Normandy was stopped by a German submarine sixty miles southwest of Tuskar Rock, off the southeast coast of Ireland. The captain was called aboard the submarine, where his papers were examined and found to show that the ship was chartered by an American firm.

The captain of the bark, it was asserted, was allowed to return to the Normandy, but under the threat that his ship would be destroyed unless he stood by and obeyed orders. These orders, it was stated, were that he was to act as a shield for the submarine, which lay around the side of the bark, hiding itself from an approaching vessel.

This vessel proved to be the Russian steamer Leo. Presently the submarine submerged and proceeded around the bow of the Normandy, so the story went, and ten minutes later the crew of the Normandy saw the Leo blown up.

Twenty-five persons were on board, of whom eleven were drowned. Those saved included three Americans.

BALKAN STATES WOBBLING

Diplomatic Campaign Being Waged at Sofia and Bucharest

Dispatches from the continent, though mutilated by the censors through whose hands they have passed, indicate that Bulgaria's entrance into the war will not be long delayed, and aggressive action by Austria to force the hand of Roumania is likely to bring about an immediate decision by that country.

Whatever way Roumania and Bulgaria "jump," it is apparent that a diplomatic campaign of utmost vigor is being waged at Sofia and Bucharest. A special representative of the British government has been dividing his time between the two capitals.

The situation at Athens is of little interest from a diplomatic standpoint. Greece will preserve her neutrality until Roumania or Bulgaria enters the war. No matter what side they support, Greece will never fight with Germany, according to the political experts.

It is said that former Greek Premier Venizelos, in anticipation of his return to power, has arranged to reorganize the Balkan alliance, of which he was the initiator. Venivelos has been a warm supporter of the entente allies.

HEADING OFF MINE STRIKE

Declared to Come Under Great Britain's Munitions Legislation

The British government took drastic steps to avert the strike of 42,000 miners ordered to begin in South Wales tomorrow. It decided to invoke the provisions of the munitions act, which make arbitration compulsory and make every striker liable to a fine.

Announcement of the government's decision was made in the house of commons by President Runciman of the board of trade, who asserted that the munitions act made it illegal for anyone to participate in strikes unless the board of trade had first investigated and made a report.

A strike in the South Wales coal fields at present would seriously cripple the manufacture of munitions and it was for this reason that the government took its sharp action.

Woman's World

Sister of the Kaiser, Who Is Exceedingly Pro-German.

QUEEN SOPHIA OF GREECE.

Queen Sophia has made it quite clear to the members of the reigning house and to the statesmen of Greece—has, indeed, publicly announced to the people of the land of her adoption—that she will leave it forever in the event of its joining the powers of the triple entente against her brother, the kaiser, and his allies.

Her name will be commemorated at Athens by one of the strangest of memorials, for whereas King Constantine's mother, Queen Olga's, name is identified with the magnificent Evangelismos hospital, founded, endowed and managed by herself, that of her German daughter-in-law is associated with the principal slaughter house of the Greek metropolis.

Some years ago Queen Sophia's attention was attracted to the shockingly insanitary condition of the then existing abattoirs and to the needless cruelty attending the killing of cattle, sheep and swine. Accordingly she made a personal study during her stays abroad of the abattoirs of Frankfort, Berlin, Hamburg and London and even sent an emissary to the United States to make reports on the slaughter houses of New York, Chicago, Cincinnati and other centers of the meat packing industry in America. On the basis of the data thus obtained she caused to be built at Athens at her own expense a great central abattoir, equipped with all the most up to date appliances, and presented it to the city. The municipality of Athens naturally accepted the gift with gratitude and by way of showing its appreciation of the kindness of the royal donor called the great slaughter house in question "the Sophia."

Yellow machine oil stains on white material may be removed by rubbing the spot with a cloth wet with ammonia before using soap.

RADISH ROSES.

Radish roses are not hard to make, and they are very attractive when served as a salad garnish or with celery and olives. Make two deep cuts at right angles in the radish, but leave the ends intact. Then loosen the red skin and place the radishes in ice water. The water makes the skin curl back like rose leaves. A tiny bit of the green stem left on the radish heightens the rose effect.

WHISTLER'S CLEVERNESS.

The Artist Could Fix In His Mind Any Effect In Nature.

It was Whistler's habit to memorize an effect in nature, and Mr. T. R. Way, in his "Memoirs," gives an example of his cleverness at it.

I shall never forget a lesson he gave me one evening. We had left the studio when it was quite dusk and were walking along the road by the gardens of the Chelsea hospital, when he pointed to a group of buildings in the distance, an old public house at the corner of the road, with windows and shops showing golden lights through the gathering mists of twilight.

"Look!" he said.

As he did not seem to have anything to sketch or make notes on, I took out my notebook and offered it to him.

"No, no; be quiet!" he said, and after a long pause he turned and walked back a few yards; then, with his back to the scene, he said:

"Now, see if I have learned it," and then he gave a description of the scene, perfect in every detail of arrangement and color, as he might have repeated a poem he had learned by heart.

Then we went on, and soon there came another picture that appealed to me even more than the former. I tried to call his attention to it, but he would not look at it.

"No, no," he said; "one thing at a time."

In a few days I was at the studio again, and there on the easel was the picture.

WM. H. FLYNN MAY BE CANDIDATE

Political Pot Begins to Seethe Thus Early According to Oracle

NELSON OR SANDBERG?

William H. Flynn, former councilman from Ward Two, will, if rumors are correct, be a candidate for the House of representatives from the Fifth Norfolk district. Friends have announced that Mr. Flyn contemplates such action and say he will go into the primaries for the Democratic nomination.

With the entrance of Flynn would come an aggressive campaign, such perhaps as the district has not seen in years. It is said on what is considered good authority that Councilman Thomas Griffin may also get into the fight, but he has made no definite announcement as yet.

Up in the sixth Norfolk district, comprising Wards Four, Five and Six, there is but little interest in candidates at present. Rep. Edward J. Sandberg will seek renomination and opposing him will be Councilman John R. Nelson of Squantum. Both men it has always been understood have been one in politics and their contest will mean either a split among their supporters, a wholesale desertion of Sandberg for Nelson, or a continuation of the Sandberg boom with a bad defeat for Nelson.

However, some in the districts say there are other men of strong and active political tendencies who are to come into the ring. Their entrance would probably have the effect of oil poured on the fire. In the flareup someone would of course be burnt and the one badly beaten, no matter how great his previous success has been, will beyond peradventure be relegated to the political scrap heap.

William P. Kelly has scouts canvassing the First Norfolk Senatorial district in his behalf and he says that perhaps the main issue that will enter into his campaign with Senator Langelier, who wants re-election, is that he has already had two years.

Rep. Kenneth Nash of Weymouth who was prominently mentioned two months ago as a likely senatorial candidate put a quietus on the energy of his many friends in the district when he said he would not come out for the senate this year but expected to do so in 1916. Whether Candidate Kelly will beat him to it as the saying goes and get the glory is not known at this time.

FINDS AUTOIST IS NOT GUILTY

The Quincy police today lost the only case brought into court for local overspeeding in some time. Patrick Flynn the defendant was dismissed after Officers Phillips and Avery testified that while on an ambulance run a machine in front of them made from 35 to 40 miles an hour. Because of the urgency of their call they were unable to see who was operating

They said the machine was registered in the name of Ernest G. House of Commonwealth avenue. The defendant did not take the stand, his counsel not putting in any evidence, although he made a short cross examination bringing out the failure of the police to identify defendant. The offence, the officers alleged was on Hancock street, between High school and Beach street, at which point the ambulance ran down Beach street.

MARS AND MARRIAGE.

Wedded Life In the United States Army and Navy.

"Cupid doesn't let the fortune of the Newport girl or the lack of fortune of the Cheyenne girl interfere with his arrangements when he gets his strategic dispositions planned and his forces mobilized," writes Judson C. Welliver in Munsey's Magazine. The subject of the article is marriage in the American army and navy, and he argues that as a rule the officers of these services marry young and happily:

"Be it Bar Harbor or Long Beach, Portland or Panama, east or west, north or south, your young man in the blue and gold is accoutered to take care of himself socially. The uniform undeniably helps. But it does more than add a touch of color to the social landscape whereon it disports. It is a prima facie guarantee that a young man with a well trained brain, a sound body, a disciplined mind, clean, wholesome and ambitious, is inside.

"The uniform wouldn't be there if it were not a testimonial about that table of contents. The drawing room arts, the social refinements, the ballroom accomplishments are added unto all this because they have been a part of the atmosphere, the training, the bringing up in those two splendid institutions that prepare young men to wear Uncle Sam's livery.

"The navy men may not take their wives with them to sea under any possible pretext. If there is enough of family income to permit the wife may, and not infrequently does, parallel the voyagings of her husband. To the Philippines the government permits wives of navy officers to travel on the transports at cost of subsistence, which is very modest.

"At each army post houses are provided for the married officers, and Uncle Sam also furnishes light and fuel. In these respects the army officer has the better of his brother in the navy. On the other hand, he must pay for household supplies and service of all kinds, while the naval officer is a member of his mess and gets the best of living on shipboard at marvelously cheap rates.

"Army and navy officers as a rule marry young, and as a rule the marriages are happy. The reasons are obvious. At least the economic reasons are. The others lie in that traditional fascination which uniforms and gold trappings have for the feminine heart."

IT WAS VERY CURIOUS.

When the Whistle Test Failed All the Surgeons Were Puzzled.

A Parisian journal tells a little story of a young Parisian who in civil life had long worn a monocle in his left eye and had continued the habit as an officer. He had been wounded, was cured and asked to be returned to the front. He was to be examined and concealed the monocle, thinking he might be charged with myopia in one eye. When the chief surgeon examined him, after looking well over his face, he said sharply, "Whistle!"

The soldier whistled like a blackbird.

"This is curious," said the surgeon, and, calling a young assistant, he said again to the soldier, "Whistle!" He whistled again. "That is curious," said the young assistant.

Another surgeon entered, and the patient was called upon for the third time to whistle.

"Ah," said the surgeon, "this is curious!"

"But," expostulated the soldier, "I don't see why there is so much of this. I'm not to serve as a locomotive."

"It is all right," said the chief surgeon. "You may return to the front."

When the soldier arrived at his regiment he gave to the regimental surgeon the note that had been given him by the examiner. This surgeon said in his turn, "Will you please whistle?" He whistled. "This is curious," said the surgeon.

It seems that when a man wears a monocle it gives to the face the appearance of facial paralysis. The operation of whistling is a test. The facial paralytic cannot whistle.

Hashish.

There was a terrible secret society in the east which was organized for wholesale and systematic murder. Its members called themselves "Hashhasin"—whence, by the way, came our word "assassin"—and used to get up courage for their deeds of atrocity by doses of the drug called hashish. This is obtained from Indian hemp, and it is from the seed vessels that the substance is taken which yields the poison so famed in history and romance. It is a vivid green and when taken produces the most extraordinary visions and hallucinations.

Yes, It Could Be Done.

Pat Whelan, the new lodger, was engaged lacing his boots in the kitchen. His landlady, standing near, remarked: "Pat, would you like an egg for breakfast?"

"Faith, ma'am," replied Pat grimly, "I heard of a man who ate two and he is alive yet."—Kansas City Star.

The Pinnacle of Sacrifice.

"I love you so much, my darling," cooed the clinging young thing, "that for your sake I would even forego a church wedding and consent to be married by a justice of the peace!"

And greater love than this hath no woman.—Judge.

Not In His Class.

"No military surgeon would ever have made such a muddle of Lieutenant Smith's hospital case."

"What do you mean?"

"Why, the report says he underwent a major operation."—Baltimore American.

FALSE ALARM FIEND STILL IS AT WORK

The false alarm fiend who has been having what he doubtless thinks is fun with box 82, was about again at midnight Tuesday night, and as a result of his visit the department was given a useless run to the box farthest from the central station. The alarm sounded at 12.10 and called out the chief, auto chemical and tractor steamer from the central station. It also called out the apparatus at Atlantic and Wollaston.

Chief Billings made a quick run to the box, but before he had reached there the men of the Atlantic combination had arrived and finding the alarm false had sent in the recall. There was no one about the box and the impression seems to be that someone comes ashore in a boat, sounds the alarm and then makes his get away.

The alarm from box 31 at 8.46 Tuesday evening was for an oil stove fire in a house on Phipps street, occupied by an Italian family. The burning stove had been thrown out of the window by the time the department arrived. There was no damage other than a ruined stove.

The West Quincy apparatus went out Tuesday on a still alarm for a chimney fire at a house at 22 Willard street, near the Milton line. There was no damage.

ASTONISHING GROWTH.

A special census of the village of Hamtramck, Michigan, made a local request and expense, shows the population of that village on June 25, 1915, to have been 21,520. The increase since 1910, when the population was 3,559, has been 504 per cent. The present population comprises 21,242 whites and 278 negroes. The census was taken by local enumerators under the supervison of an official of the Bureau of the Census, Mr. Eugene F. Hartley.

Hamtramck is a suberb of Detroit, lying just to the northeast of that city. Its remarkable growth is due in great measure to the presence of large automobile factories within and near its borders.

HENRY D. WEDDLETON.

Henry D. Weddleton, who for many years was night watchman at the plant of the Wollaston foundry, died Monday night at his home at 51 Hunt street. He was in his 58th year and was a respected resident of that section. He is survived by a family.

BATH HOUSE GETS 'PHONE AT LAST

(Special to the Ledger.)

Public Bath House, Town River, July 15—A telephone has been installed in the bath house for the convenience of patrons. In order to furnish the servce it was necessary to string wires a long distance. The appearance of the telephone men on Wednesday was the signal for prolonged applause. No time was lost in hitchng up the connection.

Nearly three years have elapsed if memory has not failed since it was first suggested that a telephone be installed at trhe bath house for emergency purposes at least. At that time it was pointed out that a physician coud be summoned only after a long run to Washngton street, a distance of nearly a mile. The suggestion went by the board time and again. The telephone company representatives said one could not be installed because the Quincy Electric Light and Power Co. would not allow telephone wires strung on their poles. The company denied this was the case, and in the meantime those who frequented the bath house ran to Washington street for physicians to resusciate people taken from the river in an exhausted condition.

Only one candidate for mayor, Edward Powers, the barber, recognized the importance of a telephone at the bath house, but Powers was of course defeated and Councilmen from Ward two have never taken any interest in the suggestion. The people are elated with the nstallaton of the phone but it s beng generally remarked: "We don't know who is responsible for it but we can't see where any credit is deserved when a necessity is put in fully three years after it was first agitated."

ANOTHER BIG CONTRACT FOR FORE RIVER YARD

Will Construct Large Freighter For Luckendach Steamship Company

The Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation was awarded another contract for a large freighter Wednesday afternoon by the Edgar F. Luckenback Steamship Co. The boat is to be a duplicate of the one contracted for by the same company on June 11. The first contract calls for a freighter to take the place of one sunk in a collision in New York Harbor and this ship is to increase the fleet of the company.

The ship will be 437 feet long and 57 feet beam. She will have a cargo capacity of 11,000 tons. The officials of the company were not able to announce today whether she would be driven by turbine reduction gears or reciprocating engines. Both methods were considered in the bids submitted. When completed she will have a speed of 12 nautical miles per hour.

The keel of the boat to be built under the first contract will be laid about August 1st. Room on the ways will not be available until then. The contracts call for delivery within a year.

Both freighters will be the largest ever constructed at the shipyard. The Luckendach company operates a fleet of boats under the American registry.

STATE TAX SHOWS BIG INCREASE OVER LAST YEAR

Five Dollars Per Capita Must Go To Various Outside Taxes Including County, Water, Etc.

The warrants for all of the state, county, metropolitan, water, sewer, etc. taxes have been received by the assessors, the total tax this year being $211,763.82 compared $203,533.22 for 1914, an increase of $9,230.60.

If the population of Quincy is 40,000, as has been unofficially announced it means that the city must contribute about $5 per capita for these taxes.

Taking the valuation of the city as $40,000,000 it means that practically $5 per thousand will be added to the tax rate this year for state and county purposes. In other words it means that if the tax rate this year should amount to $22.20 the same as last year, if the state and county taxes were eliminated the rate would be but $17.20 per $1,000 valuation.

In the warrants received this year is one item that has never apeared before, "Better Fire Prevention," for which the city is taxed $283.58, and in view of the general confusion of the fire prevention commissioner's rulings in the matter of gasoline licenses, etc. it will be paid with poor grace. One item that was included in last year's tax, however, is eliminated this year. Last year Quincy was taxed $343.65 for state statistics, this year no tax is levied for this purpose.

It will be noticed by the table which follows giving the warrants for 1915 in comparison with those of 1914 that the Charles River Basin and Metropolitan Water are the only items in which an increase is not shown. The item for Charles River Basin is $196.87 less than in 1914 and that for Metropolitan Water $1,462.66 less than in 1914.

The largest increase is shown in the state tax, the amount of increase from last year being $7,800 while the county tax an increase of $1,045.58 over 1914.

The following table gives the warrants for state and county taxes, etc., in 1915 and 1914.

| | 1915 | 1914 |
|---|---|---|
| State Tax | $76,050.00 | $68,250.00 |
| County Tax | 27,184.99 | 26,139.41 |
| Metro. Sewer | 30,403.10 | 29,125.39 |

JITNEYS TAKE PLACE OF CARS

Providence Carmen's Strike Is Golden Opportunity

By United Press.)

Providence, July 15—Although 2400 men are out on strike and the street car traffic is practically paralyzed, Providence citizens are not suffering the usual effects of the street car strike. Thousands of jitneys that have been operating for some time past in every section of the city today almost double in number.

Many of the carmen turned jitney operators while the differences between the union and the trolley car company are being settled. An increase of about 20 per cent in wages is asked by the car men. This was claimed excessive by the company inasmuch as the estimated loss due to jitneys during the recent few months is between $30,000 and $35,000.

PROTEST SENDING ARMS TO ALIES

(By United Press.)

Amsterdam, July 15—A concerted protest against the sale by American manufacturers of war munitions to the Allies by Germany, Turkey and Austria is to follow a recent conference in Vienna between Chancellor Von Betham-Hollweg, Foreign Secretary Von Jagow and Baron Vurian, Austrian foreign minister, according to Berlin advices today.

A note reported to have been sent by Austria several days ago is said to be the first step in this program. Turkey within a few days is to send a similar note to Washington suggesting that the United States forbid exportation of munitions to the Allies unless they guarantee the safety of similar shipments to Germany, Austria and Turkey.

American is not eypected to alter its present position because of these new protests. Berlin advices today said action was agreed merely as a warning to the United States that Germany will be supported by her allies in the controversey in which she may become involved with America.

DECREASE IN P.O. RECEIPTS.

(Special to the Ledger)

Federal Building, Boston, July 15.

The post offices at Wollaston and Atlantic show an increase in their postal business and the post office shows a decrease in a statement, issued this morning by Postmaster Murray, of the total receipts for the fiscal year, ending June 30, of the 75 stations in the Boston district. The total receipts were $8,075,621.10, a decrease of $116,971.85, due to the war, which nearly caused a suspension in foreign business and disarranged domestic business.

The biggest falling off in any one department was in the international money order business. The decrease was $894844.33. There was a slight increase in the domestic money order business. In the money order business there was a decrease of $215,809.12.

The receipts for the past quarter show an increase of $26,947.67 as compared with the receipts for the corresponding quarter of last year. Postmaster Murray believes this to be an indication of the return of postal business to its normal condition.

LOCAL LAUNDRY WORKERS TO GET $8 MINIMUM

Upwards of seventy-five women and girls in Quincy will be interested in the decree made Wednesday by the State Minimum Wage Commission, based on the report of the majority of the Laundry Wage Board. The decree will go into effect Sept. 1, and will affect all laundries in the state.

The decree provides that after Sept. 1, no less than $8 a week shall be paid to any experienced female employe of ordinary ability in a Massachusetts laundry and no less than $6 a week to a beginner in her first three months of employment; $6.50 in her second quarter; $7 in her third and $7.50 in her fourth.

On the Laundry Wage Board employers and employes each had six representatives with Judge Edward L. Logan of South Boston casting the deciding vote.

The commission states that it has found that more than half of the female employes in Massachusetts laundries earned less than $6 a week. The Wage Board considered $8.77 a necessary minimum income, but set the wage at $8 because of testimony advanced by employers. The employers representatives are said to have opposed the Wage Board' report.

At the Old Colony Laundry Manager Neil said that the new ruling would affect but very few of his employes for a majority of them were now receiving more than the minimum wage precribed. Others were receiving $6 and $7 a week. Perhaps in all about 25 percent would be affected by the decree if not declared unconstitutional.

Those that will be most affected by the decree when it goes into force will be the wet wash laundries. As a general rule employes at these laundries work but three or four days a week, yet under the decree it appears that they would have to be paid a minimum wage of $8.

PUBLIC LIBRARY NOTES.

The library has received from the Massachusetts Normal Art school, Department of Art Education, a typewritten list of summer reading for 1915. The purpose of the list as stated at the beginning, "is to give some appreciation of the life and times in which important schools of painting arose and developed; to afford some knowledge of sources, understanding of mythological references, and religious symbolism; to offer introduction to countries fostering art, or which have served as backgrounds for master works; and to a limited extent to arouse in the art student an appreciation of certain authors of essays, criticisms, and descriptions."

The list includes three books which will give "clear ideas of Italy as a country in which most important schools of painting arose;" a history of Scotland; Bulfinch's "Age of Fable;" some works of the poets Emerson and Longfellow; and also some works of John Ruskin, Bernard Berenson, and Anna Jameson. Besides this, it recommends that the student have "some knowledge of religious stories as developed in the Apocrypha."

The list will be found posted on the display case at the right of the delivery desk, and just below it, the books listed.

GIVES PARTY ON 10th BIRTHDAY.

Miss Helen N. Bigelow entertained a party of friends at her home on Lunt street, Wednesday afternoon, the occasion being her tenth birthday. The house and lawn were prettily decorated.

Many enjoyable games were played, after which a dainty lunch was served and all joined in wishing Miss Helen many happy returns of the day. Among those present were: Gertrude Austin, Mildred Colson, Marion Frost, Francis Frost, Ruth Faircloth, Louisa Breivogel, Muriel Langelier, Carolyn Queen and Beulah Zwicker.

FRACTURES ARM.

Eleanor Rich, grand-daughter of Mrs. Effie L. Rhines met with a painful accident. In a fall caused by the slipping of a rug little Eleanor suffered a fracture of the left arm, above the elbow.

Miss Josephine Donavon is spending the week with her parents on Perkins street.

POLICE SEIZE MEN WHO CARRIED "DEAD BODY"

Armed With Dangerous Looking Knives The "Murderers" Were Only Gathering Twigs

"Body" was Nothing but Bundle of Twigs

The police plunged into the woods near Station street, Wednesday afternoon and travelled through the heavy underbrush nearly a mile to a spot near the powder house of Robert J. Teasdale, expecting to arrest two men who were about to dispose of the body of a man. They found the bundle, which a Finnish merchant thought was a man rolled up in oil cloth, was only oak twigs, cut for Turkish bath purposes, and protected from the rain.

It was about 2.15 P. M. that a message, "Two men are looking for a place to bury a dead body" put in operation the police system.. Officers Cahill and Halloran were rushed to the scene in the police auto. They met the Finnish merchant and residents of the Station street section who had heard the story on West street. The entire party lost no time in rushing to the scene of the reported tragedy.

The Finn was ordered to lead the way and the party travelled over a long, winding path leading to the powder house of Robert J. Teasdale, a distance of nearly a mile. A heavy shower started shortly after the journey commenced.

The police were guided to a knoll overlooking the spot where the body was said to have been seen. Two men prowling about the underbrush were visible through the trees and as the police drew near they saw a long bundle lying on the ground. The Finn, somewhat alarmed when he caught sight of the knives in the hands of the desperados for the second time, picked up a stone and held back while the police rushed the men from both sides.

The two strangers were taken by surprise when they were ordered to put up their hands. An examination of the long bundle on the ground revealed the oak twigs.

The men said that for years they had gathered oak twigs and sold them to the proprietors of Turkish baths in Boston. The twigs were cut about two feet long, tied in small bundles and laid on the ground. They said they had covered them with the oil cloth when it commenced to rain.

The police lost no time in getting back to the police auto which had been left on Station street. Both officers and the Finn were drenched. Just as the auto started back to headquarters the Finn said: "I am glad we know what it is now," but his remark passed without comment by the police.

RAIN PREVENTS CHAMPIONSHIPS

The heavy showers of Wednesday afternoon prevented the holding of the first of the all-around championship events at Ward Two. The boys and girls were naturally disappointed but it was considered unfair to run off the contests as there were so many who did not appear on the field. If the events had been held only a few of the youngsters would have scored points.

Captains were elected at Atlantic Wednesday morning and the following boys were chosen as leaders: Arthur Sullivan; Tigers, Warren Fitzgerald; Senators, Percy Spinney; Red Sox, Raymond Hoyt. Immediately following the election a game was played between the Red Sox and the Senators in which the latter were the victors, the score being 5 to 3.

A league composed of Wards 3, 3, and 6 and Wollaston and Mass. Fields school teams will probably be formed early next week. The two Wollaston teams ought to put up a good battle for the Championship as they have many grammar school players in line-ups.

Ward Two will play at Ward Three Friday morning at 10 o'clock.

FALL RESULTS IN BROKEN LEG

Dennis Dullea, 4 Compton place, fell from a gang plank at the Fore River shipyard Wednesday noon and suffered a fracture of the right leg. He was taken to the Quincy City Hospital in the police ambulance. Dullea was walking on a gang plank connecting two submarines when he fell.

SILENCE CROAKERS.

It is the fashion among all too many people with whom this community is afflicted to "run down Quincy." Few would be so foolish or ignorant as to maintain that Quincy is a model city but the wonder is that it is as good as it is when it possesses so many croakers who lose no opportunity, at home or abroad, to give the city a "black eye."

It is a wonderful tribute to the inherent strength of the city that despite these traitors in our camp the latest unofficial returns of the state decennial census gives Quincy a population of 40,344, a gain of nearly 8000 in five years. This growth of approximately 23 per cent in five years is astonishing. Pittsfield, one of the most bustling of the Berkshire communities, in 1910 a city with practically the same population as Quincy, has enjoyed a growth of 22 per cent.

Quincy became a city in 1889, having at that time a population of some 150000. In 1800 8 years after it was set off from Braintree, it had a population of 1,081. As will be seen by the following table its growth has been steady since that time, except during the years of the Civil War.

THE WATER BILLS.

Water bills to citizens who are served with city water by meters will go out very soon now for the coming six months. Their receipt will be the signal for a general kick all along the line. The kick will be due to the general increase in the water rates.

The claim is made by many familiar with city affairs that there is no occasion for the increase. In fact it is claimed that the old rates were too high, if anything. The increase will be noticed especially by those parties who own two and three party houses that are fed by one meter service from the street. In such cases in addition to paying the minimum charge for one service they must pay a sum of $4 for each additional tenant, and at the same time the amount of water allowed for the minimum charge has been reduced. Besides this the rate for water over and above the maximum amount allowed had been increased.

The question is often asked and justly, Why is it that water is not sold to consumers in the same manner as gas and electricity? Why does not the consumer pay for what he uses and no more, being responsible of course for a small meter rental in case the amount of gas or electricity used does not exceed a certain minimum charge.

All water used in Quincy is purchased from the Metropolitan Water system and is metered to the city. Would it not be a simple matter of calculation for the powers that be to ascertain just what is the maximum cost of water delivered to consumers? Why should not the city pay the Metropolitan Commission so much per cubic foot for water received? To this could be added the cost of maintenance, interest charges and leakage. From these figures the exact cost delivered to consumers could be ascertained. Then if the city made a charge of a trifle over this amount it would derive a profit.

INEFFICIENCY OF POST OFFICE.

We have, in common with the vast majority of editors of the country, had frequent occasion to allude to the exasperating business methods of the Post Office Department. The satisfaction of communicating to others what is on your mind is about all the good it does to call attention to governmental shiftlessness. There was a time when first-class mail was back-stamped and one could find out when the delayed mail came to the receiving office but for some reason the practice was discontinued and one can only guess now where the frequent delays occur. Circulars have been the greater part of a week getting to stations within the Boston district. Newspaper mail which should closely follow first-class is sometimes from 30 to 66 hours going ten miles. Some of those who have had experience with collecting the insurance on parcel post business have found it an exasperating humbug. What suggested this line of thought was the receipt this morning of a card from the Post Master at New Britain, Conn., informing us that a letter for us was held there for postage. The old-time custom of the Department was to forward such matter to the addressee who paid the postage before he got the letter. In this way a sometimes very serious delay was avoided and the Department lost nothing while the addressee gained consderable. Of late the Postmaster at the office of mailing is obliged to fill out a card and send to the addressee, the addressee must return the card in a sealed envelope with a two cent stamp, put another two cent stamp on his own letter and send to the mailing office and wait for his response. We have had important letters held up in this way nearly three weeks. A part of the busness of the Post Office, instead of being run for the accommodation of the public, seems to be run regardless of their rights. And yet they claim that the Department is run on "business principles!"—Waltham Free Press.

PILGRIM TERCENTENARY.

The death of Curtis Guild was especially regrettable on account of its causing a vacancy on the Pilgrim tercentenary commission. His appointment was accepted as eminently appropriate, and with him at the head of the commssion the success of the celebration was assured. Governor Walsh has made an excellent choice in the selection of George von L. Meyer of Hamilton to fill the vacancy. Mr. Meyer has been ambassador to Russia and to Italy and has had valuable experience as a cabinet officer, as well as membership of the General Court of Massachusetts. President Roosevelt made him postmaster general and under President Taft he was secretary of the navy. His wide experience in public affairs in the State and in the nation marks him as a man well adapted to fill the important position to which Governor Walsh has called him. The Plymouth tercentenary is more than five years distant, but that is not too much time for preparation for so important an event as the celebration of the three centuries of Amercan life and should be an occasion far in excess of any of the historic celebrations that have preceded it.—Lynn Item.

STAY AT HOME

Our authorities have done their best to persuade our people to stay at home till the European war is over. This is no time to be gallivanting over Europe—what little there is to visit. Nothing but the most urgent business, which cannot be attended to from this side, should draw our folks to foreign shores. And if they must go they should be provided with passports. Even England, friendly as she is, insists that Americans landing in her ports shall be properly identified. The failure of many of them to carry the necessary documents is making a lot of trouble for Ambassador Page and he has felt compelled to call the attention of his countrymen to the neglect. The steamship companies could help some by seeing that their passengers are properly provided before they are allowed aboard.—Framingham News.

THE PRIMARY TEST.

The voters in the coming primaries should bear in mind that candidates for office have no rights greater than their rights, and are only entitled to such support as true worth will bring after mature consideration from the standpoint of fitness. The qualifications of a candidate is the chief consideration and no canddate who is admittedly unfit for a given office is entitled to public support simply because he wants it. The citizen voters throughout the commonwealth should begin to investigate all claimants for their support, and ask the one question —which is the best fitted for the particular position they seek to fill? If they cannot stand this test they are unworthy of your support. This is particularly applicable to the selection of minor state officers, and especally so with the aspirants for state auditor on the Republican ticket.—Belmont Courier.

Col. Goethals asks to retire and take a rest. Well earned, colonel. We can dig out those sides, now that you've shown us how.—Norwood Messenger.

DECIDE THAW IS IN RIGHT MIND

Jurors' "Advice" to Court In Notable Sanity Trial

ITS APPROVAL IS LOOKED FOR

Advisory Body Instructed Not to Consider Matter of Punishment—Prisoner May Be Released on Bail Pending Hendrick's Decision—Meantime He Is Remanded Back to Jail

New York, July 15.—The jury in the sanity hearing of Harry K. Thaw returned a verdict finding the slayer of Stanford White sane at the present time.

This was their "advice" to Justice Hendrick. The court is expected to approve this finding. Such a decision, however, will not operate at once to free Thaw. The state announced prior to submission of the case to the jury that in case a decision favorable to Thaw was returned an immediate appeal would be taken. He may be released, however, on bail.

The jury was out only fifty-six minutes. Hendrick reserved his own decision as to the present mental condition of Thaw. Later he will announce whether the commitment upon which Thaw was incarcerated in the state hospital for the criminal insane at Matteawan shall be vacated, thereby giving to the slayer of Stanford White the liberty for which he has fought in the courts for nine years.

Thaw seemed somewhat disappointed over the failure of the court to announce an immediate decision, as he had expected that the would be immediately freed if the jury reported in his favor. Neither Thaw nor his counsel regarded the action of the court as indicating that Thaw would not be ultimately free, however.

In the meantime Thaw was remanded back to Ludlow street jail. As soon as the proceedings were disposed of Thaw's mother rushed over to him and kissed him on both cheeks. His sister, Mrs. Carnegie, also congratulated him.

Then the crowd gathered around Thaw and pressed forward to shake his hands.

Justice Hendrick's charge to the jury occupied twenty minutes. "This is the first time in the history of the state of New York," he said, "that the question of a man's sanity was ever put up to a jury in this fashion. You are sitting with me here as an advisory body to help me in my decision on the case.

"I need not go over the evidence, as it is as fresh in your minds as it is in mine.

"First of all, you must start on the assumption that this man was insane at the time he killed Stanford White and that he was still suffering when he was committed to Matteawan. Thaw was not in Matteawan for punishment, and you are not to allow the question of punishment to enter into the matter at all.

"What you must decide is whether this man is sane or insane—not whether he is guilty of any crime. It must be decided on all the evidence."

ACKNOWLEDGMENT BY DADS

Children of Plural Wives Cannot Become Heirs Otherwise

Ogden, Utah, July 15.—That children born of plural wives cannot be legally recognized as heirs unless they have been acknowledged by the father as his children is the construction placed by Judge Howell on the Utah statutes affecting polygamy.

The opinion was brought out in his instructions to the jury considering the case of Albert Geddes, or Eccles, against the David Eccles estate, by which the 16-year-old son of Mrs. Margaret Geddes is endeavoring to establish heirship to the Eccles estate on the ground that David Eccles was his father by a plural marriage in 1896 and that he acknowledged him as his son.

Howell, who formulated the instructions, is a Mormon, as also are the plaintiff and defendants in the suit.

This is the first construction of the status of children of plural marriages since Utah became a state. The court holds that the acknowledgement need not be public, but is binding even if made in secrcet and confidentially.

HEAT WAVE IN ALASKA

Ninety Degrees In the Shade Registered In the "Frozen North"

Juneau, Alaska, July 15.—Extreme heat has prevailed during the last ten days in southeastern Alaska. The weather bureau thermometer has registered as high as 90 degrees in the shade, and the 100-degree mark has been reached by street thermometers.

At this time of year the sun shines twenty of the twenty-four hours each day, and to absence of the usual southwest winds is attributed the excessive heat.

Murder Suspect Killed by Posse

Macon, Ga., July 15.—A posse of citizens and county officers shot and killed Peter Jackson, a negro accused of killing three white men near Cochran, Ga.

who's got the profit?

The Cruel Banker

Mr. Edgly, of the rising young firm of Edgly & Taylor, Clothiers, calls on Banker Townley.

"Good morning, Mr. Townley. Didn't see you at the club supper last night."

"Good morning, Edgly. Anything I can do for you?" Townley's manner registers a lack of cordiality.

"Why, yes. I want to fix up a little loan—just a thousand—want to discount some bills."

"I see—mm—possibly. First, I want to ask you a few questions."

"Certainly, Mr. Townley. Our books are open to you."

"They may be open to me—but are they to you?"

"I don't quite get you, Mr. Townley."

"Never mind—we'll try the questions.

How Much Do You Owe?"

"Why—er—I'd have to have that figured up. I can let you know tomorrow."

"You ought to have the figures right in your inside pocket. How much is there owing you?"

"Let me see—"

"Well, never mind, I see you don't know. Does your shirt and underwear or hat department pay the best per cent net profit?"

"We couldn't very well get at anything more than an approximate estimate of that. I guess the profit on hats would lead, however."

"You guess. I don't like guesswork as a basis for loans. How much does it cost you to do business?"

"Twenty per cent is considered a safe estimate in the clothing business."

"I See—More Guess-Work

Who is your most profitable clerk?"

"I pass, Mr. Townley. I'm beginning to see the point, too."

Mr. Townley's manner warms slightly.

"Now see here, Edgly, you get the thousand all right. I know you are solvent if you don't; and moreover, I'll know when you become insolvent a long time before you do, unless you change your methods.

"The trouble with you and Taylor is that you are too blame pushing. You have built up a fine business by hard work and brilliant merchandising, but you are in a fair way to lose it because you never take time to figure out where you stand. You don't know your business. Every decision you make, every plan, every policy is based on guess-work—on approximate estimates.

"Now, Edgly, will you boys take my advice on this matter?"

"We'll do more than that, Mr. Townley.

We'll Thank You for It"

"Very well. The general plan I shall suggest will involve some extra figuring. You will need a mechanical means of handling figures so your bookkeeper can do all his regular work and give you, besides this, vital information about your business. That means that your first move is to get a Burroughs Figuring Machine. We use it in the Bank here—glad to show you how it works. When the Burroughs man comes to show you the machine you ought to get, you and your bookkeeper have a good talk with him. Tell him just what your problems are. He is up on accounting work and can be a big help in starting you right toward getting at the facts of your business. All this won't add to your running expenses. Your bookkeeper, with the help of the figuring machine, can do all the work and do it more easily. What will be the result?

You and Taylor Will Know How You Stand

Every day, you will know which lines are paying and which are losing; which salesmen are doing the best work; how this week compares in sales and profit with the same week last year; how much you owe and is owing you. All of this information, and much more that is of basic importance, you will get every day or every week in condensed reports.

"Then, when you need a temporary accommodation, I won't be able to ask a lot of embarrassing questions."

"Say, Mr. Townley, I'm sorry Taylor couldn't have heard this talk of yours. Anyway, we'll act on your advice right away. Thanks for the loan."

The Burroughs Adding Machine Company issues a book, "A Better Day's Profits." It points the way the title suggests. It tells how simple it is to know your business. Thousands of merchants have made money by adopting the ideas in this book. It shows where profits leak away and how to stop it.

It's free. Write for it.

STARTS WORK ON BIG STOREHOUSE

New Years day, it is expected will see the completion of the immense new storehouse at the Fore River ship yard. The building will be the largest of its kind to the south of Boston and it is understood it will cost $400,000. It is to be erected by the Aberthaw Construction Co. and will be used to house plate now kept in the open yard.

The structure is to be of steel and will be 800 feet long and 200 feet wide. Its height will vary from 40 to 70 feet. The preliminary work for the concrete foundation will be completed by Monday. The test holes have showed that the bottom of the foundation will rest on bed rock and gravel, and be under water only in odd spots. None of the foundation will be more than 12 feet below the surface.

At present there are about 35 men employed, mostly in excavating. The superintendent of construction is C. P. Hubbard, a man of wide experience in building work. William Harrington is the general foreman. The engineers are R. H. Brown, Yale '15 and R. Mattson, M. I. T. '13.

The storehouse will be made the centre of the railroad system of the yard. The material stacked inside will be moved by a crane which will be operated by electricity and run the entire length of the building. The plans call for the installation of offices in one section. There will be at least four entrances.

HOW TO KEEP GOOD LOOKS.

In the August Woman's Home Companion, Alice Farnham Leader, a New York physician, tells how girls can keep their good looks. She says that health depends upon food, sleep and fresh air, and not upon pills and prescriptions. Her article is full of practical suggestions as to diet, sleep and exercise. Following is a brief extract from what she has to say about food:

"Rich pastry, frozen creams and candy are difficult to digest and, in addition to menacng the health, they cause positive homeliness. They contain more sugar, and fat than the system can possibly assimilate, and the surplus is carried to the skin, where it makes its appearance in the form of pimples and blackheads. To avoid such foods doesn't mean giving up all desserts. Let your choice rest between light custards, fruits and ices.

"Coffee and tea are not always injurious, provided they are taken in moderation. Never drink more than one cup of coffee for breakfast, and add cream and sugar with a grudging hand. Drink plenty of water, hot and cold. Nothing will promote digestion and prevent sickness as will a glass of hot water slowly sipped immediately upon arising in the morning. The human body requires at least a quart of water a day, that is, about a half pint every two or three hours.

"If the average woman gave as much attention to that much abused organ, the liver, as she does to her finger nails, her face would need less attention. No wonder the liver rebels and reacts upon the complexion, its spite being betrayed in the form of pimples, sallowness, and black shadows under the eyes."

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I—Kenneth Griswold, an unsuccessful writer because of socialistic tendencies, sups with his friend Bainbridge at Chaudiere's restaurant in New Orleans and declares that if necessary he will steal to keep from starving.

CHAPTER II—Griswold holds up Andrew Galbraith, president of the Bayou State Security, in his private office and escapes with $100,000 in cash.

CHAPTER III—By original methods Griswold escapes the hue and cry and goes aboard the Belle Julie as a deckhand. He unexpectedly confronts Charlotte Farnham of Wahaska, Minn., who had seen him cash Galbraith's check in the bank.

CHAPTER IV.

The Deck Hand.

Charlotte Farnham's friends—their number was the number of those who had seen her grow from childhood to maiden—and womanhood—commonly identified her for inquiring strangers as "good old Doctor Bertie's 'only,'" adding, men and women alike, that she was as well-balanced and sensible as she was good to look upon.

She had been spending the winter at Pass Christian with her aunt, who was an invalid; and it was for the invalid's sake that she had decided to make the return journey by river.

So it had come about that their staterooms had been taken on the Belle Julie; and on the morning of the second day out from New Orleans, Miss Gilman was so far from being travel sick that she was able to sit with Charlotte in the shade of the hurricane deck aft, and to enjoy, with what quavering enthusiasm there was in her, the matchless scenery of the lower Mississippi.

At Baton Rouge the New Orleans papers came aboard, and Miss Farnham bought a copy of the Louisianian. As a matter of course, the first page leader was a circumstantial account of the daring robbery of the Bayou State Security, garnished with startling headlines. Charlotte read it, half-absently at first, and a second time with interest awakened and a quickening of the pulse when she realized that she had actually been a witness of the final act in the near-tragedy. Her little gasp of belated horror brought a query from the invalid.

"What is it, Charlie, dear?"

For answer, Charlotte read the newspaper story of the robbery, headlines and all.

"For pity's sake! In broad daylight! How shockingly bold!" commented Miss Gilman.

"Yes; but that wasn't what made me gasp. The paper says: 'A young lady was at the teller's window when the robber came up with Mr. Galbraith—' Aunt Fanny, I was the 'young lady'!"

"You? horrors!" ejaculated the invalid, holding up wasted hands of deprecation.

Charlotte the well-balanced, smiled at the purely personal limitations of her aunt's point of view.

"It is very dreadful, of course; but it is no worse just because I happened to be there. Yet it seems ridiculously incredible. I can hardly believe it, even now."

"Incredible? How?"

"Why, there wasn't anything about it to suggest a robbery. Now that I know, I remember that the old gentleman did seem anxious or worried, or at least, not quite comfortable some way; but the young man was smiling pleasantly, and he looked like anything rather than a desperate criminal."

Miss Gilman's New England conservatism, unweakened by her long residence in the West, took the alarm at once.

"But no one in the bank knew you. They couldn't trace you by your father's draft and letter of identification, could they?"

Charlotte was mystified. "I should suppose they could, if they wanted to. But why? What if they could?"

"My dear child; don't you see? They are sure to catch the robber, sooner or later, and if they know how to find you, you might be dragged into court as a witness!"

Miss Farnham was not less averse to publicity than the conventionalities demanded, but she had, or believed she had, very clear and well-defined ideas of her own touching her duty in any matter involving a plain question of right and wrong.

"I shouldn't wait to be dragged," she asserted quietly. "It would be a simple duty to go willingly. The first thing I thought of was that I ought to write at once to Mr. Galbraith, giving him my address."

Thereupon issued discussion. At the end of the argument the conservative one had extorted a conditional promise from her niece. The matter should remain in abeyance until the question of conscientious obligation had been submitted to Charlotte's father and decided by him.

An hour later, when Miss Gilman was deep in the last installment of the current serial, Charlotte let her book slip from her fingers and gave herself to the passive enjoyment of the slowly-passing panorama which is the chief charm of inland voyaging.

From where she was sitting she could see the steamer's yawl swinging from its tackle at the stern-staff; and after many minutes it was slowly borne in upon her that the ropes were working loose. A man came aft to make the loosened tackle fast.

Something half familiar in his manner attracted Charlotte's attention, and her eyes followed him as he went on and hoisted the yawl into place. When he came back she had a fair sight of his face and her eyes met his. In the single swift glance half-formed suspicion became undoubted certainty; she looked again and her heart gave a great bound and then seemed suddenly to forget its office. It was useless to try to escape from the dismaying fact. The stubble-bearded deckhand with the manner of a gentleman was most unmistakably a later reincarnation of the pleasantly smiling young man who had courteously made way for her at the teller's wicket in the Bayou State Security; who had smiled and given place to her while he was holding his pistol aimed at President Galbraith.

It was said of Charlotte Farnham that she was sensible beyond her years, and withal strong and straightforward in honesty of purpose. None the less, she was a woman. And when she saw what was before her, conscience turned traitor and fled away to give place to an uprush of hesitant doubts born of the sharp trial of the moment.

She got upon her feet, steadying herself by the back of her shair. She felt that she could not trust herself if she once admitted the thin edge of the wedge of delay. The simple and straightforward thing to do was to go immediately to the captain and tell him of her discovery, but she shrank from the thought of what must follow. They would seize him: he had proved that he was a desperate man, and there would be a struggle. And when the struggle was over they would bring him to her and she would have to stand forth as his accuser.

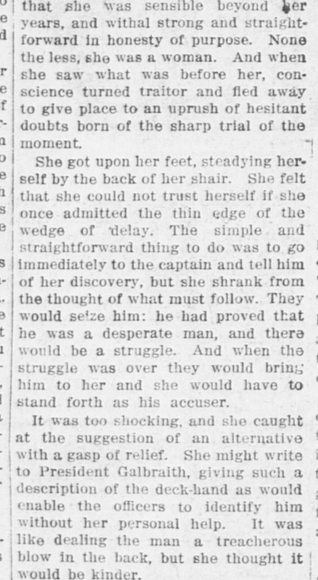
It was too shocking, and she caught at the suggestion of an alternative with a gasp of relief. She might write to President Galbraith, giving such a description of the deck-hand as would enable the officers to identify him without her personal help. It was like dealing the man a treacherous blow in the back, but she thought it would be kinder.

"Aunt Fanny," she began, with her face averted, "I promised you I wouldn't write to Mr. Galbraith until after we reached home—until I had told papa. I have been thinking about it since, and I—I think it must be done at once."

* * * * * * *

Griswold had come upon Miss Farnham unexpectedly, and when he passed her on his way forward he had seen the swift change in her face betokening some sudden emotion, and the recollection of it troubled him.

What if this clear-eyed young person had recognized him? He knew that the New Orleans papers had come aboard; he had seen the folded copy of the Louisianian in the invalid's lap. Consequently, Miss Farnham knew of the robbery, and the incidents were fresh in her mind. What would she do if she had penetrated his disguise?



The Niche Between the Coffee Sacks Was Empty.

He had a shock of genuine terror at this point and his skin prickled as at the touch of something loathsome. Up to that moment he had suffered none of the pains of the hunted fugitive; but he knew now that he had fairly entered the gates of the outlaw's inferno; that however cunningly he might cast about to throw his pursuers off the track, he would never again know what it was to be wholly free from the terror of the arrow that flieth by day.

The force of the Scriptural simile came to him with startling emphasis, bringing on a return of the prickling dismay. The stopping of the paddle-wheels and the rattling clangor of the gang-plank winch aroused him to action and he shook off the creeping numbness and ran aft to rummage under the cargo on the engine-room guards for his precious bundle. When his hand reached the place where it should have been, the blood surged to his brain and set up a clamorous dinning in his ears like the roaring of a cataract. The niche between the coffee sacks was empty.

CHURCH PICNICS AND CAR RIDES

Now is the season of church picnics and trolley parties, and the street railway has several of these thus far this week. Parties of this kind are under the direction of W. S. Belyea, traffic solicitor of the street railway.

Wednesday evening the Thistle club Miss Florence Williams, president, to the number of fifty went to Nantasket by special car. Dinner was served at the park after which the party enjoyed the show returning home in the late evening.

This morning the Union church of Houghs Neck left by special car on its annual picnic which is being held at Glen Echo park.

CHARGED WITH LARCENY OF $10

George Kingsbury of Houghs Neck pleaded not guilty this morning to a charge of the illegal sale of liquor. The case was continued to JuJly 23. The police allege Kingsbury brought liquor to the house of Margaret Flanagan on Tabe rstreet, who was before the court a weey agon on another charge.

The case of Luke Mulligan of Randolph, charged with larceny, was continued to Jly 31 with the understanding he would make restitution of $5 to P. McConarty before then. Mulligan was one of a party of men blamed for the loss of $10. The money, it is alleged, was spent to buy liquor.

USUAL MIDNIGHT FIRE.

The fire department got its usual midnight alarm Wednesday night, Box 38 sounding at 11.55. The alarm was for a slight fire in one of the upper rooms of a house on Payne street occupied by an Italian family. The fire was on a rug, that had evidently been started from a match or cigarette. The rug had been thrown out of the window when the department arrived and what little fire was left was extinguished with a hand chemical. The loss was slight.

MOTOR COAT AND TAM.

Motor coat of plaid woolen mixture, built on ample, roomy lines, loosely belted and with deep pockets at the sides. With the coat is worn a tam-o'-shanter of knitted silk plaid.

FURNISHING VERANDA.

Hammock, Willow Armchairs and Paint Among the Possibilities.

Every well appointed country house has a veranda, terrace or gallery that is practically an outdoor sitting room. Unfortunately, however, the best appointments for these are still expensive at the select shops, being classed as novelties or specialties. Willow armchairs and Gloucester hammocks have been greatly reduced in price, but tables, garden seats, settles, etc., of good design are still high.

On the other hand, it is possible, with a little skill and a great deal of paint, to furnish a veranda very attractively with little money.

A charming breakfast porch can be equipped entirely with kitchen furniture painted and decorated like the expensive peasant and cottage sets which are in vogue at present. One of the heavy, plain ironing tables that can be converted into a settle is the best type of table to buy, and the chairs should be of the plainest. Get your furniture in the natural wood and paint it any color you wish, though green, on the whole, is most satisfactory. Make or buy a stencil of some simple design; conventionalized flowers, like the decorations on the Swedish or Hungarian pottery, are good. Stencil a border of these around your table and on the backs of your chairs. Paint it in bright peasant colors, and when these are dried go over the decorations with a waterproof varnish.

This is not work that demands any great skill, but it calls for time, patience and extreme neatness. The effect is well worth the trouble, for with the outlay of a few dollars you will have a set of furniture that you could not buy for five times that amount.

Dairy benches and stools decorated in the same way make very attractive garden furniture.

For Sore, Tired Eyes.

One of the simple home remedies for troubled eyes is hot water. Hot water applications can be managed by soaking two soft cloths in very hot water. Place one cloth over the eyes as hot as can be endured while the other is heating. Apply a fresh cloth as soon as the first cools.

Boracic acid, a quarter of a teaspoonful added to a glass of warm water and permitted to cool before using, makes an excellent eye lotion within the reach of all.

For the Army Worm.

Spray heavily with arsenate of lead for the army worm. Spray the lawns and all plants and shrubs. Do not wait until the insects arrive, as that will be too late. Spray at once and keep all foliage well covered with the spray.

Polish For Steel.

Sweet oil, one tablespoonful; turpentine, two tablespoonfuls; emery powder, one tablespoonful.

STUFFED CUCUMBERS.

Take large, firm cucumbers and cut them in two lengthwise. Peel and remove the seeds and pulp. Mix breadcrumbs with the pulp and season it with melted butter, salt and pepper. Place this mixture in the shells, sprinkle more breadcrumbs over the top and set in the oven to brown. A little water must be put in the pan to steam the cucumbers while they are browning, otherwise the crumbs will burn before the cucumber shell is cooked. This dish goes well with almost any combination of food.

Care of the Baby In Summer

[Prepared by the children's bureau, United States department of labor.]

Food For the "Runabout" Baby.

For the first nine months or more of a baby's life, when he is growing at a very rapid rate, nature has provided a perfect food in mother's milk. With such babies a healthy development usually goes steadily forward with little trouble. But after being weaned all too many babies seem to suffer from a setback, while accommodating themselves to digest a new food.

A list of the foods suitable to this period of the baby's life is given in greater detail in a bulletin called "Infant Care," published by the children's bureau of the department of labor, Washington. This publication is sent free to all who care to ask for it, sending their name and address to the bureau.

The average healthy baby of one year of age should be taking five meals a day at four hour intervals. At this period he should have about one quart of milk daily. In addition, he may have well cooked cereal twice a day, squeezed beef juice or broth once a day, some fruit juice once or twice a day, unless the bowels are loose, and dry bread or toast to chew.

As the baby grows and thrives various things may be added to his diet. The following are sample meals for a day for a healthy child from eighteen months to two years old (an ounce is two tablespoonfuls):

7 a. m.—Milk, 8 to 10 ounces, piece of zwieback, toast or dried bread.
9 a. m.—Orange juice, 2 ounces.
10 a. m.—Cereal, 2 tablespoonfuls; cupful of milk, toast or dry bread.
2 p. m.—Broth, 6 ounces; meat, 1 tablespoonful; vegetable (spinach), 1 tablespoonful; stale bread, 1 piece; baked apple, 1 tablespoonful.
6. p. m.—Cereal, 1½ tablespoonfuls; milk, 6 to 8 ounces; toast or bread.
10 p. m.—Milk, 8 ounces in cup. (May be omitted).

The following rules for cooking and preparing certain of these articles may be helpful to mothers:

Toast.—Bread one day old, cut in very thin slices; slices placed on edge in a toast rack in an oven to dry. Leave oven door partly open.

Broth.—Of round steak, one pound; of water, one pint. Put the meat on in cold water and allow it to come to a boil; then lower the flame so that it barely simmers for three or four hours. Remove the meat and add enough water to make up the original amount of liquid; strain through a wire sieve and set aside to cool. When cold the fat is removed in a solid piece, leaving a clear liquid or jelly. Heat a small portion when it is time to feed the baby. Keep the jelly covered and on ice.

Meat. — One tablespoonful. Take meat, round or sirloin steak, scraped with a silver spoon. When you have the desired amount shape into a pat and broil on a hot, dry spider. When done add a little salt. Or a piece of rare round or sirloin steak, the outer part having been cut away, is scraped or shredded with a knife.

Spinach.—Cook spinach in salted water until tender. Pour cold water over it and drain. Then rub through a fine sieve.

Baked Apple. — Apple baked three-quarters of an hour; skin and core removed; two tablespoonfuls of pulp strained through a fine sieve.

Cereal (flour preparations). — Cereal preparation three-quarters of a cupful cooked with one quart of water for three-quarters of an hour in a double boiler. Add enough water to keep moist.

Oatmeal.—Have a pint of water boiling in the top of the double boiler; add one-half teaspoonful of salt and drop in gradually one-half cupful of oatmeal flakes, stirring all the while. Cook for three hours and strain through a wire sieve. Pour on it one or two ounces of milk.

The following are some of the things a baby should not have: Candy, cakes, doughnuts, pastry, fresh bread, griddle cakes, sirup or molasses, pork or tough meat of any kind, bananas, overripe fruits, pickles, tea, coffee, soda water or beer nor tastes of foods from the family table.

CHILDREN'S TEETH.

Take Them to a Dentist Regularly and Insist Upon Use of Toothbrush.

It is most important to get young children into the habit of regularly cleaning their teeth. This should be done after every meal, but sometimes that is not possible. At least the children should scrub the teeth as a matter of routine after breakfast and the last thing at night.

Dentists are advising that the gums as well as the teeth should be scrubbed carefully. First, because it is just at the place where the gum and tooth meet that decay begins and, second, because friction of the gum brings a good supply of the blood to the part, and that, of course, nourishes the teeth and preserves them. Any simple tooth powder can be used, and after scrubbing the children should rinse the mouth out with clean cold water.

The mother should remember how important it is to preserve the first teeth. Any spot of decay should be stopped immediately. The wise mother takes her children regularly to the dentist, perhaps once in six months, to have the teeth inspected. This is a real economy in the end.

About Shoes for the Young People

Following in the shoe tracks of their elders, children and half-grown young people are wearing the best-looking and best-made shoes which have fallen to their lot so far. The correct styles for children as to shape are those that follow the shape of the foot, snug enough not to slip at the heel, and a little longer and broader than the feet they are to clothe, with wide toes, flexible soles and low heels.

The matter of shape disposed of, without room for mistake, there is left a considerable latitude in choice of design and finish. All on the same sensible last, plain, dressy and fancy shoes have received almost as much attention at the hands of manufacturers as those meant for older people—and this is saying a lot.

An attractive dress shoe for a child is shown in the picture, with white kid and patent leather combined in a graceful design. It fastens over the instep and ankles with cut-out straps buttoned over black buttons at the side. The neat machine stitching is an important feature in its finish. A flat ribbon bow decorates the toe.

For the well-grown miss a pretty boot is shown with cloth top, patent leather trimming and laced fastening. It is trim in appearance and broader in the toe than it looks. The narrow effect is accomplished by the long point in the tip of patent leather.

The plain leather sandals made for children's midsummer wear deserve a good word always. Worn without stockings, they help out the youngsters that are denied the pleasure of running barefoot, and are so easy to put off and on that the little people can indulge in the joy of getting their feet on the ground occasionally.

Braid in Millinery.

Serviceable, adaptable braid has been called upon for trimming the newest tailored hats, and some very unique effects have been obtained from its artistic use. A large choa or rose of folded white silk braid effectively trims a fine white leghorn. A three-cornered dark brown milan has dangling at one side a red apple of soutache braid alluring enough to tempt any modern daughter of Eve. Wide cotton braid with colored borders and the sports hats of panama, silk and peanut straw which the braid counters for choice bits if you wish a new hat trimming.

A BILL IN THE BOX

Story of a Legislative Prank In the New York Assembly.

DILEMMA OF A TIMID MEMBER.

Though His Name Was Signed to the Measure He Was Not Its Author and When Ordered to Withdraw It What Little Courage He Had Failed Him.

There was a fake bill introduced in the assembly of New York state during the session of 1902 that really became a famous piece of legislation before it arrived at its formal finis, although it has never until the present time been chronicled in print.

The act was placed in the assembly bill box by two jokers of the assembly. It was drawn up in the regular form, beginning with the necessary verbiage, "The people of the state of New York in senate and assembly represented," etc. The provisions of the first two or three sections were also very plausible, and, in fact, the entire measure was put together in such a way that only a technician in legislative matters could have discerned the joke.

The assembly bill box is a receptacle placed for the measures of the legislators who may wish to have them introduced at the next regular daily session subsequent to their deposit. The box is only used "between times," for when the assembly is in session the bill may be handed up to the clerk for reading. Bills are introduced in duplicate and must bear, of course, the introducer's name.

The jokers dropped the fake bill into the box on a Thursday night. They attached a member's name whose district was in the crowded east side section of New York. He was what was known as a machine man and had little initiative or individuality. He never waited over for Friday morning sessions, as they lasted but a few minutes, and it was easier to take the train to New York Thursday night, returning after recess the following Monday night.

The fake bill with the east side member's name was duly taken out of the box Friday morning and its title read. It was referred to its proper committee and ordered printed. Its purpose was made very plain. At every crossroad throughout the state of New York there must be placed at once by the state engineer and surveyor a signpost with a sign of exactly described dimensions, and lettering measured to a dot, directing travelers to the nearest place for entertainment of man and beast. The angles of the crossroads were specified in their exact degrees with respect to the proper placing of the sign.

No sooner was the title of the bill read than the afternoon newspaper representatives at Albany pricked up their ears. They were on the alert always for New York city legislation, but here was a bill making it mandatory to erect signposts throughout the state, and essentially of rural benefit. Yet a member from a congested New York district had introduced it. Something strange. They searched around for the alleged introducer. He was in New York. They took no chances, however, and telegraphed a column to their papers telling of the attempt to signpost the state by an east side legislator.

The morning papers took it up. Reporters hunted up the assemblyman at his home. He roared out his denial. But nobody believed him. He got a hurry telephone call from his district leader, to whom he swore he had introduced no such bill. He was ordered to ask for the privilege of the floor at Monday night's session and compel the withdrawal of the bill. He had stage fright over the idea. He was almost too bashful to raise his voice when voting at roll call. Meanwhile the news of the bill spread, and from all quarters of the city the luckless assemblymen received telephone messages asking to be "let in on the signpost graft."

The following Monday night the alleged introducer arrived in Albany almost in a state of collapse. All during the ensuing week he was ordered to demand the withdrawal of the bill, but would not rise in his seat and ask it. Finally a member in the secret told the facts to Speaker Nixon. The speaker called the assemblyman to his desk and questioned him. He was satisfied that the legislator was altogether too timid to introduce such a radical bill and exonerated him.

But the bill had been printed. When it was supposed that it had been killed in committee the first thing known was a request for a hearing on it by some good roads workers, who saw in it a blessing and who sent the alleged introducer a congratulatory letter for his public spirited act. The bill of course died in committee, but its memory clung to the east side legislator for many years.—New York Sun.

Dublin Council Refuses to Endorse Home Rule Resolution

Dublin, July 15.—By a vote of 30 to 22 the city corporation refused to indorse a resolution demanding that "the home rule act shall be put into operation in the whole of Ireland on the 15th of September.

By the same majority the corporation adopted an amendment expressing confidence in John E. Redmond, the Irish Nationalist parliamentary leader, to select the speediest means and the proper moment to bring the settlement into operation.

The majority scented mischief and a suggestion of dissention in the Nationalist ranks.

A disorderly scene followed the announcement of the result of the vote. The city councillors had to be forcibly prevented from engaging in fisticuffs.

MEAT PACKERS MAKE CHARGE

State Department Will Make Representations Regarding the Matter, the General Subject of Interference With Neutral Trade to Be Dealt With Later—Costly Court Delays

Washington, July 15.—American meat packers appealed to the state department to demand that Great Britain stop interfering with their cargoes consigned to neutral ports and settle for $14,000,000 worth of their products now held up in prize courts. They charged the British government with the destruction of commerce in food products between the United States and other neutral nations.

After two conferences between the packers and Chandler Anderson, special counsellor for the state department, it was announced that the department would make representations to Great Britain.

It is understood that this will be done immediately, the communication dealing specifically with the complaint of the packers and not going into the general subject of interference with neutral trade under the orders-in-council against commerce with Germany, which soon is to be made the subject of another note.

The packers will discuss their difficulties further with Anderson. In a statement outlining their case as laid before the department, they declare that the British government purposely delays settlement of their claims for seized cargoes, and that they are not inclined to reopen trade with neutral countries unless they can be assured of delivery of their shipments to ports designated.

The statement gives the history of the detention of consignments for Scandinavian countries shipped before the British order-in-council was issued in some instances and others before it was known to the packers.

The packers say that until a week ago they were assured by their representative in England that the situation would be amicably adjusted, practically all differences having been agreed upon, when a new set of unreasonable terms were suggested by the authorities and immediately rejected by the packers.

PLAN TO CONSIDER CRIMINAL ACTION

Connecticut Starts an Investigation of Pie Deaths

Mystic, Conn., July 15.—The probe into the deaths of three persons and the illness of many others as a result of eating cocoanut custard pie at a restaurant on the Connecticut side of the Pawcatuck river has become an interstate affair.

Investigation of the cases from the Connecticut standpoint was begun here when thirty witnesses were summoned to appear to give evidence to ascertain if any criminal action is to be taken in this state as a result of the deaths. The hearing was held in the town court.

Rhode Island has already begun a probe of the pie cases and analysis of articles seized in the restaurant has been under way for some time.

REVEALS OLD SECRET

Woman Clears Frank James' Name In Tragedy of Long Ago

Bedford, Ia., July 15.—Upon the story of Mrs. Maria C. Porter, an aged woman who says she was courted by Frank James, noted outlaw, and who has for half a century held within her breast a story of crime as full of thrills as any inclosed in yellow paper novels, rests the state's case against four old men.

Mrs. Porter's evidence was given at the trial of Bates Huntsman, one of the four charged with the murder of a cattleman and his son in 1868 and the disappearance of $90,000 in gold coin.

"Frank James wasn't in this," declared the witness. "I don't want him involved. One day with another girl I found a cave near a creek close to our home. All over the floor were new dimes and half-dollars.

"About two months after that I saw four men tugging at a blanket and a man's legs were dangling behind it. One of the men made me swear I'd never tell.

"'If you tell,' he said, 'we will wash our hands in your heart's blood.' The man was my brother-in-law. He is dead now or I could never tell.'"

TROOPS TO PROTECT FRANK ARE RECALLED

"Lynching" Story Now Believed to Have Been a Hoax

Atlanta, July 15.—Military authorities were alert because of rumored plans to attack the state prison farm at Milledgeville, where Leo M. Frank, convicted slayer of 14-year-old Mary Phagan, is serving a life term.

The reports received by Governor Harris stated that an attempt would be made to take Frank from the prison farm authorities. The rumors were very vague.

Three companies of state troops had been assembled at Macon ready to make a hurried trip to Milledgeville, twenty-six miles distant, in case their presence was required.

The three companies were ordered to return to their homes. There had been no indication of any trouble and the military authorities were inclined to believe the entire matter was a hoax.

TYPHOID FEVER IN THE UNITED STATES

An editorial in the Journal of the American Medical Association, April 17th, says in part, "It is evident that Typhoid Fever is on the way to become a relatively rare disease in many parts of the United States. There are two main reasons for this. First, there are now comparatively few large cities in which the public water supply is likely to contain Typhoid Bacteria. Second, the increase in the practice of pasteurization has resulted in a dimunition in the amount of milk borne typhoid."

The Elm Farm Milk Company complying with the general demand by the Medical Profession and Sanitarians, were one of the first to scientifically pasteurize their milk. This milk is offered at the same price that rules for ordinary milk.

This process is the only one that absolutely guarantees the safety of milk against all of the infectious diseases.

Spinning a Web.

A patient Englishman, who last summer watched a garden spider spin its nest from start to finish, has told what he saw in Knowledge. At half past 9 o'clock in the evening the spider, a half grown female, began work by dropping from one branch of a pine tree to another below and there making fast a line, which eventually formed two of the perpendicular radiating lines of the web. From that time it continued to work without interruption until twenty-five minutes after 1 the next morning. The network and the radial lines were done by half past 12, and the spiral part of the web was consequently made in less than an hour. He says the finished web was one of the most perfect he has ever seen.

The Cruel Schoolmaster.

An indignant mother wrote thus to the principal of an academy:

Dear Sir—My son writes me that he has to study too hard. He says he has to translate fifty hexameters of Latin a day. I looked "hexameter" up in the dictionary and find it is a poetic verse of six feet. Now, that makes 200 feet, or 100 yards of poetry for my poor son to translate each day. I think about half a hexameter or six inches of this Latin is enough for a boy of his age. Yours truly,

GERMANS COME NEAR VICTORY

Drive Back French Troops For Third of a Mile

HOLD MILE OF NEW TRENCHES

Many Prisoners and Munitions Taken by Troops Under German Crown Prince—Teutons Have Lost Heavily In Poland, According to Petrograd—Stories of Italian Victories Not Borne Out by Official Report

London, July 15.—After suffering the sting of many defeats in and around the Argonne and Woevre regions in northeastern France, the kaiser's eldest son and heir, according to the Berlin report, has at last succeeded in thrusting his troops into the French lines.

When the guns ceased to roar in the Argonne the Germans were in possession of a mile of French trenches, northeast of Vienne le Chateau, which twenty-four hours previously had been occupied by the French.

Across this front the German troops, under the crown prince, had charged with might and main, the impetus of their first assault carrying them over the heavily entrenched ground until they had penetrated a third of a mile into the French fortifications. But there the assault was stopped.

The French troops, gathering energy out of their defeat, pressed into the German lines west of the road from Binerville to Vienne le Chateau. At the same time another section of the French troops charged from their trenches and penetrated for some distance into the German possessions west of the Argonne forest.

So, in a measure, the German gain was counterbalanced by the French. But the Paris official statement does not mention the extent of the French gains, a fact which indicates that they were not very extensive.

On the other hand, both Berlin and Paris agree that the German advance northeast of Vienne le Chateau was over a front of about one mile to a depth of one-third of a mile—a very appreciable gain, amounting almost to a victory.

The scene of the fighting is between Verdun, the great French stronghold, and Rheims. It is in a slightly hilly country, so that the German charge was made uphill. Eight miles further on lies the main highway between Verdun and Rheims.

It was here that the Germans, according to the Berlin statement, took uninjured 2581 prisoners, including fifty-one officers, and drove up to the first line of French batteries, rendering eight cannon useless.

These batteries now lie between the German front and the French front, while the Germans, as a result of their success, possess two field cannon, two revolver cannon, six machine guns and a large quantity of tools that had belonged to the French.

As Viewed at Petrograd

The renewed activity of the Germans north of the Vistula and south of the Nieman, in Poland, has so far been without successs, according to dispatches from Petrograd. Their advance in the neighborhood of Suwalki netted them nothing, while their renewed attack upon the fortress town of Ossowetz has been a disastrous repulse.

It is said in the Petrograd dispatches that the Germans lost 15,000 killed or wounded, besides being driven out of their first line of trenches. Conditions attending a siege of Ossowetz are different from those in the south or in Galicia. Ossowetz has big guns, with sufficient ammunition, and the roads are such that the Germans cannot bring up their 17-inch howitzers, which did such fearful execution in the Carpathian drive.

In the Petrograd dispatch it is stated that only one of the big guns found the range of the city and sent three shells into the town, killing about fifty civilians. The Russian airmen who were directing the firing speedily located this gun, signalled its position and it was destroyed.

The situation in south Poland and Galicia shows no change. Apparently the armies of Generals von Mackensen and von Linsingen, as well as the divisions of von Voyranch, are absolutely idle. The Austrians under Archduke Joseph Ferdinand are blocked and retreating from the north of Krasnik.

Stories of Italian Victories

While official news from the Italian fronts is scarce, there came word from the Austrian town of Villach, by way of Geneva, that the Italians had captured two miles of Austrian trenches in the Carnic Alps.

This is on the northeastern front, where the Italians, by a drive into Austrian territory in the general direction of Vienna, are endeavoring to protect their main operations in the Isonzo valley.

It is reported that the Alpine troops during this engagement dragged their artillery to the heights of Roskofel, 6600 feet above sea level, from which altitude they were enabled to dominate the Austrian position below.

The same report adds that the Italians have also captured two important points south of Goritzio, on the Isonzo.

None of these statements is borne out by the official report from the Italian commander-in-chief, General Cadorna, which simply says the situation in the entire Italo-Austrian campaign is unchanged.

GOVERNMENT IS DEFIED

Welsh Miners Go on Record as In Favor of Stopping Work

Despite the action of Great Britain in applying the munitions of war act to the coal-mining industry, which will make the miners subject to severe fines if they strike, it is practically certain that a large number of men will stop work in South Wales, thus curtailing the supply of coal for the naval vessels.

The Federation of Miners of the United Kingdom, the labor leaders and the general public, upon whose support the miners would depend to make the strike a success, are all urging them to continue work until an agreement can be reached, but the executive council of the South Wales union refused to support this recommendation.

It is not believed, however, that the strike will last long, as the men themselves are divided and the South Wales union has not the funds to finance a long struggle; the Miners' Federation of the United Kingdom, after its recommendation, is not likely to assist them financially.

ORDER TO SUBMARINES

Must Exercise More Care Toward Safeguarding Human Lives

Reports that German submarine commanders, since the torpedoing of the Lusitania, have been instructed to exercise more care with regard to human lives, were partly corroborated in a semi-official statement given out at Berlin.

Reviewing the results of the submarine activities, the statement declared that "the loss of human life has been remarkably small, the submarines using every precaution and giving ample warning and time to leave the ship if no resistance is offered."

During the month of June twenty-nine British, nine Russian, three French and one Belgian vessels were sunk by German submarines, the statement said, besides a number of small fishing boats armed as patrols. This represented a loss of 125,000 tons in shipping to Germany's enemies.

EARLY END OF WAR

Kaiser Said to Have Predicted It Will Come In October

The German emperor, according to the London Times, in a speech to a deputation of bankers, who had insisted on an interview in order to point out to the emperor the financial difficulties of the situation and the grave risk attending the pursuance of the campaign through another winter, stated that the war would end in October.

The bankers are alleged to have declared that even if the war was brought to an end immediately and an indemnity obtained Germany's position would be difficult, but that if the war was prolonged the German empire would become utterly bankrupt.

It was in reply to these representations, according to The Times, that the emperor is understood to have declared that the war would end in October.

AS TO OCEAN MEDIATOR

Germany Would Have United States Act In That Capacity

The theory that the Berlin foreign office wants the United States to act as mediator between Germany and Great Britain relative to methods of marine warfare is the subject of comment in official circles at Washington.

There has been no question at any time that the kaiser had intimated a willingness to cease his submarine operations if England would cease its starvation blockade. The last note, however, had not been interpreted as containing a request that the Washington administration take up the matter with the British.

Ambassador Bernstorff would not discuss the matter for publication, but he has told high officials this was what the note meant and the reason it was not recognized immediately was that a shade of meaning was lost in translation.

TIN NOVELTIES.

Articles Which Contribute a Gay Note In Outdoor Life.

Among the decided tin novelties which some ingenious brain has evolved is the door knocker into which the guest's name or card may be slipped and save confusion in a home of many visitors. And now that the door-stop door porters are so in vogue, bricks are being decorated in gay flowers for the purpose of holding back doors when strong breezes blow.

A charming idea is that of the painted tin cluster of flowers forming the old time curtain knob or rosette, as it was called. These are only effective on a plain curtain and not on flowered drapery.

Sure to be popular is a practical ornamental painted tin pail in which ice can be packed about any bottled drinks and be carried out to the tennis courts or for a garden tea. Popular, too, are the long tin horns which are meant to summon guests at the tea hour for the meals. The convenient tin newspaper rack will no doubt figure conspicuously on the up to date veranda.

The bird houses of the painted tin, if they are put up in a more or less sheltered place, promise to be a decorative note of color on the lawn. Painted tin has also been introduced into garden novelties. Watering pots of different sizes for my lady who does the sprinkling of her choice blossoms cannot but appeal to the fair gardener. The garden sticks come both in the painted tin and wood, as do the weather vanes.

The Ethics of Borrowing.

Some time since a little girl who lived in a rural community appeared at the back door of a neighbor's house with a small basket in her hand. "Mrs. Smith," said she, as the neighbor answered her timid knock, "mother wants to know if you won't please lend her a dozen eggs. She wants to put them under a hen."

"Put them under a hen?" was the wondering rejoinder of the neighbor. "I didn't know that you had a hen!"

"We haven't," was the frank rejoinder of the little girl. "We are going to borrow the hen from Mrs. Brown."—Christian Endeavor World.

GETTING THEM SOFT.

It was their first breakfast in their little flat after they had returned from the honeymoon trip. Lovey had asked Dovey to fix him a couple of soft boiled eggs. When the eggs were served Lovey opened one of them and found it to be as hard as a rock.

"These eggs are very hard," exclaimed Lovey. "I wanted them boiled soft."

"Well, dear, they ought to be soft," replied Dovey. "I just boiled them and boiled them and boiled them until I felt sure that they must be soft. But I only boiled them for twenty minutes. Perhaps I should have let them boil for half an hour."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

RUNAWAY TEAM.

One of the plate glass windows in the store of Harry Lark at Brewers' corner ws shattered this noon when the pole of a wagon loaded with paving blocks and drawn by a pair of runaway horses went through the glass. The horse owned by W. J. Lane, were feeding on Smith street when they bolted. They crosser Garfield street, at mad speed and dahsed toward Brewers corner.

Willam Kelly, a driver of one of the Schraut bakery wagons saw them coming and souted to several children in te street to get out of the way. Patrolman Fallon and he both ran toward the animals and grabbed them by the manes. Both men were carried across Copeland street and were thrown off the wagon pole went through the window.

NEW STREET CLEANED.

The newly paved part of Hancock street, betwen Granite and School streets, was given a cleaning Wediesday night. To do this the rotary sweeper was run over the street, after which it was flushed with water. More or less dirt gatheerd on the newly paved part while work was in progress on the opposite side giving the impression that the job was not as good a one as was expected. It looks very much better now that it has been cleaned.

Mrs. Thomas C. Hewson of Newcomb place is at her bungalow on Plantin Island, Scituate, where she is recovering from injuries recently suffered.

REPUTATION IN TRADE.

High prices are paid for a business "good will." Many men will give $5000 for the name and reputation of a certain store, that can't pay them more than $1500 to $2000 a year, including both interest on their money and payment for their own personal work.

The reason that good will brings so high a price is that it takes so long to get it, unless one makes a very active campaign for it.

There is one way of getting a good will in a brief time. That is by persistent advertising. By keeping his goods before the public, a store will become familiarly known in a single year. But a man who keeps still about his goods, and trusts to the slow accretions of time, is likely to have to wait a dozen years before he acquires an equal reputation. Quite likely he may never get it.

WITH HONORS OF WAR.

Rights Those Conditions Confer Upon a Defeated Foe.

Ordinarily in all siege operations a surrender of a fortress is unconditional, and the vanquished tacitly agree to accept whatever terms the victor, in his wisdom, may impose, relying upon the latter's magnanimity for good and lenient treatment. The usual course is this: The garrison is disarmed. They are made to fall in, all so many prisoners, and escorted to wherever their conquerors decide they shall be detained.

The conquerors, of course, see that the escort is a strong guard, properly armed, able to put down at once any attempt on the prisoners' part to escape or disobey orders. Worst of all and certainly the most galling to any real soldier, the almost sacred trophies of the different regiments become the spoils of the victors.

Guns, ammunition, colors and such like things all have to be given up, though men have given their lives to defend them. For the future they grace the homes of the enemy or are turned against their old owners in the field.

It is in these things that the humiliation of surrender becomes complete. Yet all of it is saved when the beaten garrison is granted the "honors of war." That means the defenders were simply "defeated, but not disgraced."

By its use the successful besiegers admit to the world that the garrison was able to make something better than an unconditional surrender. Their heroic defense had not left them at their last gasp. They could maintain hostilities for some time yet, and, although they would undoubtedly be beaten at the finish, the fortress could only be taken after more loss had been suffered.

In such a case all that is demanded of the beaten men is that they should evacuate all their positions. These the enemy takes possession of as what he has been striving for. All the colors and other trophies are retained by the garrison. The defenders are not prisoners of war, compelled to surrender. They are simply beaten men, voluntarily giving up the unequal contest.

They are not disarmed and escorted by guards. Mustering under their own leaders, they have no enemy over them giving orders. Headed by their own bands, with their own colors flying above them and no foreign flag near, they "march out" of the positions they have so nobly held, saluted by their successors and acclaimed by the world as heroes for whom circumstances have been too strong.

It has been previously settled where they should go, and thither they march by themselves, their officers wearing their swords by their sides, just as if they were victors instead of conquered men. They merely evacuate their positions and to all purposes are free men, not prisoners.

This is marching out with the "honors of war."—Pearson's.

Homer's Birthplace.

Chios is the most probable birthplace of Homer and shows the blind bard's cradle, school, house and tomb. Near the poet's alleged "school," says the Pall Mall Gazette, is a little wine shop bearing across the front the coaxing saying of Hecuba to Hector, "Wine doth vastly increase the strength of a weary man." Although almost exterminated by the terrible massacre of 1822, the people of Chios are the most prosperous in the Levant. Nearly all leading Greek bankers and merchants hail from this island, and the well known families of Ralli and Rodocanachi are of Chiot origin.

Why It's "Horse" Chestnut.

A generally accepted reason why the horse chestnut is so called is on account of the resemblance to a horseshoe that is to be found when the twigs of the tree are sliced obliquely. In the south we may admire the bloom or this early flowering tree, but in the north, in certain parts of Yorkshire, mothers pay more regard to the nut, which, when grated, they hold to be an infallible cure for whooping cough. —London Chronicle.

Not War Talk.

"The right wing should be advanced considerably, but the left wing should remain in its present position, while the center ought to be pushed back just a trifle"—

No, it isn't war talk. It was overheard in a milliner's shop the other day.—San Francisco Examiner.

Unfortunate.

"Dubbins is a singularly unfortunate man."

"What makes you think so?"

"He's the sort of person who is always caught with his mouth open when a photographer takes a group picture."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

It Might Be Worse.

Poet—I fear I haven't written anything that will live. Friend—Look on the bright side of it. Be thankful that you are alive in spite of what you have written.—London Opinion.

An Impossible Experiment.

"Why don't you let the other fellow do the worrying?"

"I try to," replied Mr. Growcher, "but he comes around and worries me."—Washington Star.

Brute!

"Does he like to fashion his wife's gowns?"

"Yes; he feels it is the only way he can shut her up."—New York Sun.

A man must either imitate the vicious or hate them.—Montaigne.

A GLIMPSE OF SWINBURNE.

Bayard Taylor Called Him Perverse, Willful and Unreasonable.

In all important respects except one I found him to be very much what I anticipated, writes Laura Stedman in the North American Review, quoting Bayard Taylor's impression of Swinburne. The exception is instead of being a prematurely blase young man of the world, he is rather a wilful, perverse, unreasonable, spoiled child. His nature is still that of the young Shelley, and my great fear is that it will never be otherwise.

He needs the influence of a nature stronger that his in everything but the imaginative faculty—such a nature as Byron's was to Shelley. * * * He has a weak moral sense, but his offences arise from a colossal unbalanced affectation. This, or something like it, is a disorganizing element in his nature which quite obscures the organizing—that is artistic—sense. What I admire in him, yet admire with a feeling of pain, is the mad, unrestrained preponderance of the imagination. It is a godlike quality, but he sometimes uses it like a devil. He greatly interests my intellect, but does not touch me magnetically.

He could have no power over me, but on the contrary, I felt that I should be able to influence him in a short time. I had a letter from him the other day which shows that he feels an intellectual relationship between us. Now, this is not a question of relative poetic power, but of a certain diversity of qualities, and I don't mean to be egotistic in saying that I might perform somewhat of the same service for him as Byron for Shelley. I feel that (if it is not already too late) I could help him to some degree of poise, of system, of law; in short, art.

In this sense he moves my deepest sympathy, for I see now the matter that might be molded into a splendid poet relapsing into formless conditions. It is sad. It is tragic, and if this fancy of mine be foolish, there it is, nevertheless. Without this sense of giving assistance a week alone with Swinburne would be intolerable to me or any other human being.

CLOTH AND CLOTHES.

Why Some Garments Keep and Others Easily Lose Their Shape.

Every one—in this country, at least—wears clothes. They have to. Consequently every one is more or less interested in the question of clothes.

It is not so easy to know good cloth as it seems. Many people, depending on texture, feel, weave and so forth, think that they are judges of cloth. And when, after buying what they believe to be a good piece of cloth, it does not wear well they are greatly surprised.

The durability of cloth depends largely upon the length of the individual fibers. If the fibers are long and curling they form a close and strong weave. The cloth does not crack or wear out at the seams or folds because of the length of fiber, nor does it rub as easily by surface wear because it is more springy or elastic. Short fibers, on the other hand, have much less binding quality because they do not intertwine.

The difference between two suits or dresses in "keeping their shape" is largely due to this same thing. A really first class cloth, properly made and fitted, hardly ever requires pressing. It is elastic, and if it is hung up after having been worn for a day or two it will go right back into shape. The constant sending of trousers to the tailor to have a "crease' put in is a sign that the cloth was not made of long fibers.

If you want your suits or dresses to wear well and to look well first make sure that the cloth is woven from long fibers.—New York American.

Dead Languages.

Dead languages are ones that once were in common use, but are now no longer spoken unless by scholars who have studied them. The ancient Sanscrit, Greek and Latin have been dead many centuries as common speech, although still used to some extent for religious, scientific and literary purposes. Coming down to more recent times, most of the Indian tongues, of which there were many when the white man came, are now dead. All languages have their periods of growth, maturity and decadence, followed by death.—Philadelphia Press.

Quick Change.

Critical Husband—This beef isn't fit to eat. Wife—Well, I told the butcher that if it wasn't good I would send you around to his shop to give him a thrashing, and I hope you'll take some one with you, for he looked pretty fierce, and I didn't like the way he handled his big knife. Husband—Humph! Oh, well, I must say I've seen worse meat than this.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Only the Truth.

"Poor Maud! She thought she'd captured a rich stock dealer."

"What gave her the idea?"

"Why, she heard that he helped to send wheat up last week."

"And did he?"

"Yes; he works in a grain elevator." —New York Post.

Wanted a Sleepy One.

"Mother, must Fred and I have a chaperon for tonight?" asked the sweet young thing.

"Certainly, dear," replied the mother.

"Well, mother, please don't send Aunt Helen as a chaperon because she's got insomnia."—Yonkers Statesman.

SPORTING COMMENT

George Mitchell claims the bowling championship of the Eagles by virtue of his performance at the recent field day held at Clinton. Pete Dackers one of the delegates to the convention held in connection with the field day, won the bowling tournament defeating all comers. At the close of the match Mitchell beat him and took the laurels. Dackers wants another match and Mitchell has agreed to roll him at Providence the latter part of July during the New England convention.

The bowling match between the Boston and Quincy members of the Knights of Columbus at Poehler's alleys Houghs Neck, Wednesday evening was a very friendly contest. The Quincy men were defeated by a wide margin. All the bowlers were out of form and the scores run light.

Michael Kiley has issued a challenge to Napoleon Grignon and all West Quincy is interested. Whether or not the challenge will be accepted is not known. If it is the series will be played at the Boston Checker club rooms or the New American house. Kiley has always maintained he can defeat Grignon. Grignon however, has consistently cleaned up in every series he has played and now holds a state title.

George Barry has poined the Pawtucket team of the Colonial league and although suffering from an injured finger is participating in the games. The league directors have made Pawtucket a road team, because of the poor support given the team when it was playing home games. Barry caught with the Taunton team of the league last season, and rejoined them his spring. He went to Pawtucket when Taunton was disbanded.

The St. John's team is billed to play at Cambridge Saturday. Swain and Pat Byron will be the battery.

RAIN SPOILS UNIVERSALIST S. S. PICNIC

The storm Wednesday spoiled what would otherwise have been one of the most successful picnics ever held by the Universalist Sunday school and parish. There were seventy in the party which left Quincy on a special car in the morning for Highland park, the picnickers takng basket lunchers with them. The morning was spent n visiting various places about the park until noon when the lunch was served. A series of sports had been planned for the afternoon, but just as they were about to begin, rain fell, and continued to fail all the afternoon, obliging the abandonment of the sports and confining the party to the small buildings about the park, until it was time to leave for home.

QUINCY FIRM GETS CONTRACT

The contract for the memorial granite fountain to be erected at Queen Ann's Corner under the will of Mrs. A. B. Bacon was awarded this week to Milne & Chalmers of South Quincy. The contract price for the job was $3,000. It was about a year ago that the Ledger published an article relative to bids being wanted for a memorial at the Hingham cemetery and for a memorial fountan, the former to cost $5,000 and the latter $3,000. The memorial gate has just been completed. Nothing was done at that time about the memorial fountain and granite men who had been following the job finally dropped it, having an idea that it would never be built. Messrs Milne & Chalmers however did not forget the job, and their watchfulness has been rewarded.

This same firm has also booked an order this week for the erection of a granite memorial in the Newton cemetery to the memory of Carlton Broderick, the cost of which will be about $1,000. Mr. Broderick is the man Rchard R. Freeman Jr., of Wollaston was with on the steamship Lusitania at the time she was torpedoed and sunk by a German submarine. The body of Mr. Broderick was recovered however and brought back to America, for burial in the family lot at Newton. The body of Mr. Freeman was never recovered.

The Commons defeated the Hinkies in West Quincy Twilight league Wednesday evening in a very interesting game which was not decided until the final inning. The feature of the game was the fine work of the Goselin battery for the Commons. The hitting or Lorendeau and Desmond also was a feature.

STRIKERS WILL NOT MEDIATE

Refuse To Accept Mayor Gainor To Arbitrate Fight

NO ACTS OF VIOLENCE

(By United Press)

Washington, July 16—Labor Sec. Wilson was appealed today to try to settle the Providence street car strike. The department was in communication with special conciliators in Providence and hope soon to effect an adjustment.

Providence, July 16—The striking car men today turned down the proposals of Mayor Gainor to act as a mediator, which plan the Rhode Island Co. had accepted. The union men have decided to fight to a finish. Pres. A. E. Potter of the Rhode Island car company declared that the interest of the public demanded the running of the cars and they can be manned in a few hours.

The police have been on 24 hour duty in anticipation of trouble but no acts of violence have been reported Congressman O'Shaughnessy this morning received a wire from Sec. Wilson of the department of labor immediately to appoint Federal commissioners of conciliation to endeavor to adjust the street railway strike.

VANDAL RUINS TOMATO PLANTS

Vandalism of the rankest kind was reported to the police this morning by Joseph Simmons, a Syrian of 2 Winter street. The vandal cut off at the roots 27 tomato vines and a few corn stalks.

The plants were in a small garden near the house and represent Simmons said, the product of hours of work. He informed the police he believed he believed he knew who was responsible.

Simmons, according to the story told today, believes the deed was committed for revenge by a man he refused to take as a boarder several weeks ago. He says that at midnight, a week ago, he went to the window on hearing a noise in the garden and saw the figure of a man skulking in the garden. He says he aroused six of his boarders and all saw the man. The man ran when they called to him.

Nothing has happened to indicate that he would again be bothered until last night. The vandalism was discovered at six o'clock this morning. The police are to take immediate action, working on information furnished by Simmons.

The tomato plants destroyed were bearing heavily and were prize specimens, raised from seeds. The corn was half grown. Simmons in telling the police of his loss said he could overlook the destruction of the corn but not the tomato plants.

Miss Doris Hayward of Whitman has been visiting friends in Wollaston.

KALEVALA PLANS BIG CONVENTION

Societies of Eastern States To Gather Here

Quincy on Saturday will be the scene of a large convention that of the secret orders, the Knights and Ladies of Kalevala. There will be members from every Eastern state, and a large delegation is to attend from New York. The outing at Merrymount park is the feature of the day.

It will be an opportunity for friends who in the quest of occupation have been separated to meet once more and talk over childhood days, the steady advancement of their country and to wonder at the marvels of their heroes.

It is the aim of the Kalevala societies—these people who are representing the beautiful "Land of the Thousand Isles," of which the story, Kalevala, was told over a thousand years ago,—to develop good citizens of the United States and to be a people of whom the country will be proud.

The parade will start ten o'clock at the Temperance hall on Suomi road and will march through the main streets with the Quincy National Band leading. The Kalevala Ladies and their friends will wear white and the Knights will have white trousers and caps.

An extensive program has been planned for the Park. There will be music from the band, the Temperance Society choir "Emo" will sing and speeches from Dr. Matti Kurikka, Mr. J. A. P. Uksila, editor of the New York News and well known engineer, his wife, Mrs. Aino Uksila and Mr. O. Hanstrom, all of Brooklyn, N. Y.

Several athletic societies will partake in the sports. There will be a hundred yard dash for the women and a four hundred yard relay race.

A special attraction wil be a five mile exhibition race by Ville Kyronen, who was second in the Boston Marathon when Kolehmainen ran.

In the evening a concert will be given at the Temperance hall and people from different cities will partake in it.

This festival will be a large and important one in view of the program to be executed and for this reason the Kalevala desires that everybody attend irrespective of nationality.

Vaino M. Warwikko of Suomi road is chairman of the committee of arrangements.

Sunday the society will hold a closed meeting in the Temperance hall, members only being admitted.

STREAM OF BEER PUTS OUT FIRE

Even the followers of the late Carrie Nation would hardly have objected to the use made of beer in a Dorchester saloon Thursday afternoon for the sparkling fluid served the purpose of extinguishing a fire. Still, the followers of the Saloon's' Nightmare might have preferred to have the emporium go up in smoke.

At all events those who happened to be in attendance at Haggerty's saloon were treated to an unusual spectacle. The gathering were lounging about, trying to keep cool, when a fire broke out in a corner of the room. No water was available with which to chase the fire away. A keg of beer was tapped, a small rubber tube inserted, and, presto, a stream of amber colored liquid squirted on the fire, which flared up for a moment in gratitude and then subsided.

SIGNS OF LIFE SHOWN AT LAST

The Board of Survey, which came into existence for the first time this year and of which little has been heard, advertises today a number of public hearings to be held in the Council Chamber, City Hall, Thursday evening July 29. Under the act creating the Board people who desire to lay out, and construct streets through private property, must obtain permission from the Board of Survey after a public hearing.

SODALITY GIVES DANCING PARTY

Award Souvenirs For St. John's Field Day

An entertainment and dancing party in the hall of the St. John's parish school Thursday evening under the auspices of the Women's sodality was the occasion for the announcing of the winners of the souvenirs offered by the various organizations which had tables and booths at the recent field day of St. John's parish.

Nearly 50 articles comprised the souvenirs. All were contributed by members of the parish and business men of the city. They ranged from trip tickets to Boston to a handsome statue of the Blessed Virgin, the product of a West Quincy Italian who has considerable ability as a sculptor. Miss Julia Duffy is today sending letters of thanks to the contributors.

Fr. Michael J. Owens, pastor, and Fr. Walter A. Quinlan curate, were the guests of the evening. In the gathering were more than 200 members of the parish and a few out of town friends. It was announced that the returns from the field day exceeded all expectations and that a large sum had been realized.

The entertainment program was under the direction of Miss Jane Griffin and consisted of piano solos by Miss Amy Fallon; Spanish dance by Miss Mabel Jacobson and Mabel Bishop; mock fight, the Misses Dorothy Ferguson, Lillian O'Brien, Anna and Elizabeth Crimmins, Elizabeth Donahue, Anna Murphy, with Miss Gertrude McGrane as accompanist; reading by Miss Lillian Reid and vocal solos by Miss Anna Walsh, Celina Beliveau, Walter Tregaskis, Arthur Holmes. Accompanying during the evening were Miss Anna Irvine and Miss Margaret Hartery.

LOCAL DOCTORS OFF FOR FRANCE

Harvard Unit To Be Sent To Front

But little has been heard from the Harvard Unit, which sailed for England some weeks ago, and in which party were two Quincy surgeons and several women nurses.

A cablegram from Dr. E. H. Nichols, head of the Harvard Unit, received Thursday by Herbert White, the business manager here, says that everything has gone well with the unit so far.

The 32 doctors and 75 nurses have been living in London in the Strand, very uncertain indeed as to what was to be done with them. There was a rumor that the party would be split up, which naturally disturbed the Americans, since it would put a stop to considerable well planned "team work."

The cablegram, however, dispels that fear. The party is to remain in one bunch and the British Government has signified that within a few days the unit will be sent to that populous if not overcrowded place near the front, known in all soldiers' correspondence—"Somewhere in France." The members of the unit are all well.

There are two Quincy physicians and several nurses in the party.

COMMEND FIRE DEPARTMENT.

Here is a word of appreciation for the good work of the fire department. It came in a letter to Chief Billings this morning:

"The owners and the occupants of the house at 49 Walker street, Atlantic, damaged by fire July 2, 1915, wish to express their appreciation to Chief Faxon Billings and his department for the efficient manner in which they handled the fire and protected the property."

The letter is signed by Walter E. Burrell, Alice E. Keller and Mr. and Mrs. Charles F. Mosman.

SUBMARINE H-15 SLIPS INTO SEA

Fore River Launch Latest Underwater Craft For Great Britain

CEREMONY IS PRIVATE

The Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation gave another British submarine to the waters about 1.30 P. M. today. The craft, H-15 was christened by Mrs. Alice Sheppard Davison, wife of Lieut. Gregory C. Davison of the Electric Boat Co.

Its launching was most successful. Mrs. Davison carried a large bouquet of roses during the ceremony and was surrounded by only a few invited guests. She was given a bracelet watch, the gift of the builders, after the launching. Pres. Joseph W. Powell of the corporation made the presentation.

REBEKAHS GIVE TWO ACT PLAY

District Deputy Grand President, Mrs. Estella C. Adams of Dorchester and members of her suite were the special guests of George L. Gill Rebekah lodge in Odd Fellows hall Thursday evening. Visitors were also present from Charlestown and other lodges in the vicinity.

The visiting deputy made a short speech, congratulating the members on the flourishing condition of the lodge. The two act drama, "When Women Vote," was given during the social hour which followed the meeting. The cast was Miss S. Abbie Feltis, Mrs. Sadie M. Walker, Mrs. Mary A. Jones, Mrs. Grace S. Welsh and Mrs. Arthur S. Sylvester. Mrs. James Baker was pianist. The presentation was notably successful and received with well merited approval.

A collation was served by the members just before adjournment.

EX-MAYOR R. A. SEARS IS HOST

Ex-Mayor Russell A. Sears, general attorney of the Boston Elevated Railway, entertained some 80 employees of his department as well as a number of the officials of the railway company Thursday afternoon at his home off Glendale road. Gen. William A. Bancroft, president of the company and Mrs. Bancroft, were among the guests. During the afternoon there were various sports on the lawn including a tennis match. One of the most interesting features of the afternoon was a watermelon eating contest, between two colored porters of the company. Before the party left for home dinner was served on the lawn.

WON'T DENY REPORT.

British Ambassador Had Made Charge.

Washington, July 16—Although he would not positively confirm or deny the story that German agents paid $2,000 to get the Remington Arms workers strike started, Sec. Morrison of the American Federation of Labor suggested today that if British Ambassador Spring-Rice made such a charge to the state department he must have known what he was talking about. Neither the state department nor the British embassy would discuss the matter.

TO PAVE ADAMS STREET.

The steam roller today was put to work digging up the west side of Adams street preparatory to paving the portion between Hancock and Alleyne streets similar to that on the east side.

THAW LEAVES COURTROOM FREE MAN BY DECISION OF JUDGE

Judge Hendrick Rules That Evidence of Sanity Is Absolutely Conclusive

(By United Press)

New York, July 16—Harry K. Thaw who shot and killed Stanford White on the night of June 26, 1906, walked from the court room a free man at noon today. Justice Hendrick accepted the finding of the jury that declared Thaw sane and immediately after announcing his decision admitted Thaw to $35,000 bail.

Warned by deputy marshals the big crowd in the court room attempted no demonstration. Thaw sat unmoved by the decision. When the court overruled the state's attempt to block his release under bail Thaw turned on Deputy Atty. Gen. Cook a quiet smile of triumph. His nine years fight for freedom had been won but Thaw was the most undemonstrative person in the great crowd in and aorund the Superior oCurt building.

The state immediately entered an appeal from the finding Atty. Stanchfield for Thaw rose with an application for bail. Asst. Dist. Atty. Bomberg immediately objected. "The state contends that this man is insane and consequently a menace to the people of the state of New York," said Atty. Bomberg. "For that reason the state must object to the admission of the prisoner to bail."

At noon Thaw was waiting in the basement of the court house for the sheriff to put him aboard an auto that was to take him to 42 Broadway, where his traveling bag was said to be waiting. Sheriff Griffen-Hagen had been instructed by the court to accompany Thaw to the Portland street ferry and at least as far as Jersey City to insure protection from annoyance.

"My decision is based on my judgment and the advice of friends," said the justice. "I wont speak of the evidence. The impressive testimony of sanity is practically overwhelming. The testimony of paid experts on either side in my estimation is of no value and I now declare Harry K. Thaw to be sane."

MAKE FIERCE ATTACK.

Germans Throw Heavy Force On French.

(By United Press)

Paris, July 16—The Germans hurled a heavy force on the French position in the Vosges, the war office reported this afternoon, along a front of nearly two miles, extending from Champenoux to Vezouse, but were driven back after fierce fighting with heavy losses. Whether the new German activities in this region indicate the beginning of the German offensive in Alsace-Loraine, forecasted by French military experts several days ago, is not yet known.

Mrs. Brown and daughter, Miss Marion Brown of Philips street entertained a number of Wollaston park ladies Thursday afternoon at a thimble party.

FALSE ALARM FIEND ACTIVE

Operates on Box 59 on This Occasion

The fire alarm fiend who has been operating in the Wollaston district during the past few weeks got at it again Thursday night. This time, however, he chose the early part of the evening, and moved nearer Wollaston proper, sounding an alarm at 6.36 P. M., from box 59, located at the corner of Beale street and North Central avenue. Most of the false alarms from this section have come from Box 58 located at the corner of Beale and Adams streets and there have been ten of them during the past few weeks. Chief Billings has tried to apprehend the parties responsible for the ringing of the alarms but has been unable to. He says that it is up to the Police department to locate the parties and bring them to justice.

PLANS TO FLY TO BOSTON CITY HALL FROM SQUANTUM

Captain Redding, a well known aviator, has announced that on Saturday he will fly from the Squantum Aviation Field to Boston City Hall with L. D. Smith as a passenger. Whether or not there will be a police end to the flight is not known at this time.

Redding is not a licensed pilot, probably not because he has never attempted to become registered but because the law makes no provision for the qualifying of a man as an aviator. Harry W. Jones was placed in the same box. He took a flight, met with a disaster and was brought to court and fined for violating the law.

Redding's preparation will be witnessed, it is said, by the Quincy police and it would not be surprising if an attempt is made to fly after a warning is given to see Capt. Redding brought into court for violation of the law.

MISS BEZANSON IS TO MARRY

Miss Lottie Bezanson of Quincy Point and Myles Hawes of West Quincy are to be married within a few weeks. Miss Bezanson has been one of the waitresses at the Thompson Cafe for some time and is popular with its patrons. A few days ago her associate, who was Miss Pearl Graham, became the bride of Joseph Curtis Gonzales who is connected with the Argentine commission at the Fore River shipyard. Mr. Hawes is a motorman on the Bay State street railway and has a large circle of friends.

WATER BILLS IN MAIL.

The city messenger wore a well defined path between City Hall and the post-office this morning as he travelled back and forth with his arms full of water bills for the coming six months. These bills usually go out earlier in the year, but owing to the change in water rates they were delayed.

CHRIST CHURCH HOLDS PICNIC

Enjoy Annual Outing at Glen Echo Park

The annual picnic of the Sunday school and parish of Christ church was held Thursday at Glen Echo park, Stoughton, and proved to be one of the most successful the parish has ever held. There were 271 in the party and three special electric cars were required. Some delay was experienced in reaching the park, the special cars having to go round through Montello and Avon on acount of the repairs being made to the line between South Braintree and Randolph.

One of the first things on the program after arrival was a game of ball between the boys of Christ church and the Granite Athletic club. It was a hotly contested game and was won by the Granite club by a score of 9 to 8. After the game there was a peanut scramble which created no end of sport.

Basket lunches were then brought out and partaken of. In the afternoon many enjoyed boating while others remained in the park and watched the field sports. The party left the park at 5 o'clock and arrived home in good season.

The results of the several sporting events were as follows:

100-yard dash, senior boys—George Schools, first; William Torrey, second.

50-yard dash for junior girls—Miss Abbie Curtis, Miss Mabel Tucker.

Relay race won by team composed of George Schools, H. McDonald, William Torrey and Walter Tregaskis.

Sack race for boys—Samuel Baker, William Torrey.

Standing broad jump for senior boys Albert Rendle, William Torrey.

Standing broad jump for junior boys Harold Thompson, Wilfred McCarthy.

Base ball throw for girls—Miss Agnes McCarthy, Miss Hilda Smith.

Sack race for girls—Miss Annie McLean, Miss Eleanor Rendle.

THE WEATHER.

If the legend attributed to St. Swithin proves true this year, Quincy is in for a long season of pleasant weather. The legend runs:

St. Swithins Day, if ye do rain, for forty days it will remain.
St. Swithins Day, an ye be fair, for forty days 'twill rain nae mair.

Thursday was St. Swithins Day and it will be remembered that the day was not only pleasant but scorching hot, with scarcely a breath of air.

Forecast for Quincy and vicinity: Saturday unsettled with probably local showers.

A QUESTION.

An editorial in Thursday's Ledger entitled "The Water Bills" has brought from one of the members of the committee which recently acted with the mayor in readjusting the water rates an exposition of what he says is the attitude of the committee and a statement of conditions under the new rates as he conceives them. This statement is printed in another column of today's issue.

The first sentence of the statement concludes with these words: "that from the committee's point of view the editorial in last night's Ledger is hardly an exact statement of the actual conditions under the new rates." A reading of the editorial in question will show that there was no attempt to analyze the new rates, no expression of opinion as to whether they are better or worse than the old rates, no attempt to give an exact statement of the actual conditions.

We did point out the fact that under the new system there is an extra charge of $4 for each tenant in an apartment house. We tried in vain to see the logic in saddling an extra tax on the owner of an apartment house for the use of the same amount of water that his neighbor in a one apartment house gets for the lower rate.

The chief aim of the editorial, however, was to ask this question, and we ask it again: Why is water not sold in the same way as gas and electricity? Why does one not pay for what one uses at a certain rate a cubic foot? Why should a man pay for more water than he needs? Of course, it is understood that he shall be responsible for a small meter charge in case he fails to exceed a reasonable minimum.

THE SMALL INVESTOR.

The collapse of several important railroad systems in the United States should be a lesson to people with small fortunes to invest. There is many a case today where the only security of a little home has been the regular dividend turning up every three months. When that cheerful messenger of comfort is turned into its ominous opposite, an assessment on stock, the person who suffers learns a life long lesson. But many others of the same type of people keep on putting money into equally hazardous enterprises.

Like the people who are called "land poor," their property may be so blanketed by mortgages and debts that a lot of money must be collected and laid out if the property is ever to be put on a paying basis.

When a corporation is distributing securities over a wide area to the general public, it would promote sound finance and confidence in the company if it would issue bonds and stock in somewhere nearly equal proportions. Something in the neighborhood of a half of the property ought to be represented by bonds which the stockholders agree to pay before receiving anything for their property. Then the rest of the capitalization can be issued in stock, which may be taken up properly only by people of some wealth or experience in finance, and who can afford to lose if the property goes wrong.

There is always a tendency to issue too large a part of capitalization in the form of bonds. Realizing that the public regards bonds as safer than stock, many companies get around this difficulty by issuing the great bulk of their capital in the form of bonds, and with only a small quantity of stock.

You can not make a security safe merely by calling it a bond. The cautious investor should carefully inquire whether the proportion of bonds to the value of the remaining property is abnormal and topheavy.

WANTED: A GREAT MAN.

The remark has often been made that in time of need the right man steps forward and does the thing needed, becoming a hero of history. Washington and Lincoln have been cited as examples in our own history. Well, we sincerely hope the great man that should be coming to Mexico's aid will soon arrive. If ever a country needed one it is our neighbor to the South.

Alliteration as a figure of speech may be used to great advantage but when a newspaper goes so far in its search for headings for its "briefs" that it employs "Tuesday Troubles" it reaches the ridiculous.

HUBBARD'S SUCCESSOR.

The Cleveland Plain Dealer has the following to say about the successor of Elbert Hubbard founder of the unique Roycroft establishment at East Aurora, New York:

The man who succeeds Elbert Hubbard at the head of the Roycrofters is Elbert Hubbard. He is a son of the man who went down with the Lusitania. The job he inherits is no child's play even to a man of the confident age of thirty-three. Personality and the ability to write an English style at once vigorous and picturesque were the strong assets the elder Hubbard had in building his unique establishment at East Aurora. Whether the son has inherited these winning qualities, as he has his father's name and position, remains to be seen.

The announcement is that the younger man intends to maintain all branches of the business his father conducted and to extend them as rapidly as possible. It was twenty years ago that Hubbard, then thirty-nine years old, established the Roycroft colony, "to cheat the magazine editors who had kept him out of print," as he expressed it. So the son is within hailing distance of the age at which his talented father began a career that had few parallels. Much extravagant praise has been uttered of the elder Hubbard, and the criticism has been hushed by his tragic death. But whatever one may have thought of the father, there will be none but kind wishes for the son who steps into shoes he will find it hard to fill.

THE UNITED STATES MISREPRESENTED TO GERMANY.

If the dispatches from Germany report faithfully what Dr. Meyer-Gerhard, the emissary from the German embassy at Washington, said to the people of Germany concerning the attitude of the United States government and the people living under that government, he failed to grasp the public sentiment of this nation during his sojourn amongst us, for some of his observations were quite beside the mark.

For instance, the majority of the people of the United States would not, we believe, vote to cancel the shipment of all arms and ammunition to the allies on the ground that such cancellation would top the war; on he contrary, the people of the United States know full well that the mere stoppage of shipments of arms and ammunition from this one country will by no means end the war nor contribute very materially toward bringing that desideratum about.

And while they are delivering arms and ammunition to the allies, the people of the United States stand just as ready, in the ordinary course of commerce, to deliver similar shipments to Germany and Austria and Turkey, leaving it, of course, to those countries to convey the shipments across the ocean. If England is prepared to convey her shipments of munitions and Germany is not so able, that is Germany's lookout and not in the province of the United States. The United States is really neutral as regards the sale of arms and ammuniiton, but the shipments must be f. o. b. New York, or some other convenient port and the consignee must furnish the transportaton.

Dr. Meyer-Gerhard made it appear in his address to the German people that a majority of the people of the United States are opposed to continuing manufacture and sale to the belligerents, and in coming to that conclusion he must have interviewed a restricted circle.

However, he was right in impressing upon the German nation that the people of the United States are entirely out of sympathy with some of the war methods which have been employed by Germany, notably the invasion of Belgium, as a so-called "military necessity," and the sinkng of an unarmed ship of commerce and the sacrifice of some thousand lives of unoffendng civilians of several nations.

In spite of the fact that those events are being closed over by time's softening hand, American people still regard those events as abhorrent to the march of civilization and they condemn them roundly. We are glad that Meyer-Gerhard acquainted his people with the correct sentiments of the United States in those particulars, but at the same time we regret that he failed to grasp the real sentiments of this country in other particulars, such as referred to above.—Barre Times.

For the Children

Wild Lamb Which Looks Like Its Tame Relatives.

Nearly every child has seen at one time or another the gentle little lamb which frolics so gayly in the pasture with its mother. But here is a wild lamb that was captured in the mountains of Spain and which is said by scientists to be a member of the family from which our domestic sheep are descended. A beautiful and innocent little creature it is and differs slightly from the playful little fellows we all know so well. This lambkin is said to be of the Musmon family, which had its origin, so far as known, in southern Europe. Whether this is true or not, the fact remains that any person who had ever seen a lamb would at once pronounce this little animal to be a baby sheep. He doesn't look so very wild either. When wild animals are treated kindly they soon become tame and love those who are gentle with them.

Reconciliations.

You know there are many things always mentioned together, such as "Jack and Gill," "The Lion and the Lamb," "Stars and Stripes," and so on. A pleasant little game has been based on this and plays itself quite comfortably in a quarter of an hour. Assuming that twenty guests are expected to be present, the hostess prepares twenty sheets of paper, on which the first half of such couplings are written, the guests being required to complete them and so effect a reconciliation.

The following list of twenty will illustrate the game, the last part of each sentence appearing only on the key, which the hostess will keep until the competition is closed to correct papers. A prize may be given the one having the most correct sentences:

| | | |

Japanese Children.

Children have a good time in Japan. They are blessed by inheritance with a cheerful nature; they are dressed loosely, yet warmly; they are out of doors as much as possible, and inside their homes there is so little furniture they never stumble over it and are never warned against crawling up on the satin brocaded chairs or handling the bric-a-brac. The houses are always open to sun and air, even in cold weather. They are built dove tailed together, no nails being used, and are mounted on wooden pillars, so that when an earthquake occurs they will not tumble down, but merely shake and settle down again.

Squeaky New Shoes.

No matter how I tippy toe,
No matter where I try to go,
My brand new shoes keep squeaking so—
You sneaky, squeaky, creaky shoe!
I really don't know what to do
With such a naughty thing as you!
You squeaky shoe!

You squeak like tiny little mice
Who've nibbled at the cheese and rice;
Now, tell me, shoes, is this thing nice?
You sneaky, squeaky, creaky shoe!
I really don't know what to do
With such a naughty thing as you!
You squeaky shoe!

You squeak like squirrels in a tree,
You squeak at mother, then at me;
Now what can all this trouble be?
You sneaky, squeaky, creaky shoe!
I really don't know what to do
With such a naughty thing as you!
You squeaky shoe!

WORKED FOR INSTALLATION OF TELEPHONE

Councilman Thomas Griffin of Ward Two takes exceptions to the statement that the Councilmen from Ward Two did not seem to interest themselves much in trying to secure a telephone for the city bath house.

Councilman Griffin in conversation with a representative of the Ledger Thursday evening said:

"The person who wrote the article in Thursdays Ledger in regard to the telephone in the city bath house was evidently not very well informed of the circumstances. I will give you the whole history of the matter. A year ago I saw Mr. Whittemore, then chairman of the park commissioners relative to installing a telephone at the bath house. He agreed that there should be a telephone there and took the matter up with the local manager of the telephone company. He found that the best he could do was that the park commissioners would have to pay $125 for running the wires to the bath house and rental of the Electric Light Co. poles in addition to the rental of the telephone instrument. This was more than the appropriation of the department would allow. Then I personally visited the main office of the company in Boston and took the matter up with them with the result that it was agreed that any telephone desired would be installed in the bath house for the regular rental."

"The local manager in Quincy was informed to that effect but before any steps could be taken he was changed and Mr. Scott came on. The matter was again taken up with Mr. Scott but before matters was fixed so the instrument could be installed, the season was so late that it was decided to wait until this year. Early in the season this year I took up the matter with Mr. Pfaffman chairman of the Board of Park Commissioners and he agreed that a telephone should be installed. The matter was again taken up by me with Mr. Scott and the contract was signed.

"It was expected that it would have been installed some days ago but owing to the stormy weather and the large number of wires that were put out of commission by the storm it was not possible to string the wires and connect the instrument this week. I have followed the matter closely and I was about the first man to talk over the instrument after it was installed.

"These are the exact facts about the case and I do not think it shows that the Ward Two Councilmen were asleep in the matter or that they did not interest themselves.

TELEPHONE CO'S. STATEMENT.

John F. Scott, district commercial representative of the telephone company, has the following to say in regard to the telephone at the city bath house.

"When I took charge of the Quincy district the latter part of last August Mr. Whittemore called me up and asked regarding the installation of a telephone in the public bath house in Ward Two. I informed him that owing to the lateness of the season and the near closing time of the bath house it would seem inadvisable to install it then as we should be obliged to disconnect it for safety during the winter months almost as soon as it was installed, but told him if he would call me up the following summer I would be glad to take the matter up and give him just what he wanted. No mention of expense in any way or manner was mentioned

"This summer Mr. Pfaffmann of the Park Board called me up and said he wanted a telephone installed at the bath house. I informed him we would place a pay station there in order that there should be no expense to the city on rental, the Telephone company taking all chances of a loss on the phone. The contract was mailed to Mr. Pfaffman, signed by him and returned to me, and we immediately commenced the installation. Owing to the storm early in July we were held up on outside construction for three days, which was the only delay in installing the telephone, after application was made. No complaint of any kind has been made to me by any person connected with the city or park Department and I feel that the matter has been handled by the Telephone company in such a manner as not to warrant any criticism.

Friends of Joseph Otis of Rawson road were glad this week to notice that he was able to be out again after an illness which has confined him for a number of weeks to the house.

STILL PLENTY OF VEGETABLES

Receipts For Putting up Peas In Weekly Market Review

The story of the local fruit and vegetable market is still one of abundance of the things common to this season of the year. The prices of these fruits and vegetables are low. In fact the markets lack nothing that is usually on hand at this time. The weather following a somewhat backward spring has been very favorable in al producing sections. Few apples, however, are available and oranges and grape fruit are somewhat scarce.

New potatoes are coming along plentifully and the price is so low that there is almost no profit for the producer and practically no demand for the tubers left over from last year, some of the old variety selling as low as 25 cents a bushel. The supply of new potatos is so plentiful, coupled with the reports of large yields in New Jersey, that the present low prices will probably last all summer.

Asparagus has been a little short but it is expected that a supply will be received by the end of the week. Cucumbers are commanding more money. Cabbages are very plentiful with low prices. Green peas are coming along freely. Cantaloupes are plentiful and reasonable, as are also watermelons, some of the latter being marked as low as thirty cents. The heavy rains have worked havoc with the strawberry crop and they are beginning to get scarce. There are some peaches in the market but most people fight shy of eating the early variety of peaches.

Housewives are putting up string beans and peas for next winter's use and to such the following recipes will be welcome.

STRING BEANS AND PEAS.

Prepare the beans or peas as you would to cook for the table. Wash, pack into one or two-quart glass jars, put on rubbers and fill jars overflowing with fresh cold water. Put on tops, but top wire over the cover, but do not press down the other one. If covers screw on, screw covers halfway down. Put washboiler on stove with water to cover the bottom, put in a board resting on strips of wood or a layer of hay to keep the jars from touching bottom of boiler, and do not let them touch each other. Pour water in boiler to reach two-thirds of the way up the jars. Cover boiler closely. Keep a rousing fire and after the water begins to boil in boiler count 3 hours for string beans 2 1-2 hours for peas. When the required time is up lift boiler carefully from stove to bench or floor, leave cover on 10 minutes, then lift it off, snap down wires or screw on covers, without on any account opening the jars. Lift out jars, wipe, set out of any draft and leave till cool, then pack away till wanted. Test jars when they are cold to make sure the covers are screwed tight.

BLUEBERRIES.

To can blueberries wash berries, let drip in colander until dry again, then put them in agate kettle. To every quart of berries add 4 ounces of sugar (granulated), also 4 ounces for the kettle. Scald five minutes, that is to bubble. Remove from fire. You must stir constantly from the time you first put berries in kettle. Saturate a towel with water, place it under jars to keep them from breaking. When you are putting berries in jars, after filling them, let them stand 10 minutes to allow berries to settle, then add more until jars are full. Have cheesecloth or any old cotton cloth cut circular, a little larger than mouth of jar. Dip in alchohol, put on top of fruit in the jar, then drop a teaspoon more of alcohol on that. Screw on cover tight with brand new rubbers. Swear off using or doctoring last year's rubbers, as they will not keep them tight. Put your jars in a cool, dark place. In a couple of days examine the jars and twist covers tighter. Sometimes they will loosen a trifle.

AUTOMOBILE TURNS TURTLE

Quincy Man Injured In Dorchester Accident

Eugene Alguoan of 19 Grant street was thrown from an automobile on Columbia road, Dorchester , Thursday night and received injuries which while not serious will lay him up for two weeks. Mr. Alguoan with three others was riding with John Hancock of Dorchester. In attempting to keep from running a man down, Mr. Hancock applied the emergency brake too suddenly with the result that the automobile turned turtle. Mr. Hancock was the most seriously injured and was taken to the City Hospital. The other men received cuts on the face and a general shaking up but were able to go home.

ASKS LENIENCY.

Nicholas Sebastiano, whose tailor shop at 331 Water street was raided two Sundays ago, withdrew his plea of not guilty in the district court today, was fined $50 for violation of the liquor law and was directed to make weekly payments at the probation office.

The defendant was represented by Atty Edward Avery, who asked for leniency on the grounds that Sebastiano was the father of a family of nine children. Inspector Goodhue said he had no objections to Judge Avery folowing the requests of counsel.

AT LONG BEACH.

Newest Ideas In Summer Gowning—Smart Sport Coats—Motor Hats and Garden Flats.

Everyone in New York and its environs is familiar with Long Beach, which is just right for a motor run, or easily reached by train if that is preferable, though it is a bit too tarry and too fashionable for the excursionists who take their dip in the ocean at Rockaway or Coney Island.

AT THE CASINO.

There is no better place to see the very last chic thing in Summer gowning than at this attractive resort. On the wide beautiful beach, the board walk, and in the corridors and verandas one sees any number of interesting people, dressed in their prettiest. The Casino especially with its artistic decorations and unexcelled cuisine, is the place par excellence, to study style at its best and while price is apparently a small consideration with most of the people one sees here there are any number of models that can be successfully copied in the inexpensive but fascinating cottons of the season. In fact, cotton frocks lead silks in price as well as in favor once the mercury climbs as it can in July. The smart sport coats that are often quite ornate in their material and colorings, top dainty frocks as becomingly as the practical ones they were designed to go with.

PRACTICAL AND PRETTY.

Dining at a table that gave a charming view of the tumbling surf, a dainty girl was gowned in filmy black net over a quite narrow satin petticoat. The two full flounces of the skirt were each edged with an inch wide band of satin, the same bands edged the simulated bolero which trimmed the bodice. High white shoes and long white gloves were matched in tone by the snowy fox scarf worn about the shoulders. The coat thrown back over the chair was of cerise golfine lined with flowered silk and the very attractive and becoming hat was a small low crowned brimmed shape made all of cerise satin.

McCall Design

A COOL LOOKING DRESS.

An older woman at the next table wore an especially cool looking gown of sand colored embroidered voile. Daisy figures in the design were done in white, and the broad hat worn, had a transparent brim of sand color tulle and a white straw crown wreathed in big white daises and natural colored wheat, with a couple of scarlet poppies at the front, a little at one side of the centre. A handsome pongee wrap covered this dress in the car, which carried off the wearer sometime later.

GIRLISH AND BECOMING.

Extremely youthful and becoming to quite the loveliest type of girl, was a gown of white organdie, the widely scalloped foot line outlined with a three inch frill put on with a heavy cording of the material, the surplice waist of the same edged with matching frills on smaller cords. The girdle of printed ribbon was a rose design, and the flat leghorn hat had the velvet tied about its crown and falling in long ends below the waist dotted at intervals with pink and white and yellow crush roses. Black shoes with fancy cross strappings showed daintily over the white hosiery and the black and white striped silk sweater that her escort carried, was ample protection later on when the cool sea breeze made a wrap necessary.

A SILK RIG.

Not that cottons had it all their own way. A smart looking young married woman, who might have been in town for a day's shopping, wore a brown taffeta frock of deep chocolate tone, made with a double tunic effect, both skirts edged with shurred cordings of the silk arranged in scallops. A loose hung short coat, when laid aside, revealed a lovely blouse of chiffon and brown embroidery run with gold threads.

THE FOOT LINE.

One sees a lot of narrow skirts worn still, notwithstanding the voluminous width that fashion endorses. Some of the most fetching models show a line of narrow flounces peeping out below the bottom of the short full skirt and decidedly suggesting that madam has worn a narrow, too long petticoat. This model offers opportunity for contrasts in color and material. White flounces of lace or organdie below a colored dress, and colored silk flounces below a printed voile, or contrasting upper part.

HEARD EVERY DAY.

"And what," asked the curiously inclined new arrival, "is the remark made by human beings that moves you oftenest to hearty laughter?"

Satan answered promptly.

ANSWER ATTACK OF DUNCAN.

In the July issue of the Granite Cutters Journal the following reply is given to the open letter of Loreto D. Tocci, published in the Ledger last week, which attacked President Duncan of the International Union.

In the above letter Mr. Tocci says Latins in our Association are not revolutionists, do not break up meetings and do not lay plans to fine those opposed to them. Yes, they do; they revolted against our Constitution in Barre and in Northfield, voted to fine Sec. Will of Barre branch $25 for performing his duty and the same race in Quincy and elsewhere aided and abetted them. He asks: "Have we not the right to issue a four-page paper dealing with absolutely nothing but the affairs of our Association, and in connection with the election of International President?" Answer no, Sec. 21 forbids.

He says, "requests to publish truth in our Journal were forbidden." He errs. No such requests as he refers to were submitted for publication in our Journol nor, of course,forbidden. He admits that those he claims to represent in Quincy, and Salvucci and Ossola et al in Barre, cared nothing for our Constitution."

He asks, "Why not bar every Italian vote that has been cast in rank violation of our Constitution?" He is right, that is what should have been done. He asks, "Why not write the truth about the young member from Barre, etc?" That is just what we did. Our President did not impose a fine upon him. The statement is ridiculous. It was not he who did not know our President. It was his interpreter.

Mr. Tocci ends his letter exhorting against the 50c. a week assessment. Should there be a suspension in Quincy next March, Mr. Tocci would be among the first to look for strike pay, yet he protests against raising a fund to provide it. Such is his brand of unionism.

AMBULANCE SQUAD HERE.

A fully equipped ambulance squad of the state militia passed through Quincy today going south for a week's field duty. The company was in charge of Capt. Keenan of Boston and in addition to 25 mounted men there was a dozen fully equipped army ambulance wagons. Each of the wagons carried a red cross flag and on the sides of each was a red cross and the letters U. S. A.

THE BEST LAID PLANS.

"Why do you put your dolls away so carefully?" asked Aunt Myra.

"Oh," replied little Eva, "I'm keeping them for my children to play with."

"But suppose you do not have any children?" queried her aunt.

"Then," replied the little miss, "I'll give them to my grandchildren."—Chicago Tribune.

SAVED BY GOOD MANNERS.

"Now, then, young man," said the angry farmer, "didn't you see that board when you came trespassing in these woods?"

"Yes, sir," said the culprit, meekly.

"Well, what did it say?"

"I dunno. I was too polite to read any more when I saw the first word was 'Private.'"—San Francisco Star.

TAKES FIRST OF THREE MATCHES

Tom Kerrigan of Atlantic, the pro at the Dedham Country and Polo club, took a fall out of his rival, Patrick J. Doyle, professional at the Myopia Hunt Club Thursday. Kerrigan was one up at the end of 37 holes. The match was the first of a series of three. Report says that the backers of Kerrigan are losers to the tune of several thousand dollars.

The win was considered more than an ordinary one because Doyle was defeated on his own course. The second of the series will be at Kerrigan's course at Dedham on Aug. 16.

Doyle was leading by one up at the end of 18 holes in the morning play. It was agreed that if the match was all even at the end of 36 holes the play would continue until one or another had gained a lead of a hole. Kerrigan won the extra hole in 4 to 5, after being home on his second and down in 2 more. Doyle hooked his second and was trapped at this hole. After a dandy recovery, which was short of the green, he got a 5.

SUFFRAGE RALLY.

There will be an equal suffrage rally on Coddington street near the Coddington School this evening at eight o'clock. Nils Kjellstrom of Jamaica Plain will be the speaker. Mr. Kjellstrom spoke not long ago at a meeting at Electa Hall. Those who heard him at that time will be glad to hear him again. Those who were unable to attend the former meeting will have another opportunity to listen to his clear presentation of suffrage facts and arguments.

NEBRASKAN HIT BY A TORPEDO

Admitted by Germany In Offering an Apology

"AN UNFORTUNATE ACCIDENT"

No Insult Intended to American Flag —Claim That There Were No Distinguishing Marks on Ship Is Disputed—Complex Situation Relieved by Offer to Make Reparation

Washington, July 16.—Germany, in an official memorandum transmitted from Berlin by Ambassador Gerard, admits that the American steamer Nebraskan was torpedoed by a submarine, expresses regret and readiness to make reparation, and assures the United States the attack "was not meant for the American flag but it is to be considered an unfortunate accident."

Secretary Lansing made public the German memorandum, which disposes of the question whether the Nebraskan was struck by a torpedo or hit a mine. The German memorandum closes the incident, except as to the payment of damages.

The Nebraskan case, coming close on the sinking of the Lusitania and coupled with the attack on the Gulflight, threatened to become one of the important issues in the controversy with Germany over submarine warfare. There were some circumstances which made the case complex.

The state department made this announcement:

"Ambassador Gerard has telegraphed to the state department the following memorandum from the German foreign office relative to the damaging of the American steamer Nebraskan by a German submarine.:

"'The German government received from newspaper reports the intelligence that the American steamer Nebraskan had been damaged by a mine or torpedo, on the southeast coast of Ireland. It therefore started a thorough investigation of the case without delay, and from the result of the investigation it has become convinced that the damage to the Nebraskan was caused by an attack by a submarine.

"'On the evening of May 25, last, the submarine met a steamer bound westward without a flag and with no neutral markings on her freeboard, about twenty-five nautical miles west of Fastnet rock. No appliance of any kind for the illumination of the flag or markings were to be seen. In the twilight, which had already set in, the name of the steamer was not visible from the submarine.

"'Since the commander of the submarine was obliged to assume, from his wide experience in the area of maritime war, that only English steamers and no neutral steamers traversed this war area without flag and markings, he attacked the vessel with a torpedo in the conviction that he had an enemy vessel before him.

"'Some time after the shot the commander saw the vessel had in the meantime hoisted the American flag. As a consequence he, of course, refrained from further attacks. Since the vessel remained afloat he had no occasion to concern himself further with the boats, which had been launched.

"'It results from this, without a doubt that the attack on the steamer Nebraskan was not meant for the American flag, nor is it traceable to any fault on the part of the commander of the German submarine; but is to be considered an unfortunate accident.

"'The German government expresses its regret at the occurrence to the government of the United States of America and declares its readiness to make due reparation for the damage sustained by American citizens.'"

The official report of the attack, forwarded by Ambassador Page after investigation by Lieutenant Towers, naval attache of the embassy, stated that the Nebraskan was in water ballast outward from Liverpool for Delaware Breakwater, and that although her flag had been hauled down just after sunset, as is the custom, there were painted on her side in letters six feet high the words "Nebraskan, New York."

After the attack the ship headed about for Liverpool and, convoyed by British ships, reached the port safely. No one was seriously hurt in the explosion, which left evidences causing some doubt at first whether the ship had been struck by a torpedo or had hit a mine. American naval officers, however, finally came to the conclusion that it was a torpedo.

Suicide Is Identified

Boston, July 16.—The mystery of the woman who ended her own life and that of her son by gas was partly cleared when the bodies were identified as those of Mrs. Florence M Mason, who had separated from her husband, and 7-year-old Francis D. Mason of Cambridge.

Marye Has Not Resigned

Washington, July 16.—That George T. Marye has resigned as ambassador to Petrograd was denied by Secretary of State Lansing.

WHITE TEACHERS BARRED

Georgia Senate Forbids Them Instructing In Negro Schools

Atlanta, July 16.—The Georgia senate passed a measure prohibiting whites from teaching in negro schools of the state. It carries a provision that makes it effective at once if it passes the house.

The measure will affect numerous negro schools in Georgia endowed by northern philanthropists. In many cases the faculty and in nearly every instance the president of the school are white persons sent to Georgia by the society or person controlling the school.

The Georgia measure is a copy of the Kentucky law which has been upheld by the United States supreme court.

The I. C. of A. will run their annual trolley party to Nantasket Saturday afternoon. Cars will leave East Milton at 2.30 P. M. returning at 10 P. M.

HINDENBURG IN NEW OFFENSIVE

Leads Tremendous Drive Against the Capital of Poland

COMES AS GENERAL SURPRISE

Russians Withdraw to Second Line of Defense as Teutons Occupy Fortified City Fifty Miles From Warsaw —Contradictory Accounts of Fighting In the West—Allies Report Gains on Gallipoli Peninsula—British Troops Fighting With Serbians —Peak In Alps Captured by Italians

London, July 16.—With the suddenness characteristic of the German military strategy, a tremendous new drive has been launched by the Teuton allies against Warsaw, a drive which involves the abandonment of the recent attempt to outflank the city from the south in favor of a direct and overwhelming attack from the north.

Even more importance has been attached to the movement since it has become known that the commanding officer is Field Marshal von Hindenburg, who within the last few days made the boast that shortly he would execute a movement that would astonish the world.

Already such has been the rapidity of their action that they have assailed and taken the town of Kolno, with many prisoners, and occupied the fortified city of Przasnysz, fifty miles north of Warsaw. This city was taken by Hindenburg in his great drive from east Prussia last winter, but was recaptured by the Russians on their counter offensive.

The fall of Przasnysz, announced in the Berlin official report, is partially confirmed in dispatches from Petrograd, in which it is officially admitted that, in the face of strong German forces, the Russians have withdrawn to their second line of defenses.

The vast new drive by the Germans has taken the military critics entirely by surprise. It was generally supposed that General von Mackensen would, with heavy reinforcements, continue in his attempt to reach the Lublin-Cholm railway, thus forcing the evacuation of Warsaw. This plan, however, did not reckon upon the more daring generalship of Hindenburg, whose new plan, it is evident, is of vast dimensions.

The new offensive will undoubtedly be general and extend from the Baltic around the east Prussian border to the Vistula, west of Warsaw, for all the Russian troops in this section must be kept busy to prevent them from concentrating at the point where the Germans hope to break through.

This is the second time Hindenburg has tried this. His last effort, while it freed East Prussia of the Russians, cost the Germans an immense number of men and very nearly involved them in disaster, owing to the muddy condition of the ground. Now, however, there are only bad roads or lack of roads to contend with, and it is possible that the Germans have built railroads to their northern front, as they have done in central Poland.

German Drive In West Checked

In France the Argonne continues to be the scene of the hardest fighting, but of the operations here, as elsewhere in the west, the official accounts are contradictory, as usual. At any rate, it is certain that no great movement has been undertaken in either camp, and no change of importance in the battle line has occurred.

On the other hand, it is apparent from official statements that the great drive toward Verdun attempted by veteran troops under the crown prince of Germany has failed to progress. Though there has been heavy fighting in the forest in that section, but little advantage has been gained for either French or Germans.

Turks Expected to Weaken

Confirmation was received from General Hamilton of the successes which it has been rumored for some days the allies had achieved on the Gallipoli peninsula, in the campaign against the Dardanelles forts.

According to this report two lines of heavily fortified Turkish trenches have been captured, with 400 prisoners and a net gain has been made along the whole line of 400 yards in width.

The Turkish official statement, on the other hand, claims that the allies have been repulsed in every attack.

While the advance against the Turkish positions is developing very slowly, owing to the natural and strongly fortified positions which they hold and which are modern in every respect, the British mintary authorities express satisfaction with the gain of an occasional line of trenches, relying on breaking the morale of the Turkish troops and on the exhaustion of their supply of ammunitions. Germany's eagerness to have Roumania allo wthe passage of ammunition through that country to Turkey is taken to mean that the supply is running short.

From the official British observer with the Serbian troops came the statement that British troops now are fighting with the Serbians against the Austro-Hungarian forces. This, while rumored recently in unofficial dispatches, never before has been officially stated. The number of English troops sent there is not known.

Italians Take Falzargo Peak

In the Italian theatre but one important movement has taken place. This is the capture of Falzargo peak, 8355 feet in height, and commanding important highways, by the Italian troops which have been advancing westward from Corting toward Bozen, with the intention of cutting the railway serving Trent.

A BELATED ADMISSION

Germans Took Famous Hill Near Ypres Over Two Months Ago

Although the Germans captured hill No. 60, southeast of Ypres, more than two months ago, the fact was not officially announced in England until Under Secretary of War Tennant gave out the information in parliament.

Tennant also stated that the official statement of July 10, which stated that the allies had not used poisonous gases, referred only to the Dardanelles theatre of war.

"It would not be to the public interest to say whether we have used gases elsewhere," said Tennant.

WHITMAN HIS ONLY HOPE

Governor Alone Can Save Becker From Death In Electric Chair

New York, July 16.—Charles Becker's only hope of escaping the electric chair at Sing Sing rests with Governor Whitman, in the opinion of Chief Justice Bartlett of the court of appeals.

In a letter to H. T. Marshall, attorney for "Bridgie" Webber, one of the witnesses against Becker, Bartlett said the case had passed out of the jurisdiction of the court.

Marshall had sought to reopen the case with the court of appeals on the strength of an alleged statement by Webber that Becker was innocent and that he had been "framed."

LEPROSY CURED BY NEW OIL TREATMENT

Several Members of Philippine Colony Are Discharged

Manila, July 16.—Twenty-three lepers at Culion have been discharged as cured as the result of the treatment with chaulmoogra oil developed by Dr. Mercado, a Filipino physician.

In all eighty cases were treated, and Mercado thinks he is justified in regarding the oil as a specific for the disease. There are 2600 lepers in the colony at Culion.

The Lancet of London, in March, 1914, contained an account of the discharge by Dr. Heiser of the San Lazaro hospital for lepers at Manila of two lepers who had been free from leprosy for two years. Other cases were mentioned to show cumulative evidence of the value of treating leprosy with chaulmooga oil, combined with camphor and resorcin and administered hypodermically.

TYPHOID FEVER IN THE UNITED STATES

An editorial in the Journal of the American Medical Association, April 17th, says in part, "It is evident that Typhoid Fever is on the way to become a relatively rare disease in many parts of the United States. There are two main reasons for this. First, there are now comparatively few large cities in which the public water supply is likely to contain Typhoid Bacteria. Second, the increase in the practice of pasteurization has resulted in a dimunition in the amount of milk borne typhoid."

The Elm Farm Milk Company complying with the general demand by the Medical Profession and Sanitarians, were one of the first to scientifically pasteurize their milk. This milk is offered at the same price that rules for ordinary milk.

This process is the only one that absolutely guarantees the safety of milk against all of the infectious diseases.

Elm Farm Milk means SAFETY, SERVICE, SATISFACTION.

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I—Kenneth Griswold, an unsuccessful writer because of socialistic tendencies, sups with his friend Bainbridge at Chaudiere's restaurant in New Orleans and declares that if necessary he will steal to keep from starving.

CHAPTER II—Griswold holds up Andrew Galbraith, president of the Bayou State Security, in his private office and escapes with $100,000 in cash.

CHAPTER III—By original methods Griswold escapes the hue and cry and goes aboard the Belle Julie as a deckhand. He unexpectedly confronts Charlotte Farnham of Wahaska, Minn., who had seen him cash Galbraith's check in the bank.

CHAPTER V.

The Chain Gang.

While Griswold was grappling afresh with the problem of escape, and planning to desert the Belle Julie at the next landing, Charlotte Farnham was sitting behind the locked door of her stateroom with a writing pad on her knee over which for many minutes the suspended pen merely hovered. She had fancied that her resolve, once fairly taken, would not stumble over a simple matter of detail. But when she had tried a dozen times to begin the letter to Mr. Galbraith, the simplicities vanished and complexity stood in their room.

Try as she might to put the sham deck-hand into his proper place as an impersonal unit of a class with which society is at war, he perversely refused to surrender his individuality. At the end of every fresh effort she was confronted by the inexorable summing-up: in a world of phantoms there were only two real persons; a man who had sinned, and a woman who was about to make him pay the penalty.

It was all very well to reason about it, and to say that he ought to be made to pay the penalty; but that did not make it any less shocking that she, Charlotte Farnham, should be the one to set the retributive machinery in motion. Yet she knew she had the thing to do, and so, after many ineffectual attempts, the letter was written and sealed and addressed, and she went out to mail it at the clerk's office.

As it chanced, the engines of the steamer were slowing for a landing when she latched her stateroom door. The doors giving upon the forward saloon deck were open, and she heard the harsh voice of the mate exploding in sharp commands as the steamer lost way and edged slowly up to the river bank. A moment later she was outside, leaning on the rail and looking down upon the crew grouped about the inboard end of the uptilted landing stage. He was there; the man for whose destiny accident and the conventional sense of duty had made her responsible; and as she looked she had a fleeting glimpse of his face.

It was curiously haggard and woebegone; so sorrowfully changed that for an instant she almost doubted his identity. The sudden transformation added fresh questionings, and she began to ask herself thoughtfully what had brought it about. Then the man turned slowly and looked up at her as if the finger of her thought had touched him. There was no sign of recognition in his eyes; and she constrained herself to gaze down upon him coldly. But when Belle Julie's bow touched the bank, and the waiting crew melted suddenly into a tenuous line of burden-bearers, she fled through the deserted saloon to her stateroom and hid the fatal letter under the pillows in her berth.

That evening, after dinner, she went forward with some of the other passengers to the railed promenade which was the common evening rendezvous. The Belle Julie had tied up at a small town on the western bank of the great river, and the ant procession of roustabouts was in motion, going laden up the swing stage and returning empty by the foot plank. Left to herself for a moment, Charlotte faced the rail and again sought to single out the man whose fate she must decide.

She distinguished him presently; a grimy, perspiring unit in the crew, tramping back and forth mechanically, staggering under the heaviest loads, and staring stonily at the back of his file leader in endless round; a picture of misery and despair, Charlotte thought, and she was turning away with the dangerous rebellion against the conventions swelling again in her heart when Captain Mayfield joined her.

"I just wanted to show you," he said; and he pointed out a gang of men repairing a slip in the levee embankment below the town landing. It was a squad of prisoners in chains. The figures of the convicts were struck out sharply against the dark background of undergrowth, and the reflection of the sunset glow on the river lighted up their sullen faces and burnished the use-worn links in their leg-fetters.

"The chain-gang," said the captain, briefly. "That's about where the fellow that robbed the Bayou State Security will bring up, if they catch him. He'll have to be mighty tough and well-seasoned if he lives to worry through twenty years of that, don't you think?"

But Miss Farnham could not answer; and even the unobservant captain of river boats saw that she was moved and was sorry he had spoken.

In any path of performance there is but one step which is irrevocable, namely, the final one, and in Charlotte Farnham's besetment this step was the mailing of the letter to Mr. Galbraith. Many times during the evening she wrought herself up to the plunging point, only to recoil on the very brink; and when at length she gave up the the struggle and went to bed, the sealed letter was still under her pillow.

Now it is a well-accepted truism that an exasperated sense of duty, like remorse and grief, fights best in the night watches. It was of no avail to protest that her intention was still unshaken. Conscience urged that delay was little less culpable than refusal, since every hour gave the criminal an added chance of escape. The minutes dragged leaden-winged, and to sit quietly in the silence and solitude of the great saloon became a nerve-racking impossibility. When it went past endurance, she rose and stepped out upon the promenade deck.

The Belle Julie was approaching a landing. The electric searchlight eye on the hurricane deck was just over her head, and its great white cone seemed to hiss as it poured its dazzling flood of fictitious noonday upon the shelving river bank and the sleeping hamlet beyond. Out of the dusky underglow came the freight carriers, giving birth to a file of grotesque shadow monsters as they swung up the plank into the field of the searchlight.

The foot plank had been drawn in, the steam winch was clattering, and the landing stage had begun to come aboard, when the two men whose duty it was to cast off ran out on the tilting stage and dropped from its shore end. One of them fell clumsily, tried to rise, and sank back into the shadow; but the other scrambled up the steep bank and loosened the half-hitches in the wet hawser. With the slackening of the line the steamer began to move out into the stream, and the man at the mooring post looked around to see what had become of his companion.

"Get a move on youse!" bellowed the mate; but instead of obeying, the man ran back and went on his knees beside the huddled figure in the shadow.

At this point the watcher on the promenade deck began vaguely to understand that the first man was disabled in some way, and that the other was trying to lift him. While she looked, the engine-room bells jangled and the wheels began to turn. The mate forgot her and swore out of a full heart.

She put her fingers in her ears to shut out the clamor of abusive profanity; but the man on the bank paid no attention to the richly emphasized command to come aboard. Instead, he ran swiftly to the mooring post, took a double turn of the trailing hawser around it and stood by until the straining line snubbed the steamer's bow to the shore. Then, deftly casting off again, he darted back to the disabled man, hoisted him bodily to the high guard, and clambered aboard himself; all this while McGrath was brushing the impeding crew aside to get at him.

Charlotte saw every move of the quick-witted salvage in the doing, and wanted to cry out in sheer enthusiasm when it was done. Then, in the light from the furnace doors, she saw the face of the chief actor; it was the face of the man with the stubble beard.

She could not hear what McGrath was saying, but she could read hot wrath in his gestures, and in the way the men fell back out of his reach. All but one: the stubble-bearded white man was facing him fearlessly, and he appeared to be trying to explain.

Griswold was trying to explain, but the bullying first officer would not let him. It was a small matter; with the money gone, and the probability that capture and arrest were deferred only from landing to landing, a little abuse more or less, counted as nothing. But he was grimly determined to keep McGrath from laying violent hands upon the negro who had twisted his ankle in jumping from the uptilted landing stage.

"No; this is one time when you don't skin anybody alive!" he retorted, when a break in the stream of abuse gave him a chance. "You let the man alone. He couldn't help it. Do you suppose he sprained an ankle purposely to give you a chance to curse him out?"

The mate's reply was a brutal kick at the crippled negro. Griswold came closer.

"Don't try that again!" he warned, angrily. "If you've got to take it out on somebody, I'm your man."

This was mutiny, and McGrath's remedy for that distemper was ever heroic. In a flash his big fist shot out and the crew looked to see its lighter champion go backward into the river at the impact. But the blow did not land. Griswold saw it coming and swerved the necessary body-breadth. The result was a demonstration of a simple theorem in dynamics. McGrath reeled under the impetus of his own unresisted effort, stumbled forward against the low edge-line bulwark, clawed wildly at the fickle air and dropped overboard like a stone.

The Belle Julie was forging ahead at full speed. Clearing the intervening obstacles in a hurdler's leap, Griswold raced aft on the outer edge of the guards and jumped overboard in time to grapple the drowning man when he was within a few feet of the churning wheel. The mate was terror-crazed and fought blindly. There was no time for trick or stratagem, and when the thunder of the wheel roared overhead, Griswold felt the jar of a blow and the mate's struggles ceased abruptly. A gasping moment later the worst was over and the rescuer had his head out; was swimming gallantly in the wake of the steamer, supporting the unconscious McGrath and shouting lustily for help.

The help came quickly. The alarm had been promptly given, and the night pilot was a man for an emergency. Before the little-used yawl could be lowered, the steamer had swept a wide circle in mid stream and the searchlight picked up the castaways. From that to placing the Belle Julie so that the two bits of human flotsam could be hauled in over the bows was but a skilful hand's turn of rudder-work, accomplished as cleverly as if the great steamboat had been a power-driven launch to be steered by a touch of the tiller.

All this Charlotte saw. She was looking on when the two men were dragged aboard, the big Irishman still unconscious, and the rescuer in the final ditch of exhaustion—breathless, sodden, reeling with weariness.

And afterward, when the Belle Julie's prow was once more turned to the north, Miss Farnham flew back to her stateroom with the letter to Mr. Galbraith hidden in her bosom and clutched tightly as if she were afraid it might cry out its accusing secret of its own accord.

AMUSEMENTS

CASTLE SQUARE THEATRE.

Miss Mary Young will return to the Castle Square Theatre next Monday in her old part, Zoe, in "Baby Mine" which she played last year when Margaret Mayo's farce was produced by the Craig Players.

"Baby Mine" is the tale of a jealous husband and the means his wife takes to get him to return to her. She writes him that he has become a father. His paternal instinct is aroused and he hurries to her bedside. In the meantime Jimmy Jinks, an intimate friend of the couple, and the innocent cause of their parting, is sent about the neighborhood to capture a baby. He gets two, of different sizes, and when the husabnd arrives he thinks himself the father of twins. The entrance of another baby presently, complicates the situation still further.

Miss Young will be seen in the leading role after a two months' rest away from the theatre. Wilmer P. Carleton will play the husband. Theodore Friebus, Betty Barnicoat, Donald Meek, Al Roberts, and the two latest additions to the company, Mrs. George Hibbard and Miss Kate Ryan, will be in the cast.

B. F. KEITH'S THEATRE.

A big quadruple-headed all-feature bill will be offered at B. F. Keith's Theatre the week of July 19, the last of the Meistersingers' record breaking engagement in "The Flag Station." Cecil Cunningham, the comedienne extraordinary, and Charley Case, the man who talks about his father, will be two of the big headliners offered with "The Meistersingers At The Flag Station." Miss Cunningham is the wife of Jean Havez, the great song writer, and she will offer a series of original songs written especially for her by her husband. Charley Case is one of the funniest blackface comedians in the world. He is a great favorite in Boston, and vaudeville patrons look eagerly forward to his annual visits to Keith's. "The Meistersingers," for the third and positively last week of their engagement, will offer new solos, new soloists, and new choruses, and the much-talked about railroad train effect will continue to amuse the audiences. Ota Gygi, the court violinist to the King of Spain, will be another star feature, and there is a good surrounding bill.

BOSTON THEATRE.

Jane Grey and Lionel Barrymore, in the great five-part sea story, "The Flaming Sword," adapted from the novel of the same name, will be the principal attraction at the Boston Theatre the week of July 19. This is a thrilling story of love and hate amid the rock-bound coast, and five acts and over two hundred scenes of superb dramatic action are enacted upon the screen with rare skill by Miss Grey as Meera and Mr. Barrymore as Steve, the dissolute young college chap who is eventually regenerated through the love of a good woman. The scenes of "The Flaming Sword," posed at a lonely lighthouse on a rock-bound island off the Maine coast, have a touch of rugged realism that is entirely different from anything previously attempted. This great picture will be surrounded by a wonderful show of features, including Charlie Chaplin and Mary Pickford subjects; Caroline B. Nichols and her superb Fadettes, the great musical organization that has become one of the recognized musical institutions of Boston during its engagement at the Boston Theatre; the eleventh chapter of "The Goddess," Gouverneur Morris' great serial of love, hate and mystery, with Earle Williams and Anita Stewart, and numerous other features yet to be announced. The performance is continuous from ten a. m. to ten-thirty p. m.

TSE NE GAT FREED OF MURDER CHARGE

Federal Jury Finds Indian Did Not Kill Mexican Herder

Denver, July 16.—Tse Ne Gat, Piute Indian, was found not guilty of murder by a jury in the United States district court. He had been tried on a charge of killing Juan Chacon, a Mexican sheep herder, in southwestern Colorado.

Washington, July 16.—Brigadier General Scott, chief of staff of the United States army, who traversed wild mountain trails in Utah on horseback and induced Tse Ne Gat to surrender, after the Piute and his little band had defied a federal marshal and his posse for two weeks, expressed keen gratification at the Indian's acquittal.

"I am very glad that Tse Ne Gat had justice," said Scott. "I always have contended that he was innocent."

The general added that he had been pleased with the conduct of authorities at Denver, who interested themselves to see that the Indian had a fair trial.

MALIK PLEADS NOT GUILTY

Alleged to Have Attempted to Blackmail President Wilson

New York, July 16.—Rudolph Malik, the Austrian arrested here recently for having sent, it is charged, a letter to President Wilson demanding $300 on penalty of committing "a political crime," pleaded not guilty to the indictment against him, which accuses him of misuse of the mails in a scheme to defraud.

A similar plea was entered to an indictment which charges Malik wrote and mailed a letter in Bohemia to the Austrian consul general, which contains the following passage:

"I call your attention for the last time that if I do not receive my reward which I am entitled to, in three days, I will come personally and shoot you all together."

Malik's trial was set to begin Monday next.

A TERRIBLE INDICTMENT.

At the meeting arranged for her in New York, shortly after her return from her "peace at any price" mission abroad, Miss Jane Addams, according to the New York Times of July 10, uttered this terrible charge against the young men who are engaged in the European war:

"She gave instances," says the Times, "of young soldiers of all sides who refused to shoot to kill in the trenches, and said that in order to get bayonet charges all nations make their soldiers practically drunk before it is possible.

"In Germany they have a regular formula for it," she said. "In England they use rum and the French resort to absinthe. In other words before the terrible bayonet charges they speak of with dread, the men must be 'doped' before they will start.

"Another point of similarity we found in all the warring nations—we heard it everywhere—was this, that this war was an old man's war; that the young men who were dying, the young men who were doing the fighting, were not the men who wanted the war and were not the men who believed in war. That somewhere in church and State, somewhere in the high places of society, elderly people and middle aged people had estabished themseves and had convinced themselves that this was a righteous war and must be fought, and the young men must do the fighting. Now this is a terrible indictment, and I admit I cannot substantiate it, but I would like to bring some details before you to back it up, so to speak."

SPORTING COMMENT

The Fitchburg team of the New England league beat Lewiston 4 to 2, Thursday afternoon. Darkness put an end to the second game in the 13th inning, with the score 1 and 1. Patsy Duggan of Atlantic in left field for Fitchburg, did nothing in the first game. In the second he got two hits and two put outs.

"Pooch" Donovan starts his 10th year as trainer of the Harvard football forces next season. In his nine years he has seen four victories over Yale, two tie games and three defeats, the last in 1909. One of his best friends is "Billy" Mullane, the local letter carrier who was in the sprinting game with "Pooch" a few years ago, and Mullane's dope on the outcome of all games has been correct with few exceptions.

The Fore Rivers will play the Gamewell Fire Alarm and Telegraph Co. at Merrymount Park Saturday in a Manufacturers league game. Fore River should win by a score of 3 to 1, and increase their lead in the league. The visitors, however, have no mean ball team and it will be a hard fought game from the start.

The St. John's travel to Cambridge Saturday to play a team said to be as fast as any of the junior organizations in the state. They are known as the Pilgrims.

Hans Kolehmanien and other stars left for Frisco Thursday. Eight of them were members of the Irish American A. C.

The "Vanitie" was again beaten by the "Resolute" Thursday. She picked up on the reach home and did a fine bit of sailing, although beaten. The "Resolute" got a good lift from a breeze that came up. The corrected time of the win was 1m 30s.

"The Federals have a war fund of $1,000,000" read the headlines. The league expects to put in a New York club and plans to move headquarters to that city and start a vigorous campaign.

By winning 60 of the remaining 77 games, the Braves can finish with the same percentage as a year ago. The half way mark is now passed.

Arthur Staff, coach at Brockton High school, formerly at Quincy High, is playing with the Hyannis Independents on the first sack.

The Boston police won their eighth successive game at Lawrence Thursday by a score of 16 to 2 and strengthened their lead in the police league.

Pawtucket won from New Haven in a Colonial league game on Thursday, 3 to 1. George Barry, who joined Pawtucket after Taunton was dropped from the league, did the catching. He got five put outs and three assists and made two errors. He suffers considerable from a finger injury, received last week when a ball carried the entire nail away.

The Braves put all their runs across in the seventh by virtue of Smith's double, and beat the Pirates 3 to 2 Thursday.

The Indians fought hard Thursday but the Red Sox won, 4 to 3. Speaker's hitting and some great fielding turned the scale. Jack Barry's great play saved the game for Boston.

Vivian Nickalis, coach of the University of Pennsylvania crews, has resigned to join the British army.

George Barry, the former Taunton Colonial League catcher, had a great day with the stick in the game at Pawtucket Wednesday, and it was mainly through his ability to hit that Pawtucket scored an 8 to 7 victory over Hartford. He was at bat five times made three hits, scored four runs, had seven putouts and one assist. —Taunton Herald-News.

CARS IDLE IN RHODE ISLAND

Strike Ties Up Nearly All Trolleys in the State

BUT TWO TOWNS ARE EXEMPT

Immediate Cause of Trouble Is Union Men's Insistence on Appointing All Three Arbitrators to Consider Several Demands—Company Intimates It Will Employ Strike Breakers

Providence, July 16.—The first day of the trolley employes' strike found Rhode Island without a car running except in Newport and Westerly, where the car lines are not a part of the Rhode Island company's system.

The cities of Providence, Pawtucket, Woonsocket, Central Falls and a score of large towns are absolutely without service. During the day each of the non-union men, all old employes, as reported for work, were put on the cars, but only thirty-three out of a normal total of 455 cars were in operation.

Before dark the last of these left the centre of the city, and on their arrival at the barns were turned in for the night. This action was taken to prevent possible attacks on the car crews.

Some minor disorder was reported during the day. A conductor was severely beaten on the Arlington line, cars were stoned and wires cut, but there was no serious outbreak of violence.

Mayor Gainer offered to act in an effort to bring the Rhode Island company and the employes together for the selection of arbitrators. The directors of the company accepted the offer, but the union made no reply.

In their statement accepting the mayor's offer, the directors of the company gave the first intimation that they contemplated putting strike breakers at work in case some agreement with the union men is not reached soon.

President Potter of the company also sent a communication to the union regarding the choice of arbitrators in which he asks for a prompt reply, since public necessities call for "active measures to fill the places of the men of your association should you persist in the attitude you have taken."

The officials of the union issued a statement declaring that, as the company had declined to accept the three arbitrators named by the union, the latter organization would insist on all its original demands, which include increased wages, shorter hours, the abolition of the automatic fare collector and a guaranteed daily wage for spare men.

The strike followed a mass meeting of union employes at which it was voted to support the action of the union committee, which sent an ultimatum to the company stating that unless the company agreed to the arbitrators selected by the union the strike would be declared.

The demands of the men, which were submitted several weeks ago, include a request for an increase in wages of about 20 percent; changes in working schedule; abolition of the hand fare collecting machines, and a closed shop. About 2 percent of the company's employes now are non-union men.

The company since 1913 has been operated by federal trustees, of whom Theodore F. Green is chairman.

FLOODS CLAIM THOUSANDS

American Gunboat's Assistance Asked to Aid In Rescue of Chinese

Hong Kong, July 16.—Tens of thousands of natives are estimated to have been drowned by the floods in the Chinese provinces of Kwantung, Kwangsi and Kiangsi, according to the latest reports.

A fire-swept area of one mile and raging floods are handicapping the work of rescue in Canton.

Missionaries are seeking the assistance of the United States gunboat Callao to aid in the work of rescue.

The last report from Canton before communication was cut said the Christian hospital was in danger from fire.

Former Police Captain Killed

Boston, July 16.—Ex-Captain Fitz Roy Grover of the Chelsea police was instantly killed while standing near the tracks as an express train flashed through Chelsea. Grover for forty-four years had been connected with the police department. He was retired on a pension last month.

A Short-Lived Strike

Boston, July 16.—Creamery workers employed at the milk stations of D. Whiting & Sons and the Elm Farm Milk company struck for more pay and were out only five hours. Then a settlement was reached, by which they secured a substantial increase.

Cut Rates on Toll Bridge

Portsmouth, N. H., July 16.—An average reduction of 33 percent in the toll rates for all vehicles except automobiles, using the Kittery bridge, said to be the only toll bridge remaining in New England, is announced.

PARTIES IN GERMANY.

The full text of the manifesto of the German Socialists which repudiated absolutely the policy of annexation of territory as a result of the war, and called on the German Government to take "the first steps toward peace," is now available for analysis and comment. It caused drastic action by the Government. Vorwaerts, the recognized organ of a great party, was suppressed. Every mouthpiece of militarism fiercely denounced the Socialists' position. And the question to what degree Germany is united is worth serious discussion.

The Reichstag elected in 1912 is still in power, such power as the German constitution leaves to the popular branch of Parliment. For the choice of members in that body, under a multiple representation for property, 12,260,000 persons voted. The weight of their votes in making up the Reichstag depended on the taxes they paid. The vote as recorded was as follows:

| | | Members |
|---|---|---|
| Socialists | 4,250,401 | 110 |
| Centre | 1,996,843 | 90 |
| Nat. Liberals | 1,662,670 | 44 |
| Radicals | 1,497,041 | 41 |
| Conservatives | 1,126,270 | 45 |

In addition to these groups the Free Conservatives elected thirteen members the Anti-Semites eleven members, and minor factions an aggregate of twenty-five members.

It will be noted that the Socialists, electing 110 members, and carrying even the emperor's favorite Potsdam, had to have a much larger number of electors for each member than any other party, because they had less property. At that they got the largest single block in the Reichstag, and every one of their candidates was elected as a foe of war. The result was that the Kaiser, otherwise in a minority, after one or two rebuffs for favored legislation, brought the Roman Catholic centre into combination with the Government, and got the upper hand again. This deal was effected in April 1913. How far it affected the closeness of relations with Austria, a Roman Catholic country, can only be guessed. Certainly willingness to go with Austria to any length led to the great war.

When the crisis came, the Socialists in the Reichstag, seeing "the Czar's Cossacks coming across the border, pillaging and burning," thought they were justified in voting for measures of national defence. Yet they claim that the party has "striven to further the cause of a speedy peace," and that its wish for a conference at The Hague was only thwarted by the refusal of French Socialists to participate. Now they are flatly against all annexation of alien territory, though the Kaiser has announced the annexation of Belgium.

If much more than a third of the German subjects are taking this qualified view about the war's continuance as would seem to be indicated by the manifesto, what is the use of talking about a "united Germany"? The truth is, of course, that not one of the countries now at war is "united," and that no civilized country ever can be united for any war. A majority of Germans, a majority of Russians, a majority of British subjects, a majority of Italian subjects, a majority of French citizens favor a fight to a finish for the principle of nationalism as they understand it. And to the philosopher, the question whether nationalism is worth fighting for as a principle is one of most importance to the future of the human race.—Brooklyn Eagle.

The Board of Trade has issued a notice to its members stating that the excursion will take place July 28. A special steamer will leave the Yacht club floats at 2.15 sharp and a short run taken to the lower harbor where fishing will be tried. Prizes will be given to the most successful fisherman. A landing will then be made at Bass Point for dinner.

ATTITUDE OF WATER RATES COMMITTEE

The Ledger is informed by one of the committee that recently acted with the mayor in readjusting the water rates, that from the committee's point of view the editorial in last night's paper is hardly an exact statement of the actual conditions under the new rates.

The new rates are based on all costs entering into the water account and as made are calculated to put the department on a paying basis. The new rates also abolish the old inequalities as under the new charges all consumers except the big users are treated alike. Moreover the actual cost per unit has been increased but very little (approximately three cents per thousand gallons) over the old maximum rate. The cost of water to large consumers has been increased to cover the actual cost of water to the city.

The charge for this latter class of consumers is now 15 cents per 100 cubic feet or 20 cents per thousand gallons and while this may seem a rather steep price to users of quantity it was felt by those making the new rates that pending the working out of certain problems in our water department all users should pay at least for the cost of water. If, as stated in the Ledger editorial there are many familiar with the water department who do not see the need for the increased rates the committee who worked out the new schedule believe that these persons are quite unfamiliar with the actual conditions.

The department has heretofore not been on a paying basis, and while the new rates may not develop all the revenue necessary, still there is the probability that the returns will be appreciably more next year than they have been this year. It must be remembered that the present rates will prevail for only the last half of the present year, and the actual results will not be ascertained until the rates have been applied over a full year. The minimum rate to unmetred houses has been increased to eight dollars, but the allowance to this rate has been increased over the amount allotted under the six-dollar rate. These services number a little over a thousand and the sum charged against them is based upon the same unit cost as applies to all general services.

The Ledger is further told that its article anticipates some of the matters affecting water consumption which the committee intends to treat of in its supplementary report to the Council. In its inquiry into water matters the committee found that there were quite a few things that might profitably be changed, and will so recommend. Some of these matters they believe can be and should be attended to by the city and there are other things which are outside the direct control of the city, but which are nevertheless of considerable influence in making up water costs.

The committee is pleased that the Ledger is giving publicity to the water question, since it is felt that in this and all other matters the more information that can be obtained the nearer can the city come to a proper solution of problems. To apply this to a particular phase of the matter at hand it is pointed out that the Ledger question as to the Metropolitan Charges for water brings up an extremely pertinent matter and one which under the present law is inequitable in its application to Quincy. The committee hopes to present this question in such a way that the Council can be induced to take some action toward a change in the present method of metropolitan assessment.

CHILDREN JOYFUL AT PLAYGROUND

Three Year Old Chinese Girl Joins Happy Group Digging In Sand

Enjoy Swings, Chutes, Etc.

The rumbling of passing trains; the gaze of papas and mamas, brothers and sisters, too old to participate in the sports; vacationists going to and from Squantum by autos and trolley; all got slight notice and no real attention from the 50 odd girls and boys who frolicked and romped under the direction of supervisors on the Atlantic playground Friday afternoon. The children were too free hearted to give way to personal feeling at the expense of real fun and they were glad of one thing—glad school didn't keep.

For if it had where would they get the time to gather about a lot of tip top swings and teeter boards or to play quoits, croquet and other games, and compete for prizes, just like the men over on the Wollaston Golf Links do, that their older brothers who caddy, tell about?

"No more school," shouted one freckled faced, tousled hair urchin as he and a few other boys played Chute the Chutes by means of the slide. "No more school 'till September, gee, but this is the life." A chorus of hearty laughter re-echoed his sentiments, not in derisive tones either, but sincere and whole hearted like the laughter of real boys.

And just to the right in the sand box were half a dozen kidlets, digging holes and trenches, building houses and walls with the aid of shovels purchased by "Ma" at the beginning of the season. Some of their sand pails lacked the highly colored designs of early season. The brightnes had worn off through use. A group of girls kept the swings busy and four others crowded around three year old Nellie Han, one of the two Chinese children of the city.

She had just come across the field with her father, Yee Han, proprietor of a laundry on Sagamore street. Like a little queen she presided over the scene, a bench her throne, as she attentively watched with dark eyes two boys who were wrestling for feather-weight honors.

Her little dress was of gingham, cut as simple as a child's dress could be. A wide pink belt marked the waistline and cute pink bows caught up the narrow pink strips which pased over her shoulders. Her little wide brimmed straw hat set at a jaunty angle and the small wreath of lilies of the valley fluttered in the breeze which floated over the field.

Little Nellie saw the finish of the wrestling bout and then got busy with her pail of sand. She stopped long enough to turn a chubby face upwards and say "Hello" in clear English, and then she went back to her play.

Her father stood some distance away, content because his little girl was happy. And then with a brief nod and a wave he went back to his laundry where Mrs. Han and her seven months old baby boy, David awaited him.

UNION MASS MEETING.

The three Swedish churches, St. Paul's M. E., Congregational and Baptist held a very successful union meeting last Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock in Merrymount Park. In fact the meeting met with such approval that it was decided to continue the meetings at the same place and hour for tomorrow. Rev. Newton F. Sundstrom of the Swedish M. E. church is in charge. Rev. A. G. Sporrong, pastor of the Swedish Mission Congregational church will be the speaker. The male choir from the same church will render several appropriate songs. A very large crowd attended the meeting last Sunday, and it is expected that a greater crowd will attend tomorrow. The Scandinavian people are cordially invited to attend. There will not be any evening services in the three churches named tomorrow evening. In case of rain the union meeting will be held in the St. Paul's Swedish M. E. church, corner Fort and Granite streets at 7 P. M.

ADVERTISE IN THE LEDGER.

CITY COUNCIL MEET MONDAY

An important meeting of the City Council will be held Monday evening and it may possibly be the last meeting until September as most of the members of the Council are anxious to adjourn for the summer vacation. There is likely to be more or less debate over reports of the joint committee on finance and streets which has been considering the loan order of $33,700 for rebuilding streets. This order was rejected once by the council. The vote was reconsidered and after laying on the table for two weeks was referred to the joint committee.

All of the street rebuilding orders vetoed by the Mayor two weeks ago are still on the table and the chances are that they will be taken up and acted upon. Whether or not any of them pass depends on what action the council takes on the report of the joint committee, the meeting therefore, gives promise of being an interesting one.

THREW STONES AT WOMAN

For throwing stones at a woman, Christopher A. Fraher was fined $25 for assault by Judge Avery this morning. Sentence was suspended until Sept. 30, 1915. He was sent to the state farm on a charge of drunkenness.

Fraher was arrested with James J. Fogarty and Michael Gargan at Weymouth. Fogarty was sent to the state farm for drunkenness, Gargan was fined $10 and an old fine of $10 was ordered to stand.

All three were enjoying a roundelay in Weymouth and Fraher threw stones at Mrs. Fogarty when she tried to induce her son to leave.

WILSON—STAPLES.

A return was filed at City Hall this morning announcing the marriage on July 12 at Stoneham by Rev. Francis William O'Brien of Walter Baxter Wilson of Quincy, son of the late George H. and Maria Stetson Wilson, to Lila Belle Millay Staples of Boston, daughter of Phillip E. and Jennie Clark Millay.

While Mr. Wilson claims his residence as Quincy and is a registered voter in this city he spends the greater part of his time on his farm in Maine.

BOYS' CLUB LOSES.

The Squantum Boys' club was defeated by the Norfolk A. C. oi the Squantum field Friday by the score of 20 to 3. Phillips and Lannigan were the battery for the visitors aid Callahand and McKenzie and Loughan and Landry for the home team. The members of the visiting team were older than the members of the home team which resulted in the sweeping victory for the visitors.

At a meeting of the Squantum Boys' club the following boys were admitted to membership—Odber Smith, Arthur Doherty and Cherad McKenzie.

SWEDISH SCHOOL.

The Swedish school that is being held in the Sunday school room of the St. Paul's M. E. church is progressing very nicely. The school is held four days of the week beginning Tuesday. The hours are from 9 A. M. to 12 M. The pastor of the church is in charge of the school. There is still room for several children, and if parents wish, they may send their children not later than next week. No tuition is charged The school has decided to hold an outing and picnic, Saturday, July 24th at Quincy Point. There will be games, swimming, eating and a jolly good time for the children and their parents.

FORD OWNERS' BENEFIT.

Between 75 and 100 owners of Ford automobiles in Quincy will benefit by the $15,000,000 which will be distributed by the Ford Co. A year ago the company announced that if 200,000 cars were sold from Aug. 1, 1914 to Aug. 1, 1915 the company would return to each purchaser from $40 to $66. The figures 300,000 were reached Friday. C. P. Gould the Quincy, representative of the Ford automobile, says that his understanding is that each purchaser wil receive a bonus of $50.

DRIVES AUTO 250 MILES IN ONE DAY

Albert D. Parker, is on board the "Mystic" with Capt. Pierson accompanning the Boston Yacht club on its annual cruise to Maine.

Mr. Parker, has just returned from New York and New Jersey, having taken his mother and brother over to Hillsdale, New Jersey, 250 miles in one day, via Tarrytown ferry to Nyack, without any motor or tire trouble.

Later they made the descent by motor of the new Palisade road from the top of the Palisade at Englewood to the Dightman street ferry, opened a few days before. This wonderful achievement in masonry, a road winding back and forth on the face of the Palisade is awesome to the one who looks up from the river.

TO DELIVER "CUSHING" THIS MONTH

The torpedo boat destroeyr Cushing will probably be delivered to the United States government by the Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation this month. Today the ship is undergoing an adjustment run in the bay and next week will have a preliminary run to look over one of the turbine engines. The naval board will make a final inspection on Thursday.

GUESTS OF PASTOR.

Mrs. N. F. Sundstrom's Parents Are Visiting Here.

Mrs. Newton F. Sundstrom's mother and father, Mr. and Mrs. Theo. Widland of 400 Chestnut street, Arlington, N. J., and their son Alfonce are spending their vacation in Quincy. Theo Widland could not stay very long as he is one of the proprietors of the merchant tailoring firm of Day & Co. in Newark, N. J., Alfonce Widland has been in the city since last Saturday. He will leave today for Camp Wopowog, East Hampton, Conn., where he will camp with a party of friends for one week, when he will return to his home. Mrs. Theo. Widland will be the guest of her daughter for several weeks.

The Widland family are delighted with Quincy, its surroundings and its people. The members of the St. Paul's Swedish M. E. church, known for their genuine Swedish hospitality and kindness, have since the pastor and his wife came to this city showered them with invitations for dinners, outings and given them presents in form of money, eatables, flowers, etc. Since the Widland family came, the members and many of the young people have been trying to outdo each other in their kindly efforts to show the visitors a very good time.

CHANGES AT FIRE STATION.

The City Council committee on fire department matters met Friday evening and considered the subject of rebuilding the fire alarm system. The circuits are now heavily overloaded and experts who have been investigating the system agree that the entire system should be rebuilt and the batteries, circuit repeater, etc., placed in a separate building. They are now located at the Central Fire station and if a fire should occur in that building the whole system is likely to be put out of commission.

MICHAEL—SPRATT.

A very quiet wedding took place at the Manse of the First Presbyterian church, Friday evening, when John Michael and Miss Mina L. Spratt were united in marriage by the Rev. C. E. Campbell.

They were attended by James C. Michael and Miss Margaret J. Michael, brother and sister of the groom.

The bride is a sister of Mrs. George Troupe of Cranch street and the groom is the eldest son of Mrs. John Michael of Caledonian avenue, South Quincy.

They will reside at 25 Bennington street, South Quincy.

HARRY THAW AT ATLANTIC CITY

(By United Press)

Atlantic City, N. J., July 17—The whirl of gayety of Atlantic City social season proved more of a lure to Harry K. Thaw today than the prospects of going home to his aged mother in Pittsburg and the slayer of Stanford White planned to loiter here over the week end. Thaw was up early today.

He was like a child on Christmas morning, at the prospect of making up his nine years thirst for gayety. The crowds, the life and the beautifully gowned women strolling along the beach seemed to fascinate him. In Thaw's party, which is quartered at the Hotel Dennis, are his two private detectives and half a dozen newspaper men.

According to Thaw's plans he will be here for the week and will probably start for his Pittsburg home early Monday morning.

(By United Press.)

Washington, July 17—Pres. Wilson probably will leave Cornish, N. H., tomorrow afternoon, arriving here early Monday morning to prepare for Tuesday's cabinet meeting according to an announcement from the White House today. Sec. Tumulty who goes to New Jersey tonight wil be back in time for the president's return.

BRINGS ACTION AGAINST BOYD

James A Boyd of Quincy and John B. Gartside of Revere are at odds over the ownership of a motor boat and the latter has sought the aid of the superior court to straighten out the tangle.

Both are joint owners of a motor boat at Nelson's Landing, Saugus. Gartside brought a bill in equity in the superior court Friday against Boyd asking for the appointment of a receiver to take charge of the boat, to sell it and to pay each partner his share.

The boat is worth about $600. Gartside wants the boat sold and the proceeds divided and Boyd, according to the allegations of the bill, wants to keep the boat for his own personal use. The boat was purchased Feb. 6, 1913. The case will be heard on July 22.

WARD THREE BALL TOSSERS TAKE GAME

The Ward Three ball-tossers had no trouble in defeating the Quincy Point boys Friday by the score of 8 to 1, mainly owing to the fine pitching of MacDonald. He struck out 10 men and held his opponents hitless until the 7th inning when he was found for a single and a triple. Moody also pitched well but his support was very poor, getting 9 strike-outs but being touched up for about 10 hits. He made a fine one-handed catch of a foul ball away back of 3rd base getting the ball in his gloved hand down at shoe-tops. For Ward Three, Curtin, Thompson and McDonald did the best hitting. C. McDonald was put in as a pinch hitter in the 7th and made good with a fine single, scoring two runs for his team.

The batteries were: Ward 3, J. McDonald and C. McKenzie: Ward Two Moody and R. Williams.

Captains for the Ward Three League were chosen after the game as follows: White Sox, Barry, Tigers, Di-Senso: Red Sox, Curtin: Senators Thompson.

Owing to the extreme heat and also to the fact that the "water was fine" at Atlantic Beach on Thursday afternoon no athletic sports were held.

KNIGHTS AND LADIES PARADE

A hundred men and women marched from Suomi road to Merrymount park this morning. They were the Knights and Ladies of Kalevala whose convention is being held today. In addition to the Quincy societies delegates were present from many Eastern states.

The parade was headed by a band. The women in line, numbering 53, wore white skirts, and for the most part caps with blue bands, each carrying a small blue and white flag. Some of them were gowned in fancy costume. The men, 44 in number, wore white trousers and caps, with the exception of the athletic team which wore the regulation athletic vostume with straw hats. The officers wore their regalia.

As the parade passed City Hall a moving picture was taken of the procession by an operator from Kincaide's theatre, where the film will be shown later.

CAPTAIN TUCKETT SPEAKER AT Q.Y.C.

Capt. Tuckett of the Boston Harbor Police who is visiting all of the yacht clubs in Massachusetts waters was at the Quincy Yacht club Friday evening and gave the members a talk on the new motor boat law. The idea of Capt. Tuckett, who has the enforcing of the law, is to give these talks in order that all owners of motor boats may be familiar with its agreements. As the harbor police are likely to overhaul motor boats in the harbor at any time and as there is a substantial fine for violation of the law, he believes that it is advisable that motor boat owners should be thoroughly informed.

The law this year is rather strict. All motor boats are required to be equipped with horns, bells and lights as well as with sufficient life preservers so that there shall be one for each passenger aboard. In addition to this each boat must carry two copies of the pilot rules.

The motor boats of the power squadron are exempt from examination by the harbor police and a boat flying the power boat squadron flag will not be overhauled and examined. These boats however must also comply with the law and the commodore of the squadron is held responsible for them. All other power boats in the harbor are likely to be overhauled and examined by the police at any time.

Capt. Tuckett also sopke of the muffler law, saying that law would be strictly enforced this year.

PLAN TO ERECT LARGE APARTMENT BUILDINGS

Each To Consist of 30 or More Kitchenettes And One To Be Located In City Square

Two apartment blocks, costing at least $30,000 a piece, are to be built in Quincy, it is reported in authentic resources, but several months and probably a year will elapse before the investors will be in position to start activities. Two men are known to have plans prepared and one of them has secured the necessary land.

The vicinity of City Square and Wollaston station are said to be the prospective sites for the blocks which will be the largest of their kind in Quincy and each will consist of 30 or more kitchenette apartments. The blocks are expected to be four stories in height with a large courtyard in the centre.

SUFFS CONDUCT STREET RALLY

At quarter of eight last evening accompanied by drum-beating and red fire the automobile with the American flag and the suffrage banner started up Hancock street, going slowly enough for the evening shoppers to read the signs on the sides announcing a street meeting in the Coddington school yard. The drummer was William F. Artis of Quincy Point who courageously volunteered his services for the occasion. Th red fire was manipulated by another male supporter of the suffrage cause, John Arnold.

The crowd assembled in this way was addressed by Nils Kjellstrom, who spoke on what men with the ballot had not done for woman. Mr. Kjellstrom said in part:—

"The reasons why women should vote are the reasons why men should vote,—the fact that this country is supposed to be a democracy. But in the United States we have a situation which shows that we have not a true democracy,—half of the people are making laws for the whole people.

"Why are the women of New York asking for the vote? Because conditions like this exist: The lives of 165 girls were lost in the terrible Triangle fire and the managers who were warned of the conditions which resulted in the fire were sentenced by male judges to a fine of twenty-five dollars apiece. Can the men of New York say they are making laws sufficient to protect the women?

"Some men think that if women had the vote, all women would band together against all men. What we have had in the suffrage states is all the broad-minded men and women fighting the narrow minded men and women.

"Are man-made laws protecting women when every year 50,000 women and children disappear in the white slave traffic? Rose Livingston who was nine years in the hands of the white slavers and for the last six years has been working with a price on her head rescuing girls from their captors tells how she became a suffragist. She rescued a girl of sixteen from white slavery and the slaver himself was taken. She testified before a court and the girl got six months, the slaver went free. Miss Livingston went to the judge and asked why this injustice had been done. The judge replied, 'Election time is near and this man controls 500 votes. Someone needs those votes.'

"A man in my class was elected to the legislature of this state. It was his first term and he was only twenty-three years old but he got a bill appropriating $15,000 for the dredging of Lynn harbor. I made a point of finding out how a man with so little influence could get such a bill through. I was told that the men of Essex County all agreed to stand together for any bill one of them should put in and to go to any member of another county who opposed it and threaten opposition to his bill unless he should give in. The young man from Essex county got his bill through because the men from other counties didn't dare oppose.

"In 1915 there were 4,000,000 unemployed in the United States. Men haven't solved the problem of their own unemployment. Women take away men's jobs because the men allow them to work for less pay although having it in their power to make a standard minimum wage. If men haven't made laws to protect themselves how can we expect them to make laws to protect women?

"Lincoln said that this is a government of the people, for the people, by the people. Let us, though tardily, at last make our government measure to that ideal."

APPOINTS DEPUTIES.

Among the appointments of deputy grand chancellors of the K. of P. made this week by Dr. Roger S. York, of Boston, grand chancellor of the Domain of Massachusetts are the following of interest to lodges at Quincy or Braintree. Alfred J. Goodfellow of 18 Langmaid street Somerville, to be deputy of Merrymount lodge of Quincy; William G. Smith of 12 Argyle street, Brockton to be deputy of Monatiquot lodge of Braintree; Hiram B. Chase of 62 Park avenue, South Weymouth to be deputy of Hingham lodge of Hingham; P. S. Dolan of 101 Main street, Brockton to be deputy of Delphi lodge of Weymouth.

FIRST PRESBYTERIAN PICNIC.

The Sunday school and parish of the First Presbyterian church is holding its annual picnic today at Nantasket. The picnicers, 300 strong, left South Quincy this morning in special electric cars. There will be no special headquarters at the beach, and no special sporting events.

☞Going away for a week, two weeks or longer? If so you will want a visit each day from the Ledger. Send in your order and the mailing clerk will do the rest.

THE WEATHER.

The weather during the early hours of the morning gave promise that the day would be a scorcher. There was a little breeze but the air was so full of humidity that it was scarcely felt. At 8 o'clock this morning the thermometer on the shady side of the Ledger office registered 82 degrees. The only promise of its being cooler during the day is a shower, but there is nothing in the weather predictions for today that indicates a shower. On the contrary the predictions are for generally fair weather today and Sunday.

THE GIRL ON THE FARM.

Much has been said about the necessity of keeping the boys at home on the farm. That the girl on the farm also constitutes a problem is shown by the replies received from North Dakota by Chicago's Municipal Employment bureau. Investigation in that state reveals the fact that girls are wanted even more than men. They are needed as helpers to farmers' wives. Twenty dollars a month plus board is a common offer. It is better than most girls can do in department stores. No doubt there is a demand for them in other states. The social objections to domestic service do not seem to apply in the country home. The fact that it is so often customary for a household servant to eat her meals in the kitchen probably repels American girls from housework more than anything else.

With the family of the employer, the arrangement is not meant in any sense as a degredation. They simply want their own private family life. But American girls have their own pride, and they feel it as a class distinction.

The farmer's wife does not feel the desire for seclusion that is manifested by the town bred family. She already has altogether too much seclusion, which is handed her in large chunks. She would welcome the housework girl, if the latter had any elements of congeniality whatever, to the family intimacy.

Country life is a great leveller. After the dishes are done, the hired girl's chances to get partners at the cross roads dances will be limited only by her ability to dance well. The nature of her employment will not be a deterrent. In fact the country boy has a vast respect for a good cook.

The country boy is not migrating to the city as fast as he did. It is beginning to dawn on him that when he drops the raising of food products, he is selling out his interest in a commodity that is rapidly rising in price. Nobody ever advanced in life on that principle. And as the boys stay on in the country, the girls will stay on too. The farmers are going to own many more automobiles in the year 1925 than the store clerks.

In view of the many arguments that the lack of a July Fourth celebration meant a large loss infire it will be interesting to read the statement just issued by Fire Prevention Commissioner O'Keefe. In this statement he gives the loss in Quincy July Fourth from firecrackers and fireworks in 1914 as $600. July Fourth 1915, the loss in Quincy from the same cause was $10.

A glance through the list of twenty-six cities and towns given the loss from the firecrackers and fireworks in 1915 was but $80, Cambridge, Quincy and Saugus being the only places where losses are given. The losses in the same places in 1914 totaled $4,918.

MORGAN'S COMMISSION.

The jealousy of certain Canadian companies making munitions of war and claiming that Great Britain was not giving them a fair show, forced the frankness of Lord Curzon in announcing to the House of Lords that the commission paid to J. Pierpont Morgan & Co. on war purchases from the United States is two per cent and all expenses. It is almost a month since Lloyd George told the Commons that the arrangement with the Morgan house had been very helpful to the Government. This Lord Curzon confirms.

A banking house, like a prophet, is not without honor save in the country it belongs to. In steel, in shipbuilding, in railroad financing, in Government bond syndicates, the profits of this same house have been criticised and sneered at by some American newspapers. But sane thinkers have known that the service performed was real, and that in most cases the commissions were not excessive, considering the volume of interests handled.

Great Britain finds the same thing. The profits on the immense war purchases, at two per cent reach a figure very large, though not published. But purchases without help of the Morgan house would be very much more expensive to the purchaser and England doesn't grudge the two per cent—Brooklyn Eagle.

SCRAPHEAPS AND PROGRESS.

The scrapheap is a place of honor. It is a monument not to the dead past but to the living present. Without scrapheaps there would be no progress. Without progress there would be no scrapheaps. The great moment in the life of an invention is that moment when it is thrown into the discard, for thus its destiny is fulfilled. The world goes on with something better.

This, properly speaking, is "the way of the world." Civilization advances toward its visions. The first steamboat was once a vision. The first locomotive was once a vision. The telegraph was once a vision. Every one of the many inventions which men have sought out was once a vision. Invention succeeds invention, but progress in mechanics and science is not civilization. The two lines sometimes touch, but they are not identical. Both are pushed forward into the future by the same methods, but the forces are different. Civilization is a succession of ideals.

The Holland has gone to the scrapheap, but the submarine continues. The Holland has found its place of honor, but the submarine is only an invention, a means of war. War itself will some day go to the scrapheap. Ideals will send it there. It will then have found its place of honor. The world will go on with something better.—Philadelphia Evening Ledger.

POOR STAMPS AND ENVELOPES.

The New York Sun having taken up arms against the poor paper used in the manufacture of postage stamps and stamped envelopes, the superintendent of the stamp division of the postoffice department makes answer to the complaints which everybody makes against them. He says that the paper was made before the present administration came into control. That there has been no change in the paper out of which the contractor makes the envelopes. That the same inspectors pass on such paper before it is accepted and used by the contractor. The answer to this is that the present administration should not continue to furnish with an inferior article the people who use the mails. They are paying the government good money for that which they are not receiving full value. The people do not care very much about who made the poor paper, but they do want a good article, and the present administration ought to supply it.—Lynn Item.

TOWN GOVERNMENT

While it is undoubtedly true that no better form of democracy exists than that of town government as it was known in the days of the colonies, it is equally true that some other form becomes necessary when the voters of a town outnumber the people that can be assembled in the Town Hall. The theory of the town meeting was that every voter should have his say as to the government of public affairs. When the voters reach a number beyond which it is difficult for the members to exercise their constitutional rights of discussion of public matters, it is better to turn to representative government and adopt a charter. No perfect charter has yet been devised. No charter has been written that gives entire satisfaction. Possibly a perfect charter is beyond the power of man. Be that as it may, towns outgrow the old form of government and must have something that will meet new conditions. Two towns have reached the point where the town meeting must be abandoned and city government adopted. Some towns that have preceded them in the achievement of municipal honors are said to regret that they were forced to change their status. They have no one to blame but themselves, for the voters alone can select the officers, and if they make a poor choice they must endure the consequences. The trouble in most cases comes from the fact that the voter fails to appreciate his responsibility. As a town voter he had a sense of personal accountability. When he voted for a city charter he threw that off. That is why a young city is less vigorous than an old town. The people of a town comprise a public entity, with characteristics like those of the individuals. In becoming a city it takes some time to form a new character, but when that point is reached and the voters are truly patriotic and public spirited all is well. We hope Leominster and Peabody may early arrive at that desirable condition.—Lynn Item.

THAW OFF FOR HIS OLD HOME

Verdict Freeing Him on Bail Is Rendered by Hendrick

BOND IS FIXED AT $35,000

Court Esteems Testimony of Paid Experts of No Value—Cannot Depend Upon Word of Alienist Who Has For Years Devoted Himself to Case and Assisted In Its Prosecution

New York, July 17.—Harry K. Thaw, who shot and killed Stanford White on June 26, 1906, was declared a free man by the decision of Supreme Court Justice Hendrick vacating the order committing Thaw to Matteawan and approving the sanity of the slayer of Stanford White.

The state appealed. Thaw was freed on bail of $35,000, pending the result of the appeal.

Thaw, through a surety company, furnished bail and was released. Within two hours he was on the way to the home of his mother in Pittsburg, where he has not visited in ten years.

"My decision is based on my judgment and the advice of friends. I won't speak of this evidence," said the justice in giving his decision.

"The impressive testimony of sanity is practically overwhelming. The testimony of paid experts on either side, in my estimation, is of no value, and I now declare Harry K. Thaw to be sane."

Hendrick at once signed an order revoking the Dowling commitment under which Thaw was confined in Matteawan, following his acquittal of the murder of White on the grounds of insanity.

Thaw's route from the courthouse to the ferry was one great ovation, thousands of persons cheering him and shouting congratulations.

In announcing his decision Hendrick took occasion to comment unfavorably upon the action of alienists who had assisted the state in preparing the case and then appeared as expert witnesses in court.

"I want to say a word about the alienists," Hendrick said. "We have been told by one alienist that it is impossible to determine the sanity or insanity of a person without taking the word of alienists. This court and jury cannot depend upon the word of an alienist who for years has devoted himself to a case of this kind and assisted in its preparation.

"That a doctor can help prepare a case and then go on the stand as an expert witness is wrong. I hope the legislature of this state will find some means to correct this. Gentlemen, I have adopted the verdict of the jury. I declare now that it is the decision of this court that Harry K. Thaw is sane."

Edgar Bromberger, of counsel for the state, gave the notice of appeal. Hendrick decided that the state's notice of appeal automatically acted as a stay. John B. Stanchfield, of Thaw's counsel, then moved that Thaw be given his liberty under a bond. This motion was vigorously opposed by the state, but the court then fixed the amount of bail at $35,000.

YE OLDEN DAYS.

Editor of Ledger:

In a former isue of the Ledger I was asked, what the Quincy boys did to amuse themselves 60 or 70 years ago, and if they bowled ten pins and played pool as the boys do today? No, tiey did not. I don't recall any bowling alley or pool table in town then, but the boys had just as good times then as now.

Seventy years ago they had tub hand fire engines in three or four sections of the town. In the centre was the Niagara, in South Quincy the Tiger and at Quincy Point the Vulture About once a week two of them would practice and often the Niagara and Tiger would come out and practice together at the town brook. It was the aim of one to put their hose into the tub of the other and run the tub over, which if accomplished would create a great hurrah. Ths tub into which the rival engine was playing had to work for dear life, to empty it so the opposing engine would not succeed in filling it or running it over.

On top of each engine, the foreman stood with his right foot on the arm or rail that was pumping, manned by 20 or 30 firemen and pressing with all his might on the arm and yelling: "Down with her, boys, down; down! don't let her wash us over!"

When we half grown boys could get a chance we would get hold of the rail and pump and yell with the others "look out she is washing us, pump! pump! pump."

Wash French, as he was called, was foreman of the Niagara engine and Clift Rodgers of the Tiger. When there was a fire, which was not often, the three engines would play into each other some times and sometimes separate.

I think now, as it comes to me, there was a fire engine up in the West District named the Granite.

I don't remember that we played base ball then. I think it materialized sometime after. We played what I think was called "skip." There would be four corner bases not more than 40 or 50 feet apart, and a catcher, a pitcher, and of course two teams, one opposing the other.

When there was a pig killed in the neighborhood, the boys would get the bladder, blow it up, to about the size of the football of today and kick, and chase it about the field. The boy who caught it would take his turn in kicking it, but we took no sides, or in teams as now, with such hard usage it would only last two or three days.

On Thanksgiving day there used to be what was called a "pigeon shoot." The site of the shoot was on the Plains, so called, in South Quincy, just a little westerly of the granite monumental works at Quincy Adams, about where Water street is located, now built up by thickly settled residences. The pigeons or doves were placed in a small box nailed to a 5 or 6 foot post. The manager was stationed near the box and the sharp shooters stood around the field, an acre perhaps in area. Around the four corners of the field a rope as I remember it, was stretched, and when the pigeon was let loose from the box and flew over the rope the one nearest fired. Most generally the pigeon dropped, but not always.

In the winter, very large sleigh parties were in vogue. The sleighs were in the form of a boat or a swan and often four or six handsome black, long tail horses (no bob tails then) were attached. They would drive up from Brighton to the Hancock Tavern then kept by "Old" Daniel French, filled with young folks some 40 or 50, and at times the Quincy boys and girls would take their turn and ride to Brighton, a famous winter resort then.

In the old times boys and girls parties were frequent especially on winter evenings, with such games as Copenhagen, roll the cover and fox and geese. A circle was formed of the boys and girls each holding onto a rope circle, inside of which was a boy or girl who would if possible touch the hand of some one whose hands were on the rope. If caught he or she would have to go inside and there was a forfeit to pay, generally kissing by the winner. Sometimes the loser would take it very acceptably, according to who the winner might be and again sometime the winner would have to chase the loser around the room. I cannot say what the practice is now, but I doubt if the blessed privilege given the young folks then is admissible now.

If I have omitted any popular game practiced in my boyhood days 70 years ago, I trust some boy or girl of that period will correct me or add to the list.

How, and Why,——

—the GOODRICH "Fair-List" Propaganda now saves Car-Owners, yearly, over $25,000,000 on Tires

THERE are 1,923,951 Automobiles now State-licensed, and running, in the United States.

Of these, 1,803,951 are Pleasure Cars,—i. e., exclusive of Trucks, etc.

More than 90% of them, or about 1,623,555, use Pneumatic Tires,

Each car will wear out and replace, on average, about one Set of Four Tires per year.

Therefore, the interests of each Car-Owner, as well as each Car-Manufacturer, each Car-Dealer, and Salesman, are vitally and personally affected by the price of Tires to Consumers.

Because,—Tires and Gasoline are the two big items of consumption in the operation of Motor Cars.

The Owner who used his Car 1,000 Miles less, per year, than he would have done, because of "the high-price of Tires and Gasoline," received that much less return from his entire investment in the Car proper.

The potential, or prospective, Car-Owner who fails to buy a Car because of "the high cost of Tires and Gasoline,"—he who sells his Car and does not buy again because of "the high cost of Tires and Gasoline"—or he who, for the same reason, stores his Car and does not run it during a considerable part of the year, is a direct loss to—

—1st—Automobile Manufacturers as a class,

—2d—Automobile Dealers, as a class,

—3d—Garage Owners, as a class,

—4th—Lubrication & Gasoline Manufacturers, as a class.

But,—he is a greater loss to TIRE Manufacturers, and Dealers, as a class, than to any others.

Because,—

—Gasoline and Lubricants, for instance, can be sold to the Owners of Motor Boats, Stationary, and other Motors.

But,—Automobile Tires can only be sold, in the ultimate, to the man who OWNS a Car, and who wears out Tires through using it.

EVERY mile that each Automobile runs, means an automatic Sale of Tires to replace that mileage with new Tires.

But, all the Salesmanship, and all the Advertising, under the Sun, could not increase, by a single Tire, the total sales of Tires beyond the number of Cars owned by Consumers, and the number of Miles each Consumer runs his Car yearly.

The Market for Tires is therefore limited, inflexibly, to the number of Cars running, and the Mileage which each Owner is induced to run yearly.

Therefore, we opine that to promote greater Sales, and greater use, of Automobiles, few better incentives can be offered than markedly-lowered cost, TO CONSUMERS, for Tires and Gasoline.

Just as we recognize that the only legitimate expansion open to the Tire Industry, as a whole, would be due to the Sale of more Automobiles each year to Consumers, with a greater average Mileage USE, per year, of each Car by each Owner.

That is why we favor the lowest possible price for Tires,—to Consumers, consistent with maintenance of high quality and a fair profit to Dealer and Mfr.

So this, then, is a leading reason why WE initiated, and propagated, that Goodrich "Fair-List" Movement which we publicly announced in the press on Jan. 31, 1915, and which caused practically every Pneumatic Tire Manufacturer in this Country to follow our lead and bring his prices down to a fairer level.

THIS is also the reason why some Tire Manufacturers, who could not, or would not, "meet" our BASIC prices for Pneumatic Tires (even though our "Fair-List" Propaganda obliged them to make heavy reductions off their former Lists) might erroneously suppose that "Goodrich" Tires have been cheapened in Quality, as well as in price.

Hence this explanation (to the Public, to Car-Manufacturers, Dealers, Car-Salesmen, Garages, and Tire Dealers generally) that we deem it "good business" to sell the best Goodrich Tires (of fabric construction) we have ever made, at the fairest price possible for such quality.

Hence, too, the following TEST offer to Consumers.

—We will cheerfully pay for any Goodrich Safety "Non-Skid" Tire, sold since our "Fair-List" price-reduction (announced on January 31, 1915,) which when cut open shows any reduction in quality, in number of layers of Canvas, in thickness, or quality of Rubber, when compared with any other Goodrich Safety "Non-Skid" made by us, and sold at our higher prices current before the Goodrich "Fair-List" Movement.

And,—this is further to authorize any Tire-User to extend this Offer (at our expense) to any Tire Dealer, or Manufacturer.

We ask Car-Owners, and Tire Consumers, in their own interest, to see that no "implication" of lowered quality in Goodrich Tires goes unchallenged,—just as we have protected their interests, for our own sake, through our "Fair-List" Propaganda.

BECAUSE of that GOODRICH "Fair-List" Propaganda, every Car-Owner who now buys any make of Tire sized 37 x 5, now saves, on each set of 4 Tires, an average of about $46.27.

—Every Car-Owner who uses 34 x 4 Tires of any make, now saves, through the Goodrich "Fair-List" Propaganda, an average of about $26.15 per set of 4 Tires.

—Every Car-Owner who uses 30 x 3½ Tires, now saves, through the Goodrich "Fair-List" Propaganda, an average of about $14.70 per Set of 4 Tires.

Other sizes in proportion.

The 1,623,555 State-licensed Car-Owners who use Pneumatic Tires now save about 20% of what they last year paid for ANY make and size, whether they be Goodrich or competing brands,—equal to more than $25,000,000 per year.

And, don't forget that this giant saving to Car-Owners was never mentioned to the Public by other Tire Manufacturing Concerns until the Goodrich "Fair-List" Propaganda made it imperative that they extend the Saving to Consumers on their Tires, or lose business to the Goodrich Co.

But, notwithstanding all this,—the fact which should loom largest to TIRE-USERS is the contrast of 10% to 40% in prices, that still exists between the low price of the best Non-Skid Tires (of fabric construction) that money can buy, or the largest Rubber Factory in the World produce,—(to wit, GOODRICH Non-Skid Tires) and all other "responsible" Tires in the field.

Compare these prices and see!

Then, if you are not already a Goodrich User, do yourself (and us), the justice to buy at least one GOODRICH "Non-Skid" Tire.

Test that out for Quality, Mileage and Resilience against any other Tire, at any price, which you are now using.

The result of such test will cause you to wonder why you ever paid more for Maximum Quality, Mileage, and Resilience than the Basic price of Goodrich Non-Skid Tires?

GRANGE NOTES.

A very good attendance was recorded at Braintree Grange Monday evening July 12. It was voted to have a committee of five brothers appointed to make arangements for holding an entertainment the proceeds of which are to be turned over to the State Grange Educational fund. It was decided to work the 3rd and 4th degrees without the "Harvest feast" at the next meeting August 9, for the benefit of a sister who was prevented by sickness from receiving those degrees with the last class of candidates.

If there is time a paper will be read by the lecturer describing the operations in one of the largest bread bakeries in New England.

An invitation was received from Everett Grange to be present at the opening of their new hall at Glendale square Everet on Tuesday evening, July 20. Voted that as many members as could do so attend. Take train leaving South Braintree at 6.58 P. M., Braintree at 7.02 P. M. At the South station get elevated train to Sullivan square and from there car for Maplewood or any car running to Glendale square.

During the lecturer's hour "Fireless cookers and what can be done with them" was discussed. Mrs. Tyler E. Gale gave a very interesting talk on what she had been able to do with a fireless cooker, illustrated with a cooker in which had been cooked a pudding, a pan of biscuits and a loaf of brown bread, which was passed around steaming hot for the members to sample.

Mrs. Gale said that this was woman's age. That whereas formerly inventive genius devoted all its energies to producing labor saving machinery for the farmer while his wife toiled on in the same old way as her grandmother had done; now everything possible was being done to lighten woman's work, as evidenced in the light running sewing machine, the vacuum cleaner and numerous other labor saving appliances each of which represented an advance of ideas.

The fireless cooker though a genuine labor saver was a reversion to the principle of the old brick oven of our grandmothers but made in such a shape that it could easily be moved from place to place or shoved under the kitchen table out of the way.

Mrs. Rogers of Franklin street who has done much to introduce the fireless cooker in So. Braintree was also present and answered many questions with regard to the operation of fireless cookers. She brought a most delicious cake that had been baked in her cooker, and was served to the members.

Mrs. L. B. Twitchell and Mrs. Faulconer told of very satisfactory results from using a fireless cooker. The latter uses a home made cooker. Apparently there is very little in the way of cooking that cannot be done with a fireless cooker and done better than on a range or gas stove and without heating up your kitchen and still better at a very much less expense for fuel.

TYPHOID FEVER IN THE UNITED STATES

An editorial in the Journal of the American Medical Association, April 17th, says in part, "It is evident that Typhoid Fever is on the way to become a relatively rare disease in many parts of the United States. There are two main reasons for this. First, there are now comparatively few large cities in which the public water supply is likely to contain Typhoid Bacteria. Second, the increase in the practice of pasteurization has resulted in a dimunition in the amount of milk borne typhoid."

The Elm Farm Milk Company complying with the general demand by the Medical Profession and Sanitarians, were one of the first to scientifically pasteurize their milk. This milk is offered at the same price that rules for ordinary milk.

This process is the only one that absolutely guarantees the safety of milk against all of the infectious diseases.

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I—Kenneth Griswold, an unsuccessful writer because of socialistic tendencies, sups with his friend Bainbridge at Chaudiere's restaurant in New Orleans and declares that if necessary he will steal to keep from starving.

CHAPTER II—Griswold holds up Andrew Galbraith, president of the Bayou State Security, in his private office and escapes with $100,000 in cash.

CHAPTER III—By original methods Griswold escapes the hue and cry and goes aboard the Belle Julie as a deckhand. He unexpectedly confronts Charlotte Farnham of Wahaska, Minn., who had seen him cash Galbraith's check in the bank.

CHAPTER VI.

Quicksands.

On the morning following the rescue of the mate, Charlotte Farnham awoke with the conviction that she had been miraculously saved from incurring the penalties dealt out to those who rush blindly into the thick of things without due thought and careful consideration.

But the Puritan conscience was not to be entirely silenced. Reason sits in a higher seat than that occupied by the senses, and reason argued that a man who would forgive his enemy, and instantly risk his life in proof of the forgiveness, could not be a desperate criminal. Conscience pointed out the alternative. A little careful investigation would remove the doubt—or confirm it. Somebody on the boat must know the deckhand, or know enough about him to establish his real identity.

Charlotte worried over the wretched entanglement all day, and was so distrait and absent-minded that her aunt remarked it, naming it malaria and prescribing quinine. Whereat Charlotte dissembled and put on a mask of cheerfulness, keeping it on until after the evening meal and her aunt's early retiring. But when she was released she was glad enough to go out on the promenade just forward of the starboard paddle-box, where there were no after-dinner loungers, to be alone with her problem and free to plunge once more into its intricacies.

"Don't Try That Again," He Warned Angrily.

It was possibly ten minutes later, while she stood leaning against a stanchion and watching the lights of a distant town rise out of the watery horizon ahead, that chance, the final arbiter in so many human involvements, led her quickly into the valley of decision. She heard a man's step on the steeply pitched stair leading down from the hurricane deck. Before she could turn away he was confronting her; the man whose name on the Belle Julie's crew roster was John Wesley Gavitt.

Griswold's appearance was less fortuitous than it seemed to be. As a reward of merit for having saved the mate's life, he had been told off to serve temporarily as man-of-all-work for the day pilot, who chanced to be without a steersman. His watch in the pilothouse was over, and he was on his way to the crew's quarters below when he stumbled upon Miss Farnham. Mindful of his earlier slip, he passed her as if she had been invisible. She let him go until her opportunity was all but lost; then, plucking courage out of the heart of desperation, she spoke.

"One moment, if you please; I—I want to ask you something," she faltered; and he wheeled obediently and faced her.

Followed a pause, inevitable, but none the less awkward for the one who was responsible. Griswold felt rather than saw, her embarrassment, and was generous enough to try to help her.

"I think I know what you wish to say: you are quite at liberty to say it," he offered, when the pause had grown into an obstacle which she seemed powerless to surmount.

"I thought perhaps—I had hoped—oh, for goodness' sake, why did you do it?" she burst out, no longer able to fence with the weapons of indirectness.

He answered her frankly.

"It was the old story of one man's overplenty and another man's need. Have you ever known what it means to go hungry for sheer poverty's sake?—but, of course, you haven't."

"No," she admitted.

"Well, I have; I was hungry that morning; very hungry. I know this doesn't excuse the thing—to you. But perhaps it may help to explain it."

"I think I can understand—a little. But surely—"

He stopped her with a quick little gesture.

"I know what you are going to say—that I should have been willing to work, or even to beg, rather than steal. I was willing to work; I was not willing to beg. I know it is all wrong from your point of view; but I should be sorry to have you think that I did what I believed to be wrong."

"But think of it; if you are right, everyone else must be wrong!"

"No; not quite everyone. But that is a very large question, and we needn't go into it. I confess that my method was unconventional; a little more summary than that of the usurers and the strictly legal robbers, but quite as defensible. For they rob the poor and the helpless, while I merely dispossessed one rich corporation of a portion of its exactions from the many."

"Then you are not sorry? I saw you yesterday afternoon and hoped you were."

He laughed unpleasantly. "I was sorry, then, and I am now; for the same reason. I have lost the money."

"Lost it?" she gasped. "How?"

"I had hidden it, and I suppose someone else has found it. It is all right, so far as the ownership is concerned; but I am still self-centered enough to be chagrined about it."

"But you must have returned it in the end. You could never have been content to keep it."

"Do you think so?" he rejoined. "I think I could have been quite content to keep it. But that is past; it is gone, and I couldn't return it if I wanted to."

"No," she acquiesced; "and that makes it all the harder."

"For you to do what you must do? But you mustn't think of that. I shouldn't have made restitution in any event. Let me tell you what I did. I had a weapon, as you have read. I tied it up with the money in a handkerchief. There was always the chance of their catching me, and I had made up my mind that my last free act would be to drop the bundle into the river. So you see you need not hesitate on that score."

"Then you know what it is that I must do?"

"Assuredly. I knew it yesterday, when I saw that you had recognized me. It was very merciful in you to reprieve me, even for a few hours; but you will pardon me if I say it was wrong?"

"Wrong!" she burst out. "Is it generous to say that to me? Are you so indifferent yourself that you think everyone else is indifferent, too?"

He smiled under cover of the darkness.

"I know you are not indifferent; you couldn't be. But you must be true to yourself, at whatever cost. Will you go to Captain Mayfield now?"

She hesitated.

"I thought of doing that, at first," she began, postponing to a more convenient season the unnerving reflection that she was actually discussing the ways and means of it with him. "It seemed to be the simplest thing to do. But then I saw what would happen; that I should be obliged—"

Again he stopped her with a gesture.

"I understand. We must guard against that at all hazards. You must not be dragged into it, you know, even remotely."

"I wrote a letter to—to Mr. Galbraith," she confessed.

"And you have not sent it?"

"No. If I had, I shouldn't have spoken to you."

"To be sure. I suppose you signed the letter?"

"Certainly."

"That was a mistake. You must rewrite it, leaving out your name, and send it. All you need to say is that the man who robbed the Bayou State Security is escaping on the Belle Julie; that he is disguised as a deckhand, and that his name on the steamer's books is John Wesley Gavitt. That will be amply sufficient."

She was silent for a moment. Then: "Why mustn't I sign it? They will pay no attention to an anonymous letter. And, besides, it seems so—so cowardly."

"They will telegraph to every river landing ahead of us within an hour after your letter reaches New Orleans; you needn't doubt that. And the suppression of your name isn't cowardly; it is merely a justifiable bit of self-protection. It is your duty to give the alarm; but when you have done that, your responsibility ceases. There are plenty of people who can identify me if I am taken back to New Orleans. You don't want to be summoned as a witness, and you needn't be."

She saw the direct, manlike wisdom of all this, and was quick to appreciate his delicate tact in effacing the question of the reward without even referring to it. But his stoicism was almost appalling.

"It is very shocking!" she murmured; "only you don't seem to realize it at all."

"Don't I? You must remember that I have been arguing from your point of view. My own is quite unchanged. It is your duty to do what you must do; it is my affair to avert the consequences to myself if I can manage it without taking an unfair advantage of your frankness."

BUILDING OF HOMES GOES ON STEADILY

Another boom in home building has started in Quincy, according to the records of the inspector of buildings, for of the seventeen permits issued by that office this week thirteen were for dwelling houses. The new building is not confined to any one ward for practically every ward in the city is represented by the permits.

It is expected that before another week application will be made for a permit for the second block of stores to be erected on Hancock street between Music Hall and the Kincaide theatre, by Henry M. Faxon. The delay in making an application for a permit is reported to be because it has not been definitely decided just how large a building will be erected. It was intended at first to erect a three story building with stores on the first floor and offices on the upper floors.

Now however Mr. Faxon is considering the proposition to make the new unit a one story affair to be used entirely for stores, but of sufficient strength so that the additional stories may be erected at some future time when the demand is more pressing than at present. Another proposition that is being considered is the matter of a large public hall. He is undecided about a hall which may be erected in the unit already started or on the second floor of the new unit. The matter will probably be definitely settled in a few days.

A well known citizen who was taking an automobile ride about the city last week, expressed considerable surprise at the large number of dwelling houses that were now under construction. Standing on a prominent place near Fenno street in the Wollaston Park district he says he could count thirty new dwelling houses in process of construction.

Tired of waiting for the City Council to decide just what it intends to do in regard to changing the grade of Beale street, near the Wollaston railroad station the contractor has commenced active work on the block of stores. The foundation for these stores is already in and work on the brick outer walls has been commenced.

When the public hearing was ordered on the changing of the grade the contractor delayed work to find out just what was intended to be done. Then the Council got into a squabble with itself and as it did not seem likely that it would move in the matter for some time, work was commenced. If later in the year the Council should decide to change the grade, it means that several thousand dollars will be added to the expense.

The building permits issued this week were as follows:

Axel G. Ahlstrom, dwelling, Huntly road.

Winifred G. Young, garage, Dorchester avenue.

Laura G. Earl, dwelling, Marlboro street.

F. G. Osgood, dwelling, Buckingham road.

Charles Sampson, dwelling, Avon way.

Matthew M. Ott, dwelling, Elm avenue.

Louise Holden Fay, dwelling, Alton road.

Ruby R. Benn, garage, Sea street.

L. C. Merrill, addition, Brook street.

William M. Tuttle, dwelling, Rock Island road.

Timothy Dennehy, dwelling, London avenue.

Frank H. Byrne, dwelling, Ardell street.

James M. Nowland, dwelling, Edgemere road.

James M. Nowland, dwelling, off Woodward avenue.

Fred H. Coombs, dwelling, Hancock street, Atlantic.

W. John Tabb, dwelling, Gilbert street.

William C. Gaggert, garage, Babcock street.

The report of the Construction News issued today, giving building statistics in the United States for the month of June contains some figures to those interested in Quincy's boom of Quincy. Of the 122 large cities in the United States from which reports are given 30 shows a gain in new buildings over June 1914 and 71 a loss. The gain for the City of Quincy is reported 39 percent. There are but fifteen cities in the United States where the percent of new building was larger.

LETTERS FROM OUR READERS

ERICSON IS CANDIDATE.

Editor of the Ledger:—

The weather is growing hot and I suppose your readers would prefer light reading at this time of the year, but justice to myself requires that I ask them to read a few words of political literature at this time.

Last fall I was the Republican candidate for Representative from this district nd succeeded in redeeming the district from the Democrats although they had for candidates one of the ablest and most popular men of their party. During my year at the State House I worked and voted in accordance with what I considered my duty to my own constituents and the people of Massachusetts. I dodged no issue and evaded no responsibility. Not one word of criticism have I heard from any source and I feel justified in assuming that my service was satisfactory to the people of my district and to the members of my party.

Now that I seek the honor of re-election, I find that certain people who ought to be with me are favoring the candidacy of another member of the party for the nomination. This is a surprising thing to find, considering the fact that the Republican party has always been supposed to stand for justice and regularity.

Is there any reason why other aspirants should not wait until I have received what is due me, according to rule and custom? Already two well-known Republicans who were urged to run against me have practically refused to lo so. This shows they believe in the square deal. Why should any man claiming to be a Republican not take the same stand?

Republicans of the fifth district, I leave my case in your hands and await your verdict. Are we going to have justice and regulrity or re we not? It is up to you.

Respectfully,
Charles A. Ericson,
4 Euclid Avenue.

CUBS STILL LEAD TWILIGHT LEAGUE

The Cubs, leaders of the West Quincy Twilight league, defeated the Commons in a very one sided uninteresting contest at the Ward Four Playground Friday evening. The final score was 5 to 1. The winning battery were Desmond and Barron and for the losers Goselin and Dunn.

The league standing including Friday's game is as follows:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Cubs | 16 | 9 | 640 |
| Blue Hills | 13 | 9 | 585 |
| Hurkies | 12 | 14 | 456 |
| Commons | 8 | 17 | 320 |

SPORTING COMMENT

The Braves have begun their upward climb. Thursday they defeated the Pirates in a 15 inning contest. With the score 5 to 2 in favor of the visitors enough hits were hammered out to win 6 to 5.

Joe Higgins and L. S. Caldwell will make their farewell appearance here today in the Cathedral Y. M. C. A. games in Boston.

Jimmie McLaughlin of Bates avenue, who holds the joint record in the hop, step and jump, is becoming a commanding figure in sports. His development has been rapid.

Fifty-four homers in nine years for Ty Cobb. Perhaps he will make his 100th before 1924. But those triples, doubles and singles in the meantime will cut some ice.

An average of .260 is being maintained by Home Run Frank Baker in the Delaware County league.

Fred Clarke says the only way he can be forced out of base ball is to have Pittsburg win another pennant. He has been in the National league for 20 years and is the Pittsburg manager.

Red Smith has become the most reliable batter on the Braves' outfit. He hits the twirlers when the hits are needed most.

Norman Taber, we salute you. Your mark of 4:12 3-5 in the mile at the Stadium lowers world's amateur and professional marks. John Paul Jones had an amateur mark a little more than a second slower and W. G. George the great English runner held the professional record, 4:12 3-4s. They have been rubbed from the board.

Hail also, Billy Meanix. You set a mark of 54 3-4s in the 440 hurdles, beating G. L. Anderson's record of 56 4-5s. The runners are B. A. A. men. The records will stand for years.

TRAVELLING OUTFITS.

Smart Week End And Compact Travelling Kits For Motor Cars or Longer Journeys.

EN ROUTE FOR EXPOSITION.

A busy woman whose main interest in life centres in the magazine she edits, is the recipient of many bids for week-ends, and as she finds these changes delightful, and means to charm as well as to be entertained, she is careful to have just the right things ready to wear packed in her bamboo suit case. Ever since she made a three months trip in the Old World with two of these handy carry-alls, her expensive and weighty leather grips have rested almost undisturbed in favor of the feather light leather trimmed bamboo cases. Nowadays, one of these is always in readiness for a hasty trip, and the second one which is packed with fluffy evening clothes for some occasional, more formal function, can be taken along as expeditiously if it is likely to be needed.

TRIM TAILORED DRESS.

The trim tailored dress of silk, serge or linen that is worn at her office, is suitable for travelling with the addition of a goodlooking slip-on coat of checked black and white Worumby cloth, her smartly designed silk cover-all does duty as a dust protector if required, or covers a filmy dress appropriately. This wrap—an ample cape-shaped affair of changeable brown and black taffeta—edged all round with a full double pleating of the same, is unlined and packs into very small space without crushing badly.

On one side of the suit case, there are dainty low shoes, champagne colored kid, that do duty for day or evening wear, with matching silk hose. A change of lingerie, a silk kimono, bath slippers, toilet articles, and a smart golf skirt, generally of golfine, also a pair of sturdy leather strapped low shoes, fancy hose and a silk sweater. The other side of the case holds shirt waists of silk and cotton crepe, and two dresses, one of printed cotton voile, one of taffeta silk, both made to be worn with or without gamp and sleeves of lace and washable lawn. These extra pieces are carried in a long flat box to prevent crushing while various little accessories—Girdles, gloves, veils and a few ornaments are tucked in between the folds of the dresses. Sometimes a third dress of white or black net is added, where the party demands more in the way of raiment, but at such times the second bamboo grip with the real evening outfit is usually taken and the lady is ready for the most formal demands. One side of the dress-case is devoted to hats, and other crushable belongings that can not be put with other garments. But for ordinary informal visits, the smart hat worn on the train does duty everywhere where a hat can not be dispensed with. A pretty folding parasol fits in the service case, and an umbrella is carried with the slip-on coat.

FOR THE FAIR.

The plan is varied a bit for the present trip to the Pacific Coast. The formal evening clothes are replaced by a couple of lace and net dresses, while extra lingerie and a few more sport clothes are added for stops on the way, where warm sturdy skirts and a woolen sweater will be needed. The two cases however, fill the requirements admirably and with an extra travelling rug provide everything necessary. The lingerie is for the most part, of washable crepe that needs no ironing, and can be laundered over night at any stopping place.

The hats selected are a rather broad brimmed Panama, that is not readily injured, and a small satin turban with a flexible crown that emerges fresh and smart, even if packed full of handkerchiefs and other small belongings.

A SILK SERGE SUIT.

A silk serge suit is relied upon to do duty upon most occasions. This is made with a short bolero coat, that covers either a very dressy waist which is nearly all ecru lace, or a heavier waist of the serge handsomely braided and having matching chiffon sleeves. On the train sport skirts and shirt waists with a light or heavy sweater and top coat, answer every requirement and because no trunk is carried one's whole outfit is instantly available at any point.

TO BUILD 26 BUNGALOWS NEAR WOLLASTON BEACH

Boston And Quincy Capitalists Said To Plan $80,000 Investment In Bungalow Village

Preparations are being made to invest nearly $80,000 in real estate in Norfolk Downs by several well known Boston and Quincy men who plan to erect 26 bungalows on the Jones estate near the Wollaston boulevard.

Temple A. Winsloe of the Wollaston Garage is said to be the man behind the movement. The bungalows are to be five room affairs and will cost about $2,500 apiece.

The erection of that number of bungalows in that section will turn a large piece of vacant property into one of the most attractive bungalow villages in the state. The property is situated near the old slate quarry, and is bounded by Beach and Billings streets and the Wollaston boulevard.

SMUGGLE IN AUSTRIANS.

Two Men Face Charge of High Treason.

POLICE VISIT HOUGHS NECK FRUIT STORES

To Summon 12 Proprietors Into Court

A dozen proprietors of small stores at Houghs Neck will be in court this week to face charges of violation of the Lord's Day act. All will be charged with selling articles other than those specified in the permits granted by the City Council.

The Council this year granted about 350 Sunday fruit licenses. Acting Chief McKay when delivering the licenses to the proprietors instructed them as to how far they might go and said that violations would not be tolerated. All promised to observe the regulations, the police say.

Several weeks passed without violations becoming very bold and then the storekeepers as though by agreement, it is alleged, started to take the lid off. Sunday the police gathered evidence at a dozen of the stores. No arrests were made but summonses will be served on the proprietors today. Their cases will probably be heard Wednesday.

It has been the custom of the Council to revoke licenses when proprietors are convicted in court for violations. The police expect they will have easy sailing in all cases. The Council in order to revoke licenses this summer will have to postpone adjournment until next Monday night instead of adopting that course tonight.

ANNUAL PICNIC OF WOLLASTON YACHT CLUB

The annual picnic run of the Wollaston yacht club was held Sunday and was participated in by about 125 members and guests. The fleet got away from moorings in good season and after passing in review of Vice Commodore Quincy A. Lathrop in the Nautilus they made the run to the grove at Weymouth Back river in good time. On arriving basket lunches were taken ashore, for instead of the old time clam bake this year each yacht brought its own luncheon which was served shortly after noon.

During the afternoon there was a series of sports for the men and women in the party, the most amusing being the fly and mosquito swatting contest by the women of the party. This created much amusement and it was with pleasure that the onlookers watched the slaughter of the pests.

The boats that participated in the outing were:

Nautilus, Vice Commodore, Q. A. Lathrop.
Eleanor, Capt. W. L. Jefferson.
Gracilis, Capt. W. F. Ellis.
Kickamuit, Capt. G. H. Sass.
Bull, Capt. Charles E. Decker.
Miladi II, Capt. Clarence O'Neil.
Smilax II, Capt. A. N. Potterton.
No Name, Capt. R. G. Rourke.
Corinne, Capt. Charles Edwards.
Josie M. Capt. Robert Milne.
Ursula, Capt. Harry Sprout.
Pollywog, Capt. Michael Arenberg.

The return to the club house was made in the late afternoon.

Saturday was childrens day with the club and during the afternoon upwards of 125 children were entertained. There were games of various kinds in the dance hall and the yachts which were not participating in races were placed at the disposal of the committee and the children given a sail in the bay. Later in the afternoon refreshments were served and there was dancing.

The committee in charge were Mrs. F. N. Danforth, Mrs. A. M. Potterton, Miss Irene Potterton, Mrs. Frank F. Taylor, Miss Lydia O'Neil, Miss Caroline O'Neil, and Mrs. Catherine L. Fowler.

Mr. and Mrs. Nelson McCormick of Peoria, Ill., are visiting Mr. and Mrs. James McCormick of Hall place.

EX-COUNCILMAN NOW BENEDICT

Stephen L. Devaney Weds Miss Sarah Sullivan

Ex-Councilman Stephen L. Devaney, of 47 Dysart street, son of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Devaney, and Miss Sarah Sullivan, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James H. Sullivan of 44 Payne street, were united in marriage Saturday evening. The ceremony took place at the parochial residence of St. John's church, Rev. Michael J. Owens officiating.

Miss Mary Sullivan of Boston, a niece of the bride was the bridesmaid and Henry Devaney, a nephew of the groom, was the best man. Both the bride and bridesmaid wore gowns of blue silk.

The ceremony was followed by a largely atended reception in the new home of the bridal couple at Weymouth Heights. They were the recipients of many beautiful gifts. The groom is well known in the Quincy Point district where he has resided for a number of years. He served several years in the City Council. He is now employed in the machine department at the Fore River.

LLOYD GEORGE TO MAKE PLEA

EDWARD L. KEENE.
(United Press Staff Correspondent.)

London, July 19—Minister of Munitions David Lloyd George will leave for Cardiff tonight to make a personal appeal to the South Wales miners to return to work and prevent a reduction in the production of war munitions. This announcement was made this afternoon, following a special session of the cabinet at which the most serious internal crisis of the war was discussed. George's popularity among workmen, the cabinet hopes will bring about a settlement if the Board of Trade's final proposition submitted to the miner's council today, fails.

GERMAN NOTE READY TUESDAY.

Charles P. Stewart.
(United Press Staff Correspondent.)

Washington, July 19—The German note almost certainly will be laid before the cabinet Tuesday. Pres. Wilson and Sec. Lansing were understood to have quit work on it today.

They were in conference at the White House for an hour at noon.

Silence was in order after the conference but an atmosphere of finality prevailed which left little doubt that the proposition had been pretty well whipped into the shape the chief executive and his premier adviser wanted. Both were known to have had their ideas very thoughtfully formulated before they met. Each had a tentative dráft of a note. Evidently there was no material difference between them.

CONDITION OF FRANK WORSE.

(By United Press)

Milledgeville, Ga., July 19—Leo M. Frank was worse today. His temperature rose this forenoon from 99 1-2 to 102.4. The wound in his neck was swelling, indicating infection. He was in great pain.

Gov. Harris ordered a most thorough investigation of the attack on Frank by William Green, a fellow convict, who stabbed Frank in the neck, cutting a gash nearly half way around the neck and severing the jugular vein.

The executive was incensed that such a thing could occur and a general shakeup in the present management is predicted. Frank's wife and his own family physician were allowed to visit him. The prison's formal investigation indicates that Green's assault was not instigated from the outside but was his own idea. It is believed he concealed a knife used in slaughtering hogs before going through the dormitory for the night.

George Sawyer has completed a new summer cottage on Ocean street and it is now ready for occupancy. This is the second summer cottage completed by Mr. Sawyer at Squantum this summer.

INCENDIARY MAKES TWO ATTEMPTS TO BURN OLD WOLLASTON HOTEL

Occupants Escape From Blazing Building In Night Clothes And No One Is Injured. Second Fire Discovered At 4 O'clock

A second attempt to burn the Wollaston hotel was dicovered shortly before four o'clock this morning by Dist. Chief Stephenson who found burning papers piled around the furnace, fully 40 feet from the part of the building which was burned. He put out the fire.

The first fire is thought to have been incendiary and Chief Billings believes it was set under a staircase.

Investigation is being made today. The police are also trying to learn who forced a basement window in the Wollaston fire house, nearby, climbed into a chair and turned on an electric light fully eight feet above the floor. The two fires and the break are thought to have been the work of one person.

The hotel property is valued at $10,000 and is covered by insurance. Chief Billings said this morning the damage is not nearly as heavy as at first reported. He says there was but little water damage in the stock of the stores on the first floor.

The old Wollaston hotel at the corner of Beale street and Newport avenue, opposite the Wollaston depot, was threatened with destruction by a fire which broke out shortly after one o'clock this morning. Through the failure of the fire whistle on the Tubular Rivet and Stud Co. practically the only Wollaston people who knew of the fire were those who were awakened by the pounding of the motor apparatus of the fire department on its way to the scene.

All that prevented the total destruction of the large three story building was the discovery of a glimmer of light in a second story window by Patrolman John J. Duane. He sounded an alarm from Box 56 at 1.25 and then awakened the occupants.

Two Chinamen who slept in the rear of their laundry on the Beale street side of the first floor were among the first on the street. The family of Charles Burns occupying apartments over their fruit store on Beale street were aroused and had no difficulty in making their way to safety. The family included Mrs. Burns, her sister, Joseph Burns a brother of the fruit dealer, and a son, Victor Burns. The policeman awakened the occupants by hurling a stone through Victor Burns' window.

The Burns family, scantily clad, took refuge in the Wollaston railroad station. Two Italian families who lived in a house in the rear of the block were also awakened by the patrolman.

The little glimmer seen by Patrolman Duane was in the southeast corner of the building. The Wollaston station apparatus had only to turn the corner and run a distance of about 30 feet before they were on the scene. The motor apparatus from the Central station arrived soon after the Wollaston squad and Chief Billings gave one glance at the situation and sounded a general alarm.

The fire burned fiercely and while hose was being coupled to the hydrants and the tractor engine put in operation the fire burst through the Newport avenue side of the building at the second floor. Three streams were carried to the roof of the first floor buildings and directed at the fire, holding it in check.

Ladders were raised on the rear and south side of the hotel, hose carried up and streams poured through the windows. The 40 foot extension ladder on the West Quincy apparatus was raised to the roof on the Beale street side and two streams directed through windows on that side.

The interior of the building was gutted, excepting the east end. What actual fire damage was done cannot be estimated until a thorough investigation of the building is made.

Hoseman Myles Creamer of the Central station was badly cut on the right hand during the fire. He was putting a stream through a second story window and his index finger finger was slit from the large joint to below the nail. Driver Charles Anderson of Wollaston station received a minor cut about the hand. Hoseman William Gerry of Atlantic station nearly collapsed. He was assisted to the street and was revived through first aid treatment.

Patrolman Duane, after sounding the alarm phoned police headquarters. Sergt. Edward Johnson sent down the pulmotor in the police auto and telephoned owners of stores in the block.

E. P. Craig, who conducts an ice cream and candy store at the corner of Beale street and Newport avenue, was among the first to reach the scene. He had no sooner opened his store than spectators flocked in and he did business in the midst of a slight smoke.

Besides the Burns fruit store, the laundry and Craig's store, the building housed the shoe store of A. Pantenen, the barber shop of Oscar Minot, the periodical store of Gilbert Shunk, Wollaston agent for the Ledger, and the plumbing shop of A. E. Stephenson. The damage in these places was all the result of water which flowed into the cellars.

On the second floor was the headquarters of the Wollaston Progressive and Citizen's club.

The Burns family sat on baggage trucks at the Wollaston station and watched the firemen fight the fire. Mrs. Burns, although in a weak physical condition, suffered no ill effects from her experience.

The all out was sounded at 3.05

The Wollaston hotel is one of the landmarks of the section. It was erected in 1869 and was the first large building put up in Wollaston. It was conducted as a hotel for many years, but in late years has not been used for that purpose, the greater part of the building being unoccupied. It is owned by the Estate of Fred Merrill and by Harvey Merrill who is in Germany.

Miss Sarah Veazie of Granite street is visiting friends in Maine for a few weeks.

WATER STREET PRESBYTERIANS HOLD S. S. PICNIC

Four special cars were required Saturday to convey the Sunday school and parish of the Water street Presbyterian church on their annual picnic to Nantasket beach. The party arrived at the beach shortly before noon and then separated into groups. There was no special program for the outing each doing what pleased him best. Many enjoyed bathing in the afternoon. Others visited Paragon and took in some of the numerous side shows. During the middle of the afternoon ice cream and cake were served to the children. Some of the older ones in the party remained for the illumination and fireworks in the evening but the larger part of them returned home in the special cars in the late afternoon.

NEW APARTMENT HOUSE.

Those who have inspected the new apartments erected on Revere road by William R. Lofgren, the architect-builder, are quite enthusiastic in praise of the comfort and completeness of each apartment. There are four in the building, each of four rooms and bath; just the size to appeal to young or middle aged couples as it simplifies housekeeping. Although all rented but one Mr. Lofgren has not yet selected a name for the house and is asking his friends for suggestions. Being on the old Miller-Bigelow estate the Bigelow Apartments is one name that has been sent in.

BIDS FOR SIDEWALKS.

Commissioner Brown advertises today for bids for laying about 4,000 square yards of granolithic sidewalk in different sections of the city. The sidewalks to be laid include those in the general sidewalk order passed some weeks ago and the special order for a granolithic sidewalk about the First Parish church. Bids will be opened by the Commissioner July 27.

500 AUTOMOBILES AN HOUR.

Sunday was a great day for automobiles and during the latter part of the afternoon a citizen had the curiosity to know just how many automobiles passed by the head of Coddington street on Washington street, going in both directions. He had a counting machine in his hand and took his count between the hours of 4.25 and 6.25. During that period 1077 automobiles passed.

MRS. WILLIAM E. CAREY

Mrs. Abigail Hobart Carey, widow of William E. Carey and long a resident of Quincy, passed away Sunday at her home, 46 High street, in her 68th year. She is survived by a sister, Miss Hannah Hobart and by a brother Elisha Hobart. She was also a sister of Benjamin Hobart who died a few weeks ago.

COPELAND CLUB OUTING.

Over thirty members of the Copeland club of West Quincy journeyed to Rocky Point Sunday in an auto truck. The party left the club at nine o'clock in the morning and arrived at the Point just before noon. The affair was in charge of "Steve" Hebert and a very enjoyable day was spent. They arrived home shortly after midnight.

THE WEATHER.

The only activity exhibited hereabouts Sunday was that of the ice cakes which melted with unusual speed and joyfulness. Automobiles were abroad of course but the drivers, fearing a blowout or the stern hand of the Quincy Police Department, did not break the speed laws as badly as usual. It wasn't any fun changing a tire under Sunday's blistering rays. Autoists seeing a brother hung up by the side of the road engaged in the pastime abstained from the usual vicious smile and drove by with stern, set faces, hoping against hope that their turn would not come next.

Well, anyhow, the Red Sox are in first place.

Local showers and slightly cooler weather are on the schedule for Tuesday and Wednesday.

THE POT AND THE KETTLE.

When the pot calls the kettle black, or, more elegantly, when the tu quoque argument is employed, no very deep impression is made on the reflecting observer. Yet it is worthy of note that when the District Attorney of Edgefield County, South Carolina, appeared before Governor Brumbaugh of Pennsylvania the other day, seeking to secure the extradition of a negro fugitive accused of murder, he found this to say:

"It is true, your excellency, that there may be lawlessness and mob violence in South Carolina, but what state is free from it? I have lived in South Carolina for 34 years, and in all that time I never heard of a prisoner being taken from prison and burned at a stake or burned beneath a pile of fagots."

The Harrisburg dispatch describes this as "a covert reference to the Pennsylvania tragedy when a negro was burned at the stake in Coatesville two years ago."

Doubtless it is true that South Carolinians, unlike Pennsylvanians, have stopped short of the horror of a burning at the stake, but the Palmetto state has had its full share of ordinary lynching and inter-racial disturbances, and other Southern states have placed themselves in Pennsylvania's class by one or more instances of the employment of the stake and the torch. We recall one such case in Georgia and another in Texas. In Coatesville, Pa., the negro murderer of a white man was burned, while in the Southern states such wild exhibitions of popular fury have followed a negro's brutal attack on an innocent white woman.

The number of negroes lynched in the North and West in recent years, perhaps not more than a dozen altogether, is small compared with the record for the South during the same period, but the fact that such lynchings should have occurred in the North and West at all gives point to the question as to whether there would be any material difference under the same circumstances and with equal frequency of provocation. According to statistics dug out of the census reports by Prof. Wilcox of Cornell University, there is more criminality among Northern than among Southern negroes in proportion to population. However that may be, there are about ten negroes in the South to one in the North or West, and necessarily the crimes that awaken the lynching impulse are far more frequent in the Southern States.

If the situation were reversed, if one-half or one-third of the population of the average Northern States were black, would the North exhibit a better record than the South in the matter of lynchings and inter-racial violence? Probably not. In imperfectly policed sections the record might even be worse, because, as a result of long association, there is perhaps a greater tolerance of the negro in the South, industrially and otherwise. The Southern outbreaks have rarely been directed against the negroes in general as has been the case in Ohio and elsewhere in some instances. If the North and West were one-half or one-third black, the labor element, for example, would be very readily excited to rage and violence, for even now that element exhibits bitter prejudice toward the negroes, shutting in their faces the doors of the unions and thus confining them for the most part to purely menial employments. There is no room left for sectional accusation in this connection. It is becoming the duty of the North as well as of the South frankly to acknowledge the existence of race prejudice and earnestly seek to make the best of abnormal conditions presented by the joint occupation of a common territory by two altogether distinct races.

GOOD WORK.

The "pernicious activity" of Patrolman John Duane resulted in his discovery of the fire in the old Wollaston hotel. And the fire department lost no time in reaching the scene and were also "perniciously active." Ten minutes delay and the building probably would have been burned to the ground. Worse things than that could happen. However, the patrolman and the department are deserving of praise. The fire was fought without confusion and most of the noise was contributed by the tractor engine which was in operation the minute it arrived.

THE WATER TAX.

The water bills are out and they are not meeting with general satisfaction. Owners of apartment houses, particularly are dissatisfied upon finding their tax has been increased. A charge of $4 for each tenement, over the original minimum charge, has been imposed, for some reason known only to the initiated. As we have observed in a previous editorial this system seems unfair and illogical. A satisfactory solution of the water tax question will not be found, we believe, until householders are charged for the water used and no more, excepting a small minimum charge.

FREDERICK, THE EUGENIC BABY

Never use "baby talk."
Give him no toys.
Don't teach him to believe in Santa Claus.
Give him a cow to play with.
Diet him on cereal with milk and a tiny bit of sugar and cow's milk.
Teach him perfect table manners.

Denver, Colo., July 19—Frederick Fish, 18 months, Denver's ultra-eugenic baby, received the newspaper interviewer in becoming pink rompers.

If the interviewer should say to Frederick: "Is oo a dood boy?" Frederick only would stare blankly. He has never heard "baby talk." His mother doesn't permit it.

"We use the same words in speaking to Frederick as we would in conversing with educated grownups," said Mrs. Fish.

Both eugenists and euthenist are Mr. and Mrs. Fish. A eugenist emphasizes the physical breeding; a euthenist, the environment, Frederick's environment is carefully studied out for him in advance; whereas Mrs. Fish, prominent clubwoman, was a leader of the Denver eugenists.

This euthenist principal hasn't anything particularly to do with the fact that a cow is Frederick's chief play mate. It just happens that the cow is Frederick's staff of life and has contributed oodles and oodles of the milk and has given Frederick rosy cheeks, a "lovely" disposition, fat legs and bright, blue eyes.

The cow will gently rub her head against the baby's face. When she is lying down, lazily chewing her cud, Frederick rolls all over her and otherwise enjoys himself at her expense. Cherry, the cow, is intensely jealous of the little fellow, manifesting displeasure when any one hits the child in her presence or attempts to join in their play.

When Frederick tires of the cow, he must discover other means of diverting himself. He can't have the ordinary toys of children. He must show ingenuity and discover his own playthings.

"Mechanical toys keep a child from developing his imagination and constructive ability," said Frederick's mother. "When Frederick wants to play horse, I notice that he takes his father's cane or uses a broomstick."

Frederick once used his mother's laundry soap bars for house blocks. She at once bought him more soap.

"A child should never be taught a lie," said Mrs. Fish, elaborating on her statement that Frederick has never been taught to believe in Santa Claus. "Of course, he will hear about Santa Claus but if he asks me where Santa lives I shall feel it my duty to tell him the story of Santa Claus is only a myth."

Freddy has never been spanked. Corporal punishment should not be administered to a child over three years, according to Mrs. Fish's opinion. After three the child should be reasoned with. As she believes a child forms his habits in the first six years of his life, Mrs. Fish is teaching Frederick orderliness and manners at eighteen months.

MRS. MARY M. PENDERGAST.

Mrs. Mary M. Pendergast, widow of Thomas Pendergast, died at her home, 125 Highland avenue, Saturday, after an illness of several years. She was 65 years old. She is survived by a son and two daughters. Her son is Thomas Pendergast, a conductor on the Quincy division of the Bay State Street Railway. Funeral services will be held Tuesday at 9 o'clock from the Sacred Heart church.

HOLD ANNUAL PICNIC.

Quincy Chapter, Order Eastern Star, is holding its annual picnic today at Nantasket beach. The party left Quincy in a special car at 10.25 and will spend the day at the beach. No special program has been arranged. The afternoon and evening, however, will probably be spent in the Paragon Park.

ADVERTISE IN THE LEDGER.

WARSAW IS IN GREAT DANGER

Germans Launch Campaign to Squeeze Russians Out

CZAR'S TROOPS HARD PRESSED

In Flight Along Hundred-Mile Front While Enemy Is Closing In Around Polish Capital From Three Sides—Kaiser's Armies Making Rapid Progress In Baltic Provinces and Southern Poland—French Confident of Holding Germans at Bay Despite Great Offensive—Wounded Italian Soldiers Frozen on Alps Heights

London, July 19.—In the most stupendous military operation of history, the Germans have set in motion their gigantic campaign for "squeezing the Russians out of Warsaw."

From three sides German armies now menace the Polish capital. The German object, in all probability, will be to cut the railroad lines from Lublin to Cholm and from Warsaw to Vilna.

Already General von Mackensen's army is within eight miles of the Lublin-Cholm line, and is steadily advancing. The armies of General von Hindenberg are moving southeast from Przasnysz toward the Vilna line and to the rear of Warsaw. In the meantime the German forces in central Poland are keeping as many Russians as possible busy in orded to prevent withdrawal of the main Russian army before the German trap is completely set.

Once more Hindenberg, with a heavily reinforced German army, estimated at nearly 500,000 men, is making a massed move on Warsaw, and is driving the czar's forces ahead of him through northern Poland, along a 100-mile front.

Russians In Flight

The Russians are described as in flight along the whole front, between the Vistula and Pissa rivers, in the direction of the capital, heading for the valley of the Narew, which would afford them the first opportunity for a defensive halt.

Southeast of Warsaw, too, where the Teutonic allies had been temporarily checked after the great drive from Galicia, they have renewed the offensive, and have stormed Kransnoslav, which is perilously close to the Lublin-Cholm railroad, the main Russian line of communication in this region.

The Petrograd war office admits a partial retreat north of Przasnysz, but makes no mention of the great sweep indicated in the German dispatches. According to the Berlin staff's report the army of General von Gallwitz has been entrusted by Hindenberg with the task of taking Warsaw from the north, its first objective presumably being Novo Georgievsk, at the junction of the Vistula and the Bug rivers, and one of the strongest fortified outposts of the Polish capital.

Germans Push Onward

The army of Gallwitz, striking into Poland across the East Prussian frontier, near Mlawa, hurled itself against the Russian positions south and southeast of that much fought for town, and succeeded in piercing in quick succession three Russian lines extending northwest and northeast of Przosnysz. The advancing Germans captured Dzielen and pushed on as far as Lipa, on the road to Nova Georgievsk.

After their retreat from Przasnysz, the Russians hurriedly formed a second line of defense from Ciechanow to Prasnosielo, where they made a determined stand aginst the great masses of Germans pouring down from the north.

After severe fighting these second positions were also stormed, and the Germans succeeded in forcing the Russians back along a front over four miles wide in the district south of Zielona.

Since this second defeat the Russians are reported as in full retreat southward in the main direction of Warsaw, with the Germans closely at their heels. It is considered by British military critics that the czar's troops will make another desperate stand in the valley of the Narew, where a big battle may be already raging.

In the meantime, further north, in the Baltic provinces, the German army under General von Buelow, which crossed the Windau river last week, is advancing steadily into Russian territory, and at last reports was only thirty miles from the important seaport of Riga.

This movement, if it should become really serious, may even menace Petrograd itself, but it is hardly likely to prove more than a feint, while the main armies are making their fourth obstinate attempt to reach Warsaw.

In southern Poland the Germans, having recovered their breath after the defeat administered by the Russians between Krasnik and Lublin, have started a new drive towards Warsaw from the southeast, the first objective of which is the strongly fortified city of Ivangorod on the Vistula, another important outer defense of the capital.

The German forces in this region, which are led by Mackensen, the hero of Galicia, are making desperate attempts to cut the railroad that runs through Lublin to Ivangorod, as this would deprive the Russians of their main line of communication with the interior of the empire.

In a great battle detailed in the Berlin report, the Russians were driven from the hills of Bielaczkowice, south of Piaski, and as far as Krosnoskow, and with these places taken by storm.

Claim of Petrograd

A late Petrograd statement, in speaking of this battle, admits that the Germans made progress in the Isdevno district near Krosnoskow, but adds that notwithstanding the heavy losses they suffered the Russian troops repulsed the furious attacks against them until late in the evening.

Even at the extreme left of their line, in southeastern Galicia, the Russians seem to have suffered defeat. Official Berlin dispatches state that in this region the Austro-German army under General von Woyrich has resumed the offensive under heavy fire from the Russians.

At a point not named, but doubtless on the Dniester river below its junction with the Lipa, the Germans took a narrow point in the wire entanglements of a strongly fortified main Russian position, and through this gap stormed a Russian trench on a front of about a mile and a third.

In the course of the day this wedge was widened and pushed forward by stubborn hand fighting far into the Russian position.

If this movement should prove to have cut apart the Russian lines in this section it may entail a further retreat of the czar's forces from the Dniester and Lipa toward the Russian frontier. A portion of them are declared by the German staff to have already fled behind the Iljanka river, suffering heavy losses in their retreat.

On the other hand the Russians report that they gained a victory over enemy troops who crossed the Dniester, taking about 2000 Austrian prisoners and seven machine guns. These two actions were doubtless at different points.

The Drive Toward Verdun

Desperate efforts made by the Germans to recover trenches from the French village of Les Eparges to the Calonne trench have resulted in great losses to them, while their only gain was a precarious foothold in the old trenches on the crest to the south of the Sonvaux ravine.

It is at Les Eparges that the German lines approach nearest to Verdun, but the French are confident of holding the enemy, despite the great offensive which has been launched here as at other points on the sides and apex of the St. Mihiel salient.

Despite the heavy fighting north of Arras, in the region of Souchez, the greatest efforts of the Germans have been concentrated in the last week on their attempt to get close to Verdun, but there is a gap of thirty-five miles to be closed before the fortress can be invested.

The Germans in the Vosges are fighting with the utmost determination to regain their lost positions at Ban de Sapt, but the curtain of fire maintained by the French artillery has kept reserve forces from advancing, while machine guns mowed down those who tried to charge from the first line of trenches.

Austro-Italian Campaign

The Austrians are reported to be preparing to take the offensive on the Isonzo front. The Italians, according to this dispatch, have advanced a mile toward the plateau of Tirnova, from which point they are bombarding the railway communications with Goritza. A number of supply trains have been destroyed.

Fighting on the heights of Venerocola, the altitude of which is 10,000 feet, has been severe, particularly around the Garibaldi hut. Some of the wounded were frozen before the Red Cross workers could reach them.

DEMANDS INCREASED

Welsh Miners Ask Annulment of British "No Strike" Act

The members of the executive council of the South Wales coal miners' organization who went to London to confer with Walter Runciman, president of the board of trade, returned to Cardiff, having found it impossible to reach a basis for new negotiations in the coal dispute.

There is now no hope of the men returning to work before the middle of this week, if they do then. Already some industries in South Wales are being hampered by a shortage of coal.

Besides their original terms, of which the principal demand was 5 percent raise in wages, the men now insist on the cancellation of the royal proclamation bringing miners under the "no strikes" act. Meantime the tribunal set up under this measure is preparing to act.

Woman Loses Heart Balm Suit

Boston, July 19.—Dr. Herbert W. Adams, who was sued by Ada M. Holt for breach of promise, obtained a judgment and costs of $2047 were charged against her. She married Adams, but the marriage was annulled later. She asserted he promised to marry her again.

Iceberg Damages Steamer

Montreal, July 19.—With her bows caved in and stern lying low in the water, as the result of crashing into an iceberg, the steamer Agenorie crept into port. The accident occurred in the Straits of Belle Isle.

WANT TURNOUT AT ATLANTIC

The controversy between Squantum and Atlantic residents and the Bay State Street Railway over a turnout at Hancock street, Atlantic is not to be dropped. At the meeting of the Squantum Improvement association last week it was voted after a lively discussion that the matter of the turnout again be taken up with General Manager Conway and Superintendent Gammons and that another effort be made to have the work done this year. At a previous meeting it was reported that the Bay State Railway directors had declared that there was no money available this year to make the improvement.

Messrs. Conway and Gammons will be invited to attend the next meeting of the Improvement association a week from Tuesday and present their reasons why this turnout can not be fixed this year. The practice of passengers riding half a mile backwards on Squantum cars from Neponset bridge to Atlantic station is declared to be ridiculous and all Squantum and Atlantic residents are united that the Bay State Street railway should make every effort to have a turnout installed on Hancock street.

President James W. Sumner presided at the meeting and appointed the following committees for the year—Streets, Herbert A. Smith, J. H. Loughan and W. J. Whitley; Water, Joseph E. Allen. Roger J. Mason and Alfred Friberg; police, C. E. Carlson, John Marden and James H. Foster; fire, Edward Kirby, Thomas Currie and William McCarron; health, James Hagan. T. F. Callahan and Emil Nelson; schools, John Holmes, Charles Swanson and C. E. Carlson; railways. John R. Nelson, Perley Bostwick and N. C. Paul; mosquitoes, William Kenyon, James H. Foster and Herman J. Berghaus; entertainment, William Spargo, Fred H. Bond, C. S. Bostwick, C. H Singleton and John P. Loughan; postal service, Frank Anderson. John R. Nelson and B. J. Golbranson.

The names of H. E. Batrell and A. Chalmers were admitted to membership in the association.

It was voted that the Dorchester street matter be taken up again by the street committee and a report be made to the association as to who is responsible for its condition.

TYPHOID FEVER IN THE UNITED STATES

An editorial in the Journal of the American Medical Association, April 17th, says in part, "It is evident that Typhoid Fever is on the way to become a relatively rare disease in many parts of the United States. There are two main reasons for this. First, there are now comparatively few large cities in which the public water supply is likely to contain Typhoid Bacteria. Second, the increase in the practice of pasteurization has resulted in a dimunition in the amount of milk borne typhoid."

The Elm Farm Milk Company complying with the general demand by the Medical Profession and Sanitarians, were one of the first to scientifically pasteurize their milk. This milk is offered at the same price that rules for ordinary milk.

This process is the only one that absolutely guarantees the safety of milk against all of the infectious diseases.

Elm Farm Milk means SAFETY, SERVICE, SATISFACTION.

WITHDRAWS FROM RACE TO SAVE 2 LIVES

"Iris" Goes To Rescue Of Men Clinging To Capsized Boat

Giving up what chance the "Iris" had of winning a position in Saturdays race of the Cape Cat class under the auspices of the Quincy Yacht Club, ex-Commodore Frank F. Crane jambed the helm hard down and went to the rescue of two Italians who had been capsized and were clinging to the bottom of their boat, off Bunkin Ledge Shoals. The "Iris" was near Bunkin Island when the plight of the two men was seen and withdrawing from the race the "Iris" worked around to the weather side of the overturned craft and by skillful seamanship managed to get in a position where the two men could be taken aboard the yacht. The two men were pretty well exhausted by that time. As they were unable to speak English their names could not be learned. Shortly after one of the harbor motor patrol boats came along side and the two men were transferred to that and later landed at Hull. It could not be learned what had caused their boat to overturn.

There were four starters in the race, "Almira," "Dartwell," "Clara" and "Iris" and that is the order in which they finished. There was quite a stiff breeze at the start giving the little boats all the wind they wanted. It soon petered out however but increased somewhat on the last leg of the race. Heavy weather sailing, is what the Almira wanted and she was able to finish in the lead with a good margin. The summary:

DRUNKS FINES TOTAL $200

Fines amounting to more than $300 for drunkenness were imposed in the district court today by Judge Avery for drunkenness. Twenty men were fined $15 each and put in care of the probation officer, several were sent to the State Farm and one paid.

Six were taken in a round up after midnight Saturday by Patrolman Malone and Martell. Their arrests were the first in the campaign to break up the gangs which spend the early hours of Sunday morning in the stone yards of South Quincy. Minor damages it is said have resulted from these groups through the throwing of bottles at monuments.

EXPLAINS THAT EQUAL SUFFRAGE VOTE AT MARION.

The endorsement of Equal Suffrage by a a vote of 203 to 99 at the recent meeting of the Massachusetts State Federation of Women's clubs has led some persons to complain that it was not a fair expression of opinion; therefore, the Council of the State Federation has voted to send out the following statement:—

The suffrage resolution did not originate with the executive board of the Federation, but was presented to the resolutions committee in the regular way by a delegate to the convention. The executive board ruled that such a resolution might properly come before the convention at this time. The object of the Federation as defined in the constitution—"to secure more thorough acquaintance among Women's Clubs of Massachusetts and to unify their work along educational, sociological and humanitarian lines"—does not forbid the consideration of this question.

The convention was made up of accredited delegates chosen by the individual clubs according to their usual methods. No person was allowed upon the floor with out a credential singed by the secretary of the club which she represented and countersigned by the credentials committee of the Federation. The convention was therefore competent to transact all business of the Federation; to pass resolutions, to elect officers, and to consider any other business which might properly be brought before it. The equal suffrage resolution was on a par with the four other resolutions and with the election of officers.

The convention at Marion was not a conference of presidents as has been said by one critic, but a regular annual convention made up of accredited delegates. Four weeks notice, except in the case of revision of the contitution and the presentation of the official ballot, is not required, but in this instance, in order that anyone opposed might be fairly warned, six weeks' notice of the possibility of a resolution for suffrage was sent on May 12, with the official call for the meeting. The fact that the question was likely to come up was so well known that on June 10 an anti-suffrage convention at Springfield gathered a group of anti-suffrage club women who passed a resolution deploring the introduction of the subject of equal suffrage into the Federation, and the vice-president of the Anti-Surage association circularized the clubs against the introduction of a suffrage resolution several days before the meeting at Marion.

The debate on the resolution at Marion was orderly and dignified. Each side took part in three-minute speeches until at the end of two hours a motion for the previous question to close the debate was carried by an over-whelming majority. The count on the resolution was taken on a rising vote and verified by the tellers in the usual way.

The Massachusetts Federation of Women's clubs has not taken an unusual stand in passing an equal suffrage resolution. Twenty-seven other State Federations and the General Federation of Women's clubs had previously endorsed political equality regardless of sex.

PROTEST FROM UNITED STATES

To Declare British Blockade Is Illegal and Discriminatory

RULES OF INTERNATIONAL LAW

Violated by Withholding Rights of Americans to Trade With Neutral Ports—No British Warships Check Thriving Trade In Foodstuffs From Scandinavian Ports In the Baltic

Washington, July 19.—A brief but pointed protest to England stating that the United States will not respect or accept the rulings of British prize courts to carry out illegal propositions in the order in council is merely the forerunner of a longer and more detailed communication on the same subject.

The note is a firm, flat denial of Great Britain's assumed right to interfere with American commerce to an extent not countenanced by the recognized rules of international law.

It is a vigorous statement that this government cannot permit its commerce to be treated according to the autocratic regulations of British orders in council, and various municipal decrees.

Later the state department will send a formal protest against the seizure of more than 100 cargoes of American goods.

In the next note to Breat Britain the United States will raise a new point, asserting that the British blockade of neutral ports, besides being illegal, is discriminatory, as no effort has been made to stop the trade between Scandianavian countries and German ports on the Baltic sea.

England also will be warned again in strong terms to adhere to the accepted rules of international law in all cases involving the rights of Americans.

The United States government maintains that England's blockade of Germany is not effective. No British warships have been sent into the Baltic to check the thriving trade in foodstuffs from Scandinavian ports, but American vessels with cargoes for Stockholm, Copenhagen and other points in the countries not engaged in the war have been held up and denied passage through the North sea.

The administration intends to back fully the rights of Americans to trade with neutral ports, and demands that Britain cease violating this privilege permitted by all rules of international law.

It is said that Sir Cecil Spring-Rice, the British ambassador in Washington, has sent a telegram to his foreign office urging that the American demands be met so far as possible and interpreting the American sentiment over the interference with American trade by English men-of-war.

The general note to Great Britain, in all probability, will not be sent forward until some settlement is made with Germany in the case of the Lusitania.

LEO FRANK MAY SURVIVE

Throat Slashed With Knife In Hands of a Fellow Convict

Milledgeville, Ga., July 19.—Leo M. Frank is in the Georgia state prison hospital, where attendants say he has a fighting chance for recovery.

Physicians succeeded in stopping the flow of blood from a jagged wound in his throat made with a butcher knife in the hands of William Green, a fellow convict, also serving a life term for murder.

The blow was struck as Frank slept in his bunk in a dormitory and his life was saved by two convicts who are skilled surgeons.

An investigation of the attack probably will be conducted by the Georgia prison commission, the body which refused to recommend that Frank's death sentence for the murder of Mary Phagan be commuted to life imprisonment.

Green said, when taken from solitary confinement long enough to be questioned, that he planned the attack alone and that no one knew what he intended to do. He gave as his only excuse that he "thought it should be done." He said, however, he regretted his act.

DIES AT SISTER'S HOME

Delafield Was Noted as Physician, Surgeon and Author

Stamford, Conn., July 19.—Dr. Francis Delafield of New York, a distinguished physician and surgeon, an author of many standard medical works and consulting physician at the illness of President McKinley, following the latter's shooting, died at the home of his sister, Miss Emma H. Delafield, in Noroton. He was stricken with apoplexy a week ago while visiting at Noroton.

He was born in New York, Aug. 3, 1841.

SINKING OF THE LUSITANIA

Court Finds That Killing of Thousand Persons Was Intentional

Baron Mersey announced, as his finding, that the sinking of the liner Lusitania May 7, with the loss of more than 1000 persons, including above 100 Americans, was the result of an act by a German submarine, which not only had intended to destroy the ship but had planned to blot out the lives of its passengers.

The report exonerated Captain Turner and the Cunard line from all blame and found the Lusitania was not armed. Mersey's summary of the court's report follows:

"After having carefully inquired into the circumstance of the disaster the court finds the loss of said ship and lives was due to damage caused the ship by torpedoes fired by a submarine of German nationality.

"In the opinion of the court the act was done not merely with the intention of sinking the ship, but also with the intention of destroying the lives of the people on board."

As printed and concurred in by Admiral Englefield and Lieutenant Commander Hearn, naval assessors, and Captain Speeding of the mercantile marine, the report will be presented to both houses of parliament.

WILSON RETURNS TO WHITE HOUSE

Framing of Note to Germany Will Be Taken Up at Once

Washington, July 19.—President Wilson reached Washington this morning on his return from a three weeks' rest in Cornish, N. H., and it is expected here that work at once will be taken up framing the reply to the last German note. Although the president has not commented on the matter, it is declared here by those closely in touch with the administration that he and Secretary Lansing are agreed in the policy now to be pursued.

President Wilson will confer with Lansing in completing the final draft of the reply, which will be submitted to the cabinet at a meeting Tuesday. The reply will probably be sent to Germany on Thursday.

Both the president and secretary have made up their minds that the next communication to Germany will be brief.

Thaw Says There Can Never Be Reconciliation With His Wife

Atlantic City, N. J., July 19.—Harry K. Thaw announced that he would try to divorce his wife now that he has been adjudged sane by a jury and Justice Hendrick of New York county.

He did not tell his plans in detail, but he was insistent upon one point—that there never could be a reconciliation. Mrs. Thaw is now in the Adirondacks with her son and her dancing partner, Jack Clifford.

Thaw coupled his statement with an assertion that certain newspapers were persecuting him through their editorial columns.

Ward 6 had a good increase over the first week having 1035; 587 boys and 488 girls. # WEAK KIDNEYS MAKE WEAK BODIES

Kidney Diseases Cause Many Aches and Ills of Quincy People.

As one weak link weakens a chain, so may weak kidneys weaken the whole body and hasten the final breaking-down.

Overwork, strains, colds and other causes injure the kidneys, and generally when their activity is lessened the whole body suffers.

Aches and pains and languor and urinary ills frequently come, and there is an ever-increasing tendency towards dropsy, gravel or fatal Bright's disease. When the kidneys fail there is no real help for the sufferer except kidney help.

Doan's Kidney Pills act directly on the kidneys. Quincy testimony is proof of their effectiveness.

C. P. Russell, 37 Washington St., Quincy, says: "My kidneys were weak and acted irregularly. I also suffered from pains in my back. I used Doan's Kidney Pills and the first box relieved me. I intend to continue taking this medicine."

Price 50c, at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mr. Russell had. Foster-Milburn Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

RESULTS SATURDAY.
Fore River 5, Gamewell 4
Bird & Sons 2, Gen. Electrics 0.

The Fore River Team added the scalp of the Gamewell Fire Alarm and Telegraph Co. of Newton to its belt at Merrymount park, Saturday afternoon. Fore River won, 5 to 4, in 12 innings and strengthened its lead in the Manufacturers league.

Desmond and Cain of Quincy and King of the visitors were the stars of the game. Desmond practically won the game for the home team. In the sixth inning he drove over two runs and scored the winning run in the 12th inning.

Cain played a slashing game at third. He took all of his 12 chances. He pulled down a fly, caught a man between bases and handled 10 grounders. His two errors were wide throws to first.

King, interscholastic first baseman for three years and the star of Newton High, got 18 putouts at first base for the visitors.

The Gamewells scored their first run in the first inning on an error by Knight. Riley, the first man up in the second inning, drove the ball to right field for a home run.

Fore River got active in its half of the second. Duggan reached on an error and stole second. He went to third on Connell's grounder and went home on a short passed ball.

Fore River took the lead in the sixth inning by getting two runs. Two singles in a row and two stolen bases put men on second and third. Desmond's drive over second scored them.

Gamewell came back in the eighth inning. Gates reached on Cain's wide throw and Harris was passed. They scored on a single.

In the ninth inning Fore River tied up, Bradley singled and romped home with the tieing run when the left fielder dropped Knight's fly. The game went scoreless until the last of the 12th when Desmond singled and stole second and third. Two men went out and while the last batter was up Desmond shot over with the winning run on short passed ball. The score:

SEVENTH STRAIGHT FOR CLARK CLASS

The Clark Class autoed to Brookline Saturday and defeated the Ward Class of Roxbury by a score of 5 to 2. Jacobsen allowed but two hits and fanned 19 batters.

The fielding of L. McIntosh was of big league style. The three base hit by G. Imray with the bases full won the game. A one hand catch by Wallie McIntosh in the ninth stopped a rally by the Wards.

The victory was the seventh straight for the Clark Class. They closed the day by autoing to Nantasket and returning at a late hour. The boys became musical during the outing and syncopated melodies were sung by John Runnalls. Lawrence McIntosh gave an interesting talk on the war.

SPORTING COMMENT

The mill between the Sox family Saturday before 22,000 fans ended in a draw. The Red Sox took the first game 6 to 4 in a sensational finish, and the Chicago White Sox had the second all its own way, 4 to 0. Foster landed his game and Leonard deserved to.

The St. Johns team had no game Saturday, the Pilgrims of Cambridge cancelling Friday night. The St. Johns want a game for next Saturday on the Ward Three playground.

George Wiley, the Syracuse biker, has shaken his jinx. Saturday he won a 30-mile motor paced race at Revere. Tom Connolly of Everett was suspended and C. Robinson was injured.

Bird & Sons' team blanked the General Electrics at East Walpole Saturday, 2 to 0. Bird holds second place in the Manufacturers league. Fore River leads.

V. M. Smith scored both the best gross and net in the sweepstakes for members at the Wollaston Golf club Saturday. J. L. Donoan and D. T. O'Connell were tied for low net prize. Smith had 79-10 and net 69. Donovan and O'Connell had 71 net.

Cliff Horne of Haverhill and Jimmy Henigan of Malden were tied in a 10-mile run at Lewiston, Me., Saturday. The fastest mile, the fifth was in 5m 10s. The time for the 10 miles was 56m, 37 2-5s. The only other starter was Andette of Haverhill, a protege of Horne.

The Marathon at the nationals at Frisco will only be 15 miles. Weather was the big factor in bringing about the cut. Horne, who is New England's 10-mile champion, is good at that distance and is now the favorite.

George Lowe, ex-Arlington High star, is to enter the University of Pennsylvania. He was captain-elect of Exeter Academy foot ball and hockey teams.

Franz Marceau of Quincy, former Dartmouth star, didn't win the mile at the Middle West tryouts Saturday, but he forced Joie Ray of the Illinois A. C. to clip 2 1-5 seconds from the middle west record. The time was 4m 16 2-5 s.

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I—Kenneth Griswold, an unsuccessful writer because of socialistic tendencies, sups with his friend Bainbridge at Chaudiere's restaurant in New Orleans and declares that if necessary he will steal to keep from starving.

CHAPTER II—Griswold holds up Andrew Galbraith, president of the Bayou State Security, in his private office and escapes with $100,000 in cash.

CHAPTER III—By original methods Griswold escapes the hue and cry and goes aboard the Belle Julie as a deckhand. He unexpectedly confronts Charlotte Farnham of Wahaska, Minn., who had seen him cash Galbraith's check in the bank.

CHAPTER IV—Charlotte recognizes Griswold, but decides to write to Galbraith rather than denounce the robber to the captain and so incur unpleasant notoriety.

CHAPTER V—Charlotte sees the brutal mate rescued from drowning by Griswold and delays sending her letter to Galbraith.

CHAPTER VI—Charlotte talks to Griswold and by his advice sends her letter of betrayal to Galbraith anonymously.

"What will you do?"

"It would be bad faith now for me to try to run away from the steamer, as I meant to do. So far, you have bound me by your candor. But beyond that I make no promises. My parole will be at an end when the officers appear, and I shall do what I can to dodge, or to escape if I am taken. Is that fair?"

"It is more than fair; I can't understand."

"What is it that you can't understand?"

"How you can do this; how you can do such things as the one you did last night, and still—"

He finished the sentence for her—"and still be a common robber of banks, and the like. I fancy it is a bit puzzling—from your point of view. Sometime, perhaps, we shall all understand things better than we do now, but to that time, and beyond it I shall be your grateful debtor for what you have done tonight. May I go now?"

She gave him leave, and when he was gone, she went to her stateroom to write as he had suggested. An hour later she gave the newly written letter to the night clerk; and the thing was done.

In the ordinary course of things Miss Farnham's letter should have reached New Orleans in time to have procured Griswold's arrest at any one of a score of landings south of Memphis. When the spires of the Tennessee metropolis disappeared to the southward, he began to think that her resolution had failed.

He had no means of knowing that she had given her letter to the night clerk within the hour of their interview on the saloon deck promenade; nor did he, or anyone else, know that it had lain unnoticed and overlooked on the clerk's desk until the Belle Julie reached Cairo. Such, however, was the pregnant fact; and to this purely accidental delay Griswold owed his first sight of the chief city of Missouri lying dim and shadowy under its mantle of coal smoke.

The Belle Julie made her landing in the early evening, and Charlotte was busy up to the last moment getting her own and her aunt's belongings ready for the transfer to the upper river steamer on which they were to complete their journey to Minnesota. Hence, it was not until the Belle Julie was edging her way up to the stone-paved levee that Charlotte broke her self-imposed rule and slipped out upon the port promenade.

The swing stage was poised in the air ready to be lowered, and two of the deckhands were dropping from the shore end to trail the bowline up the paved slope to the nearest mooring ring. There was an electric arc light opposite the steamer's berth, and Charlotte shaded her eyes with her hands to follow the motions of the two bent figures under the dripping hawser.

One of the men was wearing a cap, and there was a small bundle hanging at his belt. She recognized him at once. At the mooring ring he was the one who stooped to make the line fast, and the other, a negro, stood aside. At that moment the landing stage fell, and in the confusion of debarkation which promptly followed, the thrilling bit of byplay at the mooring ring passed unnoticed by all save the silent watcher on the saloon deck.

While the man in the cap was still on his knees, two men stole from the shadow of the nearest freight pyramid and flung themselves upon him. He fought fiercely for a moment, and though he was more than doubly outweighed, rose to his feet, striking out viciously and dragging his assailants up with him. In the struggle the bundle dropped from his belt, and Charlotte saw him kick it aside. The waiting negro caught it deftly and vanished among the freight pyramids; whereupon one of the attacking pair wrenched himself out of the three-man scuffle and darted away in pursuit.

This left but a single antagonist for the fugitive, and Charlotte's sympathies deserted her convictions for the moment. But while she was biting her lip to keep from crying out, the fugitive stepped back and held out his hands, and she saw the gleam of polished metal reflecting the glare of the arc light when the officer snapped the handcuffs upon his wrists.

It was with a distinct sense of culpability oppressing her that she went back to her aunt, and she was careful not to let the invalid see her face. Fortunately, there was a thing to be done, and the transfer to the other steamer came opportunely to help her to re-establish the balance of things distorted.

She was sorry, but, after all, the man had only himself to blame. None the less, the wish that someone else might have been his betrayer was promising to grow later into remorseful and lasting regret when, with her aunt, she left the Belle Julie and walked up the levee to go aboard the Star of the North.

CHAPTER VII.

Moses Ichthyophagus.

After suffering all the pangs of those who lose between the touch and the clutch, Griswold had found the red-handkerchief bundle precisely where it had been hidden; namely, buried safely in the deckload of sacked coffee on the engine-room guard.

It came to light in the final half-hour of the voyage, when he and his mates were transferring the coffee to the main deck, forward. It had not been disturbed; and what had happened was obvious enough, after the fact. After its hiding, arm's-length deep, in a cranny between the sacks, some sudden jar of the boat had slightly shifted the cargo, closing one cranny and opening another.

With the money once more in his possession he had a swift return of the emotions which had thrilled him when he found himself standing on the sidewalk in front of the Bayou State Security with the block of banknotes under his arm.

As to the battle for the keeping which was probably awaiting him at the St. Louis landing, the prospect of coming to blows, man-fashion, with the enemy, was not wholly unwelcome.

The few necessary preliminaries were arranged while the Belle Julie was backing and filling for the landing. Since to be taken with the money in his possession was to give the enemy the chance of winning at one stroke both the victory and the spoils, he made a confederate of the negro, whose part he had taken in the quarrel with McGrath. The man was grateful and loyal according to his gifts, and Griswold's need was too pressing to stick at any trifle of unintelligence.

"Mose, you'll go ashore with me on the spring-line," he said, when he found his man at the heel of the landing stage.

"Yes, suh, Mars' Gravitt; dat's me, sholy."

"All right. You see this bundle. If anybody tackles me while we're making fast, I'm going to drop it, and you must get it and run away. Do you understand?"

"Whut-all mus' I do when I's done tuk out wid hit?".

"Get away, first; then keep out of sight and hang around the levee for an hour or two. If I don't turn up before you get tired, pitch the thing into the river and go about your business. If you open it, it'll conjure you worse than any Obi-man you ever heard of."

"No, suh! I ain't gwine open hit, Cap'm—not if dey's cunjah in hit; no, suh!"

"Well, there is—the worst kind of conjure this old world has ever known. But it won't hurt you if you don't meddle with it. Keep your wits about you and be ready to grab it and run. Here we go."

The pilot had found his wharfage and was edging the Belle Julie up to it. The bow men paid out slack, and Griswold and the black, dropping from the swinging stage, trailed the end of the wet hawser up to the nearest mooring ring. Griswold bade the negro keep watch and knelt to knot the hawser in the ring. While the negro sentinel was stammering, "L-l-lookout, Mars' Cap'm!" the trap was sprung.

In deference to the upcoming passenger from the Belle Julie, the two man catchers tried to do their job quietly. But Griswold would not have it so, and he was up and had twisted himself free when a blow from a clubbed pistol drove him back to his knees. Half stunned by the clubbing, he still made shift to spring afoot again, to drop his handkerchief bundle and kick it aside, and to close with his assailants while the negro was snatching up the treasure and darting away among the freight pyramids. After that he had but one thought; to keep the two plain-clothes men busy until the negro had made his escape. Even this proved to be a forlorn hope, since the smaller of the two instantly broke away to give chase, while the other stepped back, spun his weapon in air, and leveled it.

Rage-blinded as he was, Griswold knew that the leveled pistol meant surrender or death. When his captor had handcuffed him and was walking him toward a closed carriage drawn up before the nearest saloon in the river-fronting street, he ventured to ask what he was wanted for.

"You'll find that out soon enough," was the curt reply, and nothing more was said until the carriage was reached and the door had been jerked open. "Get in!" commanded the majesty of the law, and when the door was slammed upon the captive, the plain-clothes man turned to the driver, a little wizened Irishman with a face like a shriveled winter apple. "What time does that New Orleans fast train pull out?"

Griswold heard the reply: "Sivin-forty-five, sorr," and something in the thin, piping voice gave him fresh courage. Through the open window of the carriage he saw his captor glance at his watch and begin an impatient sentry beat up and down under the electric transparency advertising the particular brand of whisky specialized by the saloon. He was evidently waiting for his colleague to bring in the negro, and time passed.

The spring evening was raw and chilly, and the open doors of the saloon volleyed light and warmth and a beckoning invitation. Griswold's gift, prostituted to the service of the changed point of view, bade him read in the red face, the loose lip and the bibulous eyes the temptation that was gripping the plain-clothes man.

By a careful contortion of the manacled hands, which seemed suddenly to have become endowed with the crafty deftness of the hands of a pickpocket, he found his working capital in a pocket of the short-sleeved coat. It had been diminished only by the hundred dollars put into John Gavitt's hands, and the twenty he had given the negro. He wished he might have had a glimpse of the little Irish cabman's face. Since he had not, he made two hundred dollars of the money into a compact roll and put the remainder back into the inner pocket.

It was only a minute or two after this that the red-faced man's impatience blossomed into the thirst that will not be denied, and he went into the saloon to get a drink, first putting the cabman on guard.

NO EFFORT TO GIVE WARNING

German Submarine Makes Attempt to Sink Cunard Liner

TORPEDO BARELY MISSES HER

Repetition of Lusitania Horror Avoided by Perilous Margin—Several Americans Among Pasengers on Way to New York—No Valid Excuse Can Be Offered For Sea Outrage

Washington, July 19.—Protests to be filed by American citizens with the state department directing attention to the violation of rights suffered by them when a German submarine attempted to destroy the Cunard liner Orduna without warning will greatly strengthen President Wilson in the stand he has taken in the diplomatic exchanges with Berlin on the subject of the kaiser's sea warfare.

These protests will put an end to the German contention that for the last few weeks the president's demands were based on an academic view of the situation because all of the acts complained of by the United States had ceased with the sending of the first Lusitania protest to Berlin.

Officials in Washington take the view that Germany cannot fail to recognize as a valid cause of action any appeal by a citizen of the United States for protection, and that the danger in which Americans were placed by the firing of a torpedo at the Orduna gives such added force to the contentions of the United States that Germany cannot evade them.

According to experts in international law no excuse can be offered for the attempt to sink the Orduna without warning. Her status as a passenger ship bound for the United States removed her from the possibility of being classed as an "ammunition ship," thus depriving Germany even of the shred of argument she had to offer in behalf of herself in the case of the Lusitania.

The Orduna, bound from Liverpool to New York with 227 passengers, including twenty-two Americans, was attacked without warning it was learned on her arrival at New York, by a German submarine on the morning of July 9.

Twenty miles from the graveyard of the Lusitania off Old Head of Kinsale the Orduna escaped the Lusitania's fate by ten feet of space, the German torpedo churning the water that distance behind the liner's rudder.

Then the Orduna sped away. She was followed by the submarine, which rose to the surface, manned a gun on her deck and shelled the fleeing steamer.

The attack was timed at 10 minutes to 6 o'clock o'clock in the morning, when all but a few of her passengers lay sleeping in their berths.

Aroused by stewards, the passengers dressed hurriedly and went to the upper deck, where they put on lifebelts and took their places at the lifeboats. They heard the scream of the shells and saw the ocean spit up columns of water where the shells struck.

For half an hour the Orduna showed her heels to the assailant. Through marine glasses the passengers watched the dark splotch on the surface astern. They saw the low-lying Germany warship coming on with a bone in her teeth, but the Orduna's flight was faster than the pursuit and after seven shots had been fired without effect, the submarine gave up the chase.

A wireless call for help was sent out by the Orduna when the torpedo was seen. She was thirty-seven miles south of Queenstown. The reply, Captain Taylor says in his official reports, was that help would be given within an hour. It was four hours before the first British vessel, a small, armored yacht, appeared.

Comment in the American newspapers regarding the attack on the Orduna is hightly condemnatory of the latest act of outrage committed by a German submarine commander. With American passengers on board the Orduna was speeding toward America, and the German naval officer knew that, naturally, she would have no munitions of war aboard. This is dwelt upon at length by nearly every newspaper.

THUGS ROB AND ASSAULT VICTIM

John Dolan Found Unconscious In Street

POLICE HAVE CLEWS

John Dolan, 35 years, an employee of the water department of the city, was the victim of an assault and robbery at midnight Saturday. The affair took place opposite his home on Union street.

Dolan, badly cut about the head and face, was found by an Italian about 13.20 Sunday morning. He was unconscious. The efforts of the Italian to arouse Dolan attracted members of his family who carried him to the house.

Dolan has no clear recollection of the affair. He last remembers approaching the house. All his money was taken by the highwaymen.

Members of the police department who are investigating say that two men were implicated in the affair. They further say they learned that an auto party passed Dolan as he lay on the street and that although the front wheel of their machine nearly passed over his head the party did not stop.

SOAKED ON WATER WAGON.

City Employee Has Enemy Above And Below.

A city employee was caught between two bodies of water this afternoon. The man was driver of the watering cart and was engaged in laying the dust on Hancock street when a violent shower broke at two o'clock.

He was dressed for summer work and wore a straw hat. He turned his horses toward shelter and the horses hit up a lively pace. While trying to manipulate a brake the rain carried the driver's hat away. It floated into the gutter, a total loss, and was unclaimed.

HUGE CROWDS.

Sunday Is Record Breaker At Wollaston Beach.

Saturday and Sunday were record breaking days at Wollaston Beach. The tide coming high in the middle of the afternoon attracted hundreds of bathers, and the shore and the edge of the water along the edge of the beach was black with people. A resident living on the Boulevard for the past twenty years, estimated that the Sunday afternoon crowd was the largest in the history of the beach. Automobilists were also taking advantage of the pleasant sight and many stopped their machines and lined the boulevard to watch those on the beach and the boats on the water.

The large influx of a summer colony the past two months, and the steady flow of daily visitors points to the fact that the Beach is fast becoming a popular summer resort. It was noticed on Sunday that many of the visitors were from out of town, families bringing their lunches and enjoying a day at the water. It is an especially clean safe beach for children and hundreds of sun-burned, barefoot kiddies daily enjoy the pleasures of sand play and bathing.

Tuning Forks.

The tuning fork was the invention of John Stone, royal trumpeter, in 1811. Though the pitch of forks varies slightly with changes of the temperature or by rust, they are the most accurate means of determining pitch. Tuning forks are capable of being made of any pitch within certain limits, but those commonly used are the notes A and C, giving the sounds represented by the second and third spaces in the treble stave.

WILL TEAR DOWN OLD WOLLASTON HOTEL BLOCK

Chief Faxon Billings Declares It Is Fire Menace

Chief Faxon Billings of the fire department has declared the old Wollaston hotel building situated on the corner of Newport avenue and Beale street a fire menace and will probably order it torn down. Residents of Wollaston by letter and telephone have objected to Chief Billings about the condition of the building. The claim is made that it is not only a fire trap but that it is a serious menace to other buildings in the immediate vicinity.

This morning Chief Billings accompanied by Deputy Murphy of the office of Commissioner O'Keefe and Inspector W. S. Kimball of the state police visited the building and made a thorough examination to determine if the building was a fire menace and if possible to learn the cause of the fire which broke out in the building late Sunday night.

This afternoon Inspector of Buildings George E. Thomas will make an inspection of the building as to its safety for occupancy. Mr. Thomas sai dthis morning that if after examination he found conditions warranted he would declare it a menace and prohibit its occupancy.

Several conferences have been held with the agent in charge of the property and another has been arranged for this afternoon. It is said that he is willing to consider the advisability of taking down the three upper stories of the building in order to minimize the danger. Harvey Merrill, one of the owners of the building, is in Germany where he has lived for the past twenty years.

Chief Billings stated that this noon that the biulding as it stands today is one of the most dangerous fire traps in the city. This, he said, applied to the entire structure above the first floor.

The clammor for the razing of the building started bright and early Monday morning and prominent citizens and property owners are urging that it be torn down. They claim that if a fire should break out it might spread to valuable buildings in the immediate vicinity and that there would be great danger of a conflagration.

Chief Billings stated this noon would declare the building a fire menace and would order it torn down. The property is valued at $10,000 and there is an insurance on it of $8,000. Adjusters are now at work determining the loss by Sunday night's fire.

Chief Billings and Inspector Kimball after their examination this morning declared that the fire of Sunday night was undoubtedly the work of an incendiary.

JOVIAL JIM PRINCE OF PACIFIERS

An Italian woman created quite a disturbance in City Hall this morning and as she could not be made to keep quiet Officer Murray was sent for. The woman came into the hall shortly before 11 o'clock and entering the tax collector's office commenced to upbraid the clerks about her tax bill. She talked in a loud tone of voice, causing occupants of other offices to rush into the corridor to see what was the trouble.

Acting Mayor Crane tried to quiet the woman but without success. City Messenger Tirrell was then sent for Officer Murray. "Jim," who speaks Italian language quite fluently, addressed the woman in his soothing way and she immediately quieted down and agreed to pay her bill.

POLICE SEEK JOHN DOLAN'S ASSAILANTS

John Dolan, an employee of the water department of the city, who was assaulted, robbed and left lying in an unconscious condition on Union street, Saturday night, opposite his home, will be unable to return to work for at least a week. Dolan was badly cut about the head and face and is under the care of a physician.

Members of the police department who are making an investigation say that some progress has been made and they feel within two days identification of the two assailants said to be implicated will be established through the aid of a third person. As yet actual witnesses of the assault have not been discovered. Strong circumstantial evidence has been developed, however.

FOY CLERKS OUTING.

The annual outing of the clerks of the grocery stores of R. E. Foy takes place Wednesday at Glen Echo park, Stoughton. The employees are privileged to invite one man friend and as many women friends as they wish. The stores will close at 11 o'clock and the trip will be made by auto. An enjoyable program has been arranged for all. Ball games and other sports will be held. The luncheon will be served during the afternoon.

Mrs. William Chapman and Miss Millicent Chapman of South Central avenue are at North Falmouth.

NEW QUARTERS FOR DISPENSARY

Board of Health Agrees To Leave Durgin & Merrill Block

ACTION FOLLOWS PROTEST

The location of the free dispensary for incipient tuberculosis cases, which was opened in the Durgin & Merrill block, is to be moved in the near future, although the Board of Health is not ready at the present itme to announce its new location.

Chairman Buchan of the Board of Health when asked about the moving of the dispensary said that the Board at the request of Delcevare King, agent of the Durgin & Merrill block, had voted to secure new quarters. He said that the Board had new rooms in view and that it would be able to announce the location in a few days.

The present location had been objected to by other tenants of the building who threatened to move.

ASSESSORS HAVE NEARLY FINISHED

Now Working In Houghs Neck Section

The assessors are now at work in the Houghs Neck section and it is expected that work here will be finished this week. This is the last section of the city in which field work must be done, and with this over, comes the office work, so that it is doubtful if the tax rate this year will be announced before the latter part of September. The field work this year has taken an unusually long time owing to the many changes in valuation made by last year's board of assessors. The assessors started on their field work the first of April and ordinarily have been finished in June.

W. QUINCY NOW HAS JITNEY BUS

A new jitney line was inaugurated today between the West Quincy depot and Quincy square. The line is being run by Edward Bryan of Copeland street in a seven passenger machine. Bryan has made application for a hackney license and will operate, for a few days under a permit from police headquarters until his license is granted or refused.

The jitney line will go from the West Quincy depot to Quincy Square in from ten to twelve minutes. Mr. Bryan states if the business comes his way he will put on a large jitney such as are now in service in Providence.

The route of the jitney from Quincy square will be along Granite street, on to Copeland street at Brewer's corner to the West Quincy line.

WANT BETTER WORKING HOURS

The carmen considered ways to improve the working hours of motormen and conductors at a special meeting in Protection hall Monday evening. Complaints from several men were discussed but no decision was adopted. The complaints are the result of the recent scheduling of the summer runs.

The majority of the runs, according to Pres. William Gould of the local union, are satisfactory, but several early runs have been taken under protest by the men. The most complicated question has to do with the operation of cars from the Braintree barn. The matter is not a serious one and will probably be adjusted within a day or so.

FRANK IS BETTER.

(By United Press.)

Milledgeville, Ga., July 20—Frank's condition was reported better today. Doctors said he had an excellent chance of recovery. The infection appeared a little worse shortly after noon.

HOLD SIMPLE SERVICES.

The funeral of Mrs. Abigail Hobart Carey, widow of William E. Carey, was held this afternoon from her late home, 46 High street. The services in compliance with the request of the family were simple and were conducted by Rev. Stephen B. Laing of the Washington street Congregational church. The burial was at Mt. Wollaston cemetery.

BORN AT HOSPITAL.

Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. William Hastings at the Red Cross hospital at the Fore River shipyard since Mr. Hastings became the nurse at the institution. The third was born last week and has been named Ada Josephine. The family enjoys the best of health.

Lenz, Austria, July 1—An Italian birdman was brought down by air craft guns after he had destroyed with bombs the oil supply base at Fiume, Austria. The destruction of the aeroplane prevented a bombardment of the Whitehead Torpedo Works.

Mrs. Alice Hultman Ekhart, formerly of Quincy, whose husband is superintendent of the torpedo works, is quartered here in comfortable surroundings. Opposite her hotel is a large prison camp where 60,000 Russians and 3000 Italians are the unwilling guests of the Austrian government.

NEGOTIATE FOR PACKARD ESTATE

Plan Was To Erect Apartment Block There

Negotiations have been under way for the purchase of the Col. Packard property on Hancock street. The plan was to move the old house to the rear of the lot and erect a large apartment house between the new brick block and the building occupied by Sanborn & Damon. It is understood that the deal to transfer the property was about consummated but fell through because a right of way could not be obtained from the rear of the apartment to Cottage avenue.

SUBMARINES OFF COAST OF MAINE

(By United Press.)

Washington, July 20—Five government departments, state, treasury, justice, navy and commerce, had under consideration today reports that submarines, presumably Germans, were operating off the Maine coast. The story looks doubtful but nevertheless is being investigated. Apparently it reached the state department in the form of a suspicion by summer residents of the upper Penobscot Bay that Germany had a submarine base in that vicinity. Nothing was known officially but naval officers were told to keep the matter in mind and report promptly on it.

ANNUAL PICNIC OF EASTERN STAR

The annual picnic of Quincy chapter, Order Eastern Star, was held Monday at Nantasket Beach. The party, some sixty in number, left Quincy at 10.25 in a special car. Most of them carried basket lunches although quite a few planned to have dinner at one of the hotels. Soon after their arrival they were seated about one of the large tables in the annex at Hotel Nantasket where lunch was enjoyed.

Following lunch quite a few enjoyed a dip in the ocean. Later in the afternoon Paragon Park was visited and the various side shows taken in. Some of the party returned home in the late afternoon but quite a few remained during the evening.

TWO LICENSES ARE REVOKED

The hawkers and peddlers licenses of W. W. Wells and John P. Bevins have been revoked, according to a letter, bulletined at police headquarters, from Walter D. Fields, inspector of meats and provisions, on the ground that neither man lives in Quincy.

An investigation uncovered the fact that they are not even keeping their horses and wagons here. It is a regulation of the city that only persons having state licenses can operate in Quincy and that only residents can be granted hawkers and peddlers licenses.

Mr. Field also calls to the attention of the police department that all hawkers and peddlers wagons must be plainly marked with the full name of the owner and the license number.

MR. STEWART IS BETTER.

The friends of Andrew Stewart, for some years superintendent of Gypsy Moth work in this city, will be pleased to learn that he is reported this morning as being improved, so much so that he is able to be down stairs. Mr. Stewart served the city for several years as a member of the City Council and later was appointed to have charge of the Gypsy Moth work. In this he proved not only to be a faithful but a very competent official. He made a careful study of the subject and was thoroughly informed in regard to the pest. Some weeks ago he took a severe cold and for almost the first time in his life he was ill, the cold developing into the grip. He apparently recovered but had a relapse, since which time he has been seriously ill. His illness at the present time is attributed to arsenate of lead poisoning. Quantities of this poison are used during the early part of the year in spraying trees and it is believed that his system when weakened by a cold absorbed the poison.

MRS. THOS. PENDERGAST.

The funeral of Mrs. Mary M., widow of Thomas Pendergast, was held this morning from her late home, 125 Highland avenue, and was followed by a requiem mass at the Sacred Heart church, with Rev. John P. Cuffe as celebrant. The musical portion of the mass was by the regular choir. The burial was at St. Mary's cemetery, West Quincy. The bearers were Samuel Hanson, Thomas Whelan, John Hurley and J. O'Brien. There were many beautiful floral tributes.

FREE SHOWER BATH.

Several Enjoyed Treat In Square This Morning.

The service pipe which feeds the fountain in City Square burst this morning, sending a spray of water into the street and giving those who happened to be near by an unexpected bath. The water gang shut off the water and repaired the break.

CHIEF BURRELL OUT.

Chief of Police Burrell, who has been ill for many weeks, paid a short visit to City Hall Monday afternoon. He looks very much improved although he still shows the effect of his illness.

There was some sharp debating on several matters before the City Council Monday evening. On one occasion Councilman Smith rose to a question of privilege and resented the remark of the chairman that he had allowed him to speak "out of charity."

The remark came during the debate on the order establishing a building line on School street.

The finance committee had reported ought not to pass on the order establishing a building line on the street, and Councilman Craig promptly moved to strike out the word "not" in the report.

Councilman Smith moved to lay on the table. Motion lost.

The question was then on the motion of Councilman Craig. In response to his question of Chairman Bailey of the Planning Board, the latter recommended placing a building line on School street, which would entail no expense, impose no obligation of the city, and yet would prevent the erection of buildings over the line, thus lessening the amount of damages if the street were later widened.

Councilman McGrath asked if the Planning Board gave the lines for the widening at the corner. That was the real bad part of the street, he said. "School street is plenty wide enough for the traffic. I have been informed that there will be damages all along the line of the street. There is not a man in the Council that can state there will not be damages."

Councilman Smith: "The finance committee went into the matter and disagreed. The objection to the order is because we do not know where we stand as to the matter of damages."

City Solicitor Pinkham was asked for his opinion on the matter and in reply said he would read the answer he made to questions submitted by the Planning Board. He then explained the law regarding the establishing of building lines. In brief it was simply a restriction placed on the land. It was just the same as the selling of a lot of land with restrictions as to character of buildings, etc. It meant that if the line was established no building could be erected on the land between the building line and the present street line. There would be no damages unless the owners should decide to use the land for building purposes. If the owner of any of the land should desire to erect a store on his property he might claim damages because he could not erect his store on the present line of the street and has a right to go to the courts for assessment of damages. There will be no costs to the city at the present time. In order to obtain releases to the city it would be necessary to convey the property to the city.

If at any time the city decides to widen the streets it will then have to pay for the land taken. There is nothing however that will compel the city ever to widen the street. It simply means that no building shall be built outside of the building line.

Councilman McGrath claimed that by establishing the line it meant that the city intended to widen the street sometime.

Councilman Ross asked the city solicitor if in his opinion a line had been established years ago it would have cost so much to widen the street at the corner.

Councilman Smith raised the point of order that the question was not one of law.

The chair ruled the question a proper one and the city solicitor replying said that he would give it as his personal opinion that if a line had been established the city would not have had to pay $3,000.

Councilman Smith asked the city solicitor: "Do you think that it is advisable to take the land for the widening?"

The chair ruled the question out of order.

Councilman McGrath then asked if the law relative to the taking of land for municipal purposes applies to the land taken at the corner?

The chair ruled that there was no appropriation with this order.

The motion of Councilman Craig to strike out the word "Not" was voted on a rising vote of 18 yes and 3 no.

The report as amended was then accepted and the question was on ordering to a second reading.

Councilman Smith opposed. He said: "The finance committee is following its usual method. After turning it down in the committee five now vote for it. The deliberations in the committee do not really amount to much. We have been led to believe that there was a sort of halo about the finance committee."

Councilman Beeman took exceptions. "It is not right for any man to come here and make light of the committee. The gentlemen apparently thinks he has a halo of wisdom and that he was superior to the finance committee. I am sick of it."

Councilman Ross: "It is a wise man who can be convinced. Some can not."

SMITH RESENTS REMARK.

At this point the chair stated that he had allowed Councilman Smith to go on "out of charity."

Councilman Smith rising to a question of personal privilege resented the remark. "I want the chairman to understand it is no matter of charity that allowed me to speak. I was strictly within my rights and the remark was uncalled for."

President Whiton made no reply and the order was ordered to and took its second reading.

A motion was made to suspend Rule 27.

Councilman Smith opposed: "I do not believe fifteen members know

THOUGHT BUZZER A BOMB

St. Paul, Minn., July 20—Herman Wassermann, registering from New York, arrived at the Saint Paul Hotel late. So he was still sleeping at 9.30 the next morning, when repairmen came to work on his telephone.

The repairmen was given a key and entering the dignified German's room strung a wire without waking him.

Repairmen have a "buzzer" which they attach to a wire when working on upper floors. Then they go to the basement to make the connections, and the buz tells them they have connected the right wire. This the lineman did.

Wassermann, was awakened by a funny looking little thing buzzing in the middle of his room. The President's note to Germany, the sinking of the Lusitania, and the proximity to the Canadian border all occurred to him at the same time.

Grabbing the buzzer, he threw it in the hall. When the lineman got back to the room, he found the German earnestly attempting to cover the buzzer with bed covers and pillows.

BEGIN TO CAPITULATE.

Early in the war, while several emperors were withdrawing the relatively cheap decorations and honorary titles conferred on the royalty and nobility of nations that had become armed enemies, the committee of the French Institute in Paris attracted wide attention by refusing to disqualify foreign members for the pension so long regarded as the highest honor an artist or scholar can earn. Committee took the ground that the French Institute belongs to the world as well as to France, and that achievement in art, science and scholarship, being something altogether apart from politics and war, is worthy of recognition under any circumstances whatsoever.

Evidently those attempting to maintain this high and serene view have found it difficult to bear the strain of succeeding months, for Henri Lavedan, of the French Academy, has published an article under the caption, "The Accursed Tongue," in which he says of the German language:

"Never loved, today it has become odious. Those who not long ago knew it, and spoke it when they could not avoid it, fully agreed that it was the ugliest, the harshest and most disagreeable of tongues. Though we tolerated it when it was sung, it was ever lacerating to our ears. Music itself, despite the breadth, the abundance, the flexibility and the grace of its methods, could only with infinite difficulty drag and tow along the heavy weight of those 100 kilogramme phrases which it had the terrible task of swinging and notwithstanding all its efforts it only succeeded in underscoring, without softening, the bristling horrors of the accents."

According to this writer, the German language has become intolerable in France, where the sight of it written is exasperating and the sound of it spoken is torture. Some Frenchmen have even sworn that after the war it shall not only be banished from French schools but that it shall be "chased out of France, out of our minds and out of our mouths like the worst of pestilences." H. Lavedan discusses such extravagances quite seriously and in full sympathy, but, however reluctant, is wise enough to conclude that Frenchmen must go on learning to read, write and speak German. The more dangerous your enemy is, he argues, the more necessary that you should know his language. Therefore it is the patriotic though painful duty of Frenchmen to apply themselves to the study of German.

M. Lavedan's article tends to convey the impression that the learned men of Frances, as a result of the long strain, are about to come down out of their high and serene atmosphere and begin to talk as excitedly and foolishly as the Herr Professors of Germany have done from the outset.

FOUNTAIN STILL THERE.

Upon motion of Councilman McGrath Monday night's session of the City Council voted to lay on the table the order calling for the removal of the City square fountain. Councilman McGrath stated that he read the letter of Dr. John A. Gordon, printed in the Ledger a short time age, in which the physician, who was one of the original donors of the fountain, pleaded eloquently for the retention of the fountain which had been made possible by the self sacrifice of residents of the city who still held a sentimental regard for it. The order to remove the fountain would have gone through if Mr. McGrath had not risen quickly and made the motion to lay on the table. It is pleasing to note that the City Council had sufficient regard for the sentiment of the older residents of the city to delay the matter until fuller investigation.

CONSIDER THE MERITS.

Councilman McGrath has consistently preached and voted economy during his service in the City Council. There is always a danger encountered by any member of a deliberative body in consistenly adhering to a line of conduct, however wise that line of conduct may be in itself, and the danger is that his colleagues will come to look at him as a sort of "crank," whose position is known in advance of any vote and whose vote, therefore, loses something of its importance. However able such a person may be there is danger of his losing influence among his fellow members.

It is regrettable that this should be so. The City Council is entrusted with the business of this city and should take its responsibilities seriously. There should be nothing in a session of the City Council to keep a member convulsed in laughter as if he was attending a vaudeville show. One of the members was thus afflicted at Monday night's session. Every member is entitled to a respectful hearing by his colleagues if he has anything to say, regardless of whether his opinion happens to be the opinion of his listeners. Every proposition which comes before the Council for consideration should be treated on its merits and every councilman, if he has the best interests of the city at heart, should be glad to receive as much light as possible upon the question on which he must vote.

AMERICAN INTERESTS ABROAD.

There seems to be a growing tendency to speak contemptuously of American property interests in Mexico when discussing the plight of that distracted country. It is so easy to assume that Americans in Mexico are highwaymen and corruptionists, that whenever a new revolution begins there is immediate speculation as to the identity of the particular American "interests" that is fomenting it. Our late Secretary of State gave moral support to this queer view by a cynical observation about Americans having gone to Mexico voluntarily at their own risk. He argued that they had no right to ask the United States to protect them. When he and the rest of the platform committee were writing the Democratic charter of faith at Baltimore, he took another view. Here is one pledge: "The constitutional rights of American citizens should protect them on our borders and go with them throughout the world, and every American citizen residing or having property in any foreign country is entitled to and must be given the full protection of the United States Government, both for himself and his property."

Hundreds of Americans invested in property in Mexico, relying on their Government maintaining a policy of which the Baltimore platform plank was a fair description. Most of them have lost all they had. They were developing the country, employing labor and trying to make money. They desired peace and order and stability of government. The revolutionary bandits extorted tribute from them and finally compelled them to suspend industrial activities. This threw many Mexicans out of employment and most of them were forced to become revolutionary banditis to get subsistence. Perhaps it was not possible for the United States to avert these calamities, but it will be its duty to see that reparation is made sometime. The victims are entitled to sympathy instead of insults. The country has been enthusiastic over the recent Pan-American Financial Conference. Our citizens and our corporations have been urged to invest in Latin-American countries. We have dwelt on the advantages this will bring to us. But in the light of our attitude toward Americans who have already invested in the neighboring republic, what encouragement is there for the capitalist who would like some assurance that his investment will be protected?—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

A STRONG BOARD.

In addition to the name of Edison on the advisory board of the navy department, those of Maxim, Wright, Bell, Ford, Lake and John Hayes Hammond, Jr., are expected to appear on the completed list of American inventors and scientists. Not the least among them is young Hammond. His inventions in connection with wireless telegraphy are of the most startling nature. Our government should not neglect the opportunity to control them, and not allow them to pass to other countries as too often has been the case with valuable discoveries by American inventors. Orville Wright is another inventor who has performed such wonders in the conquest of the air that his place is assured on the board which Secretary Daniels is endeavoring to create. Wright says the United States needs 2000 aeroplanes right now, and it will take two years to make them. The planes might be made in six months, but it would require the longer term to produce the motors. It is true that the United States is unprepared for the worst, but there are indications that the necessity for preparedness is getting into the popular mind. The advisory board for the navy department is one of the strongest signs of an awakenment to the needs of the country, whether at peace or war.—Lynn Item.

Next Note to Germany Will Be of Definite Character

OUR RIGHTS ON HIGH SEAS

Insistence Upon Their Being Respected In Accordance With International Law—Must Be Change In Submarine Warfare Which Holds Many Hazards for American Citizens

Washington, July 20.—President Wilson and Secretary Lansing discussed in detail a draft of the note to be sent to Germany this week informing the imperial government what the United States will do if there is violation of American rights on the high seas.

The return of President Wilson from Cornish, N. H., gave Lansing his first opportunity to confer on the policy to be followed as the result of Germany's failure to satisfy the American demands made in the note of June 9.

It is understood that the president and Lansing found that they had reached about the same conclusion—that the next communication to Germany will be of a definite character, making it unmistakably clear that the United States cannot be expected to remain passive in the event of another attack on an unarmed and unresisting ship with a loss of Americans.

The note, it is now practically agreed, will announce to Germany the intention of the United States to assert its rights on the high seas in accordance with international law. There probably will be little or no discussion on the principles already treated at length in previous notes.

Prompt action in dispatching the note is generally forecast. Today it will be submitted by the president to the cabinet and possibly may be revised again at Friday's meeting. In official quarters it is agreed the communication will be on its way to Berlin by Saturday.

Although it is not certain whether reference will be made to the attack on the Cunard liner Orduna, it is known that that incident has swept aside previous suggestions that the next note will take into consideration that German submarine commanders in actual practice were conforming to the rules of international law.

Irrespective of the details of the Orduna attack, the fact that a vessel carrying Americans bound to the United States and transporting no contraband was attacked without warning impressed high officials that German submarine warfare still held forth many hazards for Americans traveling the high seas "on lawful errands."

While Lansing had been in frequent communication with the president since the latter went to Cornish, it is understood he did not obtain until yesterday the president's final decision of the extent to which the purposes of the United States should be stated in the next note.

The president is said to have become convinced that the next communication to Germany must point out in much more emphatic terms than have heretofore been used the earnest intention of the American government not to surrender any of its rights.

BLOOD POISONING FEARED

Frank In Critical Condition as Result of Stabbing In Throat

Milledgeville, Ga., July 20.—The condition of Leo M. Frank, suffering from a serious knife wound in the throat, inflicted by William Green, a fellow life-term convict at the Georgia prison farm, is critical.

Dr. Compton, the prison physician, is hopeful of Frank's recovery, though blood poisoning is feared.

Green, questioned by prison officials, said he believed he had been called "from on high" to kill Frank, whose death sentence for Mary Phagan's murder recently was commuted by Governor Slaton, now retired. He indicated no remorse, as he had done immediately after the attack.

LETTERS FROM OUR READERS

ON BATHHOUSE PHONE.

Editor of the Ledger:

Without attempting to detract from the credit due those who were successful in having a telephone installed in the Ward Two bath house, it seems but fair to give proper credit to those who started the movement some years ago. I think it was Peter M. Sullivan, then a member of the Quincy Ledger staff, who first publicly advocated the placing of a telephone in the bath house and his suggestions if memory serves me right, were editorially endorsed and encouraged by the Ledger. A few newspaper men, who were interested in the bath house shortly after it opened, started a movement to have a telephone placed in the bath house for emergency purposes and also tried to secure the installation of electric lights on the road leading through the Point Holes to the bath house and also on the bathing beach for those who might want to enjoy night bathing. During the administration of the late Mayor Shea the lights were secured but at that time, owing to some misunderstanding between the public service corporations, it was not possible to get the telephone. The party who finally secured the telephone service is deserving of a vote of thanks.

THE FOUNTAIN.

Editor of the Ledger:—

I observed the letter in your paper a short time ago by Dr. Gordon in relation to the removal of the fountain in the square, in which, it seemed to me, he presented some very cogent reasons for maintainig it in its present place.

I simply wish to say a word in support of his contention that it is an ornament to our city and capable some day of being a very great service to our people. At the present time that part of the fountain which gives relief to horses is in disuse, but I believe that it will again become of service, as enlightened opinion appears to be very strongly to the effect that less harm is done to horses in supplying htme with fresh water than can possibly arise from any contagion that might result from a diseased animal watering there.

And furthermore, as a sort of island or place of refuge, in crossing from the North side of Washington Street to the South side it unquestionably plays an important part in giving safety to pedestrians. Automobiles coming from Boston-ward are forced to make a detour around the fountain, while those coming from the South Shore proceed on the Washington Street side. I think it is patent to any one that such a division does increase the safety of travellers.

The fountain cost something approaching $7,000 and was the result of individual effort, and, as was stated by Dr. Gordon, it had a novel feature that resulted in cooling the drinking water for mankind, to a considerable degree. If I am not mistaken, it also has an arrangement by which, if desired, a jet of water can be thrown into the air, making a pretty display.

Be that as it may; the fountain in its entirety is ornamental and useful and might also be termed a sentimental structure, being a voluntary gift of Quincy citizens, and it would seem to me that any cheap, utilitarian idea of widening the street by removing it for the benefit of interested parties, would be a gross mistake and almost entirely unwarranted.

PLAN ANNUAL LADIES DAY

The annual ladies day of the Quincy Yacht club will be held Wednesday on the club house at Houghs Neck. If stormy the event will take place the following day. The program differs little from other years. From 3 to 5.30 o'clock there will be a review and sail in the harbor, and while this is in progress a promenade concert will be given at the club house for those who prefer to enjoy the scene from the club piazzas. On the return from the sail a lunch will be served and in the evening there will be dancing until 10.30.

In order that all who desire to participate in the sail may be accommodated the committee has engaged a steamer which will go over the course. A special car will leave City square for the club house at 1.40, returning at 11.05.

The preparatory gun will be sounded at 2.45 and a second gun at 3 o'clock. This will be the signal for the fleet to get under way and pass in review of Commodore Harry S. Crane. As each yacht passes it will dip its colors and will be answered by one gun from the flagship. After passing in review the fleet will leave the flagship on the port, thence to Jack Knife Ledge Buoy, leaving it to port, thence the yachts may sail anywhere around the bay desired. Immediately after the review the Power Squadron will execute its maneuvers.

TRAINING OF SWISS ARMY

By WILLIAM G. SHEPHERD.
(United Press Staff Correspondent.)

Chiasse, Switzerland, June 3. (By mail to New York)—Luigi Corti owns the biggest store in this town. He's an American citizen; he fought in the Spanish-American war in the Philippines; he lived fourteen years at Marshall, Texas. He knows about the Swiss army, as well as the American army and I'm going to put down a little talk that I heard Luigi giving a discouraged Englishman, who was complaining that Englishmen weren't enlisting. He may furnish an idea about how to raise a good army in the United States some day.

"Englishmen don't enlist?" said Luigi. "No wonder. They haven't got any interest in their army because their army never held any interest in them. Do you know how we raise our army in Switzerland?"

The discouraged Englishman didn't.

"I'm going to tell you about a boy that works for me. Every other Swiss boy has the same experience that he has. A Swiss boy has got two plans to choose from; he can either wait until he's twenty years old and take his training in large doses or he can begin when he's fifteen and spread it out. Pietro, my boy, wanted to spread it out. So, every Sunday, from six o'clock in the morning until 11, he's at the barracks, being trained with lots of other boys. Six months every year he must do this, until he's twenty. He's given a rifle, a uniform and all the fittings of a soldier and he's taught to shoot and do all the other things that a soldier is expected to do. He takes all his outfit home with him and keeps it there. At a moment's notice he may be called out to show how well he is caring for his kit. He is trained in gymnastics and in athletics and he learns all the rules of warfare. By the time he's twenty years old he's got an interest in his country and in its army.

"Talk about sharpshooters in Texas," said Luigi, turning to me. "I love Texas, but these Swiss boys can outshoot any Texan I ever saw. Every village has got its rifle ground. The ammunition is free. The government gives medals. Every now and then is a big shoot in some big town. The interest in shooting is so great that the hotels in this town will be filled to overflowing. People will come from all parts of the country. Newspapers will get out extra editions about the scores.

"Well, as soon as a boy is twenty years old, he is called to serve 65 days, every year, in some barracks or some camp. This goes on every year until he is thirty, though, if he began the Sunday drilling before he was twenty, he gets considerable time off, every year, after his first two annual encampments. Bewteen thirty and forty he serves fifteen days a year.

"Is it true?" Luigi asked the Englishman, "that when a man in our country enlists he's likely to lose his job?"

"Why yes," said the Englishman.

"Good Lord, no wonder they don't enlist." said Luigi. "Why, in our country business men have to keep the jobs for their men and boys who are called away. There are half a million men in the Swiss army on duty at the frontiers now, but everyone knows that his job is waiting for him when he comes back."

"How do you mobilize in your country?"

"Just send word around to the homes that the men are wanted at a certain place at a certain time. Each man gets out his uniform, his rifle, his ammunition and his emergency rations and goes to the meeting place. That's all there is to it."

"How do you raise officers in your Swiss army?"

"Any young man who wants to be an officer, can do so, if he's intelligent and is willing to put extra time on the job. The beauty of being an officer is that the government gives him a good position in peace times on the goverhment railroads or in the postoffice."

"It's too late for England," said the discouraged Englishman. Przemysl had just fallen again, like Juarez, Mexico, used to fall in Madero's time, and the Briton said frankly that things looked dark.

"Well, it isn't too late for the United States," said Luigi. "It's a system that makes fine men.

The strongest, finest, sturdiest soldiers I have seen in Europe are these same Swiss. They're not bloodthirsty professional soldiers created by militarism; they're merely good strong Swiss citizens, trained to defend their country if the need arises.

DIES SUDDENLY AT FORE RIVER

John Trapp Plays Ball And Dies Of Heart Disease

John Trapp, 33 years old, single, chief electrician U. S. N., assigned to inspection duty on the Dreadnought Nevada, under construction at the Fore River shipyard died suddenly at the office of the inspector of machinery at the yard Monday about 1.30, less than half an hour after he collapsed. Death was due to acute dilatation of the heart.

Trapp ate luncheon at noon and joined a group of men in a game of base ball. He did the pitching. At one o'clock he returned to the office and there collapsed. He was carried to the Red Cross hospital but was beyond assistance. His body was removed to the undertaking rooms of John Hall and today was taken to the naval hospital morgue at Chelsea where it will be claimed by his folks.

John Trapp was born in Worcester and when a young man went into the navy. He worked his way through the various grades and was preparing to take an examination for appointment as a warrant officer. He was transferred from the U. S. S. Dixie to the shipyard. He was a most popular man in the service and was a general favorite aboard the U. S. S. Saratoga. He was stationed in the Asiatic station for four years on that ship.

Trapp was athletically inclined and shortly after coming to Quincy in October became a member of a bowling team of government inspectors. His marks were high and he held several of the team records. Through his bowling activities he became well known throughout the city.

His brother Harry Trapp is a student at Harvard Law School where he became a student in the fall if 1912, after graduating from Dartmouth college. A sister who lives in Worcester also survives him.

MOTHERS PENSION SYSTEM.

San Francisco, July 20—Delegates from twenty-five states of the Union which four years ago knew nothing of the pensioning of mothers for the abolishment of child-poverty, are today meeting in the first annual session of the National Mothers' Convention at the Civic Auditorium. The subject of pensions from all angles and particularly the practice and theory of the present laws will be discussed.

Ways and means will be devised to have the mother's pension system taken over by the public school systems of the various states. Today a majority of the states pay mother's pensions through the Juvenile courts but this gives too much of a flavor of criminality to the movement. More than 60,000 Elks, standing for the principles of mothers' pensions, have been invited to attend the convention. It is estimated during the ensuing year that more than $10,000,000 will be paid to mothers for taking care of their own children, where the main support of the family has either died or failed to discharge his duty.

IN COURT WEDNESDAY.

Houghs Neck Store Proprietors To Answer Charges.

The proprietors of eight stores said this morning that if after examdistrict court Wednesday on charges of violation of the Lord's Day act. Acting Chief McKay, complainant, alleges all of them sold goods other than provided for in the Sunday license granted by the City Council. A quantity of evidence in support of the charges it is alleged was gathered at Houghs Neck last Sunday by members of the police department.

Miss Margaret Burke of Common street is at Old Orchard for a week.

CITY COUNCIL

what the city solicitor has been talking about."

Councilman Bolster: "I do not like the reflections cast on members of the Council."

Councilman McGrath: "We all want enlightenment."

The rule was then suspended and the order was passed.

There was some debate on the order widening School street. The finance committee reported in favor of the order but Councilman McGrath opposed. "This is an absolutely needless proposition. We are on dangerous lines. I for one want to know who is behind this. Someone has not shown his hand. If the order is passed we will make a tremendous blunder. There is a nigger in the woodpile somewhere."

The report was accepted however and the order passed under suspension of the rules.

Later in the evening Councilman McGrath attempted to have the order reconsidered but failed.

REBUILDING OF STREETS.

Another debate came on the matter of the rebuilding of streets. The joint committee on finance and streets reported a number of amendments to the loan order for $33,700 for rebuilding streets. The amendment struck out all reference to streets except Independence avenue, Liberty street, Rock Island Road and Common street.

It also changed the amount from $33,700 to $15,300 and made the bonds payable in two years.

Councilman Smith offered a minority report which added Willard street to the list and made the amount $20,300.

He moved the substitution of the minority for the majority report.

Councilman Smith spoke at length in favor of the minority report. He went into the matter of need repairing of Willard street. It is one of the important arteries of the city, he asserted.

Councilman O'Dowd also spoke at length on the question. He declared it was not a local matter. It was more than a city affair; Quincy and cities south of Quincy have been trying to have this street accepted by the Highway Commission. If the city will fix the part contemplated by the order, the Highway Commission will take the remainder of it.

Councilman Beeman: "All we know is what someone said." He opposed the minority.

Councilman Richards also opposed. He had visited the Highway Commission office that day and had been told it was not the rule of the commission to make any promises.

On a rising vote the minority report was rejected. 10 yes 12 no.

The majority report was accepted and the amendments were accepted.

On roll call Rule 28 was suspended by a unanimous vote. Rule 27 was also suspended and the order was passed to be ordained.

Councilman Smith offered a resolve that the Mayor be requested to transmit a recommendation for an appropriation for the rebuilding of Willard street. The motion was voted.

PASS OVER VETO.

Later in the evening the veto messages of Mayor Campbell on the street orders were taken up and those which were included in the loan order for $15,300 were passed over the veto. On the orders with the exception of Willard street, the veto was sustained. The Willard street order was laid on the table.

LAY ON TABLE.

The finance committee reported an order transferring the sum of $200 for the removal of the fountain in City Square.

Councilman McGrath opposed and moved to lay on the table. In support of his motion he stated that there was considerable sentiment in the matter of the removal of the fountain and one of the donors had written a letter to the Ledger in regard to the matter. It would be better to wait for a time.

The motion was voted 11 yes 8 no.

The commissioner made a return to the Council of the cost of permanent sidewalks built last year. An order assessing half the cost on abutters was offered and referred to the finance committee.

The license committee reported leave to withdraw on the application of the A. B. C. Oil company for permission to store gasoline at Wollaston. Councilman Yule offered a minority report granting the permit. After some debate, in which Councilman Ross favored the minority report, the minority report was rejected and the majority report was accepted.

The committee on fire department matters reported reference to the next City Council on the order calling for an appropriation of $15,000 to rebuild the fire alarm system. In making this report the committee said that while the great need of entirely rebuilding the fire alarm system of the city is apparent, owing to pressing needs along other lines as well as the need of economizing it believed the matter should be postponed. The committee also returns its thanks to Councilman Griffin, an electrical expert, who at their solicitation made a careful study of the fire alarm system and prepared valuable data for the committee. The report was accepted.

The committee on licenses reported orders granting a number of minor licenses which were adopted.

The committee also reported a large number of amendments to the building ordinance, among which was an amendment increasing the fees for permits. Under the order as reported a permit for a first class building costing $5,000 will cost $5 and for every thousand dollars valuation over that amount a fee of fifty cents will be charged. It also fixes the fee for elevators at $3 which is a new charge. The order was ordered to a second reading.

The finance committee reported orders transferring $200 to cover a part of Sachem brook and $200 to remove the fountain in City square.

Public hearings were held on establishing a building line on West Squantum street after which the orders were recommitted.

The finance committee reported ought to pass on the order relocating the northerly line on Howard avenue. Order passed.

The same committee reported ought to pass on the order widening East Howard street. Order passed.

The same committee reported ought to pass on the order for a granolithic sidewalk in front of the Greenleaf and Durgin & Merrill blocks. Order passed.

The same committee reported an order for $200 for covering a part of Sachem brook. Passed.

The same committee reported a resolve requesting the Mayor to forward a supplementary budget charging the different departments for water used. Adopted.

The street committee reported a substitute order changing the grade of Beale street and Greenwood avenue. Referred to finance committee.

Councilman Nelson offered an order directing the street committee to report at the next meeting on all matters before it. Voted.

On motion of Councilman Griffin all matters before the street committee were referred to a joint committee of finance and streets.

Councilman Smith offered an order requesting the managers of Public Burial places to submit to the City Council an estimate of the cost of rebuilding the iron fence and wall in front of the Old Hancock cemetery.

An order was adopted transferring the sum of $38.45 to pay expense of looking up tax titles.

On motion of Councilman Richards it was voted when the Council adjourn it be until Monday July 26.

Adjourned at 10.46.

Woman's World

A Titled Beauty Who Also Is Interested In Charities and the War.

THE COUNTESS OF WARWICK.

The Countess of Warwick, famous though she is for her beauty, has achieved quite as much distinction on account of her various and well directed charities, upon which subject she is as reticent as she is liberal. Two of the objects upon which her philanthropic energies are expended have assumed such proportions as to be beyond the power of concealment. These are the Easton School of Needlework and the Essex Needlework guild, both excellent organizations to aid the poor of England. The countess recently caused much talk by her criticisms of the social "butterflies" who make a pretense of nursing wounded soldiers—in reality posing and hindering the war work.

The countess is an optimist, as witness what she said in an interview not so very long ago.

"The best time of life is always after the age of thirty. Better than that is after forty. The very best time of life is fifty-three, which is my age. I just now am having the best time I ever had. At eighteen I was a pessimist. Now I know better. And because of what I've learned—by putting my experiences, my knowledge, to the best uses—I, like all women of my age, know better how to enjoy the days that are given to me."

This is what she thinks about the ballot for women: "The ballot in itself means nothing. What prompts the fight for the ballot in England and America is a fight for sex independence, a fight women are making—and which eventually they will win—because woman, given economic independence plus the ballot, will then be started on the road toward her right to exact a recognition of the fact that she is entitled to exercise her God given impulses quite as much as a man is."

The responsibility of the United States in the present war in Europe she voices thus:

"It seems to me that the greatest republic of the world has a serious duty, a grave responsibility. It has thriven on a gigantic scale without patronage or privileged classes, without titles, without such honors as are merely honors in name. Freed by the Atlantic from the domination of Europe, it has grown in power and given its citizens a life removed from the worst anxieties that beset the continent. It knows what kingship and unlimited power have cost Europe, and it embraces within its wide domain the children of every European nation, who dwell side by side in peace and amity. The freedom enjoyed by the republic would not be bartered for the wealth of the world, for that freedom is the secret of its eternal youth, its boundless energy, its untrammeled progress."

FURNITURE COVERS.

It is especially necessary to have looseness in a slip cover. There must be plenty of "give" to it. Otherwise when one sits on it it is apt to burst open, which would be most disconcerting, particularly if it happened to be some one else's chair.

The strip which runs from the extreme top of the chair back down to the seat, across the seat and on down to the required length, should be cut lengthwise of the goods without piecing.

Before cutting it should be tucked well into the crease between the seat and the back. The narrow fronts of the arms are cut separately.

The arm's inner side is cut lengthwise and extends over the roll, under which another seam occurs. The outside of the arm is cut in one with the side of the seat.

The rear side of the chair back is cut in two lengthwise pieces, with the opening up the middle. The back's "thickness" will also need a small piece, extending to the arm.

The fasteners are balls and sockets, or buttons and buttonholes or, in some instances, little bows. The balls and sockets are used for the back openings or for little tabs when seam openings are used.

PURITY CONGRESS.

San Francisco, July 20—The white slave traffic, the red light districts and their allied evils, social hygiene and public vice were warmly discussed by delegates to the Ninth International Purity Congress at today's session, the first business day of the convention.

Yesterday marked the formal opening of the Purity Congress, and the day was observed all over the country by special services in churches, with appropriate sermons. In this city a great mass meeting was held at which Gov. Hiram Johnson, Mayor James Rolph, Jr., of San Francisco, and President of the Exposition, G. C. Moore delivered addresses of welcome. Sessions will be held daily all through the week, the farewell meeting of the Congress being July 24.

Thousands of delegates from South America and the Orient as well as from Europe will attend the sessions. Clergymen and social workers from all parts of the United States will take part in the elaborate program which has been completed.

The World's Purity Federation is constantly at work promoting safe and sane instruction in social hygiene and advocates a single standard of morals. The work of the organization is recognized as having been a most potent factor in bringing about the present world-wide agitation against the social evil. Its object, in brief, is to labor for the suppression of vice, the enforcement of law, a more thorough rescue and reform work, the better protection and rearing of the young and to improve the general social health of the community.

On Saturday, July 24, the Purity Congress will hold joint sessions with the International Congress on Marriage and Divorce.

Anthony Comstock, secretary of the New York Society for the Suppression of Vice, is one of the speakers. His topic is "Children of Our Nation, and the Foes to Moral Purity." William Sulzer, former governor of New York, will talk on "Purity in Government." Mrs. Kate Waller Barrett, president of the National Council of Women, will speak on the topic, "The United States Government and the White Slave Traffic." A. Bruce Bielaski will represent the Department of Justice and will make an address.

LASSOING LIONS.

Bakersfield, Cal., July 20—Lassoing lions, a sport hitherto confined to the African jungles, bids fair to become an evening pastime for California ranchers, owing to the apparently increased numbers of mountain lions and their extraordinary boldness. For many years the beasts had been believed almost extinct. They seldom ventured near civilization. But recently two beseiged several Los Angeles women in a cabin all night not far from Pasadena.

After that one made two appearances near here, once chasing a woman who escaped on horseback and again leaping on the hood of an automobile. Ranchers in the vicinity of Tehachapi assembled a pack of hounds and hunted down another feline marauder after it had killed 100 hogs in a single night. Now the farmers are talking seriously about trying their hands with the lasso.

ONLY THIRD CULTIVATED.

St. Paul, Minn., July 20—Only 30 per cent. of the entire state of Minnesota is under cultivation, according to J. A. O. Preus, state auditor, today. Preus urges state aid to settlers, who he says, are often starved out in their attempts to get the first few acres of their claim under cultivation.

TYPHOID FEVER IN THE UNITED STATES

An editorial in the Journal of the American Medical Association, April 17th, says in part, "It is evident that Typhoid Fever is on the way to become a relatively rare disease in many parts of the United States. There are two main reasons for this. First, there are now comparatively few large cities in which the public water supply is likely to contain Typhoid Bacteria. Second, the increase in the practice of pasteurization has resulted in a dimunition in the amount of milk borne typhoid.

The Elm Farm Milk Company complying with the general demand by the Medical Profession and Sanitarians, were one of the first to scientifically pasteurize their milk. This milk is offered at the same price that rules for ordinary milk.

This process is the only one that absolutely guarantees the safety of milk against all of the infectious diseases.

Elm Farm Milk means SAFETY, SERVICE, SATISFACTION.

To Lend Beauty to Summer Fetes

Hats that are frivolous, along with hats that are dignified and picturesque, make place for themselves among hats that are merely sensible, for wear on the rounds of midsummer days and nights. But all must be chic and bespeak the part they are to play, leaving no room in the mind for doubt on that score.

Here are two that belong to the dignified and picturesque coterie, shown with examples of flowers that are liked on millinery of this kind. They bring to mind weddings and garden fetes and all sorts of charming, gay occasions to which they will lend their own beauty. Millinery holds the center of the stage where those who aspire to elegance in dress assemble and make a part of the occasion.

The wearer of either of these hats will be entitled to feel complacent as to her headwear no matter how much elegance may vie with her own. Honors may be divided, but she will not be outshone. The large light hat is of flesh-pink georgette crepe and malines with daisies and wheat in a wreath about the crown. The wheat is of white chiffon and silk fibers, and the daisies have petals of satin in white and in light blue and pink.

This hat has a double brim, the wider, lower brim of malines bound with crepe, and the overbrim of crepe. A narrow black velvet ribbon encircles the crown and is tied in a little bow at the back. The ends are brought over the brim and fastened on the under brim, hanging from there in long ties that are never tied.

The lovely black hat of malines and lace braid is made on similar lines except that its brim is curving. The lace braid over-lay on the malines brim has the effect of a double brim. The wreath of white satin oats is brightened by a single rose that deepens to pink at its center and is mounted on the crown at the left side.

Narrow black ribbon finishes a bandeau at the left and falls in long ends at the back.

JULIA BOTTOMLEY.

Scenting Linen.

A formula for a scent to place among her bed linen is usually liked by the dainty woman, and here is a most excellent one: One ounce powdered gum benzoin, one of powdered cloves and two of powdered cinnamon; add to these seven ounces powdered cedar wood and the same of dried lavender flowers; mix, sift and put into flat bags to lay between sheets and smaller ones for the slips; or, if pads are made to fit the shelves it will answer as well. Balsam, the fir tree balsam, gives of its own fragrance from pads made and filled with it and these, with the old-fashioned lavender, can never be improved upon for perfuming bed linen.

The Resolute has been dismantled for a stiff overhauling to prepare her racing gear for greater test of speed next week. She is in charge of Bob Emmons, 2nd., formerly of Quincy, her manager.

Lully Langer at San Francisco broke the qharter mile swimming record Monday at Frisco. His time was 5m 32 1-5s, 5 3-5s faster than the record held by Duke Kahanamoku of Honolulu.

Jim Scott, White Sox pitcher, has been sued by a manicure girl for breach of promise.

The Nutmeg of A. C. Jones and the Tyro of Hollis Burgess won the West trophies at Peaks island, Me., Monday. Only five of the 50 boats raced. The boats are with the Boston Yacht club fleet which is on its annual cruise.

The Pawtucket team is in fourth place in the Colonial league, three games behind Springfield, the leaders. George Barry, their catcher, has practically recovered from his injured hand.

The Feds are preparing for a base ball war in New York. Pres. Gilmore is now laying lines for an attack.

Andres Balsa of Portugal won from Ivan Michailoff, the Cossack, in a wrestling match at New Bedford, Monday night. The Cossack persisted in the strangle hold and the referee awarded Balsa the first fall for this offense. In the second bout the Russian, while rolling out of a hold, went through the ropes and injured his shoulder. He was unable to continue.

Down in New Orleans, there is a girls seminary where boxing is the main card. The school authorities have put it on the black list but they go on in private.

There will be 105 competitors in the state golf championships. Forty put in practice at the Woodland club Monday and it is expected 75 will have their final practice today. Woodland has the largest number of entries, Brae-Burn is a close second, Wollaston comes third, the Country club fourth and Albemarle fifth.

An item cut from a Lewiston daily states: Fraher, a catcher who worked for the Lewiston New England league team in the game against Newport a few Sundays ago, reported to Lewiston for duty, yesterday, and while he worked out with the team was not sent into the game. Fraher looks young and active. He will be given a tryout and may replace one of the present catchers, Smith and Foster.

A word of praise for Lou Callahan! Lou is the South Weymouth finger now representing the Livermore Falls club, of Maine. The local paper has the following to say about Lou: :

"Louis Callahan, the Weymouth high school pitcher, was in the box for the home team Wednesday and he pitched great ball, allowing but four hits. Gee! but he made them burn."

The protest of clergymen and other uplifters has brought about the suspension of Sunday base ball at the forts in the harbor. We have no objection to the change but would prefer to have seen the attention of these men directed at Peddock's Island where

"There are no ten commandments and a man can raise a thirst."

The committee having the proposed cross country run under auspices of the Board of Trade in hand must needs look sharp for proper dates if the event is to be what it ought to be.

The Fore Rivers and Bird & Son are in a pretty race for the championship of the Manufacturers league. But one game separates the teams, the locals being on top.

Gammell, one of the weakest Manufacturers league teams, nearly slipped one over on Fore River Saturday. It took the champs 12 innings to net the winning run.

By an act approved March 3, 1915, Congress created a law which has more farreaching effects on the efficiency of the navy than any legislation enacted within the memory of any one who may chance to read these lines.

By this is meant the clause in the Naval Appropriation Bill creating a naval reserve and making provision for the qualification of its members.

It has been customary for the people of our country to measure the strength of the navy by the number of Dreadnoughts, destroyers, submarines and other fighting craft. They either take for granted that the most necessary part of the navy—a trained personnel—already exists or that it will be forthcoming from somewhere when the alarm of war is sounded.

Trained Men Necessary.

It is true now as ever in the history of this country that there would be no lack of patriotic men to respond to a call in defense of its institutions, but without training in discipline and without previous experience with and an intimate and accurate knowledge of the mechanical appliances so essential in the operation of the guns, the torpedoes and the mines, as well as the motive machinery of the modern warship, they would simply be offering themselves as a sacrifice upon the altar of the country's honor.

For many years the navy has been graduating into civil life annually from 3,000 to 4,000 well trained and well disciplined men—men experienced in every mechanical art made use of in the modern man-of-war. This is no doubt a valuable contribution that the navy makes to the economic development of the country. At the same time these men represent a great potential value for the nation's defense if properly reclaimed and organized. They are scattered throughout the length and breadth of the land. Many of them are following the same trades they learned in the navy, and it may well be said that there is no mechanical art applicable to civil pursuits that may not be learned on a modern man-of-war.

A Twofold Purpose.

It was for the purpose of making these men an asset in the nation's defense account that the Navy Department proposed and Congress passed the bill creating a naval reserve. The operation of the law is twofold in its benefits to the navy and the country. By offering substantial inducements for reclaiming into organizations these valuable well trained men who have already left the navy to engage in civil pursuits, as well as those who will do so in future, the law automatically operates to encourage these same men to return to the regular service and those who are still in the service to remain for longer periods.

This is accomplished by basing the pay of the reserves on a sliding scale increasing with length of service in the navy.

In addition, the law places a substantial value upon honorable, efficient and faithful service, for no one unless entitled to honorable discharge upon the completion of a period of enlistment can partake of its benefits.

Under the operation of the law a man with an honorable record has the option of remaining in the regular service or of entering the reserve at stated intervals.

His Only Duty.

While in the reserve he is free to engage in any occupation and live where he chooses within the United States. He only obligates himself to be amenable to the navy regulations and respond to a call for active service in time of war. While active service in time of peace is entirely voluntary on the part of the members of the reserve, the government encourages them to perform a limited amount by making two months of such service a requisite for re-enlistment for a subsequent four year period in the reserve. This requirement is made in order that the reserves may keep in touch with the duties of the regular service. They may select any time to perform this voluntary service that will suit their convenience and while so engaged will receive the full pay of their rating in addition to their pay in the reserve as well as traveling expenses and subsistence to and from home.

A Reservist's Compensation.

The compensation given members of the reserve is, for those who go in the reserve within four months after leaving the regular service—$30 a year for men who have had four years' experience, $60 a year for those who have had eight and $100 a year for those of twelve years' experience. All that is necessary for a member of the reserve to do in order to obtain this pay is to keep the Bureau of Navigation informed as to his address and to report at some designated place in his own community once every quarter for muster and inspection and to sign the payroll. For this simple and not inconvenient act he will receive $7.50, $15 or $25, as the case may be, according to whether his experience in the navy has been four, eight or twelve years, respectively.

Organized by Sections.

This is the retaining fee the government pays a man of experience in order that it may count upon having his service in time of war.

The reserves are organized by sections in the various communities in which they live and come under the cognizance of the recruiting officer of the district in which the community is situated. There are some thirty recruiting districts throughout the United States. The recruiting officers keep the muster rolls of the members of the reserve in their respective districts and keep in touch with them.

Orders and other correspondence between the bureau and members of the reserve pass through the recruiting officer.

By this organization the department can on short notice and with a minimum of correspondence mobilize the reserves at any place on either coast.

May Transfer to the Reserve.

Another feature of the law which is of great importance in increasing the efficiency of the navy is that which permits a man to transfer to the reserve after sixteen or twenty years' service on one-third and one-half, respectively, of the total pay he was receiving at the time. This is a great inducement to retain many desirable men in the service.

The most of our men enter as boys at an average age of eighteen or nineteen. Sixteen or twenty years later, if they so elect, they may transfer from active service to the reserve.

A Fine Annuity.

At this time, at an age of thirty-four or thirty-eight years, for the service they have already given the government and for that which they stand ready to give in case of war they will receive from $33 to $50 a month for the rest of their lives. The amount mentioned is that which should come to a chief petty officer, a rate which any worthy man is able to obtain in much less time than sixteen years.

If there is any civil occupation in this country that will insure to the average young man after sixteen or twenty years so great an annuity for life it does not appear obvious to the casual observer.

For many years Uncle Sam has been paying more attention to the material part of the navy than to the personnel.

Lately, however, he has been taking stock of things and realized that a trained and efficient personnel is equally as important as Dreadnoughts, and, although it comes high, he has decided to go down in his pockets and pay the price.

The wisdom shown by Uncle Sam in arriving at this conclusion will be made clear when we review with him the situation in regard to the enlisted personnel which has existed for many years.

Not Vicious and Unruly.

The first thing that impresses us is the fact that two-thirds of the entire enlisted force is composed of men serving in their first enlistment.

Less than one-half of these terminate their period of enlistment with an honorable discharge, which entitles them to re-enlist in the service. Of those entitled to remain in the service 58 per cent avail themselves of the opportunity. The remaining 42 per cent go into civil life. Those who fall by the wayside are not all by any means vicious and unruly men. All are specially selected by the recruiting officers, which is obvious from the fact that only one out of six applicants is taken. The natural question is, Why do so many selected men fail to continue through their first four year period and qualify for re-enlistment? Of course some are found to be undesirable characters whom the navy will not have at any price. A great majority of the others, however, are really good men, but the navy has heretofore offered little inducement for a future career, while it demands much in the way of hardships and separation from home. In consequence many of these young men become disheartened and leave the service by desertion, by discharge, by purchase or by sentences of courts martial for offenses against military discipline.

Something to Strive For.

Now that the law places a substantial value upon the honorable discharge by providing that men who are entitled to such may at stated intervals elect to leave active service for the reserve on practically a pension basis with a substantial rate of pay graded according to length of service in the navy, we may hope to see a great change in the unfavorable conditions referred to. There is something to strive for—a reward for every one who proves faithful to his trust. We can look forward to an improvement in discipline, a higher standard of morale and a resulting increase in efficiency due to a greater number of men striving for and receiving an honorable discharge and to a greater number of these re-enlisting for longer periods in the navy. For every re-enlisted experienced man in the quota the government saves the expense of enlisting and training a recruit, and the navy gains in efficiency in due proportion.

The law has been on the statute books only a few months and can hardly be said to be fully understood, yet the reports of enlistments indicate that it is bringing the expected results. Ordinarily recruits on first enlistment outnumber the re-enlistments of experienced men in the proportion of two to one. Since the passage of the law, however, the reports show that the percentage of re-enlistments and extended enlistments, to first enlistments was for the month of March 61 per cent, for the month of April 79 per cent and for the month of May 82 per cent.

Official Regulations.

Navy regulations, governing the naval reserve, have just been approved by Secretary Daniels. Being based upon the law creating the reserve, the following extracts will convey in a general way its scope and purpose and the benefits it was designed to effect alike for the greater efficiency of the navy and the patriotic men who volunteer their services:

The naval reserve shall consist of citizens of the United States who have been or may be entitled to be honorably discharged from the navy after not less than one four year term of enlistment or after a term of enlistment during minority.

Men enlisted in the naval reserve are not required to perform active service in time of peace except at their own request.

Enlistments in the naval reserve will be made in the rating in which last honorably discharged from the navy and for a period of four years, unless sooner discharged by competent authority.

No man will be first enlisted in the naval reserve after eight years from the date of last discharge from the navy, nor unless he be found to be physically fit to perform all the duties of the rating in which last discharged.

Enlistments in the naval reserve will be made in two classes: Class one consists of those men who enlist in the naval reserve within four months from date of their last honorable discharge from the navy. Class two consists of those men who enlist in the naval reserve after four months and within eight years from date of their last honorable discharge from the navy.

On and after March 4, 1917, any enlisted man of the navy, upon voluntary application at the expiration of an enlistment or extended enlistment for which he is entitled to an honorable discharge and after completing service in the navy or marine corps of sixteen or twenty or more years, may be transferred to the naval reserve by order of the secretary of the navy. Men so transferred will, however, be treated by the department, particularly in respect to the permanency of their status in the naval reserve as enlisted men on the retired list of the navy, except they may be called on for active duty in time of peace as hereinafter provided.

Members of the naval reserve of Class one who have served less than eight years in the navy will be paid at the rate of $30 per annum, and those who have served eight years or more and less than twelve years in the navy will be paid at the rate of $60 per annum, and those who have served twelve years or more in the navy $100 per annum.

All members of the naval reserve of Class two will be paid at the rate of $12 per annum.

Members of the naval reserve who have, when transferred to the naval reserve, completed service in the navy of sixteen or twenty or more years will be paid at the rate of one-third and one-half, respectively, of the sum of the base pay and permanent additions thereto, which they were receiving at the close of their last service in the navy.

For computing pay in the naval reserve all previous service in navy or marine corps counts, whether continuous or not. Men now in civil life who have had previous service in navy or marine corps can enlist in navy and have all benefits of prior service counted in computing pay in reserve.

When actively employed with the navy members of the naval reserve are entitled to the rate of pay they were receiving when last honorably discharged from the navy (base pay plus permanent additions thereto), and, in addition, their regular pay in the naval reserve.

Members of naval reserve when actively employed with the navy receive subsistence and travel allowances to and from home.

Members of the naval reserve of Class one who re-enlist in the navy within four months from the date of their discharge from the naval reserve are not entitled to a gratuity of four months' pay, but their re-enlistment in the navy shall be held and considered to have been made within four months from the date of discharge from the navy for the purpose of continuous service pay.

Members of the naval reserve who have been transferred to the naval reserve may be discharged for the purpose of re-enlisting in the navy. When so re-enlisted in the navy within four months of the date of discharge from the naval reserve they are not entitled to a gratuity of four months' pay, but their re-enlistment in the navy shall be held and considered to have been made within four months from the date of discharge from the navy for the purpose of continuous service pay.

In order to be eligible for re-enlistment in the naval reserve a man must have had not less than two months' active service on board a vessel of the navy during the period covered by his last enlistment in the naval reserve.

Men transferred to the naval reserve will be required to perform two months' active service for each four year period of service in the naval reserve subsequent to the first four year period unless such service be waived by the bureau of navigation.

In time of war members of the naval reserve may be required to perform active service with the navy throughout the war, not to exceed the term of enlistment in the case of those enlisted in the naval reserve.

In the case of men re-enlisting in the navy after service in the naval reserve the period of time they were actively employed with the navy while enlisted in the naval reserve will, for the purpose of retirement, be counted as active service in the navy.

A naval reserve button, which may be worn with civilian dress, will be issued to all members of the naval reserve.

Large Body of Trained Men.

It may therefore be safely predicted that the act creating a naval reserve and making provision for the qualification of its members will operate to provide a large body of trained and experienced ex-service men now in civil life, organized and ready upon short notice to man our fighting ships in reserve and at the same time to increase the efficiency of the regular enlisted force by inducing more experienced men to remain in the navy.

The naval reserve feature of a naval career is, therefore, of great interest not only to men already enlisted, but to prospective recruits as well. It is, however, only one of the many attractive features of the service, concerning which the Bureau of Navigation, Washington, and any naval recruiting station will furnish upon request such additional information as may be desired.

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I—Kenneth Griswold, an unsuccessful writer because of socialistic tendencies, sups with his friend Bainbridge at Chaudiere's restaurant in New Orleans and declares that if necessary he will steal to keep from starving.

CHAPTER II—Griswold holds up Andrew Galbraith, president of the Bayou State Security, in his private office and escapes with $100,000 in cash.

CHAPTER III—By original methods Griswold escapes the hue and cry and goes aboard the Belle Julie as a deckhand. He unexpectedly confronts Charlotte Farnham of Wahaska, Minn., who had seen him cash Galbraith's check in the bank.

CHAPTER IV—Charlotte recognizes Griswold, but decides to write to Galbraith rather than denounce the robber to the captain and so incur unpleasant notoriety.

CHAPTER V—Charlotte sees the brutal mate rescued from drowning by Griswold and delays sending her letter to Galbraith.

CHAPTER VI—Charlotte talks to Griswold and by his advice sends her letter of betrayal to Galbraith anonymously.

Get down here and keep an eye on this dicky-bird," he ordered. "Slug him if he tries to make a break."

But the cabman hung back.

"I'm no fightin' man, sorr; an', besides, I don't dare lave me harrses," he objected. But the officer broke in angrily.

"What the devil are you afraid of? He's got the clamps on, and couldn't hurt you if he wanted to. Come down here!"

The little Irishman clambered down from his box reluctantly, with the reins looped over his arm. When he peered in at the open window of the carriage the big man had passed beyond the swinging screens of the saloon entrance and Griswold seized his opportunity quickly.

"What's your job worth, my man?" he whispered.

The cabman snatched a swift glance over his shoulder before he ventured to answer.

"Don't yez be timptin' a poor man wid a wife an' sivin childer hangin' to um—don't yez do it, sorr!"

Griswold, the brother-keeping, would have thought twice before opening any door of temptation for a brother man. But the new Griswold had no compunctions.

"It's two hundred dollars to you if you can get me away from here before that red-faced drunkard comes back. Have a runaway—anything! Here's the money!"

For a single timorous instant the cabman hesitated. Then he took the roll of money and crammed it into his pocket without looking at it. Before Griswold could brace himself there was a quick whish of the whip, a piping cry from the driver, and the horses sprang away at a reckless gallop, with the little Irishman hanging to the reins and shouting feebly like a faint-hearted Automedon.

Griswold caught a passing glimpse of the red-faced man wiping his lips in the doorway of the saloon as the carriage bounded forward; and when the critical instant came, he was careful to fall out on the riverward side of the vehicle. It was a desperate expedient, since he could not wait to choose the favorable moment, and the handcuffs made him practically helpless. Chance saved the clumsy escape from resulting in a speedy recapture. When he tumbled out of the lurching carriage he was hurled violently against something that figured as a wall of solid masonry and was half stunned by the concussion. None the less, he had wit enough to lie motionless in the shadow of the wall, and the hue and cry, augmented by this time to a yelling mob, swept past without discovering him.

When it was safe to do so, he sat up and felt for broken bones. There were none; and he looked about him. The wall of masonry resolved itself into a cargo of brick piled on the levee side of the street, and obeying the primary impulse of a fugitive, he quickly put the sheltering bulk of it between himself and the lighted thoroughfare.

The next step had to be resolutely thought out. How was he to get rid of the handcuffs? Any policeman would have a key, and there were doubtless plenty of locksmiths in St. Louis. But both of these sources of assistance were out of the question. Whom, then? The answer came in one word—McGrath. On a day when the upriver voyage was no more than fairly begun, one of the negroes in the crew had procured a bottle of bad whisky. To pacify him the mate had put him in irons, using two pairs of handcuffs for the purpose. Therefore, McGrath must have a key.

But would McGrath do it? That remained to be seen; and since hesitation was no part of Griswold's equipment, he covered the fetters as well as he could with a scrap of bagging, and walked boldly down the levee and aboard the Belle Julie, falling into line with the returning file of roustabouts.

The mate was at the heel of the foot plank, and he saw at once what the scrap of sacking was meant to hide.

"Hello, there, Gavitt!" he called, not less gruffly than of yore, but without the customary imprecation; "what are ye doing with thim things on?"

Griswold told a straight story, concealing nothing—not even the detective's refusal to tell him what he was arrested for.

"Ye'd ought to find that cabby and buy him a seegyar," was the mate's comment. "So ye legged it, did ye?"

He led the way up to his quarters in the texas, and telling Griswold to wait, went down on his knees to rummage in the locker beneath the berth.

"I've got a couple o' pair av thim things in here, somewhere, and maybe the key to 'em will fit yours?"

McGrath found his handcuffs and tried the key in those upon Griswold's wrists. It fitted.

"Now ye're fut and hand loose, I'll say to ye what I wouldn't say to a cripple. Wan is that ye're not Gavitt; ye're no more like him than I am. Let that go. Ye've been up to some devilltry. But that's all over and gone. What'll ye be doing next?"

Griswold took a leaf out of the past. Safety in a former peril had grown out of a breakfast deliberately eaten in a cafe next door to the Bayou State Security.

"What would I do but finish my job on the Julie?" he said, pushing the theory to its logical conclusion.

The mate shook his head. "Ye needn't do that; the cops might be coming down here and running you in again. How much pay have ye drawa?"

"Not any."

McGrath took a greasy wallet from his pocket and counted out a deckhand's wages for the trip.

"Take this, and I'll be getting it back from the clerk. It might not be good f'r ye to show up at the office."

Griswold suffered a sudden return to the meliorating humanities.

"I've been calling you all the hard names I could lay tongue to, McGrath, and there have been times when I would have given the price of a good farm for the privilege of standing up to you on a bit of green grass with nobody looking on. I take it all back. You say you haven't forgotten; neither will I forget, and maybe my turn will come again, some day."

"Go along with you," growled the rough-tongued Irishman, whose very kindness had a tang of brutality in it. "If you're coming across the naygur, Mose, anywhere, sind him back and tell him I'll see that he gets real money f'r helping us unload. Off with ye, now, whilst they're catching up with yer runaway cab."

Griswold went leisurely, as befitted his theory, and upon reaching the levee, turned aside among the freight pyramids in search of his confederate. Now that there was time to recall the facts he feared that the negro had been taken. He had secured but a few yards' start in the race, and his pursuer was a white man, able to back speed with intelligence. Griswold had a sickening fit of despair when he contemplated the possibility of failure with the goal almost in sight; and the reaction, when he stumbled upon the negro skulking in the shadows of a lumber cargo, was sharp enough to make him faint and dizzy.

The negro did not recognize him at first and was about to run away, when Griswold shook off the benumbing weakness and called out.

"T'ank de good Lawd! is dat you-all, Cap'm Gravitt? I's dat shuck up I couldn't recognize my ol' mammy! Tek dishyer cunjah-bag o' yourn 'fo' I gwine drap hit. Hit's des been bu'nin' my han's ev' sense I done tuk out wid it!"

Griswold took the handkerchief bundle, and the mere touch of it put new life into him.

"Where is the fellow who was chasing you, Mose?" he asked.

"I's nev' gwine tell you dat; no, suh. Las' time I seed him, he's des t'arin' off strips up de levee after turrer fellah."

"What other fellow?"

The negro laughed and did a double shuffle at the mere recollection of it.

"Hi-yah!—Turrer fellah is de fellah what done tuk my job. Hit was des-a-way: when I t'ink dat white man gwine catch me, sholy, I des drap down in de darkes' cawnch I kin fin'; dat's what I done, yas, suh. He des keep on a-goin', spat, spat, spat, an' when he come out front de Gineral Jackson over yondeh, one dem boys what's wukkin' on her, he tuk out, an' dat white man des tu'n hisself loose an' mek his laigs go lak he gwine shek 'um plum off; yas, sah!"

Griswold suffered another lapse into the humanities when he saw the list of participants in his act growing steadily with each fresh complication, and he said, "I'm sorry for that, Mose."

"Nev' you min' 'bout dat, Cap'm. Dat boy he been doin' somepin to mek him touchous, 'less'n he nev' tuk but dat-a-way, no, suh!"

"Maybe so. Well, we can't help it now. Here is the twenty I promised you."

"T'ank you, suh; t'ank you kin'ly, Cap'm. You-all's des de whites' white man ev' I knowed. You sholy is."

"What are you going to do with yourself, now?" Griswold inquired.

"Who, me? I's gwine up yondeh to dat resteraw an' git me de bigges' mess o' fried fish I can hol'—dat's me; yas, suh."

"McGrath says he'll pay you levee wages if you'll come back to the boat and help get the cargo out of her."

"Reckon I ain't gwine back to de Julie; no, suh. Dat'd be gittin' rich too fas' for dis niggeh. Good-night, Cap'm Gravitt; an' t'ank you kin'ly, suh."

Griswold went his way musing upon the little object lesson afforded by the negro's determination. Here was a fellow man who was one of the feeblest of the underdogs in the great social fight; and with money enough in hand to give him at least a breathing interval, his highest ambition was a mess of fried fish.

The object lesson was suggestive, if not specially encouraging, and Griswold made a mental note of it for further study when the question of present safety should be more satisfactorily answered.

Hints For Housewives

French Toast Sandwiches.

French toast sandwiches are among the favorite tea room novelties that housewives find it easy to duplicate at home. These sauted slices of bread, put together in pairs, with any preferred filling have the advantage of being adaptable to any of the three meals of the day, while their particular mission is to afford something a little out of the ordinary for the Sunday night tea table or the after theater supper. The occasion must decide what filling is appropriate and whether the French toast sandwich shall be served crisp and dry from the griddle or accompanied by a suitable sauce.

The novelty consists in the fact that after the sandwich is made it is pressed closely together and then dipped in a thin batter made in the proportion of one beaten egg to a half cupful of milk. If the filling of the sandwich is a savory mixture of egg, cheese, fish, meat or fowl, a pinch each of pepper and salt should be added to the batter. If, however, the sandwich has a sweet filling, the batter should be slightly sweetened and flavored with a teaspoonful of sherry. Cook the moistened sandwich on a hot, well greased griddle, browning first on one side and then on the other. A shallow iron frying pan will answer the same purpose and olive oil will be found an excellent substitute for butter.

For those who like something more than the ordinary breakfast of fruit, cereal and eggs several variations of the French toast sandwich will be found appropriate to accompany the morning coffee. Flaked salt codfish, made a little less moist than in the popular dish known as creamed codfish, is an excellent filling for a breakfast appetizer of this kind. Half fish and half finely chopped hard boiled egg makes an equally good mixture, or a little finely chopped cold boiled potato may be used. Season well and dip in batter. When thoroughly browned on the griddle serve hot, either with or without a little white sauce.

A particularly appetizing combination, suited to serve at breakfast, luncheon or Sunday night supper, calls for equal parts of finely chopped cold boiled ham and tongue. This should be seasoned with either French or English mustard and moistened with a little cream or rich milk.

Lovers of cheese will enjoy a hot cheese sandwich with filling of softened cheese moistened with cream and highly seasoned with Worcestershire sauce and paprika. The batter should also be seasoned, and the finished sandwich when toasted and served piping hot should have much the flavor of a Welsh rabbit.

As a simple sweet course at luncheon or family dinner French toast sandwiches with fresh fruit or jam filling will be found delicious.

The story goes that we are indebted to a thrifty housewife for this particular brand of toasted sandwiches. In her endeavor to utilize an oversupply of dainty sandwiches prepared for an afternoon tea the idea occurred to her to brown a few of them on the griddle for her luncheon the next day.

A French Dainty.

Tenderloin and mushrooms is the plain name in this country, but this way of doing the cookery is purely French.

Peel six mushrooms and take out the stems. Then drop them for five minutes in cold salted water. Take them out, dry on a fresh cloth and put them in the plat with a teaspoonful of butter. Cover the plat with a saucer or breakfast plate, set it over the blaze and saute the mushrooms for fifteen minutes without uncovering. Then dump them in a hot little vessel, cover that and keep warm until the steak is cooked.

Scrape the tenderloin steak with a knife, rub it over with the cut side of a lemon and put on a faint dust of salt and pepper. Then place the plat with all the mushroom taste and a little of the sauce over the fire and when piping hot put in the steak. It should brown a little on either side, but still be pink inside. When cooked pour the mushrooms back into the pan, add a pinch more of butter if the sauce has dried out, cover the plat, set it in the oven for three minutes and serve at once. As mushrooms draw their own juices, only enough butter to start them cooking must be used when they are first prepared.

Chocolate Cake.

One-half cake of chocolate, one-half cupful of sugar, one-half cupful of milk, one egg yolk and a pinch of salt. Cook in double boiler until smooth.

One cupful of sugar, one-half cupful of butter, creamed together well; add two eggs beaten light, one cupful of milk and one level teaspoonful of soda dissolved in milk, two level cupfuls of flour and one tablespoonful of vanilla. Mix this with the other, beat well and bake one-half hour.

Tomato Eggs.

Beat one-half dozen fresh eggs lightly. Rub one-half cupful of tomatoes through a colander and mix with the eggs. Stir in one tablespoonful lemon juice, one small onion finely minced, one tablespoonful minced parsley, one teaspoonful each salt and celery salt and a generous dash of sweet paprika. Pour into a double boiler, place over boiling water and stir constantly until thick enough to serve on toasted bread.

Wm. H. MACE FINED $10

William H. Mace, proprietor of the Lake View Ice Co., was fined $10 each by Judge Avery this morning on three complaints charging violation of the laws regulating the employment of labor. The State Board of Labor and Industries alleged he failed to make weekly payments when due.

The three complaints were brought in the interest of William Leroy and J. Carlmark, formerly employed as drivers, and Fred Burt, former route foreman. Edward F. Wallace represented the board and John R. Dexter, a board inspector, was a witness. The former employees also took the stand. Atty. J. J. McAnarney was counsel for the defense. The cases were the first of their kind in the district court.

Mace entered an appeal. Judge Avery ordered him to set sureties at $300 and took his personal recognizance.

TWO CHARGED WITH THEFTS OF LEATHER

President of Lynn Concern Gives Himself Up to Police

Lynn, Mass., July 20.—Matthew Connell, Jr., president of the Matthew Connell company, dealers in leather remnants, was arrested, charged with larceny. He appeared at the police station with a bondsman and stated that he had heard he was wanted.

His arrest, the police believe, will assist in clearing up leather stealing on a wholesale plan that has been going on for months. Edward Dillon, a shoe worker, had been arersted by a policeman detailed to guard a factory that had suffered much from thieves.

Dillon could not satisfactorily explain why he was in the factory and was booked for breaking, entering and larceny. Admissions he made resulted in the arrest of Connell.

SHORT IN PRECEDENTS.

Austria, at the request of Germany without doubt, has sent a note to this country protesting against the sale of munitions of war by manufacturers in this country to the enemies of that nation on the ground that it is "not in consonance with the definition of neutrality." It is expected that Turkey will follow suit and when it does it is stated that this government will simultaneously inform all the Germanic allies of its unalterable view that private concerns in this country have the right to sell war munitions to whoever want to buy.

The Austrian note comes as a surprise, as Germany has previously in diplomatic correspondence, admitted the legal right of this country to trade in war munitions, although it placed some emphasis on what it termed the super-normal growth of the manufacture of arms and explosives in this country. It also has been urged by Germany that this country has a right to stop the selling of munitions to the Allies because of the violation of other neutral rights by Great Britain.

Of course this country will be able to cite plenty of cases where Germany has furnished war materials to countries at war.

The Germanic allies can hardly be blamed for doing all in their power to induce this country to forbid the exportation of arms, but they do not seem to have a leg to stand on in way of precedents.—Taunton Herald News.

IOWA LEADS COUNTRY.

There is no time limit on the treatment. Parents of such children make application for treatment to the distrct court. The court names a physician to make examination and on this report orders the child to Iowa City. It is expected thousands of deformed poor children will be made strong under the provisions of this law.

TILLETT PREACHES "BLOODY MURDER"

BY WILBUR S. FORREST.

(By United Press)

London, July 2; (By mail to New York)—Ben Tillett, the British personification of "Mother" Jones, "Bill" Haywood, Charles Moyer and Samuel Gompers, all rolled into one, is organizing another strike in England.

Tillett has conducted hundreds of strikes. He's the one man who holds British labor under his thumb. When Ben Tillett tells British labor to strike, British labor strikes. When he told British transport workers to strike two years ago, British transport workers tied up traffic facilities of London and practically every important industrial center.

Tillett today is oragnizing the biggest strike he has yet attempted. His latest strike is against the Germans and he is urging every union labor man in Great Britain to "get on the job."

"I'm preaching bloody murder," said Tillett to an enormous crowd of workmen assembled at a London industrial suburb. "By God, we've got to strike and we've got to strike now. I want every ounce of British nerve; every ounce of British energy and every ounce of British gold to get behind and push. British capitalists have got to get into the game. They've got to get rid of the idea that war is being waged to give them profits.

"We want ammunition, shells; we want gas; we want every hellish death-dealing device known to man; we want the fighting spirit. We're going on strike against the Germans. If we don't strike now and strike hard there is no use striking. The capitalists must strike with us. If we don't crush the Germans tomorrow there'll be no capitalists. Every man who can't get into khaki can get into the workshops. We're fighting Prussianism; something that has been preparing to murder civilization for forty years. Our fight must not be any kid glove business. We've got to murder back and murder back as hard as we can. It must be slaughter for civilization's sake. Get busy and let's slaughter."

And so, Ben Tillett, who before the war hated capital like a "Bill" Haywood, fought industrial oppression like a Moyer and inflamed workmen against both like a "Mother" Jones has transferred his hate and fighting capabilities to the Germans and is telling British workmen from platforms and soap boxes to get into the game.

While Lloyd George, the new minister of munitions is mobilizing industry, Tillett is mobilizing labor and to use his own expression, he's preaching "organized bloody murder."

Laborers who refused to listen to members of the British cabinet who have been speaking throughout England on the need of National defense are listening to Tillett. Tillett is one of them and they believe what he says.

Tillett has just returned from Northern France where he saw the German menace, chatted with some of the men who have followed him in former strikes but who are now in khaki, lunched with General French and studied the situation with his own eyes.

"I've learned that there is another meaning to the word 'strike' now now," Tillett is telling his audiences in England.

Tillett, however, is telling the government something with no less vehemence. While he is organizing his strike against Germany the manufacturers and capitalists of England must play the game.

"The workmen must be assured that while they are sweating and laboring and dying for their country they are not doing it to fill rich men's pockets," he says. "The government must control the price of munitions supplies and food if the capitalists will not. The capitalists must be content to make less money and do more and be controlled by the government and be content to be controlled."

Tillett brought from the front his simple picture of what the government and the workingman must do. While there he talked to officers high in the ranks who told him that the British army was handicapped because the workmen in England were hanging back and were not supplying a constant stream of shells.

This made Ben Ben Tillett mad. He told the officers:

"I'm going home to get those shells and other things and if the rich men play the game there'll be no more labor troubles. I've promised to tell the people at home all the truth and I'm going to do it. The men will work. They'll listen to Ben Tillett. They know he'll tell them the sober truth."

As soon as Ben Tillett returned home he started to tell the British workmen the truth about the situation over in Northern France. Men who know British labor say that labor troubles in England are over. The government has started to tell the rich men what to do. Whether or not by Ben Tillett's advice, it has put a tax on war profits. The money that went into the rich men's coffers is beginning to come back to the government. The price of food is lower. Bread is costing less. British labor is solidly listening to what Ben Tillet has to say and then calmly trooping off to the recruiting stations or work shops. Tillett says he is telling them the truth and they believe Tillett.

BIRDMEN BATTLE HIGH ABOVE LAND

(By United Press.)

London, July 20—In a battle royal between 12 British and four German aeroplanes thousands of feet above the entrance to the Thames river the Germans were defeated. They were reported to have crossd the North sea, intending to raid English coast towns but met British bird men and one by one the German Taubes began to fall. Three hit the water while the fourth was lost. The following day troops found one of the planes floating. Its occupants were strapped to their seats with bullet holes through their heads.

WAGING WAR ON MOSQUITOS

The extermination of mosquitos is being attempted in Squantum and Montclair and several barrels of crude oil has been sprinkled on small areas which are considered breeding places. The money to pay the cost is being contributed by residents of that section and the work is going on under the direction of William Taylor, an inspector of the Board of Health.

Good results are believed to have been obtained. The campaign will continue throughout the summer. William S. Kenyon of Squantum and J. McMann of Atlantic are sponsors of the movement.

THE KINCAIDE THEATRE.

Ben Loring's Musical Co., evidently fits pretty strong in Quincy because at the opening of its second week Monday a large audience filled the Kincaide theatre. "The Awakening of Cleo" was the title of the principal production of the company. A feature of this production was the pretty costuming. The lighting effects too were pretty and novel. The entire company participated. "The short skit, "When Dreams Come True," a take-off on the movies, was clever in conception and execution. There was some great horse back riding in "The Diamond from the Sky." The Pathe Weekly showed some good pictures. There was also a comedy film.

Miss Edith Johnson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Johnson of Adams shore, is expected home this week after an extended visit with her sister, Mrs. James McDonough of Washington, D. C.

STOREKEEPERS FOUND GUILTY

Faced Charges of Selling Articles on Sunday Not Allowed By License

FILED ON PAYING COSTS

Seven Houghs Neck storekeepers, brought into court today for selling articles on Sunday other than those allowed by the fruit license under which they did business, were adjudged guilty and their cases were filed on payment of $5. costs. They were William F. O'Connell, Berthold Linder, Margaret A. Merriam, F. A. McDonald, William Hanrahan, J. H. Trott and Howard D. Vinton.

Mrs. Ina F. Main put up a spirited defense and her case ws filed without costs being assessed. The evidence was presented in seven cases by Patrolman William H. Taylor who was instructed to secure the evidence. Inspector Goodhue was the complainant in one case.

The officers testified to articles purchased last Sunday afternoon and evening. Mrs. Main said that she had instructed employees at her store to keep within the law. She asserted she did not make the alleged sale. "If anything was sold it was without my knowledge," she said.

Acting Chief McKay asked her if she had a right to sell the bottle of pickles submitted as evidence of a violation at her store, and she answered "Those articles are sold all over Houghs Neck. Whether the bottle was bought at my store or not, I don't know." She insisted that she did not sell any articles on Sunday which her license did not call for. On evidence given by Patrolman Taylor she was found guilty and the case was filed.

Howard D. Vinton said he felt he had committed no violation in selling half a dozen of eggs obtained from his own hens. Judge Avery asked him if the eggs were delivered from his counter and he said they were.

Frank A. McDonald pleaded guilty without hesitation. Inspector Goodhue after taking the stand, turned to McDonald and both men exchanged broad smiles. The witness said when he made the purchase McDonald said: "I am not allowed to do this. It is against the law." When asked if he saw any other sales made while there the inspector answered in the affirmative.

William F. O'Connell and Ina F. Main were the only two who pleaded not guilty.

When one of the defendants raised the point that no caution had been given them by the police not to sell articles other than specified Judge Avery said it was only a matter of courtesy on the part of Acting Chief McKay to warn proprietors to obey the law.

The arrests were the result of a visit of the police to Houghs Neck Sunday afternoon. The party included Acting Chief McKay, Inspector Goodhue and Patrolman Taylor. The articles purchased included biscuits, eggs cheese, butter and pickles.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Hebert of Dorchester are spending a few days as the guests of Mrs. Mary DuTemple of Crescent street.

RETURN FROM HONEYMOON

Not until Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Sulis returned from a honeymoon trip to Canada and took possession of their future home at 194 Federal avenue on Tuesday did the many friends of the couple realize they were married The ceremony was performed last Wednesday evening at Houghs Neck by Rev. William B. Sayre.

The bride before marriage was Miss Louise McEwan of 1109 Sea street, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George McEwan. The groom has been the station agent at Quincy Adams for the past six years. Mis Ethel McEwan, a sister of the bride and David K. Dackers, a friend of the groom, were the attendants.

ACTING MAYOR HAS PROBLEM

The resolve requesting the Mayor to transmit to the City Council in writing a recommendation for an appropriation for the rebuilding of Willard street was placed before Acting Mayor Crane this morning. Under the provisions of Chapter 719 of 1913 if at the expiration of seven days the Mayor does not comply with the request of the Council to forward a supplementary budget the council may introduce one of its own accord. The Acting Mayor said this morning that he did not know just what he would do about the matter.

DICK'S ANTLERS FALSE.

Cleveland, O., July 21:—The world's only honored rooster is dead!

Dick, the door-chick of Brookside zoo has been killed—and eaten just like a regular fowl.

The Humane society did it. The society discovered Dick's "antlers" were the prongs of a dick's wishbone grafted into his comb.

AWAIT ACTION OF COUNCIL

Suspend Work On Building At Wollaston Depot

As a result of a conference held with the owners of the new block being erected near the Wollaston depot work has been suspended for the time being, pending action by the City Council on changing the grade of Beale street and Greenwood avenue. An order changing these grades was reported in the Council Monday evening and unless something unforseen happens it should go through next Monday evening.

If the grade of these streets is changed at the present time the city will save several thousand dollars. While it might not perhaps be absolutely necessary to change the grade for immediate use, it will have to be changed when the four tracks are laid by the railroad. The grade on the Hancock street side of the Beale street bridge is almost impossible at the present time. When the bridge is widened for the four tracks it would mean a much steeper grade than at present.

COMMENTS ON SEN. LANGELIER

Practical Politics in this weeks issue makes the following comments about Sen. Langelier.

Sen. Louis F. R. Langelier of Quincy in the 1st Norfolk district, who made an enviable reputation as a legislator during his three years in the house and two in the senate, will have as an opponent for the republican renomination William P. Kelley of East Braintree, who has never held public office.

SENATOR LANGELIER.

Although Mr. Kelley has numerous friends who are anxious to aid him, Sen. Langelier is regarded as one of the best vote-getters in the district and republican leaders generally declare that he is stronger politically than he ever was. His record is one of the best and few men in the legislature did so much for their constituents as he. During the last session Mr. Langelier was regarded as one of the most progressive republicans on the hill and he was a prominent figure in all the big legislation of the year. He served with distinction on the committees on education, public service and harbors and public lands, being chairman of the latter committee.

STREAMS FROM HOSE REPULSE LARGE MOBS

(By United Press)

Bayonne, N. J.—July 21—The strike situation at the Standard Oil Co's plant here today is spreading to the Vacuum Oil Co. and the Tide Water Oil Co. The Vacuum plant shut down to avoid trouble. One man was shot in the back and killed at the Tide Water Co.

Scores of police went through the streets in the industrial section but the mobs are beyond control. Women are plenty and have given the police more trouble than men. Roofs of houses along the streets are crowded with strikers who drop missiles on all that tried to enter the plant grounds.

Firemen with heavy streams of water are reported doing effective work in driving the crowd back. Several police were beseiged in an engine house but after seevral atempts by other officers they finally drove patrol wagons through the crowd to the rescue of the men. The strikers demand an increase of 15 per cent in wages and have been refused.

POLICE CHARGE 400 STRIKERS

(By United Press.)

Bridgeport, July 21—The first clash between striking munition workers and police occurred at the Barnum avenue plant at noon today. The police reserves in autos rushed the crowd of 400 strikers who were going from strike headquarters to the Barnum avenue factory. ### ITALIANS WINNING.

(By United Press.)

Rome, July 21—Reports of decisive victories for the Italians both north and south of Gortiz led the capital to expect the early capitulation of the fortress. The Giornale D'Italian declared that the Italians are now winning the most decisive victories of the war all along the Isonzo, occupying strategic positions and inflicting heavy losses on the enemy.

CONDEMNS OLD WOLLASTON HOTEL

Inspector of Buildings George E. Thomas made an inspcetion of the old Wollaston hotel property Tuesday afternoon and as a result of his examination he says that he will prohibit what is known as the L part of the building from being occupied. The remainder of the building he does not find in bad condition. It is this L that has been considered the source of danger as it is within a few feet of the adjoining buildings.

Mr. Thomas said that he doubted if the Fire Prevention Commission could declare the whole building a menace and order it torn down, as he calls it in good condition with the eexception of the L mentioned.

UNINTERESTING GAME.

The Cubs, leaders of the West Quincy Twilight league, defeated the Hinkies in a very uninteresting contest played Tuesday evening at the Ward Four Playground. The feature of the game was the heavy hitting of Patriach of the Cubs who secured a single, double and triple. The final score was 9 to 2. The battery for the winners was Desmond and Barron and for the losers McDonald and Gardiano.

POLICE HUNT FOR MAD DOG

Animal Bit Another Dog Which Developed Rabies

A general alarm has been sent out to capture a white bull dog which ran amuck in Quincy Point Saturday and which is thought to be suffering from the rabies. The dog overran the section and attacked several dogs in the vicinity of Broadway.

During his rampages the animal of Peter Hynes of Broadway was engaged in battle and badly chewed up. Monday afternoon the dog developed alarming symptons and Dr. Francis Abele, Jr., was called and pronounced the dog a victim of rabies. He shot it.

The police were notified to keep a lookout for the bull dog and the Board of Health was requested to remove the remains of the dead dog.

Dr. Abele reported to the police that he had shot the dog and requested them to bury it. They say it is outside their province.

At noon Mr. Hynes asked the Board of Health to bury the dog. At the office of the Board it was stated he refused to pay the cost and therefore the board won't bury it. It was shot on his premises and the body is on his premises.

FORE RIVER STRIKERS FINED FOR TRESPASS

Louis Goboritz and A. J. Williams Before District Court

Two of the pickets of the striking coppersmiths at the Fore River shipyard were convicted in the District court today. Louis Goboritz was fined $20 for trespass and Arthur J. Williams was fined $25 for assault and battery. The sentences of both men were suspended to Oct. 30, 1915.

The evidence in the Goboritz case was that he entered the grounds of the company and rode on a car furnished for the exclusive transportation of mployees at the yard and that o nat least one occasion he had addressed an employee as a scab.

Williams, according to the evidence grabbed an Italian, now working as a coppersmith, by the knee as the Italian rode on the running board of a car passing at 10 miles per hour. Williams said he had no trouble recognizing the man beacuse he had talked to him a month ago and tha the man had agreed to return to New York if $10 was furnished him by the local branch of the union.

Judge Avery in making his finding in the Goboritz case said he believed the defendant was on the car to to cause the passengers annoyance. He suspended the sentence on the distinct understanding that Goboritz keep away off the grounds of the company and not trespass. "If you want to talk to the men and do picket duty," said the judge, "do it in the proper way but you should keep off the company grounds."

In disposing of the charge against Williams he said: "You are a married man and it is your duty not to bring added burdens on your family."

The witnesses for the company were H. Gerrish Smith, general manager of the Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation, John J. Good and Patrick Bradley of the yard police, John Hager and Harlan Neuman, now employed there as coppersmiths, David P. Whiton and two Italians employed as coppersmiths. Atty. J. J. McAnarney appeared for the government.

REPLY TO GERMANY FRIENDLY BUT FIRM

Note, Now Drafted In Final Form, To Be Sent Monday

CHARLES P. STEWART.
(United Press Staff Correspondent.)

Devoid of any tones of belligerency, in friendly but firm tones, the United States note in reply to German's submarine warfare was drafted in final form today by Sec. Lansing. Report today was that the note would be delivered to the Berlin foreign office Monday. It will probably be given to the president and cabinet for final O. K. Friday and started on the wires Saturday.

Reports were also current that the work on the reply to Austria's protest against munition shipments to the Allies has already been begun. The two notes, however, will not go forward sumultaneously. The German reply was modified to the extent that it stated that this government cannot see in the present situation how any useful end can be attained by further parleying.

DEDICATION OF NEW CHAPEL

The Boston District Conference will hold an all day session at the Swedish Lutheran church on Granite street Friday. In the evening there will be addresses by several of the visiting ciergymen.

Sunday morning the sermon will be given by Rev. L. W. Gullstrom of Norwood. In the afternoon the dedication service for the new chapel will be held, the dedicatory address to be given by Rev. J. E. A. Everett of Manchester, N. H., vice president of the New England Conference. Short addresses will be given by several of the visiting clergymen and there will be special music by the choir.

Thursday evening a concert will be given by the church choir, who will be assisted by Mrs. Marie Sundelius, a noted singer.

MAKARIA MOONLIGHT SAIL.

Friday night is the big night for the Makaria Moonlight Sailors. About 75 young couples enjoy their 2nd annual moonlight sail. The committee has arranged a good program consisting of music and song fest and during the evening refreshments will be served. The steamer Loretta that has been chartered will carry 250 people but in order that there shall be plenty of room on deck the crowd will be limited to 150. There are still a few more tickets on hand that can be obtained from R. Pratt, A. McFarlane, or Ed. Jenkins, but they will have to be spoken for quick as there is a big demand for them.

MAYOR PHONES 3500 MILES.

Mayor Campbell was one of those who talked over 3500 miles of wire Tuesday when a continuous telephone line was put in operation between the San Francisco exposition and the Boston City club.

JOINT COMMITTEE MEETS.

The joint committee on finance and streets will meet Thursday night to wrestle with the street propositions. There are nearly thirty streets up for acceptance upon which hearings have been held. If all are passed it would mean an appropriation of something like $50,000. It is probable that the joint committee will cut this amount more than half.

TODAY'S ODDEST STORY.

Minneapolis, Minn, July 21:—An inventory of the furniture in the new post office building is being delayed, while officials are seeking to determine the difference between a cuspidor and a spitoon. There are several of each in the new furniture. No dictionary makes any distinction between them and while Arthur H. Remcle and a corps of assistants are working on the puzzle the inventory lags.

COST OF RURAL DELIVERY.

If any congressman in 1898 had moved that the sum of $47,377,070 be appropriated for the purpose of carrying mail around to the houses of farmers, he would have been thought crazy. Yet that is what the service cost in 1914. Not merely that but the department has just taken in 87,850 more families.

The enormous cost of this service causes criticism. The expense per route is much more than was thought in the beginning. The carriers and their friends have become a powerful political interest. They demanded and secure liberal payment.

The people along a route are said largely to pay for it, by the stamps they buy and those that are bought to deliver mail matter to them. Possibly, yet the same people might be living elsewhere and buying the same stamps at a regular post office were there no route.

As a time saver the service is very effective. It is cheaper for one man to spend a day taking mail to a hundred farmers, than for a hundred farmers each to spend an hour or two a day driving to the post office. The critic may say to this, however, that the cost of the service should be paid by the farmer, since he gets the benefit of this enormus time saving.

Country and city must each think broadly of the interest of the other. There are certain drawbacks of loneliness to life on the farms. This has led people to rush to the towns, and has made living costs higher for all town dwellers. Unless the town people wish this tendency to continue, they must go the limit to bring modern conveniences to the outlying rural sections.

Rural delivery gives the farmer daily touch with the markets, so he can buy and sell intelligently. It brings the newspaper promptly to his door, so that he does not feel isolated. The little mail cart is the thin thread that binds him to the moving world. Any politician who should favor cutting it out would be regarded as just as crazy today, as if he had suggested spending all this money in 1898.

LET IT REMAIN.

The march of Progress and Economy sometimes interferes with the development of Beauty and Comfort. Take the extension to the Atlantic Shore boulevard for example.

In laying out the extension it is proposed to level the hill on the present boulevard at the corner of Fenno street. It is proposed to use the material thus secured in the building of the new boulevard, which will join the old one at Fenno street and will continue round the shore and across Black's creek to Hancock street.

Now this knoll, it is hardly a hill, overlooks the water. It is about the only high spot on the boulevard, it always has a breeze, and on almost any hot day there are sure to be a number of people sitting on the grass on the east side of the road. It would seem unfortunate that the pleasure of so many people should be taken away in order to level the boulevard. The hill is too slight to cause inconvenience to autoists and it does not constitute a danger spot. Why not let it remain?

ON THE SAFE SIDE.

Autoists who want to be on the safe side have adopted the use of the following form, provided by the A. L. A., to be filled out by persons to whom they give a "lift."

In consideration of the offer of Mr. ——— to extend me the courtesy of a ride in his automobile without compensation, I hereby agree and do by this agreement assume all risk of injury and hereby release the said Mr. ——— ——— from any injury which I may receive while his guest, due to any negligence by him or anyone in his employ or control.

Signed, ——— ———.

There have been several cases where good Samaritans with goggles have taken in a weary wayfarer, have met with an accident, and then have been sued successfully for damages by the wayfarer who was injured in the accident.

Safety First.

HAMMOND IS PATRIOT.

Young Hammond, the inventor of the torpedo which is controlled by wireless apparatus, has decided to leave Gloucester and erect a plant on Fisher's island, in Long Island sound. He expects that the United States will purchase his invention, which is one of the most wonderful of the discoveries in connection with electrical possibilities in the atmosphere. Not to become the owner of his secret discovery would be the height of official foolishness. European nations have offered great inducements to Mr. Hammond for the control of his radio torpedo, and he could dispose of it in short order; but he is willing to sell it to the United States for less money that he has been offered. It should be owned by our government, for it would be a great factor in preparedness to resist attacks from any enemy that must approach us by sea. Mr. Hammond is a firm advocate for our country to be prepared for any emergency. In a recent interview he advanced a novel idea, when he said: "If the women of the country could be made to understand that it's a question of armament versus human lives—whether the nation prepares now or waits until the enemy arrives prepared to slaughter husbands and assassinate sons—I believe this armament problem would be settled once and forever—and rightly." That is a view which the advocates of peace have not taken. There is a good deal in it and if it is seriously studied an understanding would be reached that might accomplish great things. American patriotism is apt to be a little slow in getting into action. The Germans are far ahead of us in that respect. We can learn something from them, but the lesson must not come too late, as it did in England and in France. No nation can subdue the United States, but the cost of maintaining national liberty will be very great if those who are opposed to preparedness continue to have their way.—Lynn Item.

CANADIAN OPINION.

The Canadian press is disposed to take Theodore Roosevelt's view of the Lusitania affair, and criticism of President Wilson for not taking the Prussian bull by the horns is common. The following extract from an editorial in the "Port Hood Greetings," a representative paper, is typical of Canadian editorial utterances on the question:

"For open, insulting insolence and unvarnished falsehood, the German reply to the American protest against the sinking of the Lusitania (in incubation for 28 days) has no parallel even in legend. From every paragraph dealing with essential facts are hurled out brusquely the most apparent perversions of facts.

"Accustomed as we have become to the madness of the German mind it staggers credulity to realize that such a document can have been addressed as a reasoning reply by the responsible authority of one great nation to the mild protest of the President of the greatest Republic on behalf of humanity in the effulgent light of the twentieth century."

We have received from Mr. Ham's headquarters a very flattering circular (to Mr. Ham) and a warm recommendation to help make him the Republican candidate for Lieutenant Governor this fall. Now we haven't a single objection to Mr. Ham as a man. If he is elected Lieutenant Governor we do not for a moment doubt but he will make a good one. We do have a most emphatic conviction that the nomination for second place should, in the interest of sound politics and to insure a Republican victory, go to the Western part of the State if they can put up a worthy candidate. They have done so and we hope they will secure the nomination. When the ticket is finally made up, however, we are for it, with any of the candidates now in sight. —Waltham Free Press.

Advance of Teutons Toward Warsaw Continues Unchecked

WILL SOON CAPTURE CAPITAL

Objective Is Already In Centre of Ring of Steel, Important Cities and Fortified Places Being Occupied by Invading Armies—Fortified Metropolis Must Be Evacuated or Stand a Siege—Other War Zones Show No Appreciative Change

London, July 21.—Warsaw, capital of Poland and the most heavily fortified salient on the entire Russian battle line, lies at the centre of a ring of steel approximately fifty miles in diameter, a ring which the Teuton forces steadily are narrowing and within which hope of a successful defense seems vain.

Windau, an important Polish seaport and invaluable should the Germans decide to press their campaign on Riga, and Radom, capital of the Polish province of Radom, fell into the hands of the Teutons. Besides this, innumerable smaller towns and fortified places were occupied. The fall of Warsaw itself is but a matter of days.

German forces, evidently reinforced by fresh troops transported to Libau by water, have taken Tukum, which is but thirty-eight miles west of Riga, and Doblen, eighteen miles west of Mitau, and their forces continue to advance toward the important naval base, the second seaport of Russia, a manufacturing and industrial centre.

There are unofficial reports, vigorously denied, that the Russians have begun the evacuation of Warsaw, with its thirty-two forts and citadel and its protected flank of fortified cities, withdrawing their troops to the east over the only two of the five railways which still remain open.

Retreat Almost Cut Off

The east now is the only direction in which retreat is possible without meeting the forces of the Germans and Austrians in a decisive engagement. The Teuton allies now are within sixteen miles of Warsaw on the west, they are within twenty-two miles on the north, twenty-six miles on the south and sixty miles to the northeast, where they are descending southward to cut off the eastern railway connections of the capital.

In spite of the apparently impossible position of the defending garrison, semi-official reports from Petrograd insist that there is no intention of evacuating and that, instead, Grand Duke Nicholas now is rushing in troops, ammunition and supplies to fight it out on that line of defense.

It was told in Petrograd dispatches that Russian forces on the Bzura-Rawka rivers line, sending their left wing in the air by the withdrawal of the Russians from Prasnysz, fell back on the Elonie line. It was not stated then that a German force was in pursuit. The Elonie line, sixteen miles from the city and almost within touch of the outer ring of forts, was said to have been carefully selected.

Germans Reach Ring of Forts

The Berlin statement says their forces have arrived at that point and are in contact with the Russians, though a battle has not yet begun.

The Petrograd statement told of the withdrawal of the Russians to the Narew river line. The Berlin statement declares the German troops are before Novo Georgievsk, a powerful, modern, fortified town at the junction of the Bug and Vistula rivers.

The German forces south of Warsaw, in the Pilitza river sector, have been quiet for a week. It is announced by Berlin that they have occupied Grojec, which is twenty-six miles from the capital.

After all these reports, there came the significant word that the Germans under von Mackensen had advanced along the railway between Radio and Ivangorod. It was estimated then that the German forces must be about twenty-five miles from the latter place, an important railway centre, a main connection with Warsaw itself.

The capture of Ivangorod, or the cutting of the railway to the northwest of that city, would leave Warsaw two remaining trunk lines of railway to Russia—the line to Petrograd and the line to Kieff and Moscow.

After Line to Petrograd?

There are indications that the Germans may be after the former, for dispatches saw they have occupied Ostrolenka, sixty miles to the northeast of the capital, and at that time were striking south. The railway to the capital of the Russian empire is in their path across the Narew.

It is likely that these line-cutting drives were responsible for the report of Russia evacuating her great fortified metropolis. Once they are gone, the city must stand a siege. Military experts are beginning to believe the Russian position would be much stronger if its long battle line were straightened, which would mean a retirement at the present time at least sixty miles to the east of Warsaw. They would not be surprised if this were done.

WELSH COAL STRIKE ENDS

Settlement Considered a Personal Victory For Lloyd George

The great strike of South Wales coal miners that threatened to interfere seriously with the production of war munitions for the English armies has been settled.

Strike leaders made the announcement following a conference at Cardiff with Minister of Munitions Lloyd George and other members of the cabinet, who had just come from a protracted session with the colliery owners.

The new scale of wages will remain in force until six months after the close of the war and will continue in effect after the expiration of that period until one side serves notice three months in advance of a desire to abrogate the agreement.

The settlement of the labor dispute, the most serious domestic trouble that has confronted the British government during the war, is regarded as a personal triumph for Lloyd George, who went to Cardiff after President Runciman of the board of trade and other government officials had made vain attempts to bring about an agreement.

FIRM STAND FAVORED

Cabinet Backs President In His Attitude Toward Germany

President Wilson laid before the cabinet an outline of the new note to Germany in response to Berlin's last answer to the American notes on the sinking of the Lusitania and submarine warfare.

It was the first cabinet meeting in a month, and the secretaries, returning from different sections of the country, brought to the president their views of public sentiment. Generally it was for taking a firm stand.

Confidence seemed manifest that in the absence of any new violation of American rights the situation would not become immediately dangerous.

Some officials were impressed, however, that the attack on the British steamer Orduna, endangering a score of Americans, had introduced a new set of circumstances, showing that even on voyages from Europe to the United States submarine warfare, as being waged by Germany, subjects neutrals to constant risks.

HELD UP BY SUBMARINE

Captain of Boston-Bound Steamer Was Treated Very Graciously

The Danish steamer Alexandra, with cargo from Copenhagen, Christiana and Newcastle, arrived at Boston and reported being held up in the North sea by a German submarine. Here is Captain Nielsen's story:

"It was on the morning of June 21 that a submarine, steaming on the surface of the water, appeared and signalled to me to lay to. The Alexandra obeyed the order and when the submarine had approached within hailing distance, its captain, through a megaphone, ordered me to come aboard and bring the ship's papers with me.

"Obeying this order, I went aboard the underwater craft, where I was very graciously received by the captain and officers of the submarine. After a thorough inspection of the ship's papers I was told that they were all right, and we were ordered to proceed on our way."

Frank May Recover

MOOSE INSTALL THREE OFFICERS

Three officers for Quincy lodge of Moose were elected and installed in Electa hall Tuesday evening, Walter F. Carmen as dictator to succeed William Norrie, who is ill at his home, Outside Guide John E. Edgren to succeed William J. Buckley, who resigned on his appointment to the fire department, and Trustee Alian W. Pierce, who succeeds Hiram Darrow.

They were installed by District Deputy Supreme Dictator James A. Daley of Brockton, past dictator of the lodge. He was accompanied by a suite.

The matter of a summer outing was discussed and one application was received. Charles L. Bean was high scorer and Hans Peterson low man at the whist party after the meeting.

FOY OUTING TODAY.

The annual outing of the employees of the two stores of R. E. Foy & Co., is being held at Glen Echo park, Stoughton, today. The party left Quincy at 11.20 A. M. on two special electric cars and on their arrival at the park they will find dinner in waiting for them. Immediately after dinner there will be a game of ball between the two stores. As there is considerable rivalry the game promises to be an interesting one. The game will be followed by a series of field sports both for men and women.

It is expected that the party will number 150. The committees in charge are: Adams market, George Guston, Richard M. Tinney, Frank H. Foy, Miss Eliza O. Ross. Water street store, Lemuel Tinney, Leo Hurley, David Littlewood and Miss Lillian Johnson.

All arrangements for the transportation of the party have been made by Walter S. Belyea, traffic solicitor of the street railway.

SOUND SENSE.

Ten thousand dog owners of Boston, have this week been ordered to get muzzles or leashes, and to keep them on their dogs for the next 90 days. We need not waste any sympathy for the owners, because of this extra trouble and expense, but we are sorry for the dogs. From actual records, a life-long observation and much reading on the subject of rabies, mad dogs and what not regarding these domestic animals, we are quite inclined to agree with the statement of an eminent authority of years of technical experience, that "nine-tenths of the annual movement against mad dogs is due to human cowardice, and the other tenth to ignorance."

This makes the present 90-day muzzle order an unmitigated cruelty to the dogs. A muzzle in hot weather is enough to give a sane dog fits, if it does not actually drive him mad. Not to blame the City Council for doing what it believed to be its duty to the public, why would it not have been well to follow Councilman Coleman's suggestion and make the rule for 30 days, and then extend the time if it seemed necessary? We see very little of profit or pleasure in keeping dogs in the city anyway, but since so many people do keep them is no reason why innocent animals should be tortured unnecessarily during the Summer.

POLICE OFFICER CAPTURES FOUR

Boys Try To Escape Through Deep Creek

Four Roxbury lads, three of them juveniles, after a series of escapades at Houghs Neck Tuesday afternoon attempted to escape Patrolman Michael Donovan who pursued them, by crossing a creek. The boys stopped when the water reached their shoulders. The officer simply waited for them on the bank and after a 15 minute bath they surrendered.

Three of the boys were turned over to parents and the fourth, John Doyle 15 years, of Shirley street, said to be already on probation in the Roxbury Juvenile court, was held.

The quartette went to the store of William Hanrahan on Sea street shortly after their arrival. There it is alleged they raided a stock of bakery goods. A lunch cart next gained their attention. The proprietor went out and they went in. Food and cigars were taken.

The boys were interrupted by the owner but they got away.

Patrolman Michael Donovan was notified and he rushed to the scene. While he was responding the boys centered an attack on a wet wash laundry wagon while the driver was making a call. The contents of several baskets of clothes and wearing apparel were thrown over the telephone wires. They had just swung a large sheet over the wires when the officer was sighted.

The boys started to run and some of them would probably have escaped if they hadn't cut across a marsh, through the centre of which ran a creek. There was no bridge, no way of getting around it and all four rushed into the water, expecting to wade across to the other side. They didn't dare to attempt it, however, after the water covered their shoulders.

Donovan from the shore ordered them to come out but they were equally certain they would stay in and tire him out. A policy of watchful waiting was adopted and the officer sat down on the bank to cool off after his run. Fifteen minutes later the boys waded shore and were sent to the police station. All were thoroughly chilled and one of them was put to bed and rolled up in blankets.

WANTED—VOLUNTEERS.

In the valley of the Meuse and the lowlands of the Yser, along the banks of the Vistula, among the foothills of the Carpathians, Europe is burning up the springs of civilization. She is robbing the future of its sturdiest stock. The very men who ought to be the fathers of a better generation, the men fittest to survive, best able to contribute to the world's progress are being sacrificed. From the weak, the disabled, the inefficient, the unfit, will the next generation on the Continent be born.

Europe's contribution to the world is waste. America's then must be conservation. The progress of the future depends largely upon the self-reliance and high ideals which are developed here, and Milton must do its small part. Inefficiency must not be handed from father to son. Shiftlessness, alcoholism, degeneracy, poverty, must be checked.

You who read this know that the Quincy Associated Charities stands for the conservation of people, that it labors to save the family, and above all things, to safeguard the children. Is it not worth your while then to join the membership of the Associated Charities and thus, through your personal expression of interest, as well as through the help which your fee of one dollar will give, encourage the League to further effort?

We call for volunteers.

One hundred interested members, paying one dollar each, are far more valuable than five members offering twenty dollars each, though the large gifts will be welcome. The president, Thomas Fenno, will, on request, send you the annual report. Dues or other contributions should be sent to the treasurer, Rupert F. Claflin.

MANY REFUSE TO QUIT WORK

Strike In Remington Arms Plants Appears a Failure

NEW WAGE TERMS ACCEPTED

Keppler Breaks Engagement With Newspaper Men and Disappears—Spokesman For Union Says Strike Will Go Through and Is Going to Become a National Affair

Bridgeport, Conn., July 21.—The strike call issued for the machinists working in the plants of the Remington Arms and Ammunition company and four sub-contractors brought out, according to the estimates of the labor leaders, in the neighborhood of 175 men.

The manufacturers, through the president of the Bridgeport Manufacturers' association, said that exactly twenty-eight men had walked out.

The labor men admitted that not a man had left work in the main plant of the Remington company at noon. They said the failure of the men to quit work was due to a misunderstanding.

Instead of the sensational walkout of 500 machinists, to witness which a great crowd had assembled around the guarded exits of the factory, not a workman appeared. The organizers waited and waited in vain; then they gave out a statement to the effect that the machinists had been locked in the factory and refused egress.

When the confusion of conflicting statements had cleared away, the fact was established that the machinists had remained inside the factory of their own free will at the request of Walter G. Penfield, works manager of the establishment.

According to the statements of a number of men interviewed when they left the factory at the end of the working day, the company had offered an eight-hour day and a raise in wages varying anywhere from $1 a day to a schedule of a 10 percent increase of the wage already received.

The men voted to accept the offer and sent a vote of thanks to Penfield for his treatment of them. They numbered one-third of the 600 machinists who last Friday night voted to strike.

The labor leaders at first seemed to be bowled over at the turn affairs had taken. They refused to see the newspaper people until after a conference.

J. J. Keppler, international vice president of the Machinists' union, who had promised to call out his men Tuesday and who had boasted that neither President Wilson nor President Gompers could stop the strike, disappeared, breaking an appointment with the newspaper contingent. Vice President Johnston of the Structural Iron and Bridge Workers was also nowhere to be found.

The burden of explanation fell upon the shoulders of Thomas J. Savage, a member of the general executive board of the International Machinists' association.

Keppler had been hastily summoned to New York, he explained, chiefly to attend a conference relating to the International Paper company strike and partly to confer with a man who, he thought, might be able to affect an amicable settlement of the strike.

This is the second "mysterious" and unnamed individual mentioned by the labor officials as desirous of arbitrating the labor difficulties in Bridgeport. Neither name has been revealed. Both have been excuses for delay in the progress of the strike.

"Wait until tomorrow," Savage warned. "We aren't carrying all our eggs in one basket. This strike is going through. It's going to be a national affair. We're going to tie up every plant that caters to the Remington Arms. This thing will soon go into New Haven, Springfield and into the Becker, Brainerd, Milling company in Hyde Park, Mass.

GOTHAM GARMENT STRIKE

Injection of New Issue May Delay a Speedy Settlement

New York, July 21.—Labor conditions in the clothing trade have assumed a serious phase again and it is said a general strike may occur after all.

The threatening factor is an eleventh-hour demand of the union representatives that the closed shops be maintained. It is also demanded, according to the manufacturers' representatives, that all differences must be settled within twenty-four hours. These demands came after the manufacturers had agreed to 50 percent of the claims made in behalf of the workmen.

CHILDLABOR LEGISLATION.

BY LOWELL MELLETT

(United Press Staff Correspondent)

Washington, July 21:—Dr. A. J. McKelway, southern secretary of the National Child Labor Committee, is certain that the end of child labor in America is practically in sight. The coming Congress is sure to enact the legislation for which the committee has been working, he thinks, since it passed the House by a large majority in the last Congress and only failed of passage in the Senate through obstructionist tactics.

Leaving Washington for Atlanta and Montgomery, where the legislatures of Georgia and Alabama, respectively, are in session, Dr. McKelway said:

"The child labor situation in Georgia and Alabama is another proof of the need of a Federal child labor law. Even when some of our states reach something like the proper standard of legislation for the protection of working children, the question of enforcement of the law remains. In Georgia there was created a few years ago a Bureau of Labor with a Commissioner of Labor in charge. He is assigned the work of gathering statistics relating to the industries of the state. He has one assistant and a totally inadequate expense account. He has been able to accomplish almost nothing with this inadequate force in the way of factory inspection and the enforcement of the child labor law of Georgia. A bill has been introduced urging the appointment of two factory inspectors, and I hope to help in persuading the Georgia legislature to enact this bill into law.

"In Alabama, the inspector of factories is also inspector of jails, asylums and poor houses. He is a most competent man. He has done great work in compelling cities and counties to erect modern sanitary jail buildings and has also striven the utmost of his means to enforce the child labor law. He has one factory inspector and a deputy inspector connected with his office; and a bill introduced at the former session of the legislature, which passed the house, proposes to abolish his office altogether. I believe that the sober second thought of the people of Alabama will express itself emphatically against such a proposition, but the very threat of it shows the necessity for constant vigilance so long as the enforcement of child labor regulation depends upon the precarious will of state legislative bodies.

"I regard the prospect of the Federal child labor bill at the next session of Congress as excellent. The majority for it in the House, which was 233 to 43 in the last Congress, will be substantially increased; and I have reason to believe that nine-tenths of the Senate is in favor of the measure. With a good start early in the session of Congress, it will be impossible for a single objector to hold it up this time as Senator Overman did in the expiring hours of the last Congress. Undoubtedly the people of the United States are with a remarkable degree of unanimity in favor of the adequate protection of the working children from exploitation; and when Uncle Sam takes charge of the problem all the advocates of this reform will feel that the end of child labor in America is in sight."

Permanent Styles in Fans

There is nothing very new to report in fans, and there hardly need be, for, like flowers, they suit us as they are. They are medium or small in size and composed of the fragile and fair materials we are used to. Silk gauze or lace or both combined make airy backgrounds for flowers painted in festoons and wreaths in miniature, but perfect art. Spangles, thicker than stars in the sky, sparkle over all. They were never so liberally used.

Ivory, mother of pearl, or wood, with much carving and picking out in gold or silver paint, form the sticks. Even in the least expensive fans there is an unusual amount of beautiful decoration. The imitation ivory sticks are quite as beautifully handled as the genuine. It takes a good judge to tell the difference.

Fans of white gauze with medallions and borders of princess lace braid and thickly spangled with tiny silver sequins have proved their captivating qualities by heading the list of "best sellers." In the month of roses, when graduates and brides must be remembered, this is the fan that is scattered to all the points of the compass. Fans of black gauze with many spangles put on in a set design and scattered over the surface besides, have proved as alluring as ever.

Small celluloid fans that may be carried in the handbag are decorated with gold borders in set figures or are gay with painted flowers. One of these is a novelty having a small coin carrier at the base of the stick, just large enough to hold dimes. Pretty as they are, none of these fans are expensive unless one chooses those with pearl sticks or having much carving.

Among the very cheap fans, such as sell for twenty-five cents or not more than fifty, the Japanese designs offer really good colorings and fascinating surfaces. They are well made and more than tasteful; they are often fine examples of Japanese art.

Knitted Silk Sports Coats.

Knitted silk sports coats are not sweaters. True, they can be used for many of the purposes for which a sweater is used, but there is quite a difference in the garments. Various kinds of knitted silk fabrics are used for the purpose, but, unlike the sweater, they are lined, and sometimes with a silk strongly contrasting with the outer material. Not infrequently this silk runs over into cuffs and collar. The coats are made along loose wrap lines, sometimes belted or sashed. Semi-norfolk jackets of knitted silk are very fetching and among the most popular coats in the knitted silk fabrics.

TYPHOID FEVER IN THE UNITED STATES

An editorial in the Journal of the American Medical Association, April 17th, says in part, "It is evident that Typhoid Fever is on the way to become a relatively rare disease in many parts of the United States. There are two main reasons for this. First, there are now comparatively few large cities in which the public water supply is likely to contain Typhoid Bacteria. Second, the increase in the practice of pasteurization has resulted in a dimunition in the amount of milk borne typhoid."

TEE BATTING CROWN.

BY GEORGE R. HOLMES.
(Staff Correspondent)

New York, July 21—Pretty races for batting honors in all three leagues are being run this season. No one player has been able to get to the top of the heap and stay there consistently, always excepting of course, the effervescent Cobb who would feel lost in any other position than the topmost pinnacle.

In the National league, Jake Daubert of the Dodgers, Fred Luderus of the Phillies, Fred Merkle and Larry Doyle of the Giants, are all battling for the leadership, on comparatively even terms. The positions have been changing each week, but Daubert has generally managed to stay out in front by a few points. Strange to say Chicago who has been leading the league in club batting, hasn't a man that is battling among the real top-notchers. Vic Saier has been leading his mates, but his average generally has ranged round .300, or slightly above. On the other hand, New York has been hitting fairly consistently as a club, standing second in the recent averages, and has been in the second division almost all season.

The race isn't so hot in the American league now as it was. Mr. Cobb after looking over the field decided that he would show the bunch some real speed and immediately started climbing to and above .400 around which he has hung consistently. Joe Jackson, Cobb's annual rival, Monsieur Jacques Fournier, the season's slugging sensation, and Ol' Sam Crawford, whom the experts have had slipping for the last 10 years, have been battling closely for secondary honors. Whether the pitching in the Johnson loop is off-color this season, or the boys are hitting better, the fact remains there are more than the usual number of .300 clouters.

The Feds have been offering a unique race—three men on the same club have been leading the league all season, or rather, they were, until the Brookfeds disposed of Steve Evans to Baltimore a short time ago, Manager Lee Magee, Bennie Kauff and Evans were the three best in the Gilmore circuit a long time, and Magee and Kauff continue to set the pace. Evans has fallen badly since he left Brooklyn. The critics can hardly sneer at the Federal pitching this season, for there are not as many .300 hitters in the league as in the American, or there weren't up to a few days ago.

LUCKY SALISBURY.

While nearly every city which has announced its tax rate thus far this year reports an increase it will be a little grain of comfort at least for those who pay taxes in Salisbury where the assessors announce the rate for 1915 as $12.80 a decrease of $8.20 over 1914. The large rate last year was due to appropriations for road building, coupled with large expenditures made necessary by a disastrous fire.

IS RESPONSIBLE FOR SIX DEATHS

Belief of Police Concerning Eleven-Year-Old Boy

IS HELD AS A DELINQUENT

Strong Indications That He Set Fire to House In Which a Chelsea Man, His Wife and Four Daughters, Perished—Had Prepared to Fire Own Home and Another Building

Boston, July 21.—That an 11-year-old boy is responsible for the death by suffocation of six persons at the fire at 46 Beacon street, Chelsea, and for a long series of incendiary fires in Chelsea, is firmly believed by State Officer Thompson and Chief White of the Chelsea police.

The boy is Charles Taylor of 20 Hawthorne street, Chelsea. Taylor was arrested by White and Thompson. Places in his home and the house next door were found to have been saturated with kerosene in a similar manner to that in which the house at 46 Beacon street was saturated before the fire was set.

It is the belief of the police that the Taylor lad intended to set fire to his own home and the apartment next door.

At the time the youthful suspect was arrested, he stated that he had been at home Monday night. Taylor's brother told a different story. At police headquarters, where young Taylor was questioned by Thompson, the boy told three conflicting stories regarding his actions.

"We can connect this boy with the Beacon street fire," said Thompson, after the Taylor lad had been under a cross-fire of questions for more than an hour.

Taylor will be locked up as a delinquent for the present on account of his extreme youth, and later a serious charge will probably be booked against him.

The police will not say what first gave them a clue to take them to the Taylor home, but it is thought that White suspected that the Beacon street fire was the work of a firebug who would be likely to select another house of much the same type as that Tuesday morning for his next fire.

The block in which Taylor lives is similar to that at 46 Beacon street, except that it is constructed of wood.

The stairways in the Hawthorne street house are much like those in the Beacon street building and kerosene had been applied to them in a similar manner.

It was reported that two state police officers have been detailed to stay in Chelsea until the mysteries of the incendiary fires are cleared up.

Four men were rescued from the windows of the burning building by firemen by means of ladders.

Michael Jankowski and his wife, Rose, with four daughters, are the dead. Anastacia, 9 years old, a daughter, and Charles, a son, 3 years old, alone survive. The girl was saved by a pulmotor, but her condition is critical. The boy is suffering from the effects of smoke which he inhaled.

The loss is estimated at about $2500, of which about $2000 is on the building, which is owned by Louis Goldberg. The remainder is sustained by the Jankowski family. The first and second floors are unoccupied, the Jankowski family being the only occupants of the house.

On account of the smoke, which permeated the entire building, it was well nigh impossible for the firemen or police to enter in their efforts to save lives. Attempt after attempt was made, but each time the would-be rescuers were driven back partially overcome. Finally, under cover of several streams of water, the firemen succeeded in working their way into some of the rooms.

The children were found in their beds. The mother and father had been awakened and had fought their way to the rear of the apartment, where they dropped a few feet from a window, which they had evidently tried to reach.

The dead are: Michael Jankowski, 38 years old; Rose Jankowski, wife of Michael, 35; Mary Jankowski, a daughter, 18; Sophie Jankowski, a daughter, 16; Helen Jankowski, a daughter, 10; Josie, Jankowski, a daughter, 8 years of age.

PENSIONS FOR MINISTERS.

San Francisco, July 21:—The California State building at the Panama Pacific Exposition here was the scene of a unique gathering today. With representatives from practically every Protestant church in the United States present, the Church Pension Congress went into session to solve the matter of adequate pensions for retired ministers of the Protestant denominations.

Dr. J. B. Hingley of Chicago, secretary of the Board of Conference Claimants of the Methodist Episcopal church, presided. The prime object in calling the meeting was to devise means of raising an endowment fund of $50,000,000 for ministerial pensions. A general campaign of nation-wide scope was advocated as the best means of raising the fund.

It was planned to give each preacher at his retirement one-half of the average annual salary of all the preachers in the country thereby giving the minister who has served most of his years in a small congregation an equal standing in the pension matter with his more fortunate brother who has been getting a larger salary in a larger church.

The majority of the speakers laid stress on the fact that of all professions the ministry as a whole was the poorest paid and in many instances the compensation was barely enough to support the preacher, who in the majority of cases had a family to look after. All speakers were in favor of the pension and asked for concerted action in securing the funds which would enable a minister after years of hard work in the pulpit to retire assured that he would be taken care of in his declining days.

"Flowers on the coffin cast no fragrance backward over life's weary way. Give them the flowers now," said Chaplain E. C. Clemans of the Third Regiment Minnesota National Guard in commenting on what would be said and done for the preacher after he is dead. "Most of us enter the ministry poor and leave it poor," he added.

Rev. W. S. Holt of the Presbyterian board, said there was more money in standing on the front end of street cars than in standing in a pulpit.

"What do we demand from preachers?" he asked. "Four great qualities, Consecration, Intelligence, Self-respect and Efficiency. What is the quotation on these qualifications? Nothing."

That he would sooner be the poor Methodist minister in the smallest church than president of the United States was the statement of Bishop Edwin Holt Hughes of California.

"I believe in justice, however," he said, "and think that every retired minister should receive a decent support on the plans of simple honor and as a debt due him."

THE AUDITORIUM.

An unusual show has been scheduled for the Auditorium Theatre for today and Thursday. Warren Kerrigan, the Universal Star, is strongly featured in a two act Western drama "The Guardian of the Flock." Many exciting scenes are laid on the Western Plains. Another thrilling feature is the well known movie actor King Bagget in "The City of Terrible Night," a two act mystery drama, tking one into the inside of city life. There is a one act comedy, "The Mixup at Maxium's" and another one-act comedy "Skipper Simpson's Daughter," a side splitter. To finish up is a powerful drama "Love O'the Parent" in one act.

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I—Kenneth Griswold, an unsuccessful writer because of socialistic tendencies, sups with his friend Bainbridge at Chaudiere's restaurant in New Orleans and declares that if necessary he will steal to keep from starving.

CHAPTER II—Griswold holds up Andrew Galbraith, president of the Bayou State Security, in his private office and escapes with $100,000 in cash.

CHAPTER III—By original methods Griswold escapes the hue and cry and goes aboard the Belle Julie as a deckhand. He unexpectedly confronts Charlotte Farnham of Wahaska, Minn., who had seen him cash Galbraith's check in the bank.

CHAPTER IV—Charlotte recognizes Griswold, but decides to write to Galbraith rather than denounce the robber to the captain and so incur unpleasant notoriety.

CHAPTER V—Charlotte sees the brutal mate rescued from drowning by Griswold and delays sending her letter to Galbraith.

CHAPTER VI—Charlotte talks to Griswold and by his advice sends her letter of betrayal to Galbraith anonymously.

CHAPTER VIII.

Griswold Emergent.

Half an hour or such a matter after the hue-and-cry runaway from the curb in front of the saloon two doors above, Mr. Abram Sonneschein, dealer in second-hand clothing and sweatshop bargains, saw a possible customer drifting across the street, and made ready the grappling hooks of commercial enterprise.

There was little suggestion of the tramp roustabout, and still less, perhaps, of the gentleman, about the person who presently emerged from the Sonneschein emporium. A square farther on he selected a barber's shop of cleanly promise. An hour later, reaching the retail district, he strolled past many brilliantly lighted shops until he found one exactly to his liking. A courteous salesman caught him up at the door, and led the way to the designated departments.

By this time Mr. Sonneschein's hesitant and countrified customer had undergone a complete metamorphosis. No longer reluctant and hard to please, he passed rapidly from counter to counter, making his selections with manlike celerity and certainty and bargaining not at all. When he was quite through, there was enough to furnish a generous traveling wardrobe; a head-to-foot change of garmentings with a surplus to fill two lordly suitcases; so he bought the suitcases also, and had them taken with his other purchases to the dressing room.

All traces of the deck-hand Gavitt, and of the Sonneschein planter-customer having been obliterated, there remained only the paying of his bill and the summoning of a cab. Oddly enough, the cab, when it came, proved to be a four-wheeler driven by a little, wizen-faced man whose thin, high-pitched voice was singularly familiar.

"The Hotel Chouteau?—yis, sorr. Will you plaze hand me thim grips? I can't lave me harrses."

The driver's excuse instantly tied the knot of recognition, and the man who had just cremated his former identities swore softly.

All things considered, it was the Griswold of the college-graduate days—the days of the slender patrimony which had capitalized the literary beginning—who presented himself at the counter of the Hotel Chouteau at half-past nine o'clock on the evening of the Belle Julie's arrival at St. Louis, wrote his name in the guest-book and permitted an attentive bell boy to relieve him of his two suitcases.

The clerk, a rotund little man with a promising bald spot and a permanent smile, had appraised his latest guest in the moment of book-signing, and the result was a small triumph for the Olive street furnishing house. Next to the genuinely tailor-made stands the quality of verisimilitude; and the keynote of the clerk's greeting was respectful affability.

"Glad to have you with us, Mr. Griswold. Would you like a room, or a suite?"

"Neither; if I have time to get my supper and catch a train. Have you a railway guide?"

"There is one in the writing room. But possibly I can tell you what you wish to know. Which way are you going?"

Without stopping to think of the critical happenings which had intervened since the forming of the impulsive resolution fixing his destination, Griswold named the chosen field for the hazard of fresh fortunes, and its direction.

"North; to a town in Minnesota called Wahaska. Do you happen to know the place?"

The clerk smiled and shook his head.

"Plenty of time, is there?" Griswold asked.

"Oh, yes. Your train leaves the terminal at eleven-thirty; but you can get into the sleeper any time after eight o'clock."

Seated at a well-appointed table in the Chouteau cafe, Griswold had ample time to overtake himself in the race reconstructive, and for the moment the point of view became frankly Philistine. The luxurious hotel, with its air of invincible respectability; the snowy napery, the cut glass, the shaded lights, the deferential service; all these appealed irresistibly to the epicurean in him. It was as if he had come suddenly to his own again after an undeserved season of deprivation, and the effect of it was to push the hardships and perils of the preceding weeks and months into a far-away past.

He ordered his supper deliberately, and while he waited for its serving, imagination cleared the stage and set the scenes for the drama of the future. That future, with all its opportunities for the realizing of ideals, was now safely assured. He could go whither he pleased and do what seemed right in his own eyes, and there was none to say him nay.

In this minor city of his hasty selection he would find the environment most favorable for a rewriting of his book and for a renewal of his studies. Here, too, he might hope to become by unostentatious degrees the beneficent god-in-the-car of his worthier ambition, raising the fallen, succoring the helpless and fighting the battles of the oppressed.

Further along, when she should have quite forgotten the Belle Julie's deckhand, he would meet Miss Farnham on an equal social footing; and the conclusion of the whole matter should be a triumphant demonstration to her by their irrefutable logic of good deeds and a life well-lived that in his case, at least, the end justified the means.

The train of reflective thought was broken abruptly by the seating of two other supper guests at his table; a big-framed man in the grizzled fifties, and a young woman who looked as if she might have stepped the moment before out of the fitting rooms of the most famous of Parisian dressmakers.

Griswold's supper was served, and for a time he made shift to ignore the couple at the other end of the table. Then an overheard word, the name of the town which he had chosen as his future abiding place, made him suddenly observant.

It was the young woman who had named Wahaska, and he saw now that his first impression had been at fault; she was not overdressed. Also he saw that she was piquantly pretty; a bravura type, slightly suggesting the Rialto at its best, perhaps, but equally suggestive of sophistication, travel and a serene disregard of chaperonage.

The young woman's companion was undeniably her father. Gray, heavy-browed, and with a face that was a life-mask of crude strength and elemental shrewdness, the man had bequeathed no single feature to the alertly beautiful daughter; yet the resemblance was unmistakable. Griswold did not listen designedly, but he could not help overhearing much of the talk at the other end of the table. From it he gathered that the young woman was lately returned from some Florida winter resort; that her father had met her by appointment in St. Louis; and that the two were going on together; perhaps to Wahaska, since that was the place name oftenest on the lips of the daughter.

It was at this point that the apex of Philistine contentment was passed and the reaction set in. He had been spending strength and vitality recklessly and the accounting was at hand. The descent began when he took himself sharply to task for the high-priced supper. What right had he to order costly food that he could not eat when the price of this single meal would feed a family for a week?

After that, nothing that the obsequious and attentive waiter could bring proved tempting enough to recall the vanished appetite. Never having known what it was to be sick, Griswold disregarded the warning, drank a cup of strong coffee and went out to the lobby to get a cigar, leaving his table companions in the midst of their meal. To his surprise and chagrin the carefully selected "perfecto" made him dizzy and faint, bringing a disquieting recurrence of the vertigo which had seized him while he was searching for his negro treasure-bearer on the levee.

"I've had an overdose of excitement, I guess," he said to himself, flinging the cigar away. "The best thing for me to do is to go down to the train and get to bed."

He went about it listlessly, with a curious buzzing in his ears and a certain dimness of sight which was quite disconcerting; and when a cab was summoned he was glad enough to let a respectfully sympathetic porter lend him a shoulder to the sidewalk.

The drive in the open air was sufficiently tonic to help him through the details of ticket-buying and embarkation; and afterward sleep came so quickly that he did not know when the Pullman porter drew the curtains to adjust the screen in the window at his feet, though he did awake drowsily later on at the sound of voices in the aisle, awoke to realize vaguely that his two table companions of the Hotel Chouteau cafe were to be his fellow travelers in the Pullman.

The train was made up ready to leave, and the locomotive was filling the great train shed with stertorous hissings, when a red-faced man slipped through the gates to saunter over to the Pullman and to peek inquisitively at the porter.

"Much of a load tonight, George?"

"No, sah; mighty light; four young ladies goin' up to de school in Faribault, Mistah Grierson and his daughter, and a gentleman from de Chouteau."

"A gentleman from the Chouteau? When did he come down?"

The porter knew the calling of the red-faced man only by intuition; but Griswold's tip was warming in his pocket and he lied at random and on general principles.

"Been heah all de evenin'; come down right early afte' suppeh, and went to baid like he was sick or tarr'd or somethin'."

"What sort of a looking man is he?"

"Little, smooth-faced, narr'-chisted gentleman; look like he might be—"

But the train was moving out and the red-faced man had turned away. Whereupon the porter broke his simile in the midst, picked up his carpet-covered step and climbed aboard.

AN AFTERNOON GOWN.

Dotted Cream Net Makes a Charming Frock For Summer Femininity.

HANDSOME CREATION.

Dotted cream net combined with helio pussy willow taffeta is the material used in this charming afternoon frock. A deep tunic accordion, plaited and of irregular length, falls over a plaited foundation of cream colored daphne silk. The tunic is finished with two wide bands of the taffeta. The bodice is simple, crossing in surplice effect with a girdle of taffeta, which ascends in a point very high on the right side. Two points of taffeta also trim the back.

ATTRACTIVE SPORT GARMENT.

Yellow and Blue Striped Silk Sweater With Sash of Self Material.

Nothing is more convenient than the lovely silk sweaters which come in the most brilliant shades imaginable. The one shown in the illustration is of bright yellow and sapphire blue, to be worn by a brunette, whose dark hair and eyes will be doubly beautiful with such a setting.

FOR THE SUMMER PLAYTIME.

A plain strip of blue trims the front around the sleeves as cuffs and across the pockets. The sash is finished by blue tassels.

Good on Summer Menus.

A green salad served with cheese, nuts or eggs, and a French dressing with whole wheat sandwiches, can be made the main course for luncheon. A cheese soufflé served with spinach makes meat unnecessary. Beets stuffed with creamed mushrooms and nuts are delightful, and a ring of mashed potatoes filled with creamed carrots and peas will please the most fastidious appetite. A canape, bisque or puree made of fresh vegetables, or a cocktail made of mixed fruits, is a good beginning to either luncheon or dinner. Desserts should be fresh fruits, fruit ices or gelatin dishes.

POCKETS AND SASHES ARE WELL LIKED.

Pockets are the proper thing these days, though not always used. The round and square patch pockets are giving place to slot pockets, sometimes back hip pockets in sure enough masculine fashion, while a new patch pocket is cut diagonally in half and stitched along its slanting edge.

Sashes, when they appear, are frequently weighted in various ways. That is why rosettes of the sash ribbon are found on the sash accompanying a French creation recently exhibited.

KAMP KWINZY IS EVACUATED

Two Weeks Outing Comes To Its Close

Several troops of Boy Scouts of Quincy, headed by Scout Master George Brown of Wollaston, won their first victory Tuesday when they captured and compelled the evacuation of Kamp Kwinzy on the edge of Oldham pond, South Hanover. The camp the past two weeks has been occupied by 16 Quincy boys, many of whom were members of the Y. M. C. A., in charge of C. H. Humphrey, boy's work director of that organization.

The boys expected to stay until Thursday but the owner of the property got mixed in his dates and reserved the camp unintentionally for the scouts, two days ahead of time.

The "K. K." campers on learning the circumstances picked up and came home, surrendering to the younger fellows. The scouts accompanied them to the station and gave them rousing cheers on their departure.

The 16 boys report a bully time. Bathing, boating, sports and good fellowship was the program. The setting up exercises were held mornings under the direction of Robert Davis. The only thing the boys did not do was the cooking and a semi-professional "ration rastler" was engaged for the occasion.

Jack returned home from college, where he had won high honors as a student of ancient languages, but he pleaded ignorance one day when his young sister asked him to translate a sign she had seen of an optician's which read thus: "Con sultu sabo utyo urey es."

Jask struggled manfully with it for several minutes and gave it up.

"It isn't good Latin," he said. "There are some words in it that are Latin. The others aren't, anyhow. It doesn't make sense."

"That is what I said," replied the sister; "but cook translates it without any trouble. She says it means 'Consult us about your eyes.'"—Tit-Bits.

HAVE NARROW ESCAPE IN PACKARD FOUNDRY

Cartridge Bomb Explodes In Melting Pot And Bullets Fly

Thomas Burns, 35, and James Mulligan, 28, narrowly escaped death at 9.45 this morning when a cartridge bomb exploded in the melting pot in the type foundry of Walter Packard in the rear of his home on Hancock street. The force of the explosion showered the men with metal and carried away the sheet metal hood covering the melting pot, and sent cartridges and hot metal flying in all directions. The bullets punctured the sheet metal roof and sides of the foundry in 20 places.

The bomb is thought to have been concealed in dross metal being fed into the metal pot by Burns and Mulligan. Both were tossing the dross from a pile on the floor to the melting pot when the explosion occurred. Purely through chance the men were not facing the explosion. The hot metal was showered all over the back of their heads, necks and backs.

The sound of the explosion aroused people living in neighboring houses and Walter Packard, the proprietor was the first to reach the scene. He arrived as Mulligan and Burns staggered into the open air. The men were on the verge of a collapse but walked to the flower conservatory nearby.

There Burns attempted to lift his clothing from his back to see how seriously he was burned but the cloth had been pinned on by hot metal. He was removed to the home of Mrs. John Galvin on Chestnut street. Mulligan was more fortunate and was able to remove his clothing.

The dross was a new lot purchased in South Boston Tuesday and delivered at the foundry Wednesday. The pile weighed 4500 pounds. A ton of red hot metal was in the melting pot when the bomb exploded.

The hood which covered the melting pot and carried the smoke into the chimney was bent like paper. have frequently occurred through curits foundation. The entire interior of the foundry from the floor to the roof was spattered.

Walter Packard said beyond any question the explosion was caused by a bomb. He said minor explosions have frequently occurred through curious formations in dross metal but that the metal could not have cooled soon enough to have formed pillets hard enough to have punctured the hood and roof.

The holes are of various sizes, the largest one being two inches. Mr. Packard believes the bomb consisted of a small piece of pipe, loaded with powder and cartridges. A close examination of the surrounding houses did not reveal that any of the bullets had struck them.

Dr. George M. Sheahan who was summoned found the men were painfully burned and suffering from shock. He also found that Mulligan had suffered a bad bruise on the left leg where he was struck.

BEES SWARM IN WASHINGTON STREET CHURCH

It must have been noised abroad that the Washington street Congregational society had planned for extensive repairs on its building this summer. It is said the Lord helps those who help themselves. To prove this saying a band of busy bees arrived Tuesday and took up their abode, evidently prepared for business. The swarm was from the hive of Wm. Pierson on Washington court but the bees liked the high places of the sanctuary so well that they have not yet been dislodged.

JUDGES AWARD PRIZE TO GIRLS

The judges appointed by the Epworth league three months ago awarded the prize for the best entertainment to the girls of the league, following the entertainment given by the girls at the close of the business session this week.

The plan outlined by the fourth vice president was that the boys should give an entertainment in June to the girls and the girls should give an entertainment to the boys in July. After the judges decision the losing side should give another entertainment in August.

The boys gave a mock wedding ceremony which was well taken off.

The girls gave an "out of date" entertainment. They were dressed in old fashioned dresses and bonnets and sang out of date songs. Miss Mary Williams, dressed in heavy winter wraps sang "The Last Rose of Summer," Mrs. D. H. McNeill and Mrs. Germany gave readings appropriate to "other dates." Each girl on the program, recited with all the pomp and vain glory of the days gone by, one of Mother Goose's Nursery rhymes.

Refreshments were served by the young women. The judges were Mr. and Mrs. Steward and Rev. Willis H. Germany. According to the decision the boys will have to give another entertainment in August.

Miss Jessie Hutchinson of Whitman is spending the week with friends in Quincy.

George F. Toomey of the Palm's theatre was in court today charged with assault on Austin L. Robinson, who alleged he was pushed by Toomey during a show. Toomey pleaded not guilty. Considerable evidence was introduced by both sides. Atty. John P. Duffy was counsel for Robinson and Atty. J. J. McAnarney represented the defendant.

Toomey, who is a constable, said he was clearing the aisle and denied assaulting Robinson. Judge Avery made a finding of guilty and placed the case on file on payment of $2.10 costs. ## WON'T TEAR DOWN WOLLASTON HOTEL

Inspector Buildings Says Main Building Is Perfectly Safe

"L" MUST BE UNOCCUPIED

Wollaston people who have been happy in the thought that the old Wollaston hotel building is to be torn down will be doomed to disappointment. According to Building Inspector Thomas no one has authority to order the structure torn down, and if it was so ordered someone would be liable for damages. The main building he says is in good condition. What has been done, however, is that Inspector Thomas has prohibited the L where the fire occurred early Monday morning from being occupied, and it is probable that this will be torn down by the owners.

Inspector Thomas says that he has made an examination of the old hotel property at Squantum, which it was proposed to burn in a huge bon-fire on the morning of July 5. At that time it was given out that the building was very unsafe and that it would be dangerous to any persons to attempt to tear it down. Inspector Thomas however says that he does not consider the building unsafe in that respect and that it could readily be torn down. He further said that it, was an old fashioned building and that there many large timbers in it, most of which were now in condition to be used again.

He rather agrees with Dr. Ash that it would be wrong to destroy the building as proposed when there was so much lumber in it which would supply fire wood to so many poor people.

L. A. BOWLES IS BADLY BURNED

Lighted Lantern Came Too Near Gasoline Tank

Lawrence A. Bowles of 21 Munroe street, Roxbury, was severely burned Wednesday night by the explosion of gasoline while he was filling the tank of his automobile. Mr. Bowles had been visiting friends at 784 Sea street, Houghs Neck, and in the early evening before starting for home he attempted to fill his tank. As he was pouring the gasoline into the tank a friend stood near by holding a lighted lantern so that he might see better. Evidently he held the lantern too near the gasoline for suddenly there was a loud explosion.

Immediately following the explosion flames enveloped him setting his clothing on fire. With rare presence of mind he threw himself into the tall grass and attempted to extinguish the flames by rolling over and over. He did not succeed very well, however, and it was not until friends came to his assistance that the flames were extinguished. Nearly all of his clothing was burned off and he was badly burned about the face and hands.

The automobile also took fire but the crowd that had gathered succeeded in extinguishing the flames with sand before it had been much damaged. The police ambulance was called and Mr. Bowles was taken to the City Hospital. At the City Hospital this noon it was said that his condition was comfortable. He had been burned some about the hands and face but not seriously.

GIRL'S CLUB.

Although the croquet ground and tennis court were in shape for use at the Adams Academy grounds for the girls club Wednesday evening they were not used. There was a good attendance of girls but they seemed to prefer to remain indoors than to indulge in out of door sports.

HALL PLACE CHURCH PICNIC

Merry Party Enjoy Day At Highland Park

The annual picnic of the Hall place M. E. Sunday school was held Wednesday at Highland park. Although it rained in torrents all the night before and the skies during the early morning hours did not look very promising, it was decided to go, and by the time the Sunday school was ready to leave, the sun was shining brightly, and giving every promise of fair weather.

The trip to Highland park was made in two special cars, leaving West Quincy at 9.10 A. M. with a good party on board, the usual noise of a happy crowd of picnickers being conspicuous by its presence.

Arriving at the grounds at 11 A. M. the party scattered, the children making a grand dash for the swings. The Junior boys played the girls left handed in a ball game, the girls winning 10 to 7.

Dinner was next on the program, the party gathering round the long tables like a happy family, where all kinds of witticisms, as well as eatables, abounded. Chas. A. Goucher, chorister of the church furnished coffee for the entire party, which the Sunday school acknowledges with thanks.

After dinner an entertaining program of sports was run off, the winners being:

100 yd. dash—Harold Norris.

Peanut race—1st. Livia Bianchi, 2nd Mona Norris, 3rd Lillian Williams.

Broad jump (boys)—Albert Thomas.

Running, Hop, Step and Jump—Albert Thomas.

The Merry-go-rounds and roller-coasters were kept busy throughout the day. In the late afternoon free rides on the Merry-go-rounds and roller coasters were given to all members of the school. The bowling alleys were well patronized by the girls as well as by the boys.

The cars on the return trip left the park at 7 P. M. many of the younger children, tired out with the pleasures of the day, sleeping all the way home, entirely oblivious of everything, while the older ones indulged in singing. The party arrived at West Quincy about 9 P. M.

NEW BUSINESS BLOCK PLANNED FOR ATLANTIC

The boom in building business blocks which has been in progress this summer in Quincy Centre and Wollaston has now extended toward Atlantic, where Joseph Fratus intends to erect a business block in the immediate future. Mr. Fratus has had plans prepared for a block of eight stores, six of which will be located on Hancock street and two on Billings road.

The plans call for a one story building but of sufficient strength to allow another story to be added. At the present time Mr. Fratus intends to erect four stores, two of which will face Hancock street and two Billings road. These four stores Mr. Fratus says that he has already let and they will be occupied as soon as finished.

A permit has not been issued for the block as yet but application will be made within a day or two as it is proposed to commence work immediately on the foundation. The block will be of brick, and what is known as second class construction.

Ken Nash and Howley of Weymouth are both batting for more than 300 with the Montreal team in the Canadian league. Nash secured 10 hits last week out of 30 times at the bat. Howley feels below his average getting only four hits in 15 times at the bat.

MANY ENJOY BIG EVENT OF QUINCY Y. C. YEAR

Annual Ladies Day Proves Even More Successful Than In Other Years

The annual ladies' day of the Quincy Yacht club, Wednesday, proved to be one of the most successful social events held by this well known club in a long time. A fresh north-easterly breeze prevailed all of the morning, giving promise of a rough sea and filling the bay with white caps. This may have caused some of the women to hesitate about venturing on the water, for fear of a ducking. As a rule, however, it apparently frightened very few, for there was the usual large number in attendance.

HENRY S. CRANE
Commodore.

On arriving at the clubhouse the breeze was found to be fully as strong as inshore, yet the sea was as calm as a mill pond. During the early afternoon it looked for a time as if the fog might close in but the sun soon burst through the haze and the afternoon proved to be most delightful for sailing. Some of the yachts went out with single reefs tucked in their main sheet but most of the boats carried full sail.

The sight as viewed from the club piazzas during the review and sail was a pretty one. Moored just off the main float was the flagship Iris, bedecked from stem to stern with the many prize pennants that have been captured during the past few years by this well known racing cat coat. On board the flagship was Commodore Harry S. Crane, with a large party of guests, whom he was assisted in entertaining by Mrs. Crane and daughters. The genial commodore stood near the stern rail and as the several yachts and power boats passed in review and dipped their colors he tipped his hat and answered with a gun from the flagship. After passing in review the yachts sailed toward Jack Knife Ledge buoy, after which they sailed in any part of the bay desired.

Considerable color was added to the afternoon scene by the power boat squadron, which made its first public appearance on this occasion. All of the boats of the squadron carried the United States Squadron flag on the stern rail, that is a flag with alternate horizontal white and blue stripes, with a red field in the upper corner, in which is a foul anchor surrounded by a wreath of stars. In addition to this many of the boats of the squadron were decorated with the international signal code flags, and they made a pretty sight as they flew back and forth.

Commodore Charles W. Laing of the power boat squadron led this fleet in the Micmac and after passing in review of the flagship of Commodore Crane the squadron manoeuvered directly in front of the clubhouse. They went through the various moves with a finish that brought much favorable comment from these who viewed the scene from the piazzas.

While the sail was in progress George Monk and his corps of musicians gave a promenade concert in the main hall of the clubhouse, which was greatly enjoyed by those who from preference remained on shore.

About 25 yachts participated in the sail and in addition to this the committee had secured the steamer Loretta, which furnished accommodation for all who desired to sail.

The return from the sail was made shortly after 5 o'clock and at 5.30 a lunch was served in the hall. Following the lunch there was ample opportunity for greeting old friends and renewing acquaintances until 7.30 at which time there was dancing in the club hall which continued until 10.30, and half an hour later a special car conveyed the Quincy party to the city proper.

There was an added feature to the evening's program this year in the shape of a display of fireworks which were set off from a float anchored off the clubhouse. The fireworks consisted of rockets and bombs with two set pieces, one showing two American flags and the second the time honored piece "Good Night."

Commodore Harry S. Crane was in general charge of the afternoon with Capt. W. S. Hibbard of the power boat "Woggie" as fleet captain and the members of the house committee: Vice Commodore Edgar W. Emery, Rear Commodore Charles W. Laing, Treasurer George S. Morse, Secretary John O. Hall, Harry E. Winslow, Walter E. Elcock, Fred J. Pierson, A. W. Finlay, William H. Huy, F. W. Easterbrook, Frank O. Fellows.

EDGE TRIMMER GETS BIG WAGES

Brockton, July 22,—When John Ericson of Quincy finished his week's work at the C. A. Eaton factory Saturday afternoon, he had earned $96, and said that if the work had come to him rapidly that morning he could have made $100 easily. He is an edge trimmer and is working on a large contract for the allies.

In the six weeks Ericson has been at the Eaton factory his smallest pay was $68. He has averaged $76 for the six weeks. In his biggest day he handled 1152 pairs of shoes. This was an average of four shoes per minute.

A NATION WITHOUT A NAME.

In his "Letters of a Retired Admiral to His Son" Captain A. P. Niblack says the United States is "very poorly equipped for its manifest destiny as a world power," and among the things lacking he mentions no organized diplomatic service, no national air and no distinctive name for Americans as a people.

The first of these is serious enough, and is likely to be permanent although considerable improvement is possible. A trained diplomatic service can not be readily developed under a democratic government and with "rotation in office" accepted as a cardinal principle. The diplomats of Europe learn their business through half a life time of experience, but we fill our important foreign offices with new and untrained men every four years. Inefficiency of this sort is an essential part of the price we pay for the advantages of our republican institutions.

The lack of a national air is both much less serious in itself and by no means so nearly beyond a remedy. We do have a national anthem of a sort in "The Star-Spangled Banner," but as Captain Niblack pointedly observes, "the air is unsingable, the sentiment is highfalutin and the third verse contains offensive words that do not make for international conciliation." Under the circumstances we naturally make more use of "My Country 'Tis of Thee," but here is met the objection involved in the fact that we have borrowed the air from "God Save the King." Our often employed "Dixie" is a very stirring tune, but the words are farcical. And so it goes.

Much less serious also is the lack involved in the fact that "we are the only people in the world who have not a distinctive name." Of course "United-States-ers" is impossible and "Americans" is a descriptive term which the people of every other country in this hemisphere have a right to. This is an inconvenience which, after so long a time, is past remedy, but it is really a less serious matter than some of us seem inclined to believe. All over the world we are known as "Americans," while the other people with a right to the term rarely employ it except in a very general sense, being proud to be known as Brazilians, Mexicans, etc. Moreover, we are the oldest "Americans," we were the first to become known to the world, and of course we have superior rights in the term.

The fact that our country is called the United States, the fact that we have no more specific title than "Amercans," is of itself an enduring reminder that we were not originally one and that our nation was evolved from a confederation of previously separate and originally soverign States. We hardly need to recall that Massachusetts threatened to leave the Union as late as 1843-5, and that eleven Southern States actually sought to leave the Union as late as 1861-5, in order to reflect that with us true nationality is of comparatively recent growth. Our very dual system of government, federal and state, is an imperishable record of our origin and evolution. After travail and stress we became a nation, but the mere confederation with which we started may be seen in the form of our governmental restitutions as well as in the fact that our country is called the United States and we are able to describe ourselves only as "Americans."

FUTILE BLUFFING.

Travellers returning from Europe shortly before the outbreak of the Great War brought with them a feeling of bitterness engendered by the small opinion held of the present Administration by many Europeans. Of course this opinion was caused partly by the fact that the Administration had not acted on such and such an occasion to the advantage of such and such a person or nation. But the principal cause for the sneers across the Atlantic is in the impression of many persons there that the Administration is bluffing much and acting little.

Of course this largely comes from our policy, or lack of policy, toward Mexico. The futility and absurdity of the President's course in Mexico is all the more astonishing when one marvels at the able manner in which he has handled the grave crises arising from the Great War. Some weeks ago President Wilson, apparently abandoning the policy of "Watchful Waiting" which was really no more than Puzzled Uncertainty, issued what appeared to be a sharp and definite warning to the warring chieftains of Mexico that unless they speedily reconciled their differences the United States would take measures to make them do so. Nevertheless the United States remains inactive and Mexico and the rest of the world have cause for being confirmed in their belief that Uncle Sam was merely bluffing again. It's the old story of crying "wolf" so many times that the cry loses its effect only in this case it is about as bad for the wolf as for the sheep.

THE SPIDER'S REASON.

When Mark Twain was editing a paper a subscriber wrote that he had found a spider in his last issue and wished to know whether this was good or bad luck. Mark Twain replied.

"Old Subscriber—Finding a spider in your paper was neither good luck nor bad luck for you. The spider was merely looking over our paper to see which merchant is not advertising, so that he can go to that store, spin his web across the door, and lead a life of undisturbed peace ever afterward."

The presence in the city of the white bulldog believed to be afflicted with rabies of course constitutes a serious menace and the sooner it is captured the better. But let us not see a rabid dog in every canine we encounter.

The city appreciates the graceful tribute paid it by Governor Walsh during the course of his speech at the Panama-Pacific Exposition the other day.

MOVIES OF COUNTRY LIFE.

Many bankers have longed for a series of motion pictures on agricultural and country life subjects, which could be shown in their towns. They clearly recognize the big fact that it is easy to induce persons to come to see the "movies."

Down in Missouri, the Bank of Harrisonville exhibited the "Dawn of Plenty," with such splendid success and response from the farmers that the business men of the town decided to hold a "movie" day every week and invite the farmers in. We have seen a snap shot of the crowd waiting for the "movies" to open—farmers and their families in autos, carriages and afoot. This was just one example of the possibilities of the field.

The question was: Where will the agricultural films come from? The state colleges of agriculture liked the idea but there were obstacles in the way of their cooperation as producers of the films. So the Illinois Bankers' association has blazed the way. It has so impressed a man who knows how to plan pictures that he will produce a series of fifty films. It is certain that they will be authentic for the best thought of the colleges will be called on for counsel.

The pictures will not overlook any topic of importance. Not only agricultural but also the subjects of roads, schools and better living will be covered. The pictures will be an ally of the farmer's wife who wants some of the comforts of her city neighbor. They will eventually help to keep the boy on the farm.

We commend this important project to the various state associations and to individual bankers. Their part is to see that these pictures will have wide exhibition. The plan is explained in an article in this issue. But other methods will also suggest themselves. There will be bankers who desire to rent the films themselves. Farmers' institutes will want them. Community clubs will find them valuable adjuncts.

There is no end to the possibilities of the use of these pictures, just as there is no limit upon the good that the introduction of the "movie" may play in the redemption of agriculture and rural life.

It is to the credit of the Illinois bankers that they are greatly responsible for the introduction of the "movie." It demonstrates once more the fact that the banker can play a big part in the movement for a better agriculture and country life.—The Banker-Farmer.

RESERVES COME TO THE RESCUE

Fall of Warsaw Is Averted For the Time Being

GERMAN ADVANCE IS HALTED

Invaders Facing Suddenly Revived Slav Onslaught—Teutons' Failure to Envelop Muscovites' Main Army Would Rob Victory of Greatest Value—Fighting on Western Front Consists Mainly of Artillery Duels—Reason For Evacuation of "Hill 60" Is at Last Explained by Britain

London, July 22.—Russia's steel ring around Warsaw is still unbroken. The spectacular drive of the flower of the German army has been abruptly checked both north and south of the Polish capital.

Hundreds of thousands of Russian reserves have been hurled into the struggle by Grand Duke Nicholas at exactly the crucial moment, and the German hordes are no nearer the walls of the city than they were twenty-four hours ago, while they are facing a suddenly revived Slav onslaught in the valley of the Narew and on the plains below Lublin that totally changed the complexion of affairs within a very few hours.

Warsaw is still in peril, but it is evident that the royal couple from Berlin who are waiting at Posen to make a triumphal entry into the eastern capital will have to wait longer than they expected.

News that the great German enveloping movement is checked comes from Berlin itself, no official news having been sent out from Petrograd. This is in consonance with the usual custom of Grand Duke Nicholas, who is chary of bulletins from the front so long as there is doubt as to the issue of big fighting.

The first slowing up of the German advance came in the valley of the Narew, northeast of Warsaw, where, according to the Berlin statement, the forces of General von Gallwitz have been unable to get beyond Rozan, Pultusk and the outskirts of Novo Georgiesk.

It is declared that desperate Russian attacks were repulsed at these points, with the usual German addenda that the Russian losses were heavy and that "we took 1000 prisoners." But the fact that no further progress was made toward the city is palpably shown.

Contingency Prepared For

That Warsaw may fall into the hands of the Teutonic armies is a contingency that Russia has held constantly in view from the very start. With a knowledge of Germany's ability to mobilize rapidly Russia was rather inclined not to attempt its defense in the early stages.

The failure of the Germans, however, in their rush on Paris, due to the fact that first the Belgians and then the British tripped up the advance, gave Russia an opportunity to hold the fortress. Again when the Germans got near the city in one of their early drives toward the Polish capital Petrograd announced the intention to evacuate the position. The fortune of war made this unnecessary. They will abandon it now rather than risk having a strong garrison cooped up in the place.

The German operations are aimed at the Russian main armies. It is hoped to get them in the vise, the jaws of which cut into Russia at Windau on the north and Krasnik on the south, while Novo Georgievsk on the Narew and the Bzura front are in its apex. Should the Russians fail to exert sufficient pressure to keep these jaws from closing they must get out of Warsaw. If they do this as successfully as they have conducted other retreats Germany, while winning a territorial victory, will have failed in destroying Russia's fighting power.

French Partially Successful

The French have made another bid for the valley of the Fecht, in the Vosges. They have delivered several attacks which have been partially successful and have captured the heights dominating that valley from the east. About the same time French airmen dropped bombs on Colmar.

Beyond this and a German attack in the Argonne, which, the Germans claim, met with success, and another German attack in the forest of Apremont, which the French assert was repulsed, only artillery engagements have occurred along the western front.

The Italian offensive on the Isonzo continues and Rome reports further progress, particularly on the Carso plateau.

British Loss of Hill 60

The government announced in the British house of commons that the famous Hill 60 had been abandoned and that as the evacuation was made with great secrecy the fact has not been made known until the information is no longer of military importance.

Presumably the evacuation took place weeks ago—after a good many days of heavy fighting for this hill—the Germans having obtained a foothold on its slope on May 5. No German announcement has been made of its capture.

It is not possible to suppose the Germans did not know it had been abandoned and just why the British government wanted to keep it in the dark—unless it was British recruiting officers—is hard to understand.

This abandonment of Hill 60 is the more remarkable in that the British press for weeks boasted the glory of its capture. Late in April General French reported the German attempts to recapture the hill—to which they attach great importnce—had apparently ceased. They were, however, renewed in May, London newspapers declared Hill 60 was to become as famous as the Green Hill at Plevna because it held command of the German intrenchments for miles on either side.

Welsh Miners Resume Work

The delegates of the South Wales coal miners accepted the terms of the settlement and ordered work in the mines resumed at once.

More than 8000 miners returned to work without waiting for their federation's official indorsement of the strike settlement reached through the efforts of Minister of Munitions David Lloyd George. The rest of the strikers will return to work at once.

WON'T ANSWER QUESTIONS

Asquith Has Nothing Further to Say In Regard to Peace

A request by Sir William Byles, Liberal, in the house of commons, that Premier Asquith restate more definitely the essential objects for which the nation was fighting, in the hope that peaceful influences might result in those objects being attained by means of other than warfare, left the premier cold.

"I stated these objects with as much definiteness as I am capable of at the beginning of the war and at the Guild hall," the premier said, "and I am unable to add anything to those statements."

Pressed to take under consideration the peace movement of the German Socialists, Asquith reiterated: "I have nothing to add to the statements I have already made."

WAR PREPAREDNESS IS PEACE INSURANCE

Roosevelt Gives His Views In Exposition Addresses

San Francisco, July 22.—Theodore Roosevelt delivered two addresses at the Panama Pacific exposition, one on military preparations and the other a personal talk to "the men on the line," soldiers, sailors and marines.

He held that a man afraid to fight is not fit to vote, and "a mother who is not willing to raise her boy to be a soldier is not fit for citizenship."

"War and Peace" was the topic of Roosevelt's principal address, the points of which were:

The average Chinaman took the position that China was "too proud to fight," and China has paid the price. The pacifists of the nation are now trying to Chinafy the United States.

In any nation it is true that without fighting efficiency all other national efficiency is but a house built on sand.

You cannot make elocution an adequate substitute for action.

We have signed peace treaties which bind us, even if American women are raped and American men murdered, as in Mexico, or American men, women and children murdered on the high seas, as in the case of the Lusitania and Guilight, to listen to a year's conversation on the case before taking action.

Disarmament would simply mean the Chinafication of this country.

Preparedness for war is the best type of peace insurance.

We should have universal military training for our young men, based preferably on the Swiss model.

PARIS GREEN IN WELL

Plans of Would-Be Poisoner on Farm Are Frustrated

South Hampton, N. H., July 22.—Arrests are expected in the poison mystery that stirred this town when paris green was found near the well of William Charland, a quantity having evidently been dumped into the well, which is the sole supply of water for the farm.

The perpetrator of the act was evidently frightened in his work for the opened package, from which some of the poison had been taken, was left at the side of the well.

The discovery of the paris green was made by one of the farmhands. The water supply to the house was immediately shut off.

MANUFACTURERS YIELD

Twenty-One Thousand Men's Garment Workers Return to Work

New York, July 22.—Twenty-one thousand men's garment workers, who had been on strike for a week, have returned to work.

Sidney Hillman, president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, announced that all danger of a general men's garment workers' strike throughout the country had passed. The manufacturers have made offers acceptable to the unions, he declared.

The situation in the women's garment workers' negotiations remains unchanged.

THE WILL OF ENGLAND.

(From the London Times).

The organs of the German Government are full of the sorry plight of England and the hopelessness of the Allied cause. While the Cologne Gazette descants upon "the English difficulties and the uncertainty whether the latest improvizations will succeed," and declares that we have still to overcome the foes of our own "household" before we can help our Allies, the North-German Gazette strives "to enlighten" the world on "the real state" of German opinion. In Germany it writes, "the belief is general that France, England, and Russia will perceive sooner or later, that no improvement in their military situation is to be hoped for, and that the prosecution of the war is futile." We do not question the sincerity of these opinions. We believe them to represent what most Germans think. They are at once sincere and entirely false. Nothing has been more striking and more consoling, than the inability of our enemies to gauge our mind and character. They construe as signs of weakness what we know to be indications of strength and as feebleness of purpose the varied expressions of our set resolve. A people accustomed to mental and military servitude, taught from the cradle to think and feel according to system, cannot grasp the thoughts and impulses of a race bred in freedom and never more determned to defend that freedom than when it is menaced by the organized brutality of an unscrupulous foe. We need no German to tell us that the military task of the Allies is harder than we once hoped it might be at this hour; but when the Germans imagine that, on this account, we and our Allies shall presently perceive the prosecution of the war to be futile, their misreading of our character is as gross as the criminality of their onslaught upon the liberties of Europe.

One German writer, at least, has seen and said the truth. "England," wrote Herr Maximilian Harden recently, "is awakening, and will not slumber again, save in death." He may believe that we shall presently slumber in death but we know that we have both the will and the power to live, and the fixed determination so to fight that we may gain the right to live in a world freed from the intolerable German menace. Never in our history have we been faced with deadlier peril, but never have we confronted peril with a sterner resolve to overcome it. In our past wars there have been internal bickerings and feuds. Even during the Napoleonic wars, which most closely resemble the present struggle, prominent politicians and strong sections of the public opposed the national enterprise. We have to-day agitations and discontent; but not with the war. All effective criticism, all desire for change, is directed against failures on the part of our public men and public departments to prosecute the war with the needful intensity, and against the insufficiency of the measures hitherto taken to secure national organization. The people of Great Britain and the British people overseas are determinded that this war shall not only be prosecuted, but it shall be prosecuted with a single eye to complete victory. Their temper is such that they will brook no dallying and suffer no proved incompetence, but will hold those responsible for the conduct of the war strictly accountable for shortcomings.

We publish this morning a letter in which Mr. Austin Harrison expresses the feeling of a large and growing body of the public. With many of his strictures we are not in agreement; but we are whole-hearted supporters of his main doctrine that the State must have power to allot service to us all, and we believe that the Government will be ill-advised if they persist in ignoring this demand. In obedience to public feeling, political and administrative changes have already been made. Unless proof is given, as we believe and trust it will be given, that substantial progress is being made towards the fulfillment of the national desire, other changes must follow. They will be imposed by the demand for greater efficiency. Under the educative influence of German misdeeds and of German organization for evil, we have learned potentially, if not actually, the imperative need of organization for good. Men, rifles, ordnance, aeroplanes, ammunition, and all the requirements of modern warfare must be poured forth in ever-increasing volume. Our military, naval and diplomatic action must be more fully co-ordinated with that of our Allies, and everything subordinated to the one supreme end of victory. We know that we are engaged in a contest in which the reward of success is life and the penalty of failure death. We know that we hold in trust not only our own existence and that of our Allies, but the very liberties and welfare of mankind. German confidence is great; ours is greater, for it is based on certain knowledge and on indomitable resolution. Adversity was needed to arouse us from the careless slumber in which we were sunk a year ago. It has come, and has roused us. Should greater adversity be in store, it will but rouse us yet further, till we have shaken all sleep from our eyes, and can gaze undismayed towards the clear horizon beyond the clouds overhead. Germany may continue to misread our purpose. Not to do so would be to recognize her own inevitable discomfiture. It is our business so to acquit ourselves that she may recognize it speedily; but, be her awakening soon or late, her people will come to rue the day when, in rapacious arrogance, she stirred us to effort and impelled us to conquer.

THE FOX FARM.

Holbrook just south of Braintree, has a 50-acre fox ranch, one of the first in this country. There is nearly $100,000 worth of the animals, including the famous silver species whose pelts are sometimes worth $1,000 or more each, are there. Marten and mink are to be added. Russell Shaw, one of the proprietors, is a grandson of Robert T. Oulton of Prince Edward Island, who originated what is said to be the first successful plan for breeding black foxes. The whole ranch is a maze of wire enclosures, and it is conducted on a strictly scientific basis. Each Sunday sees a swarm of interested visitors.—Hingham Journal.

CAPE COD CANAL.

It has been announced that the Cape Cod canal is now available for vessels drawing eighteen feet of water and that new and lower rates for passage will go into effect. This increased depth will permit torpedo boat destroyers and submarines to pass readily from one bay to the other. It is expected that in a few weeks more the total depth will be 25 feet for the ditch at mean low water and still larger vessels can be accommodated. This will be in accordance with the original plans, but it is reported the company is planning to deepen it to 35 feet at low tide mark, which would permit any existing warship to pass, and allow about any merchant vessel afloat to make the short cut between Boston and New York. There is some consideration being given to the advisability of fortifying the entrances to the canal to prevent some foe getting control of what is a valuable strategic waterway in time of a possible war.—Hingham Journal.

Mrs. Gomez of 9 Edward street, is entertaining her nieces Mrs. F. P. Brown and daughter Greta, of Brooklyn, N. Y., and Mrs. M. L. Bernard and daughter Maurine of Omaha, Neb. ## BOARD OF HEALTH BURIES THE DOG

The Board of Health late Wednesday afternoon decided it would bury the dog shot and killed for rabies Monday on the premises of Peter Hynes at 45 Broadway, and in this way put to an end a controversy which promised to develop into a most exciting one.

The dog was shot by Dr. Francis Abele, Jr., after he told Mrs. Hynes there was slight chance for its recovery. The police declined to take the body in charge on the grounds as it was outside their province. The Board of Health took a similar stand ruling that inasmuch as the dog was owned by Hynes and shot on his premises he should assume the cost of burying it. On his refusal to do that the Board declined to have anything to do with the case.

Monday evening the presence of the unburied dog in the cellar became a lively topic of conversation at Quincy Point. Tuesday the story spread and Wednesday another appeal was made to the board with the same result. Late Wednesday afternoon an employee was ordered to dispose of the body.

About four o'clock Peter Hynes called at City Hall to inquire whether or not his family could not be granted the relief they wanted. He said if the dog had been shot because of an injury or ordinary illness there would be no objection to his burying the body but since he felt there was danger of infection from a rabid dog no one at the house wanted to handle it. He said he was willing to dig the grave and do the work if someone would carry the body out of the cellar.

He learned at the office of Acting Mayor Crane that the board of Health would take charge of the body before five o'clock.

The dog is thought to have developed rabies as a result of a fight it engaged in with a white bull dog which over ran Quincy Point Saturday. Both dogs were more or less chewed up during the fight. The Hynes dog found its way home with difficulty. On Sunday symptons of paralysis became evident and on Monday they were more pronounced. Tuesday the animal was carried to the cellar where food was put within its reach and the veterinary called. He advised killing the animal.

Other dogs are known to have been bitten by the white bull dog before its fight with the Hynes dog and they are under observation. The residents have adopted a cautious course on the approach of any dog acting suspiciously and many animals have been restrained for several days.

Simultaneously, but only through a coincidence the annual warning to dog owners of the city was posted. The document bears the name of Emery L. Crane, acting mayor, and is the first official document of a pubilc nature that has come to the attention of the city clerk since Mayor Campbell left him guardian of the city when he went to "Frisco."

The warning reads that a warrant has been issued to Daniel R. McKay, acting chief of police, ordering him to kill or cause to be killed all unlicensed or not properly collared dogs and to prosecute owners or keepers or them. The members of the police department have been instructed to act accordingly.

The licenses are paid at the office of the city clerk. It was stated there Wednesday that the amount of money received this year for dog licenses would probably exceed by a small amount that paid in last year.

WABASH ROAD SOLD UNDER THE HAMMER

Secured by Committe of Creditors For $18,000,000

St. Louis, July 22.—The property, franchises and all other rights of the Wabash railroad, a $220,000,000 corporation, were sold under the hammer for $18,000,000 to the joint reorganization committee of the road's creditors under foreclosure here to satisfy a $41,000,000 mortgage of which the Equitable Trust company of New York is trustee.

The sale was advertised under a foreclosure decree issued by Judge Adams, under whose jurisdiction the road has been managed by receivers for three and a half years, and was on the application of the Equitable Trust company.

A few minutes before the time set for the sale the New York Trust company filed suit against the railroad company for $1,575,000 for the rental of cars and equipment.

THE REMINGTON STRIKE

Indications That Men Will Return to Work by Next Monday

Bridgeport, Conn., July 22.—Joint victory is the paradoxical ending of one of the most peculiar strike situations of a decade with the granting of an eight-hour day and an increase in wages to all its employes by the Remington Arms and Ammunition company and a general cessation of strike activities on the part of the labor leaders as a result.

It is now understood that all the strikers will be back at work again by next Monday.

J. J. Keppler, leading spirit in the strike, says a truce has been made, and that the strike will end Monday on terms favorable to the union.

Thomas J. Savage, Keppler's right-hand man, and member of the executive board of the International Association of Machinists, says he knows nothing of any truce and insists that Keppler is wrong.

Several of the labor men say they will ask President Wilson to investigate charges that German money and influence caused the strike.

IN NATURE OF AN ULTIMATUM

Note to Germany Will Demand Full High-Seas Rights

QUESTION IS SQUARELY PUT

Means Controversy Must Come to Head Without Further Delay—Germany's Pledge Hedged About With Conditions Impossible For United States to Accept

Washington, July 22.—The authoritative statement is made that the new note to Germany will go within the next few days, that the tentative draft has been approved by the president and his advisers and that Secretary of State Lansing is now engaged in putting the finishing touches on it.

The note will not be unfriendly in character, it is pointed out, because Gemany and the United States are still on a friendly basis. It will seek, however, to bring the controversy between the two governments to a head without further delay.

The German foreign office on the receipt of the note will have to determine whether the relations between the two governments shall be friendly or unfriendly in the future. It is said the note will certainly carry the intimation, if not the plain statement, that the United States does not care to continue to exchange notes.

Unless the note shall be materially changed before it is dispatched it will emphasize the following points:

1. It will say that the United States cannot accept the conditions proposed by the German answer of July 10 under which the German government would undertake to guarantee safe travel across the Atlantic for American ships and American passengers.

2. It will say that the United States will expect the imperial German government to respect the rights of American shipmasters and American travelers as guaranteed by international law.

3. It will say that the United States maintains that the steamship Lusitania was unjustly sunk and will repeat the demand for reparation for the loss of American lives.

The communication will construe the German answer of July 10 as conceding the rights to which American ships and American citizens are entitled on the high seas. This concession, it is pointed out, is contained in the following paragraph of the German note:

"The imperial government, therefore, repeats the assurance that American ships will not be hindered in the prosecution of legitimate shipping and the lives of American citizens shall not be placed in jeopardy."

If that guarantee had not been hedged about with numerous conditions, officials pointed out, it would have narrowed the issue between the two governments down to the question as to whether the sinking of the Lusitania should be disavowed and reparation made for that act.

Much to the regret of the United States government—and the note will probably put it in this way—the pledge of safety for Americans is surrounded by conditions that practically nullify it.

It is not understood that the new note will go into any great detail in explaining why the conditions proposed by Germany cannot be accepted. The communication, it is said, will simply say it is impossible for the United States to accept any of the conditions proposed; that nothing short of a nonconditional guarantee of the maritime rights of American shipping and American citizens will satisfy this government.

The attitude of the government is that an acceptance of any of the conditions attached to the alleged guarantee of safety proposed in the German answer of July 10 would in reality amount to a surrender of the claim that American ships and Americans are entitled to the freedom of the seas, without interference from any country engaged in war, so long as they do not violate international law.

MRS. CONANT'S SCHEME.

"Mary, this coffee is unusually muddy," exclaimed her husband, Henry Hussey, vigorously stirring at the same time the contents of the cup before him.

Seated with them around the carefully set breakfast table, was Mrs. Conant, Henry Hussey's only sister.

At her husband's remark, young Mrs. Hussey flushed visibly.

"Perhaps you got some of the grounds, dear. Let me give you another cup."

"No, I'll make this do now—probably 'tis all just alike. I'd give a good deal to have a cup of mother's coffee, this morning. Hers is what you can call coffee; isn't it, Belle?" addressing his sister.

"No more than this, I think," reproved his sister quietly.

After the hall door closed, and her brother had entered a "down-town car," Mrs. Conant remarked thoughtfully:

"Mary."

"Yes," responded her sister-in-law inquiringly.

"Is Henry accustomed to find fault with your cooking by making that odious comparison?"

"Sometimes," returned Mary reluctfly.

"'Tis just as I thought, Mary. But I have a scheme that will put a stop, I haven't a doubt, to his disagreeable habit before it becomes chronic."

"What," said Mary wonderingly. "Nothing harmful, I hope," she continued laughing.

"Perfectly harmless, but a sure cure," replied her sister. "Mother is the one to administer the medicine, and she always believes in giving good doses."

"I think I don't understand, Belle."

"Why, 'tis just this—you know mother is coming next week to keep house for you, while you attend the musical convention. Now my scheme is to have mother give Henry enough of her cooking to satisfy him—of course, for the time-being cooking will be a lost art with her. You must leave a few choice bits which mother must sandwich in with her food, just for contrast."

"Do you presume mother will agree to any such thing?" asked Mary.

"Certainly and be delighted over the idea. It's an extreme case of necessity, Mary."

Mrs. Conant noticed during the next few days how often her brother referred to his mother's way—which was in every instance superior to that of his wife's—of cooking this or that dish.

"He'll appreciate Mary when she gets back, I know," she thought.

The elder Mrs. Hussey entered with spirit into her daughter's plan.

"I haven't forgotten my own experience," she declared. "I have an idea, Mary, Henry won't my cooking again in a hurry," she added resolutely.

The next morning after Mary left, her husband found the coffee for breakfast only lukewarm, and the graham rolls baked to a hard brown.

"Mother didn't use to cook this way," was his mental soliloquy.

He see ned not to relish his breakfast, and ate only the inside of the rolls, laying the crusts by his plate. He sipped his coffee once, twice looked across the table, and then poured out a glass of milk.

"I thought you liked the crusts of my rolls," suggested Mrs. Hussey, as she watched her son place the fourth crust in the bone dish. "I made these purposely for you—and took great pains with them," she honestly added. "I hope you are not feeling ill. That reminds me, Mary left some excellent currant jelly in the closet; let me get you some."

Henry made no remonstrance, and helped himself twice to the tempting delicacy.

"Mary's a natural housekeeper, I think, Henry. You were certainly very fortunate in getting such a capable wife."

"She's one in a thousand," declared Henry warmly.

That noon, as was his custom, he took his lunch at a "down-town" restaurant. He came home to his usual six o'clock dinner, worn out with the extra hard work of the day.

Though Mrs. Hussey declared that she had taken unusual care in preparing her son's dinner, he left his potato untouched, as it was hardly more than half done, while the juice was entirely cooked out of the roast.

"Have some cake, Henry?" asked his mother in a disappointed tone, as she passed a plate of fruit cake towards him. "Mary left a loaf; she said you were particularly fond of it, as though I didn't remember how my fruit cake never went begging when you were aroud."

"There's one thing on the table worth eating," he thought gloomily.

"Seems as though I'd like some of your crust coffee—same as you used to make, mother," he said as he folded his napkin.

"Would it make you too much trouble?"

"No trouble at all," answered his mother quickly. "Another chance," she mused.

That night she wrote Mary a card. "The scheme's working splendidly."

When Henry entered the breakfast room next morning, he found his mother already there.

"I've had splendid success with my crust coffee," she remarked looking up.

He noticed small lumps of burnt bread floating on the surface of his coffee. He set down the cup after taking one swallow, which Mrs. Hussey appeared not to notice.

"Does it taste as it used to?" she asked anxiously.

"Ye-es," he replied, at the same time removing a crumb from his mouth with his napkin.

"I'm sorry the chops got burnt so, this morning, but Mary left some sliced ham; will you have some?"

He was only too glad to assent.

"Here, let me fill your cup again, there is plenty of it," and she lifted the coffee-pot from the mat. "I made enough to last two days."

"No more this morning, mother. I must hurry to catch my car." While putting on his gloves he asked, carelessly, "How long is that convention going to hold?"

"It closes tomorrow, but I wrote Mary last night, she'd better visit Uncle William's while she's so near. I thought she'd never have a better chance and it's a delightful place to visit. I told her things were going on delightfully here, so she needn't worry."

Henry made an inaudible reply.

"'Tis working like a charm and he doesn't suspect a thing," laughed Mrs. Hussey to herself.

Mary remained away two weeks—weeks long to be remembered by her husband.

"This seems like living, again," exclaimed Henry radiantly, at the breakfast table the morning following his wife's return. "This coffee's the best I've drank for years, and I'd rather have a plate of your graham rolls, Mary, than dine at Delmonico's!"—Adelbert F. Caldwell.

JAIL SENTENCE FOR CONTEMPT

William Taylor, an inspector of the Board of Health and a reserve officer of the police department, was adjudged in contempt this morning and sentenced to seven days in Dedham jail for neglecting to comply with a decree of the court ordering him to make a payment of $20 this morning on a debt.

Taylor should have been in court at 9 o'clock today as ordered. Through his absence he was defaulted and was brought into court on a capias.

He said his absence from court was unintentional and due purely to a misunderstanding. He said he called at the office of Dominion Collecting Agency Wednesday and showed a willingness to pay the amount ordered.

Judge Avery said this was not to be considered since the money was ordered paid in court today.

The original action was brought to collect a bill of $40 due a local physician for medical attendance.

Taylor was later released on bond.

Mrs. T .C. Martin of Bondsville formerly of West Quincy, was in town Tuesday, renewing old acquaintances. On Wednesday she attended the Doane family re-union at Nantasket beach.

Esther Morris, Handsomest Baby In Staten Island, New York.

Recently in the borough of Richmond, a part of the city of New York, which comprises all of Staten Island, situated in New York bay, there was held a great baby show. Hundreds of little ones from all over the borough were entered for the various prizes. There were many prizes offered for the fattest baby, the most beautiful, the healthiest, the largest for its age, for the tallest and for the shortest, and all the classes were well filled. The charming little miss who captured the prize or beauty is shown in the accompanying picture holding the cup that was awarded her. Among so many handsome children it must have been a difficult question for the judges to decide. But they one and all agreed that Miss Esther Morris was worthy of the high honor. As you can see by the picture, Miss Esther is a young lady of exceeding beauty, but she is altogether too young to care about that, but was highly pleased with the handsome prize.

Paper and Pencil Game.

When your friends come give them each a paper and pencil and see how many can write the correct answers to these questions:

Name a battle found in every farmyard?

Name an uninhabited battle?

Name a battle unpleasant to barefoot boys?

Name two battles that are found in a forest?

Name a good luck battle?

Name a stimulating battle?

Name an observing battle?

Name a comfortable battle?

Name a college battle?

Name a wealthy battle?

Name a cleanly battle?

Name a suspended battle?

Answers: Cowpens. Wilderness. Stony Point. Fair Oaks and Seven Pines. Horseshoe. Brandywine. Lookout Mountain. Fort Pillow, Princeton. Rich Mountain. White Plains. Suspended Rock.

"Fool Monkey."

In this as in so many games it lends ease if the players sit in a circle and select a leader.

The leader then starts the game by naming an animal whose name begins with "A," as "antelope." The player on his left at once takes this up and adds to it another animal, the name beginning with "B," saying, "Antelope, bison," and passing the turn to his left hand neighbor, who repeats the list, adding, say, "Camel" for "C." And so it goes on, soon becoming a serious tax on the memory and alertness of the players.

Whoever bungles the catalogue or fails to find an animal with the letter for which he or she is responsible is hailed in mockery as "fool monkey," and this name must be mentioned by succeeding players instead of the animal which the delinquent ought to have uttered, but muddled.

Experience shows that the ranks of the "fool monkey" will soon be well filled.

Interesting Bird Items.

Birds seen eating army worms were: Robins, catbirds, meadow larks, chewinks, thrushes and wrens.

In Germany the owners of vineyards are encouraged by their government to distribute nesting material and erect birdhouses in their vineyards to attract feathered foes of insect pests.

The swiftest bird is said to be the frigate bird. This bird is able to fly, under favorable conditions, 200 miles an hour.

Earliest Watches.

Some of the earliest watches were made in Nuremberg. Their shape was almost round, and they were called "Nuremberg eggs."

Why the Owl Is Wise.

"As wise as an owl," my father said
One day while talking to Uncle Ted.

Now I've thought and thought about that speech,
And every time I hear one screech

I say to myself, "As wise as an owl,"
And wish that I at night might prowl

So I could learn to be as wise
And see as much with my wee eyes.

You know the owl can see at night:
They say he has such wondrous sight.

So he must know each elf that roams
And witches, kelpies, goblins, gnomes.

And that is why the grownups say,
"As wise as an owl"—'tis as plain as day.

PUBLIC LIBRARY NOTES

Not long ago, a competent critic, Edward J. O'Brien, printed in the Boston Transcript an article relative to the fiction of literary merit purchased in 1913 by the Boston Public Library. He selected from the titles reviewed by the Nation, eighty-four of reasonable merit and divided them into three groups:—"those of permanent literary significance;" those of less literary significance, but of "considerable literary distinction;" and those which, although not able to "claim admission to either of the more signficant lists," yet "reveal some motive other than the manufacture of commercial fiction."

Of the 22 titles included in the first list the Boston Public Library had 3; of the 44 novels included in the second list the Boston Public Library had 14; and of the 18 novels in the third list the Boston Public Library had 10, making a total of 27.

The purpose of Mr. O'Brien in thus criticising the purchases in fiction of the Boston Public Library is to show how difficult it is for a student of the chief literary works of modern English fiction to form conclusions, when the best of the works are omitted from the collection. The works of H. G. Wells, Joseph Conrad, John Galsworthy, and Hugh Walpole are among these not included, or, as is the case with John Galsworthy's "Dark Flower" restricted to hall use.

That our Library gives the student a better chance for this study may be readily seen by a glance at the list given below, in the three divisions which Mr. O'Brien has made.

Out of 84 titles included in his list, the Thomas Crane Public Library has purchased, of the first class 17; of the 2d. 23; and of the third class 13, making a total of 53. Our neighboring Library of Milton purchased 48.

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I—Kenneth Griswold, an unsuccessful writer because of socialistic tendencies, sups with his friend Bainbridge at Chaudiere's restaurant in New Orleans and declares that if necessary he will steal to keep from starving.

CHAPTER II—Griswold holds up Andrew Galbraith, president of the Bayou State Security, in his private office and escapes with $100,000 in cash.

CHAPTER III—By original methods Griswold escapes the hue and cry and goes aboard the Belle Julie as a deckhand. He unexpectedly confronts Charlotte Farnham of Wahaska, Minn., who had seen him cash Galbraith's check in the bank.

CHAPTER IV—Charlotte recognizes Griswold, but decides to write to Galbraith rather than denounce the robber to the captain and so incur unpleasant notoriety.

CHAPTER V—Charlotte sees the brutal mate rescued from drowning by Griswold and delays sending her letter to Galbraith.

CHAPTER VI—Charlotte talks to Griswold and by his advice sends her letter of betrayal to Galbraith anonymously.

CHAPTER IX.

The Goths and Vandals.

In the day of its beginnings, Wahaska was a minor trading post on the northwestern frontier, and an outfitting station for the hunters and trappers of the upper Mississippi and Minnesota lake region.

Later, it became the market town of a wheat-growing district, and a foundation of modest prosperity was laid by well-to-do farmers gravitating to that county seat to give their children the benefit of a graded school. Later still came the passing of the wheat, a re-peopling of the farms by a fresh influx of home-seekers from the Old World, and the birth, in Wahaska and elsewhere, of the industrial era.

Jasper Grierson was a product of the wheat-growing period. The son of one of the earliest of the New York state homesteaders in the wheat belt, he came of age in the year of the Civil war draft, and was unpatriotic enough, some said, to dodge conscription, or the chance of it, by throwing up his hostler's job in a Wahaska livery stable and vanishing into the dim limbo of the farther West. Also, tradition added that he was well-spared by most; that he was ill-spared, indeed, by only one, and that one a woman.

After the westward vanishing, Wahaska saw him no more until he returned in his vigorous prime, a veteran soldier of fortune upon whom the goddess had poured a golden shower out of some cornucopia of the Colorado mines. Although rumor, occasionally naming him during the years of absence, had never mentioned a wife, he was accompanied by a daughter, a dark-eyed, red-lipped young woman, a rather striking beauty of a type unfamiliar to Wahaska and owing nothing, it would seem, to the grim, gray-wolf Jasper.

Since the time was ripe, Wahaska did presently burst its swaddling-bands. Commercial enterprise is sheep-like; where one leads, others will follow; and the mere following breeds success, if only by the sheer impetus of the massed forward movement. Jasper Grierson was the man of the hour, but the price paid for leadership by the led is apt to be high. When Wahaska became a city, with a charter and a bonded debt, electric lights, waterworks and a trolley system, Grierson's interest predominated in every considerable business venture in it, save and excepting the Raymer Foundry and Machine works.

He was president of one bank, and the principal stockholder in the other, which was practically an allied institution; he was the sole owner of the grain elevator, the saw and planing mills, the box factory and a dozen smaller industries in which his name did not appear. Also, it was his money, or rather his skill as a promoter, which had transformed the Wahaska & Pineboro railroad from a logging switch, built to serve the sawmill, into an important and independent connecting link in the great lake region system.

In each of these commercial or industrial chariots the returned native sat in the driver's seat; and those who remembered him as a loutish young farmhand overlooked the educative results of continued success and marveled at his gifts, wondering how and where he had acquired them.

While the father was thus gratifying a purely Gothic lust for conquest, the daughter figured, in at least one small circle, as a beautiful young Vandal, with a passion for overturning all the well-settled traditions. At first her attitude toward Wahaska and the Wahaskans had been serenely tolerant; the tolerance of the barbarian who neither understands, nor sympathizes with, the homely virtues and the customs which have grown out of them. Then resentment awoke, and with it a soaring ambition to reconstruct the social fabric of the countrified town upon a model of her own devising.

In this charitable undertaking she was aided and abetted by her father, who indulgently paid the bills. At her instigation he built an imposing red brick mansion on the sloping shore of Lake Minnedaska, named it—or suffered her to name it—"Mereside," had an artist of parts up from Chicago to design the decorations and superintend the furnishings, had a landscape gardener from Philadelphia to lay out the grounds and, when all was in readiness, gave a housewarming to which the invitations were in some sense mandatory, since by that time he had a finger in nearly every commercial and industrial pie in Wahaska.

But there were still obstacles to be surmounted. From the first there had been a perverse minority refusing stubbornly to bow the head in the house of—Grierson. The Farnhams were of it, and the Raymers, with a following of a few of the families called "old" as age is reckoned in the middle West. The men of this minority were slow to admit the omnipotence of Jasper Grierson's money, and the women were still slower to accept Miss Grierson on terms of social equality.

At the housewarming this minority had been represented only by variously worded regrets. At a reception, given to mark the closing of Mereside, socially, on the eve of Miss Margery's departure for the winter in Florida, the regrets were still polite and still unanimous, Miss Margery laughed defiantly and set her white teeth on a determined resolution to reduce this inner citadel of conservatism at all costs. Accordingly, she opened the campaign on the morning after the reception; began it at the breakfast table when she was pouring her father's coffee.

"You know everybody, and everybody's business, poppa: who is the treasurer of St. John's?" she inquired.

"How should I know?" grumbled the magnate, whose familiarity with church affairs was limited to certain writings of a legal nature concerning the Presbyterian house of worship upon which he held a mortgage.

"You ought to know," asserted Miss Margery, with some asperity. "Isn't it Mr. Edward Raymer?"

Jasper Grierson frowned thoughtfully into space. "Why, yes; come to think of it, I guess he is the man. Anyway, he's one of their—what do you call 'em—trustees?"

"Wardens," corrected Margery.

"Yes, that's it; I knew it was something connected with a penitentiary. What do you want of him?"

"Nothing much of him; but I want a check for five hundred dollars payable to his order."

Jasper Grierson's laugh was suggestive of the noise made by a rusty door hinge. The tilting of the golden cornucopia had made him a ruthless money-grubber, but he never questioned his daughter's demands.

"Going in for the real old simon-pure, blue-ribbon brand of respectability this time, ain't you, Madgie?" he chuckled; but he wrote the check on the spot.

Two hours later, Miss Grierson's cutter, driven by herself, paraded in Main street to the delight of any eye esthetic. When the clean-limbed Kentuckian had measured the length of Main street he was sent on across the railroad tracks into the industrial half of the town, and was finally halted in front of the Raymer Foundry and Machine works.

Raymer was at his desk when the smart equipage drew up before the office door; and a moment later he was at the curb, bareheaded, offering to help the daughter of men out of the robe wrappings.

Raymer held the office door open for her, and in the grimy little den which had been his father's before him, placed a chair for her at the desk-end.

"Going in for the Real Brand This Time' Ain't You Madge?"

"Now you can tell me in comfort what I can do for you," he said.

"Oh, it's only a little thing. I came to see you about renting a pew in St. John's; that is our church, you know."

Raymer did not know, but he was politic enough not to say so.

"I am quite at your service," he hastened to say. "Shall I show you a plan of the sittings?"

When the sittings were finally decided upon she opened her purse.

"It is so good of you to take time from your business to wait on me," she told him; and then, in naive confusion: "I—I asked poppa to make out a check, but I don't know whether it is big enough."

Raymer took the order to pay, glanced at the amount, and from that to the velvety eyes with the half-abashed query in them. Miss Grierson's eyes were her most effective weapon. With them she could look anything, from daggers drawn to kisses. Just now the look was of childlike beseeching, but Raymer withstood it—or thought he did.

"It is more than twice as much as we get for the best locations," he demurred. "Wait a minute and I'll write you a check for the difference and give you a receipt."

But at the word she was on her feet in an eager flutter of protest.

"Oh, please don't!" she pleaded. "If it is really too much, can't you put the difference in the missionary box, or in the—in the minister's salary?—as a little donation from us, you know?"

Thus the small matter of business was concluded; but Miss Margery was not yet ready to go. From St. John's and its affairs official she passed deftly to the treasurer of St. John's and his affairs personal. Was the machine works the place where they made steam engines and things? And did the sign, "No Admittance," on the doors mean that no visitors were allowed? If not, she would so much like to—"

Raymer smiled and put himself once more at her service, this time as guide and megaphonist. It was all very noisy and grimy, but if she cared to go through the works he would be glad to go with her.

He did not know how glad he was going to be until they had passed through the clamorous machine shop and had reached the comparatively quiet foundry. One of Miss Margery's gifts was the ability to become for the moment an active and sympathetic sharer in anyone's enthusiasms. In the foundry she looked and listened, and was unsophisticated only to the degree that invites explanation. It was a master-stroke of finesse. A man is never so transparent as when he forgets himself in his own trade talk; and Raymer was unrolling himself as a scroll for Miss Grierson to read as she ran.

The tour of the works which had begun in passing acquaintance ended in friendship, precisely as Miss Grierson had meant it should; and when Raymer was tucking her into the cutter and wrapping her in the fur robes, she added the finishing touch, or rather the touch for which all the other touches had been the preliminaries.

"I'm so glad I had the courage to come and see you this morning. We have been dreadfully remiss in church matters, but I am going to try to make up for it in the future. I'm sorry you couldn't come to us last evening. Please tell your mother and sister that I do hope we'll meet, sometime. I should so dearly love to know them. Thank you so much for everything. Good-by."

Raymer watched her as she drove away, noted her skillful handling of the fiery Kentuckian and her straight seat in the flying cutter, and the smile which a day or two earlier might have been mildly satirical was now openly approbative.

"She is a shrewd little strategist," was his comment; "but all the same she is a mighty pretty girl, and as good and sensible as she is shrewd. I wonder why mother and Gertrude haven't called on her?"

Having thus mined the Raymer outworks, Miss Grierson next turned her batteries upon the Farnhams. They were Methodists, and having learned that the doctor's hobby was a struggling mission work in Pottery Flat, Margery called the paternal checkbook again into service, and the cutter drew up before the doctor's office in Main street.

"Good-morning, doctor," she began cheerfully, bursting in upon the head of the First church board of administrators as a charming embodiment of youthful enthusiasm, "I'm running errands for poppa this morning. Mr. Rodney was telling us about that little First church mission in Pottery Flat, and poppa wanted to help. But we are not Methodists, you know, and he was afraid—that is, he didn't quite know how you might—"

It was an exceedingly clever bit of acting, and the good doctor capitulated at once, discrediting, for the first time in his life, the intuition of his home womankind.

"Now that is very thoughtful and kind of you, Miss Margery," he said, wiping his glasses and looking a second time at the generous figure of the piece of money paper. "I appreciate it the more because I know you must have a great many other calls upon your charity. We've been wanting to put a trained worker in charge of that mission for I don't know how long, and this gift of yours makes it possible."

"The kindness is in allowing us to help," murmured the small diplomat. "You'll let me know when more is needed? Promise me that, Doctor Farnham."

"I shouldn't be a good Methodist if I didn't," laughed the doctor. Then he remembered the Mereside reception and the regrets, and was moved to make amends. "I'm sorry we couldn't be neighborly last night; but my sister-in-law is very frail, and Charlotte doesn't go out much. They are both getting ready to go to Pass Christian, but I'm sure they'll call before they go south."

"I shall be ever so glad to welcome them," purred Miss Margery, "and I do hope they will come before I leave. I'm going to Palm Beach next week, you know."

"I'll tell them," volunteered the doctor. "They'll find time to run in, I'm sure."

But for some reason the vicarious promise was not kept; and the Raymers held aloof; and the Oswalds and the Barrs relinquished the new public library project when it became noised about that Jasper Grierson and his daughter were moving in it.

Miss Margery possessed her soul in patience up to the final day of her home staying, and the explosion might have been indefinitely postponed if, on that last day, the Raymers, mother and daughter, had not pointedly taken pains to avoid her at the lingerie counter in Thorwalden's. It was as the match to the fuse, and when Miss Grierson left the department store there were red spots in her cheeks and the dark eyes were flashing.

"They think I'm a jay!" she said, with a snap of the white teeth. "They need a lesson, and they're going to get it before I leave. I'm not going to sing small all the time!"

It was surely the goddess of discord who ordained that the blow should be struck while the iron was hot. Five minutes after the rebuff in Thorwalden's, Miss Grierson met Raymer as he was coming out of the Farmers' and Merchants' bank. There was an exchange of commonplaces, but in the midst of it Miss Margery broke off abruptly to say, "Mr. Raymer, please tell me what I have done to offend your mother and sister."

If she had been in the mood to compromise, half of the deferred payment of triumph might have been discharged on the spot by Raymer's blundering attempt at disavowal.

"Why, Miss Margery! I don't know—that is—er—really, you must be mistaken, I'm sure!"

"I am not mistaken, and I'd like to know," she persisted, looking him hardily in the eyes. "It must be something I have been doing, and if I can find out what it is, I'll reform."

Raymer got away as soon as he could; and when the opportunity offered, was besotted enough to repeat the question to his mother and sister. Mrs. Raymer was a large and placid matron of the immovable type, and her smile emphasized her opinion of Miss Grierson.

"The mere fact of her saying such a thing to you ought to be a sufficient answer, I should think," was her mild retort.

"I don't see why," Raymer objected. "What would you think if Gertrude did such a thing?"

"Oh, well; that is different. In the first place, Gertrude wouldn't do it, and—"

"Precisely. And Miss Grierson shouldn't have done it. It is because she can do such things that a few think she wouldn't be a pleasant person to know, socially."

"But why?" insisted Raymer, with masculine obtuseness.

It was his sister who undertook to make the reason plain to him.

"It isn't anything she does, or doesn't do, particularly; it is the atmosphere in which she lives and moves and has her being. If it weren't for her father's money, she would be—well, it is rather hard to say just what she would be. But she always makes me think of the bonanza people—the pick and shovel one day and a million the next. I believe she is a frank little savage, at heart."

"I don't," the brother contended, doggedly. "She may be a trifle new and fresh for Wahaska, but she is clever and bright, and honest enough to ignore a social code which makes a mock of sincerity and a virtue of hypocrisy. I like her all the better for the way she flared out at me. There isn't one young woman in a thousand who would have had the nerve and the courage to do it."

"Or the impudence," added Mrs. Raymer, when her son had left the room. Then: "I do hope Edward isn't going to let that girl come between him and Charlotte!"

The daughter laughed.

"I should say there is room for a regiment to march between them, as it is. Miss Gilman took particular pains to let him know what train they were leaving on, and I happen to know he never went near the station to tell them good-by."

CHILD'S DAINTY FROCK.

Printed Blue and White Linen Trimmed With Plain Blue.

CHIC SUMMER DRESS.

For summer wear is this charming frock of printed blue and white linen, with trimming of plain blue linen. The guimpe and sleeves are of striped batiste. An attractive sunbonnet of plain and printed linen is becomingly worn.

NEW HANDKERCHIEFS.

Voile Is Now Being Used For These Very Necessary Articles.

The newest thing in handkerchiefs—and there are new things in these accessories as well as in any other—are those of voile. Of course the finest of voile is used for the purpose, so that it will not be disagreeable to use.

One style of handkerchief is of solid pale pink voile and is bound with a narrow white hem. Blue, lavender and green voiles are used in the same way. A number of the handkerchiefs have a very wide border of white around a solid portion of color.

A very unusual decoration of one voile handkerchief is a figure of a woman dressed in street costume and leading a dog. The latter is embroidered in black, while the figure of the woman is embroidered in a combination of gay colors.

Some of the voile handkerchiefs are ornamented solely with a fancy hemstitched border. Such treatment of handkerchiefs adds great value to them, so that the price of one handkerchief is $1 or more.

Blocked designs are very prominent in the new voile handkerchiefs. These are separate sections of the material hemstitched into the corner of a handkerchief.

Not only are women's handkerchiefs made of voile. It is used also for men's handkerchiefs, and the colored borders on them are just as gay and attractive as those of the smaller kerchiefs.

Of course handkerchiefs of crepe de chine and china silk are still enjoying great popularity.

PIE PLATE AND SHADOW HATS

Odd, Chic and Exceedingly Becoming Are These Midsummer Creations.

As the days grow warmer new fashions are launched, but those which do appear are no less attractive and sometimes show greater thought and originality than the features displayed in the fashion festivals at the beginning of the seasons.

Odd, chic and exceedingly becoming are the new pie plate and shadow hats. The pie plate hat has a reasonably large brim, about the edge of which is an upturned frill of plaited malines, giving the appearance of a crinkly pie. The shadow hat is even more fascinating, for it veils at times the eyes. At least it does so when the head is bent. This shadow hat is nothing more than a straight brimmed sailor, the brims of various widths, according to choice, about which is placed a flat fold of malines, black or white. The fold is about two inches in width, and, being placed with its center along the edge of the hat brim, an inch extension of the fold is then upon either side of the brim edge. This makes a sort of little transparent wall about the hat above the edge of the brim and a smooth curtain like band below the edge. The very smartest people are wearing these hats.

NECKWEAR OF COLORED TULLE.

Colored tulle is being used for neckwear, the favorite manner of arrangement being a crushed fold of it about the stock collar, ending with a large bow at the back—a reminder of the old Gibson styles. Plaid silk collars and cuffs upon blouses of plain crepe de chine are new and effective, particularly for morning street wear. These plaids are medium in size and appear in many bright colors. They are sometimes made in one with the blouse, but oftener, for practical laundering reasons, are detachable.

FOY'S CLERKS ENJOY OUTING

Baseball And Water Sports On Program

The second annual outing of the clerks at the Adams Market and Water street stores of R. E. Foy was held at Glen Echo park Wednesday under ideal weather conditions. The affair was complimentary on the part of Mr. Foy who personally presided at the affair.

Employees, their families and friends, to the number of 175, attended the outing. They left City Square in special cars and reached the park shortly after noon. The dinner was served immediately under the direction of George Welsh, assisted by a committee which included George Guston, Richard M. Tinney, Frank H. Foy, Miss Eliza O. Ross. Lemuel Tinney, Leo Hurley, David Littlewood and Miss Lillian Johnson.

More than ten gallons of ice cream was served at the close of the repast, with cake, tonic and coffee.

At 1.30 the centre field of the base ball diamond where the dinner had been served, was cleared for the ball game between the married and single men. Eighteen picked players from both stores took the field and their families and friends crowded the side lines.

The game opened with sharp, snappy play which continued during the six innings. Both teams were tied with seven runs each at the end of the fifth inning. The married men won 8 to 7, Guston sending Hollis home on a pretty single with the deciding tally. The feature of the game was the remarkable catch by Eddie Wolf. H. R. Caddy and Hollis also starred.

The winning combination played Hollis, catcher; Charles Martin, pitcher; George Guston, first base; Richard Tinney, second base; W. Kain, short stop; George Mills, third base; Eddie Wolf, left field; Leo Hurley, centre field; Smith, right field. On the single men's team were Donald Berry, catcher; William McGrane, pitcher; Edward Martin, first base; Edward Foy, second base; Taylor, short stop; Frank Foy, third base; Lindquist, left field; Caddy, centre field; McEacheran, right field. Edward McDonald, manager of the Quincy Beef Co., was umpire.

A series of land and water sports were then carried out. The feature was the men's open race, won by Frank Foy in an exciting finish. The summary of the land sports:

Fat men's race, won by Hollis. George Guston, second.

Ladies race for employees— by Miss Elizabeth Ross, Miss Helen Ball, second.

Sack race—won by Edward Martin, Bert Smith, second, Frank Foy, third.

The water events were held on the lake and the results were as follows:

Swimming race—won by Hollis, Frank Foy, second, P. Kelliher, third.

Men's single oared race—won by Edward Wolf, Gus Ackerstrom, second.

Men's double oared race—won by Wolf and Messier, Edward Foy and C. Cartin, second.

Fancy diving contest—won by Frank Foy, Hollis, second, Bert Smith third.

Light refreshments were served at the close of the sports and the gathering adjourned to the bowling alleys which had been reserved for their use. Dancing was also enjoyed, music being furnished by an orchestra.

About seven o'clock the guests thronged the special cars for their homeward journey. The trip was made without any hitches. The stopping of the car was the signal for cheers and time and again Mr. Foy was given three hurrahs and a tiger.

Miss Corinne J. Picard of Merrymount road is enjoying York Beach with the Blunt's of Nashua, N. H., and also their Bungalow at Ogunquit, Maine.

MEMORIES OF KAMP KWINZY

The Quincy boys who were at Junior Kamp Kwinzy, the Y. M. C. A. Boys' Dept. camp, at Oldham Pond, Pembroke, during the last two weeks returned Tuesday evening, having had a most delightful time while in camp.

The camp was in charge of C. H. Humphrey, boys' work secretary of the association. John Connors of South Quincy, looked after the cooking to the entire satisfaction of all the boys.

The weather for the most part was ideal for camping with just enough rain to show the boys what camp life is like during rainy weather. The breezes which blew off the lake at night made sleeping enjoyable and many of the boys slept out under the stars.

The daily routine varied from day to day, with just enough work included to make the boys realize that camping wasn't all play and with base ball games and other attractions, the time passed all too swiftly for the boys.

At six thirty A. M. the call was given for morning exercises and with a little effort the boys turned out and under the direction of Robert Davis, who acted as physical director, went through a brisk setting up drill lasting about five minutes. This was just enough to make them appreciate the dip in the lake which followed and to give them an appetite for breakfast.

Breakfast, the lightest meal of the day, disposed of, the boys proceeded to wash their dishes and then were ready for the morning bible study. Seated under the trees or in one of the tents, a half hour or more, was spent in learning those things from Christ's life, which made Him the example for other lives, and much help and inspiration was received by the boys in the shaping of their lives.

After the regular work of the morning was finished, the boys were free to do as they pleased, and spent the time in playing ball, boating, fishing and in other ways. At eleven thirty the noon swim was enjoyed and with a sandy beach, and the water warm the boys had a great time, some of them learning to swim for the first time. At twelve thirty lunch was served and with a strong appetite the boys were ready for it and always managed to do full justice to what ever they had to eat. The afternoons were spent in fishing and other sports, and in the picking of huckleberries and blueberries, which grew in abundance in the neighborhood of the camp. At four thirty the call for afternoon swim was given and once more the boys enjoyed themselves in the water.

Supper was served at six thirty followed by a hike to the store, to Mayflower Grove, or by visiting in the neighborhood, the boys returning in time to retire at nine or nine thirty. Before retiring the boys gathered in one of the tents and after the reading of a chaper from the Bible, took part, through sentence prayers in closing the day by thanking God for His watchful care during the day.

Through misunderstanding the last two days in camp were interrupted by the coming of the Boys scouts but rather proving a misfortune the Quincy boys considered themselves fortunate, in being able to witness the work of the scouts in camp, and were glad that they were afforded this opportunity of showing the scouts that they enjoyed their stay with them.

Many little amusing things happened while in camp which will be pleasant memories, of the good time, and without an accident or sickness of any kind to mar their pleasure, the boys all united in saying this was the best fun they have had for a long time, and with increased equipment and a larger number of boys attending they are looking forward to an even better time next year. The following boys were at camp; Robert Davis, William Mullen, Chester McLeod, Woodward McLeod, Edgar Fox, Spencer Gray, Sidney Maxwell, Stanley Jenkins, Donald Davis, Harold McMillan, Alger McLennan, Donald Cummings, Stephen Yule, Arthur Smith and Curtis Kehew of Arlington.

ANTS' COWSHEDS.

One of the most interesting studies of insect life is the relationship between ants and plant-lice, or aphids. These plant-lice supply honeydew from the juices which they take as food from plants. The ants are very fond of this sweet substance, and care for the aphids in a manner that seems to us surprisingly intelligent. They sometimes carry them bodily to a better feeding ground and drive away certain of their enemies. It is claimed that they even build sheds of mud in the crotches of shrubs and small trees. On account of this insect relationship, one may truthfully call the ants "farmers," the aphids "cows," and these protecting mud cases cowsheds."

BOWLING ALLEYS IN NEW FAXON BUILDING

Applies For Permit For Second Of Business Blocks On Hancock Street

Application was made of the inspector of buildings this morning by Henry M. Faxon for the second business block to be erected on his property on Hancock street, between the Music Hall block and the Kincaide theatre.

Between the two blocks there will be a street running to the rear of the property. The new block will have a frontage on Hancock street of 121 feet and a depth of 122 feet. The original plan calls for a three story building. The application however stated that possibly but one story will be built at the present time. It will be of sufficient strength however so that the two upper stories may be added.

The building will be of first class construction and will be built of cement, terra cotta and brick, with the intersecting walls of terra cotta or other fire proof material. The estimated cost of the building is $18,000.

There will be a group of stores on the first floor and the basement will be finished off, one room being 63 feet in width, which it is understood will be used for a bowling alley.

RELEASES HER FEATHERED PETS

Miss Lane Gives Freedom To Her Robins

If anyone in his travels happens to see two little robins who look and act as if they had lost their home, please notify Miss Georgianna C. Lane, for they are probably her pets. Thursday Miss Lane decided to give freedom to the two robins, which she has reared from their early days. With merry chirping the two birds flew into the trees. That was the last seen of them.

Miss Lane thought perhaps the birds would remember where they had received their food and when they got hungry again would fly back to the branch of the tree which she has set up in the house. Up to this noon there has been no trace of them. Miss Lane was about the yard looking for them this morning, thinking that perhaps they had built themselves a home in one of the nearby trees. Food has been left in the yard so that should they return and be unable to enter the house, they will find something to eat.

Miss Lane still has four bluejays, which she also has reared since they were very young.

ANOTHER DOG MAY BE MAD

The police were asked Thursday to take in charge the dog of Arthur Ackerstrom of 11 Hersey place. The dog was one of those bitten by the Hynes dog which was shot for rabies by Dr. Francis J. Abele, Jr., The case was turned over to David Gordon, dog warden.

The request was the latest development in the "mad dog" situation at Quincy Point. Other owners have restrained their dogs for observation.

How many dogs were bitten is not known. A general alarm has been sent out for a white bulldog which went on a rampage through the district last week and bit several animals.

FINED $100 FOR ILLEGAL SALE

Inspector Goodhue of the police department sprang a new violation of the liquor law in Quincy during the hearing given Harold Kingsbury of Houghs Neck today. Kingsbury was charged with two illegal sales and was fined $50 on each complaint. In one he acted as an agent.

The second complaint alleged that Mrs. Margaret Flanagan who lived on Taber avenue ordered beer from Kingsbury and that he in turn ordered it from a Houghs Neck expressman and had it delivered to a house on Bay View avenue and then took it to the Flanagan home in a wheelbarrow. The complaint was the first of its kind ever brought in Quincy. Among the witnesses were men connected with the expressing of the goods. A tag was introduced showing the beer was shipped to Bay View avenue. City Solicitor Pinkham conducted the case for the government.

ARE ATHEISTS AND AGNOSTICS

Local Italians Drifting From Church, Says Speaker

W. D. Shriver of the community board of Presbyterian churches discussed the relation of the foreign population to the church at the First Presbyterian church Thursday evening before a large audience. Rev. Clarence E. Campbell presided.

Mr. Shriver has made a study of the Italian population of the city with a view to reaching them through the Presbyterian church, which at present in Quincy holds a weekly service conducted by an Italian Presbyterian minister. His recommendations will be incorporated in church work in the fall, probably in a department devoted to it.

"The Italians of Quincy, compared with other Italian settlements, are more prosperous," said Mr. Shriver, "but many of them have allowed themselves to become atheists and agnostics. If the churches don't look to the future they will be stranded so far as membership and financial support is concerned."

His study of the situation showed that the birthrate among these families was high and in one particular section he found on an average seven children in each family. Most of the Italian population are children under 15 years of age.

What must be done to bring about their religious instruction was pointed out by the speaker. He said there are hundreds of such children who never see the inside of a Sunday school and have no knowledge of religion. In 20 years he said it will be a case of these Italians either conforming to American ideals or of ourselves being ruled by them because the birthrate among the American families is much smaller.

ARRESTED IN COURTROOM

Joseph Hill Staggered As He Crossed Room

The children of Joseph L. Hill were in court today as neglected children. The father came to court as a witness. On entering the court room he appeared to be unable to navigate the aisles. Court Officer Hultman made a study of his actions and arrested him on a charge of drunkenness. He was taken to the lockup. A warrant was obtained charging him with neglect of family. His case will be heard probably on Saturday.

BOY MISSING ALL DAY LONG

A lost child call was sounded from Box 113 at 4.45 Thursday afternoon to summon assistance to search for Perley Merriman, aged 9 years, of Post Island. The little fellow left home shortly after 6 o'clock in the morning, but as it was thought he was at play no note was taken of his absence until he failed to come home to dinner.

Then his mother became alarmed and being unable to locate her son, telephoned Mr. Merriman at his Boston office. He came to Quincy and began search. As a last resort the lost child call was sounded. The search came to an abrupt end when the boy stepped off a street car from Houghs Neck at Post Island. The boy had been having a good time playing at Houghs Neck.

Thursday night George McLucas, aged 9 years, of Charlestown who was visiting the home of Joseph Gibbs at 34 Bates avenue, West Quincy, was reported as missing. He was found about 8.30 in the evening in Wollaston.

MME. SUNDELIUS BIG ATTRACTION

Many Enjoy Musical Treat At Lutheran Church

The dedication concert Thursday evening at the Swedish Lutheran church proved to be a rare musical treat, for it was one of the best heard in Quincy in a long time. Both the church and chapel, which is to be dedicated next Sunday, were filled with an audience which was most appreciative. Every number was encored and graciously responded to.

The chief attraction of the evening was, of course, the singing of Mme. Marie Sundelius, known as "the Swedish Nightingale." Mme. Sundelius was down on the program for three numbers, and she was accompanied by her husband. Her first number was "Aria ur Skapelsen," and for her second number she sang a group of songs which included "Bland Fjellen" "Moe Britta," "Mavourneen" and "Life and Death." For her last number she sang "Solveigs Sang" and "Vallat."

The program opened with an organ prelude by Miss Lillian Larson, who also gave a piano solo. Other numbers on the program included a baritone solo by Fritz Swanson, who sang "The King of Love, My Shepherd Is." Prof. J. L. Larson gave a reading: "The Sign of the Cross" and there was also a selection by the church choir and brief remarks by Rev. L. Hokenson, pastor of the church. Much credit for the success of the evening is due to the untiring efforts of Miss Emma Witting, organist and choir leader at the church.

After the concert Mme. Sundelius and Mr. Sundelius were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. T. King.

COMMUNICATION FROM O'KEEFE

Writes Of Fire In Old Wollaston Hotel

Fire Prevention Commissioner John A. O'Keefe in a communication forwarded to the members of the City Council and boards of selectmen in the Greater Boston District says:

"The disastrous fire of July 20th on Beacon street in the City of Chelsea, in which six lives were lost, and the dangerous fire of July 19th in Hotel Wollaston, Quincy, are sharp reminders of the danger to life and property in allowing abandoned and dilapidated buildings to remain standing."

Continuing he says: "The authority to remove such buildings rests with the building inspector. Action on his part may involve some expense on the part of the municipality and for that reason he may hesitate to act. I suggest to your honorable body the wisdom of indicating to him that he may count on your support."

In conclusion he calls attention to the splendid work being done in several towns and cities, particularly the City of Boston, which he says "should be a guide and stimulus to us all."

WORK HARD TO PRESERVE KNOLL

Wollaston women are preparing to circulate petitions to preserve the picturesque knoll on the Wollaston boulevard. The plans for the extension of the roadway call for the cutting away of the spot. The petitions will be widely circulated and will be presented to the Metropolitan Park Commission. The knoll is considered the prettiest spot on the shore and on good days is the mecca for hundreds of people. The matter was discussed in an editorial in Wednesday's Ledger.

Madrid—King Alfonso, of Spain, has become an aviation enthusiast and frequently takes long trips on a military dirigible.

NORFOLK DOWNS WILL HAVE BUNGALOW VILLAGE

Investment of $250,000 Represented In Plans For Seventy-eight Houses

Plans have been completed to launch three of the largest real estate ventures ever seen in Quincy. The Norfolk Downs section has been chosen as the scene of activities and inside of a year the large tract of land between Billings and Beach streets and the Wollaston boulevard will be a cosy village of 78 bungalows.

The ventures will represent an investment of nearly $250,000 and the three men interested are R. E. Jones, and Temple A. Winsloe of Quincy and R. Cruikshank of Dorchester. Each man will build 26 bungalows.

The bungalows are to be of the five six and seven room type, adapted to the needs of families, and will be up to date in every particular. Each one will cost, it is estimated, at least $2500 above the cellar. Already work has been commenced on two of the Jones bungalows.

Each of the three men decided to make the investments at about the same time. Messrs. Winsloe and Jones are practically new men in the development of local real estate while Mr. Cruikshank has extensive properties in Dorchester and has but recently taken over a large apartment house constructed for him there.

The announcement of the plans of Mr. Winsloe were made in the Ledger several days ago. Since then he has been beseiged by contractors of all description, asking opportunities to submit bids on the work. Large lumber firms in Boston have practically camped on his trail and all of the live concerns carrying the latest up to date interior furnitures and fixtures have sent representatives to his office at the Wollaston Garage. Messrs. Jones and Cruikshank it is expected will have the same experience.

All three men feel that the rapid growth of the city requires that suitable dwellings immediately be erected to meet the demands that have come with the 25 per cent increase in population in five years. Norfolk Downs, the section chosen for development, offers a most fruitful field, not only because of its proximity to the seashore but also because of its nearness to the railroad.

Officials of the street railway company are also said to have realized the possibilities of such development in the district and it is understood they have completed plans to relay the rails on the Norfolk Downs loop. Just when this improvement will be made is uncertain but it is felt that the company will keep pace with the growth. Water mains are already installed in the main streets and no delay is anticipated in their extension. Neither is there any question that the Citizens Gas Light Co. and the Quincy Electric Light and Power Co., will participate in the boom.

Norfolk Downs in a few years has grown to be one of the most prosperous communities in the city. Its inhabitants are law abiding and respected and much interested in the development of the neighborhood spirit. Their field of labor takes them to all parts of Quincy and Boston but the majority of them are people who lived in the vicinity of the metropolis previous to becoming inhabitants of Quincy. The school population has been increased in corresponding fashion and with it has come a serious congestion in the Massachusetts Fields school. A movement started some months ago culminated in the recent selection of a site for a new school at a meeting of the City Council and next year may see the awarding of a contract for a large grammar school.

Many of the newer residents are also agitating the erection of a state bath house on the boulevard. At present the only facilities enjoyed by Quincy people, other than those who live near enough to walk to the beach, are included in a set of small lockers privately owned and rented for the season at a nominal figure.

Y. M. C. A. BOYS OFF ON TOUR

Will Play Baseball Games During Trip

At seven thirty this morning the scene in front of the Y. M. C. A. resembled moving day in full swing. Preparations were being made for the overland trip through the White Mountains which eighteen senior members of the association are to enjoy during the next ten days.

Carrying their tents, blankets and other truck with them, not to forget their base-ball outfits, the men piled into Butters' Auto Truck which is to be used during the entire trip and with a cheer they were off.

Their first days trip will carry them through Quincy, Boston, Hampton, Rye Beach, North Hampton, and Greenland N. H. A game of base-ball will be played at Portsmouth, N. H.

Beside base-ball games many little side trips of interest have been planned, including the ascent of Mt. Washington and on the return trip the historic cities of Lexington and Concord will be visited.

Nearly six hundred miles will be covered by the party the cooking being done along the way, tents being pitched each evening where night overtakes the party.

R. S. Gaskell, general secretary of the association, is in charge of the trip assisted by Alex Robertson, who is acting as assistant secretary at present.

QUESTION OF ECONOMICS.

Separate colleges for women in the United States should be abolished and coeducation substituted, according to Professors Roswell Johnson and Bertha J. Stutzmann of the University of Pittsburg, who are reported to have based this conclusion on the claim that women's colleges contribute largely to race suicide among the most purely American elements of our population.

The idea seems to be that without the continuing association of the sexes brought about by coeducation a normal inclination toward marriage among young women will largely disappear. The average college course is short, too, and every course is broken up by summer vacations. Moreover, there is at least a possibility that the less girls see of men the more likely they are to think favorably of marrying them. Only a woman writer would dare suggest that men also find that distance lends enchantment, but it is matter of common observation that matrimony is not readily promoted in local circles where the young men and girls have known each other familiarly from childhood. Cupid becomes really active only after the introduction of outside elements—girls and men who passed through their more unlovely and awkward periods at a distance and who bring with them an atmosphere of novelty.

Professors Johnson and Stutzmann are in error. Separate colleges promote rather than hinder matrimony. But no doubt the college education itself often interferes by preparing a young women for an independent wage-earning career and thus rendering her less easily satisfied with the qualifications of her suitors. A further cause of feminine fastidiousness is to be found in the fact that the average young American woman is better educated than the average young American man—the result of no inherent superiority in the one or lack in the other, but a simple matter of economics. Ordinarily the boy must go to work while his sister gets the benefit of whatever money may be available for higher education.

But the chief foe to matrimony in our time is the high cost of living, or the cost of high living. Too many girls are more or less unconsciously inclined toward the conviction that their accepted suitors ought to be able to spend money as freely at the start as their fathers were able to spend it at the finish, and that they ought to step from one luxurious home into another. Even when the girl loves deeply and is willing to make sacrifices, the man's problem of putting himself in a position to support a family properly while he is still in the twenties or early thirties is often a very serious one. Under modern conditions matrimony becomes more and more a question of economics.

PURCHASE OF BELGIUM.

A highly interesting but completely absurd suggestion was made by John Wanamaker of Philadelphia Thursday before a meeting at which prominent business and professional men formed a Philadelphia branch of the National Security league. Mr. Wanamaker suggested that one hundred billion dollars be loaned without interest to the U. S. government for the purchase of Belgium and that later the U. S. turn the country over to the Belgians.

The absurdity of such a proposal is glaringly apparent. It is not beyond the bounds of probability that Germany might sell the U. S. the little kingdom of which she is now in possession for such a large sum of money. The United States would thereupon become embroiled in the European War because it is unthinkable that she could escape when the owner of the "Battleground of Europe." The purchase of Belgium from Germany would have a further disadvantage: it would be an intimation that the U. S. considered Germany the lawful proprietor of the country, in other words that the United States approved Germany's action in considering the treaties guaranteeing the neutrality of Belgium merely a scrap of paper.

Then, of course, the suggestion is rendered all the more absurd for the reason that there are no advantages to counterbalance the disadvantages. If Germany won the Great War she would promptly find an excuse for taking back what she had sold: if she lost she would have to abandon Belgium anyway.

DANCING AND GOLF.

A recent news item from Atlantic City states that Mayor Riddle stopped the band on the Million Dollar Pier during a sacred concert and ordered a two-step.

"I know it's against the law to dance here on Sunday," said the mayor, "but I don't believe Sunday dancing is any worse than Sunday golf."

While the action of Mayor Riddle was sensational and improper is there not some truth in his declaration: "I don't believe it's any worse than Sunday golf?" Is it? Both are equally forbidden by law.

At all events, whether or not breaking the law to dance is worse than breaking the law to play golf those who wish to dance and see golf played with impunity are going to ask why they, too, cannot break the law. Letting the bars down at one point is sure to bring a demand to let them down at another point.

This whole Sunday gaming question seems to be simple enough of solution. Either keep the bars up at all points or remove the fence altogether.

FREE TRADE OPERATIONS.

Despite the European war, the Underwood-Simmons Tariff is permitting importations to come into our country greatly in excess of those under the protective tariff, according to the recent report of Secretary Redfield of the Department of Commerce. The Secretary shows by actual figures that under the present tariff the imports in April of this year totalled $160,576,106 the greater part of which pays no duty—against $146,194,461 in April, 1913 when the protective tariff was in operation.

While the President and other illuminaries of his party have been contending that the European war was the equivalent of a protective tariff, inasmuch as it served to stop the influx of cheap labor products from other countries, these comparative figures show that nothwithstanding the war the imports under our free trade tariff law are more than eleven percent greater than under the protective tariff in times of peace.

It is interesting to see how these figures bear upon the industrial as well as the financial conditions of our country. Ever since the first year of our new tariff our National Treasury has been on the verge of bankruptcy, our industries have been at a standstill, and the American wage-earners have been thrown out of employment by the millions. While business has improved somewhat by reason of the European war, the blighting effect of the free trade policy of the present administration is everywhere apparent, and our National Treasury continues to be most vitally affected.

It is now officially admitted that the loss in revenue means a deficit of more than 30 millions this year, and next year sugar goes on the free list, and the revenue will be further depleted to the extent of 45 millions. For these reasons the administration leaders are advocating an extra session of Congress for the purpose of levying more tribute on the American people in order to preserve its free trade dogmas for the next two years. —Belmont Courier.

THIRTEEN OTHERS LAID OUT

Sheriff's Request For Troops Not Sanctioned by Adjutant General—Hoots and Jeers Greet Effort to Stop Trouble by Personal Means—Outbreak of Fires Around Plants

Bayonne, N. J., July 23.—Death-dealing volleys from the rifles of guards at the Standard Oil works here halted two desperate attempts, each undertaken by several hundred strikers, to storm the stockade surrounding the company's plant.

Two strikers were shot dead in the second charge. Thirteen bodies were stretched on the ground before the stockade after the attacks were made.

Many other strikers, according to witnesses of the fighting, were wounded, but were carried away by their companions. At least twenty persons, it is said, were mowed down by the guns of the guards.

Numerous attempts were made to set fire to the company's property and the strikers say that after the two attempts to storm the stockade had failed, the guards snipped pedestrians regardless of their identity.

Sheriff Kinkead found the situation beyond his control and appealed to Governor Fielder for troops. Adjutant General Sadler, however, has reported against calling out the militia at present.

The strikers who attacked the stockade, which is really a thirty-foot concrete embankment surmounted by a high fence, were for the most part armed with bricks, stones and clubs. In the first attack three men were wounded, one of the number being John Surgen, who was leading the charge. It is believed he will die.

The second attack cost two lives, Stanley Murhefke, 29, and Nicolay Iwaszkin, 19, being killed. It was said that none of the guards were wounded.

Kinkead then made an unsuccessful attempt to have the strikers disperse by a personal appeal, but was hooted and jeered.

Kinkead established three "dead lines" along the nearly seven miles of fence and embankment which surround the Standard and Tidewater plants. The lines are in front of the Tidewater plant and on the railroad tracks.

Although the actual number of men on strike is not believed to be more than 1500, it is stated that between 6000 and 7000 employes of the oil companies are temporarily out of work.

FUNERAL OF FIRE VICTIMS

Orphan Collapses as Bodies of Family Are Borne Away

Boston, July 23. — Thousands thronged Chelsea's streets to witness the funeral procession of Charles Jankowski, his wife, Rose, and their four children, Mary, Sophie, Helen and Josie, who lost their lives in a fire at their home, 46 Beacon street, Chelsea.

Charles Jankowski, 8 years old, who, with one sister, survived, fell in a faint at the start of the procession following exercises in Richards hall. He did not recover sufficiently to attend the funeral services at St. Stanislaus church.

Several hundred men, women and little girls belonging to the church and Polish societies, marched in the funeral procession. Ten carriages were laden with floral tributes. Interment was in Holy Cross cemetery, Malden.

NO POISON IN PIE

Westerly Deaths Probably Caused by Eating Some Other Food

Providence, July 23.—A chemical analysis of the materials used in the making of pie, the eating of which was believed to have been responsible for the death by ptomaine poison of four persons in Westerly recently, disclosed no evidence of the presence of any poisonous substances, according to a report submitted by Professor Strickland, chemist for the state board of food and drug commissioners.

In his report, however, he states that he feels quite certain that the cause of the illness was due to ptomaines produced in some form of bacteria in some food eaten by the victims, and that if the cause is to be discovered it will be found by the state bacteriologist who is now making an investigation.

Danes Bounce Castro

St. Thomas, D. W. I., July 23. The Danish government deported Cipriano Castro, former president of Venezuela, who arrived here from Port of Spain, Trinidad, compelling him to return on the steamer on which he came.

Soldiers Kill Fourteen Rioters

Lisbon, July 23.—An armed mob attacked the municipal offices at Lamego, a Portuguese city of about 10,000. Soldiers fired into the crowd, killing fourteen persons.

ENGLAND'S TURN NEXT

Intolerable Situation Created by Flaunting Rights of Neutrals

Washington, July 23.—Immediately after Secretary Lansing had signed the note to Germany he took up with the president the new note that is shortly to go to Great Britain.

Both the president and the secretary of state have made up their minds definitely that this government must have an understanding with Great Britain with respect to the rights of neutrals without further delay.

While it is true that as a result of the conduct of Great Britain toward neutral shipping there has been no loss of American life, the situation is intolerable. It is asserted that the facts at hand show that Great Britain has flaunted the rights of neutrals quite as much as Germany.

It is recognized, however, that the two cases are not on the same basis for the reason that Great Britain has not caused the death of any American citizen.

CONCESSIONS BY REMINGTON ARMS

Next Monday Will See Strikers Back on Their Jobs

Bridgeport, Conn., July 23.—J. J. Keppler, vice president of the International Association of Machinists, announced that an amicable settlement of all labor troubles in Bridgeport, where thousands of persons are engaged night and day in the manufacture of munitions of war for the use of Great Britain and her allies, was about to be made. His announcement carried with it the assurance that unless the plans miscarried every person now on strike would be back at work on Monday morning.

An official of the Remington Arms and Ammunition company was said to have promised to place in writing provisions for an eight-hour day, stable wages and future employment.

The announcement caused labor men to proclaim a victory, which, they said, would be the first in the campaign to secure an eight-hour working day throughout New England.

SHERIFF LOOKING FOR THEM

Modern Garden of Eden Has Two Adams and Two Eves

Poughkeepsie, N. Y., July 23.—Garbed in the robes of state in vogue in the days of Adam and Eve, two women and two men have transformed Roosevelt's point, on the bank of the Hudson, into a modern Garden of Eden.

For the past week they have disported themselves in the water and run wild through the woods. Sheriff Hornbeck has taken up the case and has the names and addresses of the Edenites.

PRISONERS ARE WELL TREATED

By CARL W. ACKERMAN.
(United Press Staff Correspondent.)

Prison Camp, Goettingen, Germany, June 18: (By Mail)—Here is one spot in belligerent Europe where prisoners of war enjoy more personal freedom that they did at the front as soldiers. The camp is almost a "free city." The men do almost as they wish and after several months under rigorous orders at the front they are enjoying their "freedom" even if they can't go outside the grounds. Camp rules are the most simple and necessary to safeguard the health and comfort of the inmates.

When I came into camp today the "Main street" was crowded with English soldiers, many wearing wooden shoes; with Frenchmen in tattered red thousers and blue coast; Scottish Highlanders in plaid skirts and brighter plaid stockings and a few hundred giant Russians. Not a German officer or soldier except the two at the gate, could be seen.

For several hours I visited among the Canadians, the English and French, entirely out of earshot of any German authority. I asked the men if my impression of their freedom was correct and everyone said it was a fact. Every man believed what an English soldier said, "Of course, it's fortunate to be a war-prisoner but we are fortunate to be in a camp where we are given so much freedom."

In what other prison camp, I asked, are the men permitted to gather in groups and talk as they please and do what they please. Many, who had been in other camps said Goettingen was the first of its kind and they attributed this fact to the administrative ability of the camp commander, whom every prisoner praised.

Ambassador Gerard and the Spanish Ambassador in Berlin, who were here some weeks ago to dedicate the first American Y. M. C. A., ever built in a prison camp or prison, declare the commander is a "prison-genius." Gerard said if this officer could take charge of all the prisons in Europe there would be no complaint against the handling of prisoners of war. Even among Swedish investigators Goettingen is considered the finest camp in Europe. John B. Jackson, of Trenton, N. J., fromer American minister to Roumania, who has seen all the camps in England and Germany holds the same opinion.

Camp conditions are excellent, the spirit of the men is inspiring, the camp health is equal to that in the most healthful spots in the world. Less than 25 were in the hospital today. The men not only appeared happy but said they were happier than they ever expected to be as prisoners of war. And today there are about 8,100 former soldiers of the Allies imprisoned here, among them 160 Canadians, members of the former 48th Toronto Highlanders who were captured at Ypres, April 24.

This camp was founded in a large field outside the old university city of Goettingen and at the foot of a high hill on top of which is Bismarck's tomb. It is made up of several hundred frame unplastered shacks, one story high and similar in every way to cheap cottages one sees at American summer resorts. Between every five cottages is a street, some so wide that the ex-soldiers have potato patches in front for flower gardens.

The Y. M. C. A., building is a large cottage with a library of French, English and Russian books and magazines at one end and a stage at the other. This afternoon the English and French were preparing for an English concert. A Frenchman was painting scenery for the stage. Belgians were installing electric footlights and the English were marking the benches with the names of the audience, which because of the limited capacity of the hall, was limited to invited English soldiers.

This camp is famous in Germany, also, because of the interest the professors in the University of Goettingen take in the welfare of the prisoners. Many of them have classes in the camp and instruct the men in regular university courses. These are open to those who wish to attend.

In the post office today eighteen English soldiers were assorting mail packages which today's post brought from England. German inspectors were looking inside before the packages were handed out to see that the camp rules regarding the receiving of home articles were not broken. Working in this building were two Canadians both of whom lived in Toronto and had often visited in Niagara Falls, Buffalo and Detroit.

Leaving the camp for the railroad station I saw ninety English soldiers being brought in. They were among the recent captives in Flanders and their clothes were torn and dirty. My guide in the camp, Lieutenant Gropp, who said he had a brother-in-law, William Persson living at 732 Belden avenue, Chicago, declared these fellows would soon be given special baths and ordered to wash their clothes.

One of the most amusing sights in the camp was to see five Russians taking a powder bath to kill the lice they carried when they arrived from the Galician front four days ago. These men were lying naked in this powder. They had to stay there four hours. Then they took a sun bath and then a hot water and soap bath—for, said Lieutenant Gropp, it requires three different kinds of baths and sometimes more. He added that the sanitary arrangements were so good that this pest would last only a few days in camp.

Care of the Baby In Summer

Summer Complaint.

[Prepared by the children's bureau, United States department of labor.]

Most mothers have learned to regard diarrhea as one of the most dangerous ills of babyhood. Thousands of babies die of this disease every year, largely in the hot weather months—a fact which has gained for this illness the common name of "summer complaint." The deaths from this disease begin to increase in May, and the number grows rapidly in June and July and reaches its highest point in August, then decreases rapidly as cool weather approaches. It is prudent, therefore, for mothers to be on guard at the beginning of summer and to do all in their power to prevent the onset of this illness by exercising great care in feeding the baby and by keeping him as cool and quiet as possible. In all illnesses prevention is far better than cure, but this is particularly true with infant diarrhea, because the second attack comes on much more readily than the first. Also the baby's growth is seriously interfered with at a time when it is proceeding most rapidly.

To prevent summer diarrhea in babies first feed the baby on the right food in suitable amounts at proper intervals and in no other way; give him plenty of pure, cool water to drink between meals; keep him out of doors as much as possible in cool, fresh air, dress him lightly and bathe him frequently.

Another important part of keeping the baby well is to protect him from flies and mosquitoes, which frequently carry disease about. It is believed that one form of infant diarrhea is distributed by these household pests.

The healthy baby usually has one or two bowel movements a day. If this number is increased to four or more it is time to take measures against sickness.

It is well to remember, however, that the bowel movements of a baby fed entirely at the breast are normally more frequent than those of a bottle fed baby and that a slight increase in the number of movements is not so serious a matter to a baby at the breast as to one artificially fed. A baby fed at the breast does not usually have diarrhea, and when such a baby shows signs of digestive disturbance it is usually because he is overfed, either he is nursed too often or at irregular intervals, or is allowed to nurse too long at one time. When he does have diarrhea the time between nursings should be increased to four hours, and the times at the breast reduced to five or ten minutes. If the bowels continue loose the breast should be withdrawn entirely for several feedings if necessary, giving the baby instead cool drinking water at frequent intervals. In this case the mother should pump her breasts at the regular nursing times, both to keep them from drying up and to prevent their caking.

Bottle fed babies are the most frequent sufferers from summer diarrhea, and this fact furnishes another strong argument in favor of breast feeding. Diarrhea in a bottle fed baby is also best treated by reducing the amount of food. The bottle should be omitted for eight, twelve or twenty-four hours, according to the severity of the attack, and in place of the milk there should be given as much boiled and cooled water as the baby will take. Food should not be withheld for more than twenty-four hours, without the advice of a doctor. When the bottle is resumed the food should be much weaker than before, water should be substituted for at least half the milk previously given. The milk should be skimmed and the sugar omitted. The return to the former feeding should be made gradually by adding a little more milk each day and beginning to add sugar. The more severe the attack has been the more slowly should changes be made.

If the baby is on "mixed" feeding—that is, partly breast and partly bottle fed—the bottle feedings should be omitted if diarrhea appears and the breast given once in four or five hours, with nothing but drinking water between meals.

The children's bureau publishes a pamphlet called "Infant Care," which is sent free to any one sending a request to the chief of the children's bureau, United States department of labor, Washington. This pamphlet contains some simple directions for the care of the babies in summer, which may help the mother to prevent summer diarrheas and other ailments of infancy.

It should be understood that whenever possible the baby should be put at once under the care of a doctor. If the mother in the city has no physician she should take her baby to the nearest infant welfare station, where she will be well advised as to his care.

Since the country mother does not usually have access to an infant welfare station and is frequently far away from a doctor, she should use every effort to keep the baby well, but if serious diarrhea occurs a doctor must be procured without delay.

CHARLES W. GUY IS CANDIDATE

Nomination papers are in circulation for Charles W. Guy of Quincy who is seeking the Democratic, Republican and Progressive nomination as a member of the Governor's council from the second district. In a circular which he has issued Mr. Gcy pays a tribute to Hon. Guy A. Ham who served last year, stating that he was a capable man.

Mr. Guys says that he is recommended by Governor Walsh, and that he was a friend of Wendell Phillips, Long, Lucy Stone, Governors Draper and Guild and that he is recommended by Hon. Alexander MacGregor. He closes his characteristic circular with this sentence:

"Will you act as agent and see that he is elected and thereby please the Governor and President Wilson."

OBJECTION TO FLYING HORSES

Residents of South Quincy are planning to make a strenuous protest against the granting of the application of J. Leeman to operate flying horses near the Quincy Adams station. Leeman made application, as has been his custom for some years, to Acting Mayor Crane. Soon after objections were raised. A decision has been reserved by the acting Mayor.

ANOTHER KIND JAILER.

Harrisburg, Pa., July 23—Famous prison keepers have nothing on W. W. Caldwell, warden of the Dauphin county jail, when it comes to kindness. The jail abuts on the county court house, a few feet away, and Caldwell regularly lets good prisoners play baseball in the yard. A few days ago a foul ball smashed through a big window in the office of President Judge George Kunkel, and repairs cost $6.40. But Caldwell merely had the prisoners put up a screen to guard against future accidents and called "Play ball!"

THE AUDITORIUM.

Cleo Madison, playing the title role in "The Duchess," will easily be the headliner at the Auditorium theatre today and Friday. Miss Madison is well known to all motion picture habitues. This film is a strong, three act society drama, which is claimed to bring smiles and tears in swift confusion to the spectators.

Another thriller is "The Troubadour," a drama of the West and Mexico, in which our good old friend Murdock McQuarrie is assisted by Miss Agnes Vernon. "Two Hearts in a Ship," a two act comedy, contains nothing but laughter and plenty of that. "Father's Money" is a corking, good comedy drama.

WEEKLY REVIEW OF LOCAL MARKET

There has never been a time when the local vegetable market was more favorable to buyers than it is at present. Supplies of everything are large and in most cases in excess of requirements. The natural result follows. From all sources the supply is heavy and since it is essential that the stuff be kept moving so as not to spoil on the hands of the receivers there is no disposition on the part of sellers to hold out for high prices, but rather to sell low.

There has been some falling off in California cantaloupes and the market shows some firmness in that direction, yet local markets are selling some nice looking fruit at the rate of three for 25 cents. It will not be long before the South will begin to ship in large quantities and then the prices will go even lower. New apples are coming in a little better and some really good one are now on sale. As for berries they are plentiful and cheaper than for several years.

Peaches are exceptionally good at present and local markets are offering what they call very fancy peaches at 10 cents a basket, holding perhaps a dozen and a half. California plums are plentiful and lemons seldom have been as cheap as at present. It has not been uncommon at this season of the year to see lemons go up to $10 a box, but within a week they have been selling as low as $3 for a box of 250 count. Watermelons are in good supply and consequently cheap. As for potatoes, they continue to be plentiful and there is no reason to expect that they will be any higher right away, for there are a good many Southern potatoes about ready to ship north.

Then there are string beans, cabbages, cucumbers, lettuce, tomatoes, and in fact through the whole vegetable line it is the same old story of abundant supply. In addition to the supply that is coming to the markets from the big farms in New England the little back yard gardens are beginning to give forth their supplies and the amateur farmer is now having his innings. He has been bragging all summer and now he is having an opportunity to prove his statements. The frequent and abundant rains have done gardens an immense amount of good and it has not been necessary to exercise the garden hose over much.

Locally it does not seem like a very good apple year. While some trees show an abundance of fruit, many apple trees in local orchards look as though they had been struck by a cyclone... As for the meat market there is but little change in prices. They still remain high. Since meat went up many people have taken to eating more fish. Fish it is said is one of the best of brain foods and that is perhaps why we see so many brainy people nowadays.

The supply of fish this week is generally good and almost all kinds are reasonable in price. Swordfish is more plentiful than it has been for a long time and the cost has dropped materially from last week.. Halibut which has also been high and scarce is more plentiful and reasonable. The demand for halibut always suffers when there is a good supply of swordfish so that the demand is of course smaller than usual. Bluefish are in the market again and fairly cheap. Mackerel are also more plentiful than they have been and are reasonable. While quite a few sea shad are coming in, receipts of salmon are falling off. Large cod are not over and above plentiful but there is a big supply of other ground fish.

Chicken lobsters are in rather better supply and a little cheaper than they have been. There are plenty of large lobsters but the great demand is of course for the chicken size. There is also a plentiful supply of clams and quahogs.

PLAN BIG OUTING.

A well attended meeting of the entertainment committee of the Board of Trade which has in charge the outing of the board next Wednesday was held Thursday evening. As an additional attraction the committee announced that it had arranged for a number of male entertainers who will accompany the party on the boat. Those who care to try the fish will be given an opportunity and prizes will be given for the best catches. At Bass Point the dinner will be served at the Bass Point house.

COUNCIL COMMITTEES.

A joint meeting of the committees on finance and streets of the City Council was held Thursday evening. There are fourteen members on the two committees and as neither of the committee rooms are large enough the Council Chamber was used for the meeting. The joint committee had before them all of the matters pending before the street committee. These included some twenty petitions and orders for the acceptance of new streets, upon which public hearings had been held earlier in the season. The committee was in session until late in the evening but as it was an executive session no information was given out as to what was done.

HALTS POLICEMAN WITH REVOLVER

Laura Deane, a well known vaudeville actress who occupies a cottage on Melvin street, Houghs Neck, may be charged with assault with a dangerous weapon. It is alleged that she pointed a revolver at Patrolman Ferguson shortly after one o'clock this morning. An investigation is being made of the circumstances.

The officer claims he was making an investigation of the premises as the result of a complaint made to him. When Miss Deane pointed the weapon in his direction. He called for the police auto and Officers Philips and Olson were sent down by Sergt. Johnson.

The men surrounded the house and after some delay were admitted. Miss Deane wore night apparel and willingly turned over the revolver. She claimed it was in the house for use in case of burglary and said that a few nights before two men attempted to enter the cottage by means of a ladder when valuable diamonds and $4000 in cash were in her bureau.

Patrolman Ferguson said he was going to place her under arrest. She protested, saying because of her physical condition it would be dangerous to remove her. A man and middle aged woman at the house also objected. The man claimed to be the attending physician and the woman was said to be chaperone for Miss Deane.

The physician represented that he was connected with Brockton and Boston hospitals and that it would be dangerous to remove Miss Deane. The other woman said she thought no assault had geen committed since Miss Deane was delirious and was not accountable for her actions.

Miss Deane was permitted to go to her room on the second floor. On the top of the stairs she fainted. Conditions at the house, it was said indicated her physical condition was not normal.

Patrolman Ferguson took the names of the doctor and woman as witnesses. Miss Deane said she would be willing to go to court if a warrant was served on her.

Miss Deane is well known in theatrical circles. She told the police she had nine vaudeville acts on different circuits.

PURITY ADVOCATE VERBALLY LASHED

Movie Actress Comes Out In Defense of Her Profession

San Francisco, July 23.—Virtue among movie actresses was hotly defended by Charlotte Walker, the actress. Replying to the statement of Robert Barton of Los Angeles before the Purity congress that "it is impossible to be in the movies and keep virtuous," Miss Walker said:

"Only a raving maniac would make such a remark. Barton knows that this statement is not true. If true it would bring shame and humiliation upon thousands of noble women who are earning their living in the motion picture profession.

"It has long been conceded that the quickest way to acquire publicity is to attack the stage as immoral, and now the lash has finally fallen on the shoulders of the movie actresses."

FINAL WORDS SENT GERMANY

America Demands Respect For Rights of Neutrals

IN NATURE OF AN ULTIMATUM

Future Transgressions on High Seas Mean Break In Friendly Relations Unless Reparation and Disavowal Is Made—Note Is Sent to Berlin In Advance of Fact Becoming Known

Washington, July 23.—The last German note of President Wilson will be made public in the United States Saturday. The administration succeeded in getting the note on the wire in advance of the fact becoming known, but nothing has occurred to discredit the forecast of its contents.

It marks an important step in advance and is as near a read ultimatum as President Wilson is likely to write. There are excellent reasons for believing that the words "unfriendly act," so momentous in connection with the Monroe doctrine, are in the note, in essence if not in form.

In international diplomacy, it is pointed out, a nation would not warn another nation against committing an unfriendly act until it had taken careful account of the consequences that might follow such a warning.

It is not understood that the communication deals at any length with the invasion of the rights of neutrals by the German government during the last three months. It was the view of the president and the members of his cabinet that the specific cases on which the United States bases its case had been sufficiently discussed in the two previous notes.

What the United States government wants now is respect for the rights of neutrals from this time on. Apparently the note is so worded as to enable the German government to escape the responsibility of putting a guarantee on paper at this time, and yet will not allow her to escape the responsibility of actually guaranteeing in the future the rights for which this government is contending.

While nowhere in it is there any direct intimation of the course which the United States will pursue in the event of another disaster similar to the Lusitania tragedy, there are emphatic statements throughout the communication pointing out that the discussion of the principles involved had been virtually concluded and that future conduct of German submarine commanders will determine the responsibility for the continuance of friendly relations between the two countries.

The statement that future transgressions would be regarded as "unfriendly" is taken in diplomatic usage to presage a break of friendly relations unless reparation and disavowal is forthcoming.

Concerning future conduct of German submarines, the note does not necessarily call for an answer, as it announces the intention of the United States to regard any further violation of international law resulting in the loss of American lives as unfriendly.

On the other hand, the American demands for disavowal of any intention to sink the Lusitania and the request for reparation are renewed in the new note, and very likely those, with other points, such as the willingness of the United States to act as an intermediary between the belligerents to adjust rules of maritime warfare, probably will be the basis for further discussion by Germany.

An answer is not expected for at least two or three weeks on these phases. It is generally agreed among officials, however, that any loss of American lives in the meantime would raise the question of action irrespective of any formal reply from Germany.

The American note is in the nature of a final statement on the principles involved in which the United States takes the unalterable position that the accepted rules of international law must govern the rights of neutrals irrespective of retaliatory measures of the belligerents against one another.

What action would be taken by the United States in the event of further violation of American rights is not disclosed in the new note, nor was it officially commented on otherwise, but a general understanding prevails that another disaster such as befel the Lusitania would mean the immediate assembling of congress.

BROTHERS FOUND DEAD

Father Thinks They Were Thrown From Freight Train Into Water

Boston, July 23.—The bodies of two brothers, Clarence H. Bowley, 20, and Daniel D. Bowley, 15, of Lynn, were found floating in the Back Bay and from circumstances which surround the finding of the bodies there is a possibility that both were victims of foul play.

Both bodies were identified by their father, Edward R. Bowley, a shoeworker, and he declared positively that both of them had been murdered, in his opinion, and that they had been thrown from the top of a freight train. An inquest will be held.

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I—Kenneth Griswold, an unsuccessful writer because of socialistic tendencies, sups with his friend Bainbridge at Chaudiere's restaurant in New Orleans and declares that if necessary he will steal to keep from starving.

CHAPTER II—Griswold holds up Andrew Galbraith, president of the Bayou State Security, in his private office and escapes with $100,000 in cash.

CHAPTER III—By original methods Griswold escapes the hue and cry and goes aboard the Belle Julie as a deckhand. He unexpectedly confronts Charlotte Farnham of Wahaska, Minn., who had seen him cash Galbraith's check in the bank.

CHAPTER IV—Charlotte recognizes Griswold, but decides to write to Galbraith rather than denounce the robber to the captain and so incur unpleasant notoriety.

CHAPTER V—Charlotte sees the brutal mate rescued from drowning by Griswold and delays sending her letter to Galbraith.

CHAPTER VI—Charlotte talks to Griswold and by his advice sends her letter of betrayal to Galbraith anonymously.

CHAPTER X.

Good Samaritans.

Since she had undertaken to show Wahaska precisely how to deport itself in the conventional field, Miss Grierson had telegraphed her father to meet her in St. Louis on her return from Florida.

When Jasper Grierson traveled alone he was democratic enough to be satisfied with a section in the body of the car. But when Margery's tastes were to be consulted, the drawing-room was none too good. Indeed, as it transpired on the journey northward from St Louis, the Anita's drawing-room proved to be not good enough.

"It is simply a crude insult, the way they wear out their old, broken down cars on us up here!" she protested to her father. "You ought to do something about it."

Jasper Grierson's smile was a capitalistic acquirement, and some of his fellow-townsmen described it as "cast iron." But for his daughter it was always indulgent.

"I don't own the railroad yet Madgie; you'll have to give me a little more time," he pleaded, clipping the tip from a black cigar of heroic proportions and reaching for the box of safety matches.

"I'll begin now, if you are going to smoke that dreadful thing in this stuffy little den," was the unfilial retort; and the daughter found a magazine and exchanged the drawing-room with its threat of asphyxiation for a seat in the body of the car. Half-way down the car one of the sections was still curtained and bulkheaded; of course, the occupant of the middle section must be ill. Quite suddenly her interest became acute. Who was the sick one, and why was he, or she traveling without on attendant?

With Margery Grierson, to question was to ascertain; and the Pullman conductor, once more checking his diagrams in Section 11, offered the readiest means of enlightenment. A few minutes later Margery rejoined her father in the private compartment.

"Do you remember the nice-looking young man who sat at the table with us in the Choteau last night?" she began abruptly.

"You've Made Up Your Mind What You're Going to Do; Say It."

The gray-wolf Jasper nodded. He had an excellent memory for faces.

"What did you think of him?" The query followed the nod like a nimble boxer's return blow.

"I thought he paid a whole lot more attention to you than he did to his supper. Why?"

"He is on this car; sick with a fever of some kind, and out of his head. He is going to Wahaska."

"How do you know it's the same one?"

"I made the conductor take me to see him. He talked to me in Italian and called me 'Carlotta mia.'"

"Humph! he didn't look like a dago."

"He isn't; it's just because he is delirious."

There was a long pause, broken finally by a curt "Well?" from the father.

"I've been thinking," was the slow response. "Of course, there is a chance that he has friends in Wahaska, and that someone will be at the train to meet him. But it is only a chance."

"Why doesn't the conductor telegraph ahead and find out?"

"He doesn't know the man's name. I tried to get him to look for a card, or to break into the suitcases under the berth, but he says the regulations won't let him."

"Well?" said the father again, this time with a more decided upward inflection. Then he added: "You've made up your mind what you're going to do: say it."

Margery's decision was announced crisply. "There is no hospital to send him to—which is Wahaska's shame. Maybe he will be met and taken care of by his friends: if he is, well and good; if he isn't, we'll put him in the carriage and take him home with us."

The cast-iron smile with the indulgent attachment wrinkled frostily upon Jasper Grierson's heavy face.

"The Good Samaritan act, eh? I've known you a long time, Madgie, but I never can tell when you're going to break out in a brand-new spot. Didn't lose any of your unexpectedness in Florida, did you?"

Miss Margery tossed her pretty head, and the dark eyes snapped.

"Somebody in the family has to think of something besides making money," she retorted. "Please lend me your pencil; I want to do some wiring."

All other gifts apart, Miss Grierson could boast of a degree of executive ability little inferior to her father's; did boast of it when the occasion offered; and by the time the whistle was sounding for Wahaska, all the arrangements had been made for the provisional rescue of the sick man in lower six.

At the station a single inquiry served to give the Good Samaritan intention the right of way. There were no friends to meet lower six; but the Grierson carriage was waiting, with the coachman and a Mereside gardener for bearers. From that to putting the sick man to bed in one of the guest chambers of the lake-fronting mansion at the opposite end of the town was a mere bit of routine for one so capable as Miss Grierson; and twenty minutes after the successful transfer she had Doctor Farnham at the nameless one's bedside and was telephoning the college infirmary for a nurse.

Naturally, there were explanations to be made when the doctor came down. To her first anxious question the answer came gravely: "You have a very sick man on your hands, Miss Margery." Then the inevitable: "Who is he?"

She spread her hands in a pretty affectation of embarrassment.

"What will you think of me, Doctor Farnham, when I tell you that I haven't the littlest atom of an idea?"

Charlotte's father was a small man, with kindly eyes and the firm, straight-lined mouth of his Puritan forbears. "Tell me about it," he said concisely.

She told him.

A shrewd smile flickered for an instant in the kindly eyes of Wahaska's best-beloved physician.

"Almost anyone else would have found plenty of other things to do—or not to do," was his comment. "Are you prepared to go on, Miss Margery?"

There were fine little lines coming and going between Miss Margery's straight black brows. "We needn't do it by halves, doctor," she said decisively. "If it would be better to wire St. Paul or Minneapolis and get a trained nurse—"

"—You'd stand the extra expense, of course," laughed the doctor. "You are all the world's good angel when you set out to be, Miss Margery. And I'll send somebody before bedtime. Meanwhile, there's nothing to do but to keep your patient quiet; and he'll do that for himself for a few hours. I gave him a bit of anodyne before I came down."

Margery went to the outer door with her kindly counselor, playing the part of the gracious hostess as one who is, or who means to be, precisely letter-perfect; and after he was gone, she went slowly upstairs and let herself softly into the room of shaded lights. The sick man was resting quietly, and he did not stir when she crossed to the bed and laid a cool palm on his forehead.

"You poor castaway!" she murmured. "I wonder who you are, and to whom you belong? I suppose somebody has got to be mean and sneaky and find out. Would you rather it would be I than someone else who might care even less than I do?"

The sleeping man opened unseeing eyes and closed them again heavily. "I found the money, Carlotta mia; you didn't know that, did you?" he muttered; and then the narcotic seized and held him again.

His clothes were on a chair, and when she had carried them to a light that could be shaded completely from the bed and its occupant, she searched the pockets one by one. It was a little surprising to find all but two of them quite empty; no cards, no letters, no pen, pencil, pocketknife, or purse; nothing but a handkerchief, and in one pocket of the waistcoat a small roll of paper money, a few coins and two small keys.

She held the coat up to the electric and examined it closely; the workmanship, the trimmings. It was not tailor-made, she decided, and by all the little signs and tokens it was quite new. And the same was true of the other garments. But there was no tag or trademark on any of them to show where they came from.

Failing to find the necessary clue to the castaway's identity in this preliminary search, she went on resolutely, dragging the two suitcases over to the lighted corner and unlocking them with the keys taken from the pocket of the waistcoat.

The first yielded nothing but clothing, all new and evidently unworn. The second held more clothing, a man's toilet appliances, also new and unused, but apparently no scrap of writing or hint of a name. With a little sigh of bafflement she took the last tightly rolled bundle of clothing from the suitcase. While she was lifting it a pistol fell out.

In times past, Jasper Grierson's daughter had known weapons and their faults and excellences. "That places him—a little," she mused, putting the pistol aside after she had glanced at it: "He's from the East; he doesn't know a gun from a piece of common hardware."

"You Poor Castaway!" She Murmured.

Further search in the tightly rolled bundle was rewarded by the discovery of a typewritten book manuscript, unsigned, and with it an oblong packet wrapped in brown paper and tied with twine. She slipped the string and removed the wrapping. The brick-shaped packet proved to be a thick block of bank notes held together by heavy rubber bands snapped over the ends.

While the little ormulu clock on the dressing case was whirring softly and chiming the hour she stared at the money-block as if the sight of it had fascinated her. Then she sprang up and flew to the door, not to escape, but to turn the key noiselessly in the lock. Secure against interruption, she pulled the rubber bands from the packet. The block was built up in layers, each layer banded with a paper slip on which was printed in red the name of the certifying bank and the amount. "Bayou State Security, $5,000." There were twenty of these layers in all, nineteen of them unbroken. But through the printed figures on the twentieth a pen-stroke had been drawn, and underneath was written "$4,000."

Quite coolly and methodically Margery Grierson verified the bank's count as indicated by the paper bands. There were one hundred thousand dollars, lacking the one thousand taken from the broken packet. The counting completed, she replaced the rubber bands and the brown paper wrapping. Then she repacked the suitcases, arranging the contents as nearly as might be just as she had found them, locking the cases and returning the keys to the waistcoat pocket from which she had taken them.

When all was done, she tiptoed across to the bed, with the brown paper packet under her arm. The sick man stirred uneasily and began to mutter again. She bent to catch the words, and when she heard, the light of understanding leaped swiftly into the dark eyes. For the mumbled words were the echo of a fierce threat: "Sign it: sign it now, or, by God, I'll shoot to kill!"

* * * * * * * *

The robbery of the Bayou State Security bank was already an old story when Mr. Matthew Broffin, chief of the New Orleans branch of a notable detective agency, took over the case of the bank robbery a few days after his return from Central America. Since two members of his own staff had fired and missed their mark in St. Louis, there was a blunder to be retrieved.

After a week of patient groping, Broffin was obliged to confess that the problem of identification was too difficult to be solved on conventional lines. It presented no point of attack. With neither a name nor a pictured face for reference, inquiry was crippled at the very outset. None of the many boarding and rooming houses he visited had lost a lodger answering the verbal description of the missing man. Very reluctantly, for bulldog tenacity was the detective's ruling characteristic, he was forced to the conclusion that the only untried solution lay in Teller Johnson's unfortified impression that the chance meeting at his wicket was not the first meeting between the robber and the young woman with the draft to be cashed.

It was the slenderest of threads, and Broffin realized sweatingly how difficult it might be to follow. Assuming that there had been a previous meeting or meetings, or rather the passing acquaintance which was all the young woman's later betrayal of the man made conceivable, would the writer of the accusing letter be willing to add to her burden of responsibility by giving the true name and standing of the man whose real identity—if she knew it—she had been careful to conceal in the unsigned note to Mr. Galbraith? Broffin read the note again—"a deck-hand, whose name on the mate's book is John Wesley Gavitt," was the description she had given. It might, or it might not, be an equivocation; but the longer Broffin dwelt upon it the more he leaned toward the conclusion to which his theory and the few known facts pointed. The young woman knew the man in his proper person; she had been reluctant to betray him—that, he decided, was sufficiently proved by the lapse of time intervening between the date of her note and its postmark date; having finally decided to give him up, she had told only what was absolutely necessary, leaving him free to conceal his real name and identity if he would—and could.

Having come thus far on the road to convincement, Broffin knew what he had to do and set about doing it methodically. A telegram to the clerk of the Belle Julie served to place the steamer in the lower river; and boarding a night train he planned to reach Vicksburg in time to intercept the witnesses whose evidence would determine roughly how many hundreds or thousands of miles he could safely cut out of the zigzag journeyings to which the following up of the hypothetical clue would lead.

For, cost what it might, he was determined to find the writer of the unsigned letter.

WHAT'S IN A NAME?

Duluth, Minn. July 23—The international annual boat regatta over the Duluth boat club course here today is international in name only, because of the war.

Canadian points, usually contenders for the first places, were unable to enter teams because of the war. Nine main events will be staged today and tomorrow, a gentleman's race, in which the contenders will have had no training, is one of the side issues.

Although Canada, in which he is mostly interested, is not represented, Sir Thomas Lipton's great annual trophy has not been withdrawn. The Duluth club, coached by Coach Ten Eyck, of Duluth, won the trophy last year.

CARDINAL GIBBONS' BIRTHDAY.

Baltimore, Md., July 23—Roman Catholic societies today celebrated the 81st birthday anniversary of James Cardinal Gibbons born July 23, 1834.

Fellow members of the Cardinal in the Sacred College at Rome today were expected to observe the event. Cardinal Gibbons was showered with birthday congratulations from the Pontiff and prelates all over the world.

SAY IT'S ENFORCED.

Mobile, Ala., July 23—Its provisions being more stringent probably than those of any similar statute in the United tSates, the Merritt-Denson prohibition law is being enforced in Alabama, according to all evidence. Opponents are hoping its very rigor may cause a reaction, while friends of the measures say it is proving that prohibition can actually be made to prohibit.

End Your Coal Troubles
PATCH'S SPECIAL COAL

With Patch's "Special Guaranteed Coal" in the fire box your furnace or range does not require as much attention as it does when an ordinary grade of coal is burned. With "Guaranteed Coal" the whole fire need not be turned upside down to clear the grate with a rake or poker.

HOUSEHOLD HINT

Use the poker to rake seldom. Too much poking is as bad for the fire as too little. Stir up the fire just enough to keep the coal from caking and to fill up the holes in the fuel bed.

MODERN ADAM HOTLY PURSUED

But Naked Swimmer Easily Makes His Escape

A half dozen men, headed by William Harris, keeper of some private bath houses, participated in an attempt to capture an unknown man who went swimming "Adam fashion" at Wollaston beach Thersday morning.

The man first attracted attention while he was in the water. With graceful, powerful strokes he went up and down a little race course all his own. Men and women stood and watched his performance with admiring eyes.

But, horrors! When he started to come ashore, the group discovered he was minus a bathing suit. Harris and the men started out to capture him. The man saw them coming picked up his clothes and ran down the boulevard. He easily outran his pursuers and disappeared in the nearby wods.

LETTER FROM HARRY LAUDER

The Scottish people in Quincy will be interested in the following letter written by the famous comedian, Harry Lauder, to the Rev. Donald MacDougall, editor of the "Caledonian" magazine in New York.

Dear Mr. MacDougall:

You will be pleased to hear my son, Lieutenant John Lauder, is now recovered sufficiently to rejoin his regiment, the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders, and is back in the trenches again. He was wounded in the face and left wrist with a bersting shell. It was an anxious time for us all and still is and will be for a long time yet, until victory is the war cry.

We certainly are drawing the best blood of our country, but we have always done so, and this war is no exception to the wars of the past; but it is a grimmer deal we have—we are fighting poisoners of wells, killers of babies and rapers of women. God surely is just and will destroy such an enemy. I do hope the United States will keep out of the conflict—because I am fully convinced Germany is as well prepared in U. S. A. as they were in Britain for war. I hope the day will never come, that is until "America" is our ally—and why shouldn't she be. We are all English speaking people, we live close to one another and we know each other better than we did a hundred years ago. The only thing that will ever bring lasting peace will be tying a Rope of Friendship round the English speaking race—and that only can be done with our united hand grip stretched from shore to shore and from shoulder to shoulder. I feel sure the Scottish Clans and their kindred societies can do a great deal toward this idea of brotherhood. Let us prepare to vindicate the words of our beloved bard, Burns,

"That man to man,
The world o'er,
Shall brothers be for a' that."

Yours faithfully,
HARRY LAUDER.

PUZZLED OVER CAUSE.

Advance Several Theories To Explain Explosion.

A cartridge bomb is still thought to have been the cause of the explosion in the pot of sizzling type metal in the foundry of Walter Packard on Thursday, when Thomas Burns and James Mulligan, employees, were showered with hot metal and painfully burned. Several private investigations are underway and a half dozen theories have been advanced.

Salem manufacturers are of the opinion that the explosion was caused by a damp cell in a piece of dross metal thrown into the pot. In support of such contentions it is pointed out that two men were killed at the Fore River shipyard when a condemned shaft made for the U .S. S. "Rhode Island" was put in the fire to be welded some years ago and exploded under similar circumstances.

Walter Packard, the owner of the foundry believes that the explosion was that of a cartridge bomb. He says that cartridge shells are junked and that he believes several filled shells became wedged in a piece of pipe, forming a bomb. Th burned men are improving rapidly.

LARCENY TO BE CHARGE

All of the Houghs Neck boys who surrendered to Patrolman Donovan at Bethel Beach after he sat on the bank of a creek 15 minutes and waited for them to come ashore will be charged with larceny. Three of the boys cases will be tried at the juvenile session on Aug. 6. John J. Doyle, the oldest one of the quartette was arraigned this morning and his case was continued to Aug. 13. Sureties were furnished by his mother who was in court. All four overran Houghs Neck Monday, raiding the police say, a lunch room, and tossing the contents of a basket of wet wash across the telephone wires.

London—Writing from Malta, Private J. Searby, Royal Fusiliers tells of Turkish women snipers, their clothing, faces and rifles painted green to obscure them in the foliage.

PAVING OF HANCOCK ST. IS COMPLETED TODAY

Laying of Granolithic Sidewalk Will Be Started Monday

C. W. Dolloff & Co., the contractors for the paving of Hancock street between Granite and School streets, will complete their part of the work today. Monday morning Simpson Bros. will commence work building the granolithic sidewalk on the easterly side and on a greater part of the westerly side.

The job when completed will be one of the most expensive pieces of street work ever constructed in Quincy, the total cost of the completed job being about $62,275.26.

It was during the year 1911 that the question of widening this portion of the street was brought to the attention of the City Council by ex-Mayor William T. Shea. It was Mayor Shea's last year and he informed the committee on streets that before he went out of office there was one job which he desired undertaken, that was the widening and rebuilding of that portion of Hancock street between Granite and School streets. It was largely because of his persistence that action looking to the work was commenced. It can therefore rightly be said that the job stands as a monument to his administration.

The street between the two points at that time varied from 48 to 60 feet in width. The easterly side of the street although occupied by buildings was not developed to any extent, many of the buildings, especially just south of Cottage avenue, being dilapidated structures. The plan as recommended by ex-Mayor Shea was for a street 65 feet in width and of first class construction, that is paving laid on a concrete base, grouted and coated with cement.

Owing to the magnitude of the work the city was not in a financial condition to undertake to do it all in any one year. The first thing however was to take the land necessary for widening and late in the year 1911 an appropriation was passed for $30,800 for land damages. Most of the land taken was on the east side although the westerly line was straightened near Hall's Undertaking rooms.

The old buildings on the east side were torn down and in their place there has been erected a modern business block by Henry L. Kincaide. Further along toward School street, houses have been moved back. A strip was also taken from the Col. Packard estate, and that land is now occupied by a modern business block. A triangular piece was taken from the front of the block adjoining the Ledger office, occupied by Sanborn & Damon.

Under the law by which the land was taken it was necessary to begin work constructing the street within two years from the taking of the land.

In 1914, therefore, an order was introduced in the City Council carrying an appropriation of $30,500 to build the street. This order also provided for a granolithic sidewalk on the entire length of the easterly side. Previous to this an order had been passed appropriating $957.26 for a granolithic walk on a part of the westerly side, and a week ago an additional appropriation was made of $1200 for a section of granolithic walk on the westerly side between Granite street and Tirrell court. This latter amount, however, was provided by a transfer from the appropriation of $30,500 for building the street.

Last year an order was passed by the City Council providing for a relocation of the street car tracks to comply with the new lines of the street and this work was commenced early last spring. The Telephone Co. also laid some additional underground conduits on the street. New service connections were made with the water mains, and provision made for sewer connections so that it would not be necessary to disturb the street for several years after the job was completed. The Citizens Gas Light Co. also laid a larger gas main and made the service connections, and provisions were made for draining the street according to modern ideas. Iron poles to carry the steel railing power lines have also been set on the east side.

The latter part of April bids were advertised for constructing the street and on May 13 the contract was awarded to C. W. Dolloff & Co. There was some little delay at the start but eventually work was commenced and Messrs. Dolloff complete their part of the contract today, and work on the granolithic sidewalk will be commenced Monday morning and it will not be long after the first of August when the entire job will have been completed.

RACING AT Q. Y. C. THIS AFTERNOON

A race for all classes of the Quincy Yacht club is being held off the club house at Houghs Neck this afternoon. There is but one more local race scheduled, on Aug. 28. On Aug. 8 the club will hold its annual run to Marblehead to participate in the mid-summer series of races. A special circular will be issued for this event. On Tuesday, Aug. 17, the annual open race under the auspices of the Y. R. U. of M. will be held off the club house. Next Saturday the boats will take part in the Mosquito Fleet races off City Point. The next social event of the club will be Aug. 25, and will be known as ladies night.

There will be a union gospel meeting of the three Swedish churches of this city, which include the Swedish Congregational, Swedish Baptist and Swedish M. E., at Merrymount park, Sunday afternoon, at four o'clock. The meeting will be addressed by two young missionaries, brother and sister, Arthur and Ruth Nelson. They studied in Chicago and intend to sail for China in the fall. An offering will be taken at the meeting for their mission. In case of rain they will speak at the Swedish Congregational church at seven o'clock. They will also speak at the regular morning service.

MISS LOVEJOY GIVES SHOWER TO CLASSMATE

Miss Martha E. Mahony of Norwood a classmate of Miss Mabel E Lovejoy at Bridgewater Normal school in the class of 1909 whose engagement to Charles O'Brien of Norwood was announced a few weeks ago was given a handkerchief shower by Miss Lovejoy Friday evening at her nome on Huntly road. Miss Mahony has been the guest of Miss Lovejoy for the past few days and as she was to return home Friday evening a little surprise was arranged for her.

On returning from a brief call Miss Mahony found herself surrounded by a number of her former classmates who had come from Salem Norwood Milton and Cambridge for the event. Her greatest surprise however was to find her mother and sister among the guests.

First surprises over the guests adjourned to the dining room, which was prettily decorated in yellow and lavender crepe paper, Miss Mahony's favorite colors. Suspended from the ceiling was a large cone to which was attached a long ribbon. Miss Mahony was directed to pull the string and on doing so was showered with handkerchiefs. Ices and cake were served and each guest was presented with a box of confectionery and nuts.

When Miss Mahony left for home the guests accompanied her to the depot and as she boarded the 10.07 train for Boston she was showered with confetti.

MRS. HOMANS ADDS TO ESTATE

Twenty-eight acres of land on the westerly side of Noon Hill, at the corner of Orchard and Prospect streets Medford have been transferred to Mrs Abigail Adams Homans wife of Robert Homans. The acreage commnds an extensive view over the valley of the Charles River, upon which it fronts and adjoins other land of Mrs. Homans. The property was transferred to Mrs Homans by Louise P Inches.

Mrs. Homans has not disclosed what plans she has regarding the purchase other than to increase her land area although it is understood that she will build at some future time.

The Homans usually come to Quincy for a few weeks in the early spring and occupy the Adams Mansion on Sea street. They are now at The Glades, Cohasset.

Although a large part of the old homestead still remains intact it is understood that the taking of some of the estate bordering on Black's creek for the boulevard purposes, as well as the developing of what is konwn as "Merrymount Sub-division" has made the estate less desirable to the family

SELL EMPLOYEES STOCK.

The Stetson Shoe Co., at South Weymouth, which employs a number of Quincy people is working out a co-operative plan and $25,000 worth of stock is to be sold to employees at $100 a share. The capitalization of the company has been increased from $150,000 to $250,000.

Under the new plan one man will represent employees on the board of directors. Everett W. Gardner has been selected for the place. The mutual benefit plan has been introduced by Arthur C. Heald of the company. The directors consist of E. H. Stetson, A. C. Heald, Charles Heald, Everett W. Gardner, A. W. Little, John W. Zinn and W. S. Hawes. The stock is rated as earning six per cent. There is a waiting list of employees who seek to become stock holders.

MAKARIA ENJOYS.

The moonlight sail of Makaria Fraternity Friday evening was one of the most enjoyable evenings the organization has held in a long time. The party which numbered nearly one hundred young men and women left Houghs Neck on the steamer "Loretta" at 7.30, sailing out as far as Boston Light, then skirting off Nahant, thence to Nantasket. The weather was most delightful for the sail and everybody had a good time. During the evening light refreshments were served on the boat The party did not make a landing. The return to Houghs Neck was made at 11.30.

BUSY WEEK IN BUILDING LINE

Inspector Thomas Issues Fifteen Permits

Building operations have been unusually active this week and the Ledger has been able to anounce several large building projects. Early in the week it was announced that persons were considering the proposition of erecting two large apartment houses near City square, each to contain thirty kitchenettes. Then came the announcement that Joseph Fratus was to erect eight stores on the corner of Hancock street and Billings road, half of which will be built immediately.

Friday it was anounced on good authority that three men were contemplating the erection of a bungalow village off Billings road, near the Wollaston boulevard. The proposition was to erect 78 bungalows, which represent an outlay of $250,000. It was also anounced Friday that Henry M. Faxon had been granted permit for a second business block to be erected on Hancock street between the Music Hall block and Kincaide's theatre. This new block, while only one story at present will eventually contain three stories and correspond with the three story block now in the process of erection by Mr. Faxon on the same lot. The foundation for his block is now practically completed as is the foundation for the big boiler house in the rear in which will be located the plant which will supply heat for both blocks.

Further up the street is the new Webb block on the corner of Hancock and School street, which is now well along toward completion.. The block on the corner of Hancock and Beale streets is also well along.

Work on the block near the Wollaston depot is being held up temporarily waiting until after the meeting of the City Council next Monday evening when it is expected that definite action will be taken on the proposition to change the grade of Beale street and Greenwood avenue.

Of the fifteen permits issued this week by Building Inspector George E. Thomas, eight are for dwelling houses to be built in Atlantic, Norfolk Downs, Wollaston, Quincy Point and West Quincy.

Of the remaining, two are for small stores at Quincy Point and near the Neponset bridge, two shops, one garage, one storage building and one large business block.

The weeks permits were as follows:

Miss Edith Costain, dwelling, 60 Hancock street.

Simeon Scammell, dwelling, Glenoe place.

John F. Kemp & Co. repair shop, near Water street.

Mrs. Mary E. Paul, garage, Bellevue road.

Lilla M. Hudson, storage, Revere road.

Harry A. Taber, dwelling, Brook street.

Willard Granite & Polishing Co., Blacksmith shop, Willard street.

Edward Chapman, dwelling, Kemper street.

Mrs. Ellen Sweeney, dwelling, Bryant avenue.

S. H. Thayer, store, Hancock street

Calvin G. Fletcher, dwelling, Garfield street.

John Lane, dwelling, Freeman street.

Frank Cury, dwelling, Norfolk Downs.

J. J. Barnard, store Washington street.

H. M. Faxon, business block, Hancock street.

THE NEW INN.

George L. Sheahan of Adams street, until recently connected with the N. Y. N. H. & H. R. R., will be the proprietor of the new inn to be opened on the Anderson estate on Granite street. There are 15 rooms in the house. Mr. Sheahan plans to have not only a large public dining room but several private dining rooms. There will be also rooms rented singly and in suite, similar to the plan of the Miller Stile Inn. The main dining room, however, will be open to the public as well as to the regular guests of the house and will cater particularly to automobile parties.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY DROWN WHEN EXCURSION STEAMER SINKS

Three Hundred Others Dead Or Imprisoned In Pleasure Steamer Which Went Down In Chicago River

(By United Press.)

Chicago, July 24—One hundred and fifty are known to have been drowned and 300 others are believed to be dead or imprisoned in the staterooms of the steamer "Eastland" which sunk in the Chicago river early today. This estimate was made by Deputy Police Supt. Schuettler, who personally counted the bodies taken to the Steamer "Theodore Roosevelt" nearby and to improvised morgues.

The "Eastland" was just leaving her dock at Clark street bridge with about 2000 excursionists aboard, bound for a day's outing to Michigan city. It was carrying within 70 of her capacity and it is believed that the crowd along the rail at one side of the boat along with life saving equipment on the upper deck caused the boat to capsize. The boat sunk so quickly that scores were carried under and are believed to have been crushed by the boat on the muddy bottom by the boat.

Scores were still imprisoned in the state rooms of the lower deck of the partly submerged boat two hours after the accident. Screams and cries for help could be plainly heard on shore above the noise of the automatic and electric drills used in cutting out the side plates of the ship. Many of the victims were women and children.

So thick were the bodies floating in the water that rescuers passed by many and drew out only those showing obvious signs of life. The waters where the "Eastland" sunk is not more than 20 feet deep. The sides of the ship stuck from three to five feet above the waters. It was in the state rooms ranged along the sides where many were caught in traps.

Several causes were given for the accident. Capt. Cederson told the United Press representative that the "broken air chute" let in water that resulted in the boat careening. W. J. P. Lamondon, nephew of one of the Lusitania victims, who was a passenger, laid the accident to the system of water ballast in vogue. The ballast he said was not to be taken until the boat had gone into the lake on her way to Michigan city.

Y. M. C. A. BOYS TAKE 1st GAME

The Quincy Y. M. C. A. base ball team, which is touring New Hampshire, played its first game Friday at Portsmouth and defeated the home team 6 to 3.

"Les" Andrews was the man of the hour. In the fifth inning, with two men on he drove the ball by centre field, for a homer, winning the game. A sensational catch by Thompson off Summers of the Travelers resulted in a double and almost a triple play. The score:—

REPUBLICAN CITY COMMITTEE MEET

The Republican City Committee met Friday evening at the Johnson building to prepare to circulate the papers necessary to the selection of candidates as delegates to the State convention and members of the committee. Ira M. Whittmore, chairman, presided. There was a good attendance.

This year the local Republicans are entitled to 28 delegates, one more than last year. The increase comes in Ward Two. Ward One will have 7, Ward Two 3, Ward Three 5, Ward Four 2, Ward Five 7 and Ward Six 4. The ward committees will consist of nine members from each ward, a total of 54 men.

This year the nomination papers must be filed with the secretary of the committee before filing in the secretary of state's office. He must have the papers of the delegate candidates in hand belore Aug. 1st and the city committee nomination papers by Aug. 14. Three days are then allowed for verification and filing at the state office.

YOUNG PEOPLE ENJOY PARTY

Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Inman of Conant road, entertained a large number of the young people of Atlantic at a party Friday night in honor of Miss Harriet Davis who is to return to her home in Manchester, N. H. on Sunday, after having spent two weeks as their guest.

The evening was very pleasantly spent in singing and dancing. Miss May Knapp and Matthew Stuart and Mrs. Inman and Mr. Lester Inman favored those present with several exhibition dances during the evening.

Shortly before midnight the party filed into the dining room where dainty refreshments consisting of salmon wiggle, cookics, ices, candies and nuts were served.

Among those present were the Misses Harriet Davis, Lora Churchill, Lucille Churchill, Gladys Pouquet, Mary Knapp, Lililan Palmer, Dorthea Palmer, Jordine Davison, Mildred Sullivan, Mrs. Churchill and the Messrs. Lester Inman, James Hill, William Brunt, Clifford Hill, Matthew Stuart, James Butler, Alvin Mitchell, Ralph Trowbridge and Mr. and Mrs. Inman.

COUNCIL MEETS MONDAY.

Will Be Last Session Until September.

An adjourned meeting of the City Council will be held Monday evening at which time it is probable that an adjournment will be made until Sept. 13. Usually the Council adjourns for its summer vacation early in July. This year owing to the deadlock on street matters, the date of adjournment has been delayed. Monday evening's meeting promises to be an interesting one, as it is understood that the joint committee on finance and streets after several hours deliberation have decided to report favoring the acceptance of nine new streets.

It is not among the impossibilities that a minority of the joint committee may attempt to have even more than that number accepted. It will be impossible to pass the loan order for the new streets which are to be reported at this meeting for the loan order will require two readings. Possibly on this account an adjournment will be taken for three days in order to pass the loan order. It will be necessary for the Mayor to call a special meeting the latter part of August in order to call the state caucuses, draw jurors and to receive the appointment of election officers.

CABARET SHOW.

Mr. and Mrs. John R. Nelson are given the use of their house and grounds for a cabaret show to be given under the auspices of the Squantum Women's club this evening.

Professional singers and an orchestra will furnish the entertainment. Sandwiches cakes and tonic will be on sale. Mrs. Nelson is being assisted by Mrs. Hiram Morse president of the club.

NOMINATIONS FILED.

The following nomination papers have been filed with the Registrars of Voters for certifiaction.

Sheriff for Norfolk county, Samuel Capen.

Lieut. Gov., Guy A. Ham.

Governor, Samuel McCall, Fred S. Detisch.

THREW STONES AT TWO BOYS

Thomas Monahan and Walter F. Hackett were fined $10 in court today for assault at Weymouth. They pleaded guilty to throwing stones at two boys, one of whom, Ashton Wilbur, was hit on the head. They alleged Wilbur insulted them as he rode by on a bicycle. Sentence was suspended to Sept. 30.

MUST PAY $21 FOR JOY RIDE

John F. Wood of Weymouth was fined $20 in court today for not paying F. A. Meiers, $21.50 for a joy ride from midnight on July 5th to dawn. Wood was accompanied by a young lady.

Wood engaged the auto in City square and was driven 86 miles. When he dismissed Meiers in City square at six o'clock he said he had but $4 and wanted to spend it on his friend. He promised to send a check to cover the amount due.

When no settlement was made Meiers secured a warrant charging Wood with fraudulently hiring an auto. Wood was placed on probation and ordered to make restitution.

THE INCALCULABLE COST.

After the Franco-Prussian war, when France was forced to pay Germany, in addition to territory, a cash indemnity of one million dollars within three years, $20,000,000 of this tribute, mostly in British sovereigns, were stored away at Spandau as a future war fund. The British banks report that some of this stored gold is now coming to light. If such a reserve is now being drawn on, after Germany had been spending half that amount daily for a long time, the fact would seem to have significance, indicating the nearness of a time of financial straitness. Great Britain is also said to spend on war about fifteen million dollars a day. What France is spending has not been reported, but it is easy to believe that, thrifty as she is, she will soon be drawing on her last resources. How long can it all last?

Then there is what has been called "the butcher's bill." In April after about nine months of war, a casualty list published in Berlin was said to bring the German total of killed, wounded and missing up to 1,196,969. It was then suspected that the Russian losses were even on a larger scale, though no official figures were made public at Petrograd. The losses of France and Austria were also kept secret, but it was believed with good reason that they were enormous. England, with relatively few men on the firing line, could better afford to make her losses public, but even England was slow to bring the facts before a shuddering people, employing the installment sytem with the evident purpose of veiling the naked horror.

Now, after nearly twelve months of war, the New York Sun quotes a German periodical, Heer und Politik, as saying that the casualties of the nations at war with Germany amount to five millions in killed, wounded and missing. Germany's own losses have lately been estimated at Berlin as beyond the two million mark, according to report, and it is claimed that a million and a half of Russian, French and English prisoners are held by the Teutonic-Turkish alliance. Even as far back as January, after the wholesale sacrifice of life in the Masurian lake district, the London Times expressed the belief that the Russians had lost more than a million men, and furiously destructive campaigns in Gallicia have followed.

Vast German losses are admitted and are of course inevitable, the Germans so often taking the offensive in close formation under the rain of modern guns. Vast Russian losses, though not officially recognized are certain. That France has suffered very heavy losses there can be no question, for the furious and sleepless resistance of the French to the invader's continued efforts to forge toward Paris could have had only one result. Of the great nations involved, England, with as yet relatively few men engaged, has suffered least but even England is full of mourning.

WARSAW—THE CRISIS.

The advance of the Germans and Austrians upon Warsaw is probably the most momentous move since the early days of the Great War when the possible consequences are taken into consideration. If the Austro-Germans defeat the Russians and take Warsaw they will have dealt a terrible blow to the Russian Bear and his Allies. The capture of Warsaw will mean the complete defeat of the Russian campaign and it does not seem possible that if this comes to pass that the Russians will count for much on the great world battlefield, at least for some months.

Warsaw in the possession of Germany will mean that a large portion of the Kaiser's forces can be detached form the Eastern campaign and thrown against the British and French in the West. On the other hand, if Warsaw does not fall it means that the Russians must still be reckoned with and Germany and Austria will not be able to augment to any extent their present force in the West when Kitchener's Two Million take the field. To the layman it would seem ass if the campaign about Warsaw will prove to be one of the most critical of the whole war.

THE HORSE IN WAR.

The Ledger prints today an interesting but depressing story with a Chillicothe, Mo., dateline regarding the fortunes made in horses sold for war purposes. War's horrors have affected so many human lives that few can find time or inclination to say a word for the horses. And yet the animal which, until the advent of the automobile, was commonly termed "man's best friend" has always been a war sufferer. The average life of a horse at the front is reckoned to be ten days. As the article in question states bluntly but exactly: "In all there are about 250 buyers now tripping about the West looking for stuff to feed the machine guns in Flanders." This is one of the minor horrors of war.

SAVE YOUR PAINS.

Readers of this paper who may have had the misfortune to get into trouble with the police will save themselves and us much trouble and pain if they will make up their minds to take the full dose of medicine which they deserve. A newspaper's function is to print news and among the duties of a newspaper is to report court proceedings. A muzzled press would mean a tyrannical court. Therefore, it will be quite useless for persons whose misdeeds have brought them before the court to beseige this office with prayers, threats, and bribes to secure the suppression of legitimate news.

QUINCY IS ALIVE.

The announcement of the plan to build 78 bungalows in the Norfolk Downs section is another reminder of the absolute fact, so often discounted that Quincy is alive. The most convincing proof of the essential vitality of this city lies in the fact that such projects as this can be put into successful execution despite the croaking of unworthy citizens without whom Quincy would have a much easier march to the progressiveness which it will surely attain.

ON THAT KNOLL.

Wednesday's Ledger contained an editorial pleading for the retention of the knoll on the Atlantic boulevard at the corner of Fenno street. Thursday some Wollaston women started circulating a petition against the removal of the knoll by the contractor who is laying the new boulevard. We welcome letters from our readers on this subject: letters from those who favor the retention of the knoll and from those who desire its removal. Full publicity can do much, as witness Dr. Gordon's letter in this paper, which saved the City square fountain At least, let those who wish the knoll to be retained send us their names for publication.

THE MAINE EPERIMENT.

Maine is going to witness the experiment of trying cattle raising on a large scale, a tract of 38,000 acres of land, said to be suitable, having been selected to be stocked by 5000 head of western cattle.

For some time agricultural experts have claimed that New England could raise a large proportion of its own beef if the matter were undertaken on a sufficiently large and scientific scale, and the Maine undertaking appears to be the initial step. It will be watched with great interest.

If it succeeds, there is apparently no reason why other land in New England cannot be similarly utilized and small herds started, here and there, large enough to market at a profit.

New England is steadily increasing in the number of sheep raised, if the multiplication of small herds in various sections is any indication, and many New England farmers have found it profitable to go into the meat business on a moderate scale, establishing modern slaughtering plants and buying up cattle, sheep and swine for a radius of some twenty miles, raising plenty of corn and ensilage on their farms, using a certain proportion of it for their stock, and then converting the stock into meat and hauling it to the nearest large city for disposal.—Taunton Gazette.

U. S. TO INSIST ON ITS RIGHTS

Further Violations By Germany Will Be Regarded As Hostile

Latest Note Is Emphatic

Washington, July 24.—Following is the official text of the latest American note to Germany regarding submarine warfare, which was delivered to the foreign office at Berlin by Ambassador Gerard:

Department of State,
Washington, July 21, 1915.

The Secretary of State to Ambassador Gerard:

You are instructed to deliver textually the following note to the minister for foreign affairs:

The note of the imperial German government dated the 8th of July, 1915, has received the careful consideration of the government of the United States and it regrets to be obliged to say that it has found it very unsatisfactory because it fails to meet the real differences between the two governments and indicates no way in which the accepted principles of law and humanity may be applied in the grave matter in controversy, but proposes, on the contrary, arrangements for a partial suspension of those principles which virtually set them aside.

The government of the United States notes with satisfaction that the imperial German government recognizes without reservation the validity of the principles insisted on in the several communications which this government has addressed to the imperial government with regard to its announcement of a war zone and the use of submarines against merchantmen on the high seas—the principle that the high seas are free, that the character and cargo of a merchantman must first be ascertained before she can lawfully be seized or destroyed, and that the lives of noncombatants may in no case be put in jeopardy unless the vessel resists or seeks to escape after being summoned to submit to examination; for a belligerent act of retaliation is, per se, an act beyond the law and the defense of an act as retaliatory is an admission that it is illegal.

A Disappointing Contention

The government of the United States is, however, keenly disappointed to find that the imperial German government regards itself as in a large degree exempt from the obligation to observe these principles, even where neutral vessels are concerned, by what it believes the policy and practise of the government of Great Britain to be in the present war with regard to neutral commerce.

The imperial German government will readily understand that the government of the United States cannot discuss the policy of the government of Great Britain with regard to neutral trade except with that government itself, and that it must regard the conduct of other belligerent governments as irrelevant to any discussion with the imperial German government of what this government regards as grave and unjustifiable violations of the rights of American citizens by German naval commanders.

Illegal and inhuman acts, however justifiable they may be thought to be against an enemy who is believed to have acted in contravention of law and humanity, are manifestly indefensible when they deprive neutrals of their acknowledged rights, particularly when they violate the right to life itself.

If a belligerent cannot retaliate against an enemy without injuring the lives of neutrals, as well as their property, humanity, as well as justice and a due regard for the dignity of neutral powers, should dictate that the practice be discontinued. If persisted in, it would in such circumstances constitute an unpardonable offense against the sovereignty of the neutral nation affected.

Cannot Abate Any Rights

The government of the United States is not unmindful of the extraordinary conditions created by this war, or of the radical alterations of circumstance and method of attack produced by the use of instrumentalities of naval warfare which the nations of the world cannot have had in view when the existing rules of international law were formulated, and it is ready to make every reasonable allowance for these novel and unexpected aspects of war at sea; but it cannot consent to abate any essential or fundamental right of its people because of a mere alteration of circumstance.

The rights of neutrals in time of war are based upon principle, not upon expediency, and the principles are immutable. It is the duty and obligation of belligerents to find a way to adapt the new conditions to them.

The events of the past two months have clearly indicated that it is possible and practicable to conduct such submarine operations as have characterized the activity of the imperial Germany navy within the so-called war zone in substantial accord with the accepted practises of regulated warfare. The whole world has looked with interest and increasing satisfaction at the demonstration of that possibility by German naval commanders.

It is manifestly possible, therefore, to lift the whole practise of submarine attack above the criticism which it has aroused and remove the chief causes of offense.

The Lusitania Case

In view of the admission of illegality made by the imperial government when it pleaded the right of retaliation in defense of its acts, and in view of the manifest possibility of conforming to the established rules of naval warfare, the government of the United States cannot believe that the imperial government will longer refrain from disavowing the wanton act of its naval commander in sinking the Lusitania or from offering reparation for the American lives lost, so far as reparation can be made for a needless destruction of human life by an illegal act.

The government of the United States, while not indifferent to the friendly spirit in which it is made, cannot accept the suggestion of the imperial German government that certain vessels be designated and agreed upon which shall be free on the seas now illegally proscribed. The very agreement would, by implication, subject other vessels to illegal attack, and would be a curtailment and therefore an abandonment of the principles for which this government contends, and which in times of calmer counsels every nation would concede as of course.

The government of the United States and the imperial German government are contending for the same great object, have long stood together in urging the very principles upon which the government of the United States now so solemnly insists. They are both contending for the freedom of the seas.

Will Be No Compromise

The government of the United States will continue to contend for that freedom, from whatever quarter violated, without compromise and at any cost. It invites the practical cooperation of the imperial German government at this time, when co-operation may accomplish most, and this great common object be most strikingly and effectively achieved.

The imperial German government expresses the hope that this object may be in some measure accomplished even before the present war ends. It can be. The government of the United States not only feels obliged to insist upon it, by whomsoever violated, or ignored, in the protection of its own citizens, but is also deeply interested in seeing it made practicable between the belligerents themselves, and holds itself ready at any time to act as the common friend who may be privileged to suggest a way.

In the meantime, the very value which this government sets upon the long and unbroken friendship between the people and government of the United States and the people and government of the German nation impels it to press very solemnly scrupulous observance of neutral rights in this critical matter.

Friendship itself prompts it to say to the imperial government that repetition by the commanders of German naval vessels of acts in contravention of those rights must be regarded by the government of the United States, when they affect American citizens, as deliberately unfriendly. LANSING.

Panama Canal Is Paying, Not Including Interest on Costs

Washington, July 24.—Counting only the cost of operation of civil government, sanitary work and administration and the handling of ships, the Panama canal is now on a paying basis, according to official reports.

Receipts for May not only eliminated the deficit of $39,480, which had grown up since the opening up of the canal trade, but left a balance of $177,799, which works out a profit of 4.79 percent on the expenditure.

This, however, does not make any allowance for interest on the vast sum of money expended in the construction of the canal, and from that point of view the receipts from tolls have not yet equalled the expenses.

DEATH OF WILLIAM IVINS

Noted New York Lawyer Had Held Many Public Positions

New York, July 24.—William M. Ivins, a Republican leader and one of the leading attorneys of New York city, died suddenly from an acute attack of Bright's disease and uraemic poisoning.

Ivins, who was born in New Jersey in 1851, was chief counsel for William Barnes in the $50,000 libel suit against Theodore Roosevelt.

During his lifetime Ivins held many public positions. In 1905 he was Republican candidate for mayor of New York.

ECHOS FROM DARDANELLES FIRING LINE

By Wilbur S. Forrest.
(United Press Staff Correspondent.)

London, July 14 (By mail)—Echoes from the firing lines in the Dardanelles coming back to London today in "soldier mail" proclaim the comparatively small struggle between the Turks and Allies on narrow Gallipoli peninsula the fiercest single campaign of the war.

All the horrors of battle in Northern France and Belgium and on the gigantic Eastern front are repeated and magnified on Gallipoli. Every soldier letter has a new thrill. That the Turks are a desperate army is admitted in all of them.

The British army on Gallipoli is a wondrous mixture. Fighting beside the turbaned native troops from India are the Irish from Dublin, the famous Munsters, and a regiment or two from Cork. Further on down the line are the men from far away New Zealand and Australia while other trenches hold the British territorials from Manchester, Birmingham, and Liverpool. The kilted Scots from Edinburgh and Glasgow are also there as well as the picturesqueiy uniformed French Zouaves and bearded regulars of the French contingent taking their chances against the Turks with the British.

The roar of the big naval guns in the straits blends with the smaller noises of artillery on land and the crackle of machine guns and rifle fire.

"The spectacles we see here on land and water would move a heart of flint" writes a member of the Dublin Fusiliers. "No words can describe what we've left behind in our march since we landed here. The shore and sides of the steep cliffs were dotted with the corpses of Turks and British alike. I lost every pal I knew."

A picturesque story was received today from Private A. M. Sampson, 13th Australian battalion. He writes

"Yesterday I was in a charge. I bayoncted a Turk right through the neck. He was the first man I ever killed and the sight made me sick and squeamish. I've tried to sleep since but its hard work for I frequently wake up and seem to feel my bayonet going into that Turk's neck. Ugh! It's beginning to get on my nerves. However, the life here is rather exciting and a bit adventurous. Within sight of our trench is our watchdog warship, patrolling up and down and at intervals jetting out 10 inch shells over our heads and into the enemy's trenches. I don't know her name but we call her "Old Four Funnels." I've been wounded. But it was just a scratch of shrapnel on the leg so I haven't bothered to report it. Many of my comrades have done their bit and cashed in their checks. One I especially liked was firing alongside of me and exposed himself too long. A bullet passed through his temple. He cashed in at once, but so did the sniper that got him, for I waited for him and got him in the same place fifteen minutes later."

Advices in the same mail stated that Sampson had been seriously wounded and taken aboard a hospital ship.

A private in the Sixth Manchester Territorials writes:

"The countryside is beautiful, but the trees are torn by bullets and shells. Gigantic pieces of exploded projectiles from the warships lie about and shrapnel bullets as big as tennis balls. Dead Turks lie rotting against the scarlet poppies. The scene is both beautiful and horrible."

Private H. J. Forrest, also of the Sixth Manchester Regiment writes:

"The Sixth Manchesters have lost very heavily both in officers and men. We have been in the firing line for nearly a month. On one occasion the entire line made a general advance. We were the first to leave the trenches. We advanced a short distance and began to dig ourselves in, for the Turks were firing furiously. I had made a good cover when a chap crawled up to me hit in the leg. While I was turning around to give him a first aid dressing, I must have exposed my leg for I felt a sharp pain, I was hit. I could not get away from the location which was dangerously near the enemy trenches. Then the Turks started to advance. Our fellows were forced to retire. Of course, they could not take my wounded companion and myself. I was not going to be left for the Turks so I managed to get onto one foot and hopped 150 yards to cover. The Turks were thrown back and my companion was later brought in by stretcher-bearers."

The Allies have lost heavily on the peninsula as well as in the straits.

The following narrative was contained in a letter from a sailor of the Battleship Majestic, sunk by the Turks. The sailor had witnessed the sinking of the Bouvet, Irresistible, Ocean, Goliath and Triumph.

"We were getting the torpedo nets aft at 6.32 A. M. on May 27. Suddenly I spotted a submarine just rounding the bows of a troopship off our port beam. I drew the commander's attention to it. He replied 'Yes, here comes the torpedo.' The torpedo traveled at a good rate of speed through the water. At 6.33 it struck the Majestic. The poor old ship shook horribly.

"A huge volume of water shot up to port some 200 feet in the air. Our end, like the others, had come at last. Men obeyed orders to the very last minute. All recognized that it would be a fight for life. Everyone was ordered to look about for things that would keep them afloat. Everyone was cool. There was no panic. The transports sent boats. The trawlers and tugs began to move in close. But all of the men had to take to the water to be saved. I took a farewell look at the old ship's deck and dived overboard. I swam to a French tugboat and was taken aboard. At 6.40 we watched the ship heel over. She died game. The Admiral's flag was still flying as she toppled over and turned bottom up. After all the excitement was over I opened my Y. M. C. A. book and these words were before me.

"I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course. I have kept the faith."

Social Activities

Under the auspices of the Philanthropic committee of the Women's club and for the benefit of the Associated Charities, John Arnold will talk of the Philippines Friday evening, July 30, at Adams academy. This is an unusual opportunity for first hand information and with the Philippine problem still unsolved, the address should have a live interest for all those men and women who in the near future must shape the issue with their votes. Mr. Arnold has just returned from six years' residence in the Islands in a government position where he has had every chance for intelligent observation of people and conditions. An American newspaper man who called upon Mr. Arnold in Manila, speaks of his remarkable understanding and clear exposition of the situation there, beyond that of any other whom he met. Mr. Arnold's many friends in Quincy will be glad of this opportunity to meet him, as all may do in an informal way at this time. He is leaving Quincy soon to reside in Washington, D. C.

The Pathe Weekly has some interesting pictures of the Massachusetts infantry.

WISDOM PERSONIFIED.

San Francisco, July 24—Jimmy, a waterfront cat, is today hailed by seamen here as the wisest feline in the world. They assert that Jimmy has the second sight, which enables her to foresee coming events and govern her movements accordingly. This reputation is fastened on Jimmy as a result of the trouble which descended upon the steamer "O. M. Clark" recently off the Channel Islands.

For years Jimmy resided in the hold of the "O. M. Clark." She feasted on fat and juicy rats and enjoyed life. On several occasions, however, she gave birth to large families of kittens, and was beloved of every mariner who trod the good ship's deck.

On the day the vessel left port for its last voyage Captain F. N. Higgins dropped a shipping register on the wharf. It fell open at the signal code page and revealed an arrangement of flags meaning: "I am starving, come at once."

Horrified at this evil omen, Captain Higgins tucked the book under his arm and fled to his ship. Just as he crossed the gang-plank he met Jimmy majestically departing.

"Pussy, pussy," wheedled Captain Higgins. But the cat remained obdurate. Jimmy regarded Captain Higgins fixedly for a moment, raised her eyebrows significantly, and stalked over to a steam schooner moored in Oakland Estuary, where she took up her residence in a coal box and refused to be lured back to her old home.

Captain Higgins set sail. The ship was blown off her course, and so beaten and buffeted by the howling storms that, in mid-ocean, her crankshaft broke and she wallowed in the trough of the sea, helpless.

Food and water ran low. First Mate McAllister and four men put out in a small boat. They arrived at Fort San Luis, weak and starving. Meanwhile the crew of the "Clark" had rigged a sail and the vessel limped into San Diego and then to Oakland.

Jimmy with several small Jimmies arrived on the steam-schooner a few days later.

MAKE FORTUNES IN WAR HORSES

Chillicothe, Mo., July 24:—All of the carefully formulated restrictions that used to control the purchasing of horses for the armies of Europe have gone by the boards.

There was a period during the first month or two of the great conflict that the cavalry officers of the Allies, detailed to the United States to secure animals for use on the fighting front, made a brave effort to maintain their old standards. A horse had to weigh at least 1300 pounds, be so many hands high, be free of blemish, both internal and external, have a showy foot action and show evidence of high spirit. But now all that sort of thing is of the past. Anything that can weigh up to 1000 pounds and walk on four ostensibly sound legs can get past in flying colors.

And for this class of animal the allied governments are paying an average price of $175 per head.

Never in the history of American horse raising has there been such a demand for animals as exists today. Breeders and buyers alike are reaping fortunes. One firm located in Missouri is shipping an average of 4000 horses per month to the Canadian border and is employing 50 buyers to scour the Central and mountain Western states to secure animals. High as is the price today breeders are holding back and in confidence buyers themselves will tell you that by winter time they expect to see the average price rise to $200.

The demand is becoming more pressing every week. Italy, within the last few days has contracted with an Oklahoma firm for 25,000, while Great Britain and France have lifted the lid on any previous limitations of their contracts, they will take all that are offered.

The average life of a horse at the front is said to be just ten days.

Some of the best bred horses of the west have already been sold and before snow flies many more are going.

"I bought a pacer today," said a young horse buyer who makes Missouri and Kansas his territory, "for $500, for the English army. That horse had a record of 2.07 on the Grand Circuit and his pedigree went back as far as you could see. If this war keeps up for another year it will take American horsemen a decade to build up the American horse to the standard it kept before this war broke out."

"We buyers get five dollars a head for every horse we buy. There are 47 men buying horses for my firm. In all there are about 250 buyers now tripping about the West looking for stuff to feed the machine guns in Flanders. I average about eighty horses a week although I bought 200 one week not long ago. That's making a fairly good salary for me. Before this war broke out I thought that $25 a week as manager for a Missouri livery stable was great business. All of the old gang that used to follow the strings about the tracks in the summer and hang out around the yards in Chicago and St. Louis and Kansas City in the winter are in the horse buying game today and living on easy street. Why, say, I met an old pal of mine in Des Moines who took me up to the Commercial Savings bank and showed me a balance of $50,000 in his favor. He hadn't been making a real good living for the last ten years and now he's fixed for life on what he's cleared on the market in the last ten months."

"July 1st my firm made one of the biggest single shipments of horses ever put on cars. We got hold of 1000 head on the Mexican border at $60 a head and sold them to Great Britain for about $175 each. The British government has two horse 'resting stations' in the United States. One of these is at Boone, Iowa, and the other is at Englewood, Ill., near Chicago. We ship most of our animals to Vancouver, B. C., where the English take them over. I understand they are shipped via the Suez canal."

"The American army is getting into the game now and I have an order for both horses and mules for the U. S. A. However, the American officers maintain the old standards and we take care that our best stock goes to Uncle Sam."

THE AUGUST AMERICAN.

In the August American Magazine Philip Curtiss begins a new short serial entitled "And West is West." It is a story of California and the Expositions—a gay tale of love and of travel across the continent, full of adventure and humor.

The war is admirably handled in this issue. A well-known American banker writes on "The Money Side of the War" and gives many important and amazing facts about the financial condition of all the nations engaged in the present struggle. Herbert Quick, writing under the title "The Submarine as a Peacemaker" shows how the submarine will in the future prevent the domination of the sea by any power.

Fiction is contributed by John Taintor Foote, Ruth Sapinsky, Walter Prichard Eaton, Edwin L. Sabin, Lincoln Colcord, Molly Best, David Grayson and Marion Hill.

A cabaret show is to be held this evening at the home of Councilman and Mrs. John R. Nelson of Brunswick street, Squantum, by the Squantum Women's club.

SILENCE TO BE GERMAN POLICY

Could Not Meet Our Demands In Immediate Reply

BACKED BY PUBLIC OPINION

Kaiser's Subjects Do Not Want to See Empire Annihilated by Use of Munitions Manufactured In United States —Hair-Trigger Situation Rests Upon German Submarine Commanders

Washington, July 24.—An open break with Germany probably will be avoided by the failure of Germany to make any reply at present to the Wilson-Lansing note. Ultimately the note may evoke a response from the German foreign office, but the German authorities doubtless will be made aware that they can avoid a rupture with the United States by keeping silent for the present.

President Wilson evidently does not expect a prompt and defiant rejoinder from Germany, for he has resumed his interrupted vacation at Cornish. He may not remain away from Washington many days, but if he returns next week the German situation will not necessarily supply the cause, for almost every department of the government is pressing problems upon him which require personal conference and admit of little delay. The labor situation alone threatens to command the time of the president very soon.

It is generally assumed in Washington that were Germany to reply at once to the American note of July 21 her answer could not be otherwise than a blunt refusal to meet the conditions imposed by the United States. German public opinion alone, it is felt here, would be so strongly hostile to any concession to American demands that the government would not dare to yield a point.

The exchanges between the two governments have done little more than to emphasize the hopelessness of expecting Germany to guarantee the immunity of Americans at sea while old ammunition plants are being enlarged and new ones built in this country to manufacture powder and shell with which to annihilate the German empire.

The "skill" of the administration in avoiding a break with Germany doubtless will be found to lie in the literary construction of a warning "not to do it again," to which Germany can reply only by refraining from doing it again. Thus a hair-trigger situation is set, in which peace is won by the chance that stupidity does not exist among German submarine commanders.

Germany, it is believed in many circles here, is so thoroughly convinced that the United States desires to avoid trouble that she will have no hesitation in ignoring the most solemn warning ever sent to a foreign nation by an American president.

SULLIVAN RESIGNS

Action Follows Investigation of His Career as Minister

Washington, July 24.—James M. Sullivan, American minister to the Dominican republic, has tendered his resignation to President Wilson, and it has been accepted.

Sullivan's resignation is the consequence of an investigation, conducted for the state department by Senator Phelan of California, into the minister's fitness for his office. The findings were unfavorable to Sullivan.

Phelan's report has been at the state department and before President Wilson several weeks. Soon after it was received it became known that Sullivan had been asked to resign and had been given a short time to consider it.

The report is understood to sustain many of the charges against Sullivan.

KORF LOSES BOTH HANDS

Explorer and Naturalist Suffers Great Hardships In the Arctic

Nome, Alaska, July 24.—Johann Korf, a Norwegian naturalist in the Arctic for the Smithsonian institute, lost both hands by freezing while his expedition was fast in the ice in Kolyma river, Siberia. The news was brought by the steamer Corwin, which has returned here from a walrus hunt.

Korf was shipwrecked in a power schooner near Cape Serge, Siberia, in the autumn of 1912, while he was collecting Arctic flowers and birds for John E. Thayer of Lancaster, Mass., and the Harvard museum. He had made a specialty of exploration of Kolyma river and had ascended the stream 500 miles.

Double Murder and Suicide

Detroit, July 24.—Chester Hall, 54, shot and killed his wife, Anna, 38, and his stepson, Henry Towers, 18, here. Hall then blew off his own head with a shotgun.

Ten Thousand Go on Strike

New York, July 24.—Ten thousand members of the Children's Jacket Makers' union have struck. About 350 shops on the East Side are affected.

SPORTING COMMENT

"What Mr. Stallings would have done yesterday if he had been a field instead of a bench manager is highly pleasing to contemplate. For one thing the mortality list probably would have been larger by at least one." In such manner does a Transcript sporting writer discuss the Quigley Evers affair of Thursday. He further remarks that poor umpiring is killing the game. League President Tenner states "I am satisfied with my umpires." The only difference is that the Transcript sportsman has seen Boston games.

Joe Azevendo and Milburn Saylor will fight Tuesday evening at the Atlas A. A. They will meet as strangers in the ring. Saylor has an accurate range is one fan's comment. Joe states Saylor has had an inflated bean since his showing against Charley White. Bet against Joe.

Thirty-nine horses are entered in the 15 races at the South Weymouth track this afternoon. Ruth D, bm., J. O. Ready will be driven to beat 1.05, in Class A. pacing, and Queen McGregor, will be trotted a mile to beat 2.34 1-2. Four mile heats are on the card.

Jack Johnson has an alibi. He intimates a fake with Willard.

It is reported the New York American league club is to have new grounds on the East side, between 40 and 42d streets. President Ruppert later denies the report.

The Germans are sports in one way at least. Horseman complained racing was impossible without betting. They won their point.

Leo Callahan, former High school of Commerce boy, now with the Harrisburg International league team, has broken his leg sliding bases. Two years ago he broke the same leg, in the same place, above the ankle.

The Resolute and Vanitie will race again next week. The Vanitie has been overhauled and is in the water. The Resolute will be in within a few days.

Lefty Ford is back from Maine where he spent the week. In his travels he stopped at Livermore, Me., to shake hands with Frank Hoyt, Wes Ganzel, Gloster and Joe Ford who are connected with the base ball team of the city. Woodward and Cannon who jumped the Colonial league last week when a cut in their salaries was ordered are also with the team. He reports the combination to be a fast one. The Board of Trade is backing the venture.

The Fore River players and rooters went to Norwood today in autos. The opponents were the Norwood Press club.

The crew of the yacht, William L. Greene, owned by the Electric Boat Co., has issued a challenge to the men who will take charge of the submarines now under construction at the Fore River shipyard to a base ball game. In anticipation of such a challenge the latter has put in considerable practice. The defi is as good as accepted.

The base ball teams of Bird and Son and the Gamewell Fire Alarm and Telegraph Co., will play at Nantasket beach today, at the outing of the Gamewell company. Both teams are affiliated with the Manufacturers league. Bird and Son being in second place, one game behind Fore River.

CONVICT SURGEON SAVED FRANK'S LIFE

History of McNaughton, Who Had Been Sentenced to Death

Atlanta, July 24.—If Leo M. Frank survives the attack made on him at the Georgia state penitentiary by J. W. Creen, a life convict, he will owe his life to another fellow-convict, Dr. W. J. McNaughton, serving a life term for murder.

It was McNaughton who was at Frank's side two minutes after the cutting and who performed the operation of stitching up the wound in Frank's throat. Prominent physicians pronounced the operation a marvel of workmanlike skill and state that had it not been performed so promptly and well Frank would have bled to death.

McNaughton's history is similar in many ways to Frank's. He was sentenced to hang for the supposed murder of Fred Flanders. The state at the trial sought to prove a motive by the alleged attentions of McNaughton to Mrs. Flanders.

McNaughton was found guilty of murder and sentenced to hang. He carried his case to the Georgia supreme court and to the United States supreme court. Both ruled against him. Feeling was intense in parts of Georgia against McNaughton and he was taken to Savannah for safe keeping. It was John M. Slaton, the same governor who extended clemency to Frank, that commuted McNaughton's sentence to imprisonment for life.

Pekin, July 24.—Latest reports from the flood district in southeastern China indicate that more than 175,000 persons have perished.

Heavy rains are falling again and the rivers in Kwangsi and Kwangtung provinces are over their banks once more. More than sixty native villages have been swept away.

The only way of getting food to the stricken district is by boat and this method is so slow that thousands are starving to death.

RUSSIANS HALT TEUTON HOSTS

Forts Around Warsaw Prove Hard Nut to Crack

IVANGOROD IS NOT INVESTED

Mackensen Fails In His Drive to Cut Railroad Running From Moscow to Polish Capital—Desperate Fighting Making Battlefields a Shambles—British and French Troops Doing Little In West—Furious Bombardment Continues In the Alps

London, July 24.—Germany's great sweep upon Warsaw has been definitely checked by the great forts surrounding the city, particularly that at Novo Georgiesk, on the Vistula, twenty miles to the north, and that of Ivangorod, also on the Vistula, sixty-five miles to the south.

Not only this, but the desperate drive of General von Mackensen from the south to break the Lublin-Cholm railway has been halted by great masses of Russian reinforcements hurled against the eighty-mile line between the Vistula and the Bug. The railway is still safe, the protective city of Ivangorod has not been invested, the Narew has not been crossed by General von Hindenberg's hordes from the north, and Warsaw still stands.

All this negative news from the German standpoint is derived from Berlin's ojcial statement, which devotes only a few lines to the Warsaw campaign.

In fact, the German statement is not only scanty, but indefinite. It tells of an advance upon the Narew bridgeheads, but the Narew is a long river, and the Russians have established many bridgeheads along its banks. It also tells of the capture by the Germans of two villages before the fortifications of Rozan, but does not specify from what direction the attack was made.

Mackensen Drive Fails

One point, however, stands out, and that is that Mackensen, who was to cut the Moscow railroad, the line running through Cholm, Lublin and Ivangorod into Warsaw, has failed in his task. The German war office apparently overshot the mark in saying that Ivangorod was "invested." The great outlying fort which protects Warsaw from the south has not yet been approached by the Teutonic hordes.

Although the Germans claim to have broken the stubborn Russian resistence between the Vistula and the Bug at several points, it is noticeable that those points are not mentioned, and there can be gathered from the scattered data regarding this region that a tremendous battle is raging, in which the Teutons are not having their own way.

Polish Fields Turn Into Shambles

There can be no doubt that while the Russians are thus holding the Germans back from Warsaw they are inflicting terrible losses upon them. Despite their shortage of ammunition, the czar's troops, by their awful bayonet charges and the careful use of such field artillery as they possess, are making the fields of Poland a shambles.

But if the Russians are thus hampered, their opponents are also beginning to feel the effects of penetrating too far from their main lines of communication.

The Germans have not yet been able to bring up from the Galician frontier the imposing mass of big guns and minor artillery of all sorts with which they made their spectacular drive against Przemysl and Lemberg. And without the backing of their monster Krupps, the German infantrymen are lax fighters.

Confronted, as they are, by the great forts surrounding Warsaw, the Germans are practically powerless to advance further until they can bring up the great mortars and guns that cracked a way through the steel and concrete defenses of Belgium last August.

Inactivity In the West

As usual, while the forces of Russia are engaged in a terrific struggle with Germany's chief power, and notwithstanding the fact that hundreds of thousands of Germans have been drained from the western front to crush the eastern ally of England and France, there is nothing but inactivity to report on the part of the forces of England in the field, and but little more on behalf of those of France.

The million British troops encamped around Ypres are doing nothing. The possible 2,000,000 French troops between Lille and the Vosges are doing some spasmodic fighting, but nothing that would tend in the least to disconcert the Germans left to guard this front until the hordes fighting in the east can return.

The French gained ground in the La Petre forest and made a slight advance in the region of Bagatelle, in the Argonne.

German attacks were repulsed in the region of the Vosges. After a violent bombardment the enemy succeeded in penetrating a part of the French position east of Metzeral, but was driven out by a counter-attack.

Although they have made important gains in the great battle on the Isonzo front for the possession of Gorizia and Tolmino, the Italians have been subjected to the most violent counter-attacks by the Austrians.

A furious bombardment is going on all along the front, with the Italian guns pounding away at the mountain forts of the Austrians and the long range guns of the Austrians replying.

The ten forts crowning the heights of Mount Sabotina and Mount Podgora are being battered by the Italian howitzers. Already some of the trenches on the slopes of Podgora have been carried by the Italian forces.

Under terrific artillery fire Italian engineers are building more bridges across the Isonzo and Italian troops are being moved to the eastern bank to support the forces that are trying to encirele Gorizia. Near Plava there is boody hand to hand fighting in the trenches.

BREAK IS VERY NEAR

Rome Believes That Italy Will Soon Declare War Upon Turkey

Diplomatic relations between Italy and Turkey, already strained, are becoming more tense because of the reported refusal of the Turkish authorities to permit Italian subjects to leave the Ottoman empire. It is believed at Rome that a declaration of war by Italy in the near future is highly probable.

Although Italy is at war with Austria, there has been no declaration of hostilities against either Germany or Turkey, the allies of Italy's antagonist. It has been the belief in diplomatic circles that each side is waiting for the other to take the initiative and thus assume the responsibility for extending the scope of conflict.

BUY UP AMERICAN COTTON

How British Government Might Remove Serious Cause of Friction

Advocating the purchase by the British government from southern cotton exchanges of the amount of cotton that would normally have gone to Germany and Austria-Hungary at an outlay of $150,000,000, and also of American cotton exports to Holland, Denmark, Norway, Sweden and Switzerland representing another $25,000,000, at the same time declaring cotton absolute contraband, the London Times declares that such a solution would be acceptable in the United States and would remove a serious cause of friction.

It must be understood, however, The Times adds, that the cotton so purchased must be stored by the British government until the end of the war. The south, it says, would inevitably insist on this stipulation, because if the cotton were resold to British spinners the southern planters would gain nothing. It must be additional to and not instead of orders placed in the southern states by British manufacturers.

392,000 PENNIES FOR 78,400 NICKELS

Teller's Alleged Theft of $3920 of Government Funds

New York, July 24.—William B. Tanner, chief paying teller in the minor coin division in the United States sub-treasury in this city, was arrested at Bradley Beach, N. J., charged with embezzlement of $3920 of government funds confided to his care.

According to the federal authorities, Tanner, who has been fifteen years at the sub-treasury, substituted pennies for nickels in bags of coins in storage and held in reserve in his division. He had charge of the filling of the bags.

In all 392,000 pennies had been substituted for 78,400 nickels. Each bag should have had in it $200 in 5-cent pieces. Each bag actually had in it $50 in coppers.

ATTACK ON DEPUTIES

Police Reserves Are Called Out to Subdue Rioters at Bayonne

Bayonne, N. J., July 24.—A fresh outbreak disturbed the comparative quiet which prevailed after the cessation of the rioting of the previous three days, when three were killed and scores injured.

It occurred when Sheriff Kinkead led fifty deputies through the streets and was attacked by a crowd of strikers and sympathizers, necessitating a call for the police reserves.

Although the sheriff made an impassioned appeal to the crowd to disperse, they answered with showers of clubs and stones and were quieted only after priests and strike leaders advised them to go to their homes.

The residents of precinct three, especially those living on Allen street are congratulating themselves that the N. Y., N. H., & H. officials have at last decided to remove a long standing cause of complaint. The unloading of freight cars from the siding on Allen street where teams were obliged to stand on the street, owing to there being no yard room, has for a long time been a source of annoyance to all people obliged to use this street. The railroad officials are putting in a siding on the other side of the depot and have batter boards up for a new freight shed. The new siding will be used exclusively for East Braintree freight and teams can load and unload on railroad property, thus avoiding blocking the street. The old tracks are to be used to hold cars billed to and from the Fore River Shipbuilding Co. which are shunted by the Co's own engine to the plant at Quincy.

CHAPTER XI.

The Zweibund.

On his second visit to the sick man lodged in the padded luxuries of one of the guest rooms at Mereside, made on the morning following the Grierson home-coming, Doctor Farnham found the hospital status established, a good-natured Swede installed as nurse, the bells muffled and Miss Margery playing the part of sister superior and dressing it, from the dainty, felt-soled slippers to the smooth banding of her hair.

An hour later, however, it was the Margery of the Wahaska renaissance, joyously clad and radiant, who was holding the reins over a big English trap horse, parading down Main street and smiling greetings to everybody.

By one of the chances which he was willing to call fortunate, Edward Raymer was at the curb to help her down from her high seat in the trap when she pulled the big horse to a stand in front of her father's bank.

"I'm the luckiest man in Red Earth county; I was just wondering when I should get in line to tell you how glad we are to have you back," he said, with his eyes shining.

"Are you, really? You are not half as glad as I am to be back. There is no place like home, you know."

"There isn't, and there oughtn't to be," was his quick response. "I've been hoping you'd come to look upon Wahaska as your home, and now I know you do."

"Why shouldn't I?" she laughed, and she was reaching for a paper-wrapped package on the trap seat when he got it for her.

"You are going somewhere?—may I carry it for you?" he asked; but she shook her head and took it from him.

"Only into the bank," she explained; and she was beginning to tell him he must come to Mereside when the sick-man episode obtruded itself, and the invitation was broken in the midst, very prettily, very effectively.

"I know," Raymer said, in instant sympathy. "You have your hands full just now. Will you let me say that it's the finest thing I ever heard of—your taking that poor fellow home and caring for him?"

Gertrude Raymer had once said in her brother's hearing that Miss Grierson's color would be charming if it were only natural. Looking into Miss Grierson's eyes Raymer saw the refutation of the slander in the suffusing wave of generous embarrassment deepening in warm tints on the perfect neck and cheek.

"Oh, dear me!" she said in pathetic protest; "is it all over town so soon? I'm afraid we are still dreadfully 'country' in Wahaska, Mr. Raymer. Please cut it down to the bare, commonplace facts whenever you have a chance, won't you? The poor man was sick and nobody knew him, and somebody had to take care of him."

Like the doctor, Raymer asked the inevitable question, "Who is he, Miss Margery?" and, like the doctor again, he received the same answer. "I haven't the smallest notion of an idea. But that doesn't make the slightest difference," she went on. "He is a fellow human being, sick and helpless. That ought to be enough for any of us to know."

Raymer stood watching her as she tripped lightly into the bank, and when he went to catch his car the conservative minority had lost whatever countenance or support he had ever given it.

True to her latest characterization of herself, Margery had a nod and a pleasant smile for the young men behind the brass grilles as she passed on her way to the president's room in the rear. She found her father at his desk, thoughtfully munching the unburned half of one of the huge cigars, and named her errand.

"I want a safety-deposit box big enough to hold this," she said briefly, exhibiting the paper-wrapped packet.

Jasper Grierson, deeply immersed in a matter of business to which he had given the better part of the forenoon, replied without looking up: "Go and tell Murray; he'll fix you out."

As on any other business day, President Grierson was solidly planted in his heavy armchair before a desk well littered with work. He nodded absently to his daughter as she returned, and knowing that the nod meant that he would come to the surface of things—her surface—when he could, she turned aside to the window and waited.

Though she had seen him develop day by day in less than three of the thirty-odd years of his western exile, her father offered a constant succession of surprises to her. When she opened the door to retrospection, which was not often, she remembered that the man who had stumbled upon the rich quartz vein in Yellow Dog Gulch could scarcely sign his name legibly to the paper recording his claim; that in those days there was no prophecy of the ambitious present in the man, half drunkard and half outlaw, whose name in the Yellow Dog district had been a synonym for—but these were unpleasant memories, and Margery rarely indulged them.

Just now she put them aside by turning her back to the window and taking credit for the tasteful and luxurious appointments of the private office, with its soft-piled rug and heavy mahogany furnishings. Her father was careless of such things; totally indifferent to them in business hours; but she saw to it that his surroundings kept pace with the march of prosperity. Here in Wahaska, as elsewhere, a little judicious display counted for much, even if there were a few bigoted persons who affected to despise it.

"That's Where You Are Mistaken," She Objected Coolly.

She was in the midst of a meditated attack upon the steamship lithographs on the walls—sole remaining landmarks of the ante-Grierson period—when her father wheeled in his pivot chair and questioned her with a lift of his shaggy eyebrows.

"Want to see me, Madgie?"

"Just a moment." She crossed the room and stood at the end of the big desk. He reached mechanically for his checkbook, but she smiled and stopped him. "No; it isn't money this time; it's something that money can't buy. I met Mr. Edward Raymer at the front door a few minutes ago; does he have an account with you?"

Jasper Grierson's laugh was grimly contemptuous.

"The bank isn't making anything out of him. The shoe is on the other foot."

"What is the matter? Isn't he making money with his plant?"

"Oh, yes; his business is good enough. But he's like all the other young fools, nowadays; he ain't content to bet on a sure thing and grow with his capital. He wants to widen out and build and put in new machinery and cut a bigger dash generally. Thinks he's been too slow and sure."

"Are you going to stake him?" Margery waged relentless war with her birthright inclination to lapse into the speech of the mining camps, but she stumbled now and then in talking to her father.

"I don't know; I guess not. Somehow, I've never had much use for him."

"Why haven't you any use for him?"

"Oh, I don't know—because, until just lately he has never seemed to have much use for me, I guess. It's a stand-off, so far as likings go. I offered to reincorporate his outfit for him six months ago, and told him I'd take fifty-one per cent of the reorganization stock myself; but he wouldn't talk about it. Said what little he had was his own, and he proposed to keep it."

"But now he is willing to let you help him?"

"Not much; he don't look at it in that light. He wants to borrow money from the bank and put up the stock of his close corporation as collateral. It's safe enough, but I don't believe I'll do it."

The chatelaine of Mereside came abruptly to the point.

"I want you to do it," she said, decisively.

"The devil you do!" Then, with the dry, door-hinge chuckle: "What's in the wind now?"

"I do want you to put him under obligations to you—the heavier the better. His mother and sister have gone out of their way to snub me, and I want to play even."

Grierson wagged his huge head, and this time the chuckle grew to a guffaw.

"He ain't the man to go to his womenfolks when he gets into hot water. He'll keep it to himself; and they'll go on bluffing you, same as ever."

Miss Grierson pulled on her gauntlets and made ready to go, leisurely, as befitted her pose.

"That is where you are mistaken," she objected, coolly. "It isn't very often I can give you a business tip, but this is one of the times when I can. When John Raymer died, he left an undivided half of his estate to his wife, the other half to be shared equally by the children. At the present moment every dollar the entire family has is invested in the iron plant. You will let Mr. Raymer get himself into hot water, as you call it, and then, when I say the word, you'll reach in and pull him out."

When she was gone, the president selected another of the overgrown cigars from a box in the desk drawer, lighted it, and tilted back in the big armchair to envelop himself in a cloud of smoke. It was his single expensive habit—the never-empty box of Brobdingnagian cigars in the drawer—and the indulgence helped him to push the Yellow-Dog period into a remoter past.

After a time the smoke cloud became articulate, rumbling forth chucklings and Elizabethan oaths, mingling with musings idiomatic and profane. "By gad, I believe she thought she was fooling me—I do, for a fact! But it's too thin. Of course, she wants to make the women kowtow, but that ain't all there is to it—not by a jugful. But it's all right; she plays her own hand, and she's bully good and able to play it. If she's after Raymer's scalp, he might as well get ready to wear a wig, right now. I'll back her to win, every time."

Accordingly, when Mr. Edward Raymer came out of the president's room at the Farmers' and Merchants' bank the following morning, he was treading upon air. For in his mind's eye there was a fair picture of a great and successful industry to be built upon the substantial extension of credit promised by the capitalist whose presence chamber he had just quitted.

ENGINE PLUNGES IN BLACKS CREEK

Several Men Thrown Into Water When Bank Gives Way

NOT SERIOUSLY INJURED

A small engine and a string of small freight cars rode into the waters of Black's creek Friday afternoon on top of tons of dirt which slid away from the side of the hill on Mt. Wollaston farms, near the mouth of the creek. Several men who were on the engine and cars were thrown into the water, a few feet from shore. They were bruised and thoroughly drenched The engine and cars were used in the construction of the extension of the Wollaston boulevard and were on tracks running along the top of an embankment.

The slide took place without warning All available men were rushed to the scene and immediately set to work getting out engine and cars. The latter were drawn out without difficulty. The engine was buried in the bottom of the creek today, partly covered with water. It is expected it will be pulled back to shore within a few hours.

CORNERS DIAMONDS.

London, June 26: (By Mail)—The United States will have a corner on diamonds for years to come.

Information at hand in the British foreign office today shows that America is practically the only country in the world buying diamonds and the American appetite for them is amazing. Hundreds of thousands of sparklers are being exported from Germany to America via Holland. When war broke out a Berlin syndicate which bought the bulk of West African diamonds had in stock a million and a half carats. These have been cut at low rates by craftsmen in Belgium and disposed of almost wholly to the United States.

Less than a year ago the syndicate that controls the output of the De Beers and Jagersfontein African miners had a stock of four million carats. Since war was declared the mines have been idle but the syndicate has not. It has exported the greater part of its stock to the United States..

Practically all diamond mines in Africa have closed down, their engineering staffs have been disabled and their native laborers discharged.

Experts agree that there will be a marked shortage of diamonds after the war except in America.

KING ALBERT HIT HARD.

Havre, France, June 26: (By Mail)—The weight of war is telling heavily on King Albert of Belgium, according to those in the councils of the monarch. The King is more and more becoming a man of silence as the heavy days pass on, it is said.

At a recent meeting of his army councillors, the King is reported to have spoken but three phrases. Once he said "I agree;" once "I do not agree;" and lastly he expressed in briefest form an idea of his own.

The King is ever on the move visiting his army or superintending war moves. He seldom sees his family.

L. O. MOOSE MARCH.

San Francisco, July 24—"Howdy Pap" echoed through Francisco when approximately 15,000 members of the Loyal Order of Moose marched through the main streets to the Panama Pacific Exposition grounds where "Moose Day" was celebrated. The annual convention of the organization, held at San Diego, was cut short in order to allow the delegates to visit the Exposition.

SWEDISH LUTHERAN CHURCH.

In the afternoon at 3.30 o'clock. the new chapel will be dedicated. Rev. J. E. A. Evert, vice president of the New England conference, will officiate. Address afterwards by other ministers. The public is cordially invited.

MAKARIA ENJOYS MOONLIGHT SAIL

"FITZ" TO RUN FOR GOVERNOR

John F. Fitzgerald, former mayor of Boston, will be a candidate for governor this fall on the Democratic ticket, according to information received from apparently authentic sources today by a Ledger reporter. A positive announcement is expected shortly after Gov. Walsh returns from Frisco.

It was learned from the same source that Edward Barry will again be a candidate for lieutenant governor, having decided not to oppose the governor who will undoubtedly be a candidate for renomination.

A wide split, which probably cannot be smoothed out for months, is said to have taken place between the Walsh and Fitzgerald forces. Fitzgerald is now summering at Hull.

Will Be Delivered To England At Close Of War

Formal Ceremonies Are Private

Two more of the submarines built at the Fore River shipyard for Great Britain were launched this morning within an hour of each other. The first was sent down the ways at 9.50 and the second at 10.40. The launchings were most successful. The boats will be delivered after the war.

TheH-16, the first to be launched, was christened by Miss Louise Stone. Her sister, Miss Genevieve Stone, was sponsor of H-17, the second craft to be launched. Both are the daughters of A. J. Stone of New London, Ct.

The ceremonies were private and only a few guests participated. Among them was Lawrence Y. Spear of New London, Ct., vice president of the Electric Boat Co., who was formerly attached to the local plant. He was accompanied by Mrs. Spear.

The sponsors on their arrival were presented with handsome bouquets of Killarney roses by Pres. Joseph W. Powell of the Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation. The bouquets were carried while they formally named the submarines. After the launchings the young women were presented with gold wrist watches, the gift of the builders. Pres. ## L. F. LAROSE WAS ONCE PASSENGER ON S. S. EASTLAND

Louis F. LaRose, supervisor of playgrounds, was a passenger on the Steamship "Eastland," which capsized Saturday, when a similar castrophe was barely averted.

LaRose was one of 2500 people on an excursion from Michigan city to Bar- Harbor, Chicago. The excursionists crowded aboard before the water ballast was all taken and as the ship begn to list began running from one side to the other, rocking the boat.

At one time, Mr. LaRose said, it was possible to sit on the edge of the second deck and be within six feet of the water. He said the trip was a severe tax on the nerves and hundreds were panic stricken. When Bar Harbor was reached the wharves were black with people, word having reached the city that the ship had rolled over and caused the drowning of hundreds.

Work also was begun on the Granite street end of the street and will be pushed through as rapidly as possible. Most of the poles on the easterly side of the street are iron poles, which will be used only for the purpose of holding the trolley span wires. There are some telephone and electric light poles at street junctions and these are being moved to the new sidewalk line. The contract of Simpson Company includes about 2000 square yards and also includes the granolithic walk to be built on part of the west side of the street.

Herbert S. Saunders of 83 Silver street, Boston, pleaded guilty to operating a machine at Milton without a license and was fined $25.

Gregos Gasgos was arrested Saturday night for violation of his probation. Last Monday he was fined $5 for selling popcorn from a pushcart on the Lord's day and was given three days to pay his fine. Neglecting to do it he was surrendered to the police. Today he paid his fine and $1 costs, all in silver.

Antonio Lamanuzzi, whose rooms at 124 Main street were raided Sunday, pleaded not guilty to the keeping and exposing liquor for sale. His case was continued to Wednesday.

BICYCLE THIEVES STILL AT WORK

ARMED WITH CARVING KNIFE

Two Men Fined For Assault On Woman

Fred Proocenikoo and William Sosnigvos were fined $25 this morning for assault on the wife of the man with whom they board on Main street. The men were arrested by a squad of police sent to the house Sunday evening when neighbors phoned for assistance.

When the police arrived they say one of the men had a large carving knife in his hand and was deliberating as to whether or not he would use it and that the second man was urging him to do some slashing. Various stories of the trouble were told through an interpreter. Sentences were suspended to Sept. 30.

JUMP FROM BURNING BOAT

Quincy Men Save Lives When Gasoline Explodes

A motor boat valued at $950 was destroyed in Quincy Bay Sunday evening when a 35 gallon tank of gasoline exploded. Lee Harris of Park square, Squantum and Leonard Ray of Atlantic escaped by jumping overboard.

The boat was owned by Harris and was headed for the harbor. While sailing between Moon and Thompson Islands signs of engine trouble developed. Ray took off the cover and as he did so the carbureter back fired and gasoline drippings took fire.

Both men went overboard and swam away from the boat. They were some distance from the craft when the explosion took place. The heavy sound and the brilliant illumination attracted considerable attention and several yachts and motor boats went to the rescue. The men were picked up by the crew of a motor boat and brought ashore.

WARFARE AKIN TO CHRISTIANITY

At the twilight service of the Water street Presbyterian church Sunday evening the pastor, Rev. Clarence E. Campbell, took for his subject "An Heroic Religion" and gave a most powerful discourse to a large number of listeners. He said in part:

"In Europe when a soldier distinguishes himself on the field of tions this badge is usually in the form upon him. Among the Christian nations this badge is usually in the form of a cross. Yet the same cross is the distinctive and universal emblem of the Christian religion. How is it that this of all emblems should be used in the cruel business of war? Shall we find at last that there exists a fundamental kinship between the two?

"Warfare as a means by which men give rein to their passions of greed and brutality was and must ever be opposed to the spirit of Christ. But warfare as a struggle which summons men to the supreme gift of their very selves in unselfish devotion has that which partakes of religion at its best. When men have had a part in conflict and self sacrifice they have drunk from the cup of immortality. The love of heroic endeavor cannot be permanently denied. If its fulfillment cannot be found in peace it will be sought in war.

"And right here is Christianity's opportunity. War is the perversion of the instinct for struggle and conflict. That instinct may be turned into legitimate channels. Christianity can do this by offering a field of conflict greater than any that has been recorded on the red page of history. It is the field of spiritual warfare. Engaged upon it men will find a higher and more strenuous use for what martial qualities they may possess than any physical contest with one another. 'Even he that mastereth his own spirit is greater than he that captureth a city.'"

GOT IN WAY OF AUTO CHEMICAL

Ralph Keith Fined $20 For Interfering With Fire Auto

BILLINGS BRINGS CHARGE

Ralph Keith of Wollaston park was fined $20 by Judge Avery this morning on a charge of interfering with the fire department. Chief Faxon Billings, Capt. Al Meade and Chauffeur Carroll of the fire department were the witnesses.

Capt. Meade said Keith ran in front of the auto chemical on several runs on the morning of July 5th, and that he warned him not to repeat the performance. Despite the warning, according to Capt. Meade, Keith ran in front of the auto chemical when it was being driven to Squantum at a speed of 40 miles an hour, requiring Chauffeur Carroll to proceed with great caution through the dust raised by the Keith machine and at less speed than was in keeping with prompt response to alarms. Keith pleaded not guilty to the charge but was declared guilty.

Chief Billings, who brought the complaint, testified he had observed Keith operating his machine and Chauffeur Carroll said the dust from the Keith machine filled his eyes and made operating difficult.

The complaint against Keith is the first step taken by Chief Billings to break up the practice of younger autoists of the city who chase the fire department on runs and fail to give the department the right of way.

UNKNOWN MEN FIRE AT W. QUINCY HOME

Mystery Surrounds Identity of S. Naclerio's Enemies

Third Fusilade Within This Month

For the third time within a month, the home of S. NacLerio at 290 Liberty street, South Quincy, was peppered with shot on Sunday evening. The fusilade opened about 9.30 and nearly a dozen shots were fired, the slugs biting the wood of the house and barn and many of them burying themselves in the structure.

All of the NacLerio family was home when the attack started at 10.15. They phoned police headquarters and a squad of officers were sent to the scene. The officers spread out over the adjacent territory but were unable to apprehend anyone. The shots are thought to have been fired from the tracks on the Granite branch which runs between Braintree and West Quincy stations, passing the NacLerio property a short distance away.

The NacLerios have lived in South Quincy for some years. The father carries on a milk business and the sons own two auto trucks and do heavy truck work throughout the city. As far as is known they have no enemies. Last month the house was shot up in similar fashion and again on Saturday night. The reports of the firing on those nights came from practically the same place as those of Sunday night. Some years ago the father was beaten and robbed while he was in the barn.

The police are of the opinion that the fusilade was an attempt to kill three dogs, owned by the NacLerios.

POLICE OFFICER CHASES THIEVES

Men Dropped Loot And Ran As He Approached

Two men carrying suspicious looking bundles were discovered on Cottage street at three o'clock Sunday morning by Patrolman Corbett. As he approached they dropped their bundles and ran across to the rear of the Music hall block. One of the men was covered with flour. The officer made a search but the men had disappeared.

He phoned police headquarters and Sergt. Johnson sent Officers Whelan and Olson to the scene. They joined in the search but could not locate the men.

Returning to Cottage street the officers found the bundles were three bags of flour and a burlap bag containing about 150 pounds of lump sugar. One of the flour bags had burst and officer Olson followed the trail down Cottage and Foster streets to the trolley freight depot. He found on examination that a window had been forced in the rear and that the men had opened the large folding doors in the back to get away.

COURT RESENTS ACTION OF ATTY. FLYE OF HOLBROOK

Pasquale Mariano and his wife Marianna were charged with violations of the liquor law at Holbrook in the district court Saturday. The wife was unable to be present on account of illness.

On Thursday Mariano was in court and was fined $100 and sentenced to three months in the House of Correction on a liquor charge. The jail sentence was suspended to Sept. 30. During the testimony it was brought out that Saturday's charges against the Mariano family were alleged to have been the result of acts committed within the time covered by the complaint on which Mariano was sentenced Thursday, and it was claimed by Atty. J. J. McAnarney, counsel for the defense, that the new complaints were made on Thursday.

Judge Avery said he thought he should have been consulted in the matter of a new complaint instead of having warrants granted by a magistrate in Holbrook, and said the court resented the action. Atty. Louis Flye of Holbrook said he was responsible for the new complaints and that the people of Holbrook had the impression that the probation system was not successful inasmuch as Mariano had been before the court four times on a similar offense.

Judge Avery said he understood Chief Crooker to say Thursday that Mariano had no record and that was why the jail sentence was suspended. Counsel McAnarney asked for a continuance to prepare his case. Judge Avery said he would hear part of the government evidence and then grant the continuance if he thought it necessary. Th case was finally put over to next month.

Miss Emma and Lora Biganess of Goddard street have returned from an enjoyable vacation spent at Alton Bay, N. H.

BABY SLEEPING NEAR COAL BIN

Meanwhile Police Stop Fight Overhead

A squad of police were rushed to 19 Watson road Sunday morning to quell a fight. They arrested three men,, all said to be in an exhausted condition and bearing marks of the affray.

The men gave their names as John J. Monahan, Peter E. Connor and Patrick Corkery. All were charged with drunkenness. Acting Chief McKay headed the police squad which included Sergt. Larkin and Officers Cahill and Canavan.

The police in making an examination of the premises found a baby asleep in a cradle in the cellar. They say the place was damp, lacked ventilation and was unhealthy. Acting Chief McKay ordered the baby and cradle taken upstairs. The mother said the infant was taken down cellar so as to sleep undisturbed.

At the morning service at 10.30 at the Swedish M. E. church Sunday the sermon was by Rev. Albert Hallen, Ph. D., of Malden. Holy Communion was observed and new members were admitted. Appropriate music was rendered by the choir.

TODAY'S ODDEST STORY.

St. Paul, Minn., July 26:—When the city council was contemplating licenses for dogs, a women wrote asking that cats be also placed under the bann. The reason she assigned was that cats in her neighborhood were so numerous that they ate up all the birds who could not in turn eat up all the worms which were eating up the leaves of the beautiful trees. The council declined to listen to her plea.

EFFICIENCY IN THE PULPIT.

Modern life has set for every profession a higher standard of efficiency than was required in ages past. In no profession is this fact more strikingly apparent than in the ministry.

It is no longer sufficient that a minister shall be a good man. It is just as essential as it ever was that he shall be strong spiritually but if he would be successful he must possess other qualities. The complexities of modern business and social life have placed heavy responsibilities upon the Christian Church and the church has not always been ready to meet them.

The quality of the sermon has become of greater importance than in the time of our forefathers, and it is just here that so many clergymen fail to attain the standard of the age. No one should contend for a moment that ability to be a good "pulpit orator" is the only requisite of the successful pastor. The work outside the church edifice is fully as important as the work within it, but ability to preach a strong sermon is an essential just the same.

Many clergymen sometimes appear to forget that they are preaching to laymen and that too many theological discussions and arguments fail of their purpose. A minister who expects to hold the interest of his congregation and win them to an adherence to Christ's teachings should not forget that he is living in the Twentieth Century.

Many clergymen, in the pulpit and outside, forget this important fact. They fail to preach in terms of the Twentieth Century and naturally fail to hold Twentieth Century congregations, which have less regard for the past and more for the present than any age in history.

Truth is universal and the teachings of Christ are not bounded by years or centuries. But this is not to say that His teachings are not to be applied to the present. They should draw their illustrations and illuminations from the present, to the end that the moral which they point should be understood by the present.

Recently we heard a sermon which was based upon a verse of the Bible filled with possibilities for a strong discourse, but it might just as well have been delivered in the 14th century so far as any application was made to the present day. It was spiritual but not convincing; it interpreted the text in theological terms but in no way pointed out how the lesson of that text could be turned to the solving of present day problems.

The age of today cannot be reached wholly through the heart: it must also be appealed to through the brain. The men and women of today must be shown the truth so clearly that they can not fail to recognize it. This presupposes that the man in the pulpit is not only "good" but able. This presupposes efficiency in the pulpit.

A TERRIBLE LESSON.

No thinking person has any sympathy with those who decry the present and cry plaintively for "the good old times." Anyone who has the faintest knowledge of history is well aware that the world is progressing. The government of today does infinitely more for the welfare of its people than the government of a hundred years ago. There is plenty of room for improvement, however. The Twentieth Century is a long way from being the millenium.

On way in which improvement could be made would be for states to take effective measures for the well being of its inhabitants before a huge calamity brought the need to their attention. Illinois doubtless will hasten to legislate to prevent another "Eastland" horror. The pity of it is that this tragedy could not itself have been averted. Of course, legislation of itself can accomplish nothing. Legislation forbade the over-crowding of the "Eastland," and yet it appears from present accounts that the "Eastland" was overcrowded. This means that those to whom the government had entrusted the enforcement of the law failed in their duty, but the government should not be made up of men who fail in their duty.

The responsibility for such a disaster, however, does not fall wholly upon the officials who were charged with enforcing the law: it falls also upon those who failed to obey the law. Governments, as we have insisted so many times, are no better and no worse than the people who make them. The tragedy of Saturday has a lesson for all of us: the need of obedience to the law. If it is a good law submission to it will prove its merit: if it is a bad law obedience to it will bring its revocation. The safety of states is built upon wise laws, enforced and obeyed.

THE NOTE TO GERMANY.

The history of the United States has brought forth several men of destiny to save the nation. No country has afforded more striking illustrations of the assertion that the need produce the man. George Washington was a man of destiny: the one man in all the world able to do just the work that had to be done. The man who made the United States a nation was brought forward by a great crisis in the history of a people. Lincoln, saviour of the nation, was also a man of destiny. In a smaller way Woodrow Wilson appears to be a man of destiny. With the United States facing a grave crisis the President appears to be just the man whom the task requires.

Statesman, student of history and of international law, master of the English language, he has the qualifications for meeting a terrible emergency. Much depended upon the character and quality of the diplomatic correspondence with Germany. Whether the result be an honorable war or an honorable peace the latest product of Woodrow Wilson's genius, the third note to Germany, will ever remain one of the greatest state papers in the history of the country.

Friendly in tone throughout, yet insisting in unequivocal language upon the rights of the United States as a neutral, the message to the Imperial German Government meets every requirement and expresses with marvellous conciseness the will of the American people as they face their destiny.

LETTERS FROM OUR READERS

CHECKING THE RABIES.

Editor of the Ledger:

The result from closing the public water troughs for horses in Boston has been a drop from 576 to 352 cases of glanders for the year, while outside the city the falling off was only 6 per cent.

I wish to correct the statement as to rabies at Quincy Point. One brown brindle Boston terrior had the rabies and was shot in his home. He had bitten no one, but had fought one dog and played with another while rabid. The bitten dog was killed by request of his owner. The other dog is in quarantine and cannot go on the street.

Rather than muzzle all dogs, which will not be enforced, I would request that citizens notify the police of any dogs seen on the street without the circular brass "Quincy tag." Then any stray dogs from out side can be gathered in and prevented from doin g damage and any dogs whose owners do not care enough about them to pay the license and allow them to roam the street when rabies is about, should have their dogs destroyed.

Five cases about Quincy point and one across the Point bridge is enough to cause some action towards eradicating the unlicensed, uncared for dogs. When you report, tell who keeps or harbors the dog so that the officers may find it easily.

Inspector of Animals.

HIDDEN ADVERTISING.

Speaking of the new law, which compels a sheriff when he sells a parcel of property to advertise it in a daily paper in the town or city where the property is located, the Malden News gives a concrete example of the need of such a law. "We recall," says the News, "once being interested in some property in Lynn that was to be sold by a sheriff. The sale was advertised in a paper in Newburyport and took place on the postoffice steps at Rowley at 7 A. M. Needless to say, we had our eye teeth cut and were on the spot when the sheriff and an interested party were there expecting no opposition to the sale. All of the places named were in Essex county and the sheriff was clearly within his legal rights, but his action was grossly unfair." There were victims of sheriff sales whose eye teeth were not cut and who needed some law that would protect their interests, and the Legislature has supplied the deficiency. Advertising that does not really advertise, because it is hidden as far as possible, which is used in foreclosure proceedings and divorce libels, needs the attention of lawmakers fully as much as the law above cited.—Exchange.

A YEAR OF THE GREAT WAR BY UNITED PRESS EXPERTS

This is a series of stories by United Press staff correspondents in Europe, summing up the first year of the European War. The series will end on Friday, July 30, and will be followed on Saturday, July 31, by a General Summary of the war to date, written by J. W. T. Mason, writer of the daily wire feature, "What the War Moves Mean."

AS SEEN IN ENGLAND.

by
ED. L. KEEN
United Press Staff Correspondent.

(First Story.)

London, July 26:—England's greatest victory in this year-old war was won before the war started.

Forty or fifty years from now—Germans willing—when the British desire to honor the heroes of the Great War, they doubtless will erect imposing statues of Sir John French, Sir Douglas Haig, Sir Ian Hamilton, Sir John Jellicoe, Sir Frederick Sturdee and Admiral John de Robeck. They may even include Lord Kitchener, although if a popular vote were taken at the present time it is hardly likely the verdict in Kitchener's favor would be unanimous.

But if the Eiglish nation should fail to recognize in this distribution of awards a certain blond, blue-eyed young statesman of dandified mien and lisping voice who by the fortunes of politics happened to be the First Lord of the Admiralty in the summer of 1914 it will demonstrate that other forms of government besides republics are ungrateful.

"Brittania rules the wares" today because of Winston Churchill. To his foresight, imagination and nerve is due the fact that when the War Lord threw down his gauntlet, the British fleet was READY. England's command of the seas was assured before Kaiser Wilhelm began scattering war declarations through the chancelleries of Europe.

Perhaps Churchill KNEW. Anyhow, most of his colleagues in the Cabinet didn't believe him. He acted in spite of them. His resignation lay on the table, to be taken up if events should prove that he was wrong.

Early in July the Grand Fleet had assembled off the south coast of England for its annual play at war. The maneuvers followed their usual course and under all the rules, the fleet should have been scattered a week before July 28, the day Austria declared war against Servia. The next day—three days before Germany declared war against Russia, five days before she declared war against France and nearly a week before England officially entered the fray—Churchill converted the prolonged maneuvers into the real thing. On the night of July 29, there was flashed through newspaper offices of London the brief announcement, "The British fleet has left Portland under sealed orders." Where it went, the writer didn't know then, he doesn't know now—and if he did, he wouldn't dare tell. It isn't necessary to know. The results are sufficient. The main fleet kept together, with superior force ready to meet the Germans should they come out without previously notifying Great Britain of their intention, with scouts thrown out toward the German coast to watch for them, and patrols to guard the coast of England.

There may be some doubt about England's assistance to the Allies upon the land. There can be no question of her services upon the water. Her losses have been heavy both in ships and men but not commensurate with the advantages gained for her Allies as well as herself by remaining "mistress of the seas." Beside bottling up the German Grand Fleet—the one outstanding achievement of the entire war—England speedily swept the German mercantile marine from the oceans, destroyed von Spee's roving squadron, put out of business the German commerce raiders, and provided safe convoy, not only to her own troops and their supplies across the channel, but to millions of dollars worth of arms and ammunition for both her Allies and herself across the Atlantic. Germany's war of attrition, conducted by means of submarines, can never overcome these results. And it is not detracting from the praise due Admiral Sturdee and his men for their wonderful work in hunting down and defeating von Spee off the Falkland Islands to say that it was Churchill who made this feat possible.

There has been a good deal of criticism of the British navy because early in the war it failed to catch the German East Coast Raiders, and in more recent months adequately to protect merchant shipping against submarine attacks. But it should be borne in mind that the one big job of the Admiralty is to see that the Grand Fleet is kept intact and ready to meet the German fleet when it comes out in a body—if it ever does.

The year did not pass without its Admiralty scandal—an ugly blot on an otherwise creditable page. In a pique Admiral Lord Fisher deserted his post as Frst Sea Lord. Rather than disrupt the navy—as he feared—Churchill agreed to step out. The Prime Minister picked Balfour as his successor; but Fisher didn't like Balfour any more than he did Churchill and refused to serve under him. What Asquith had been willing to overlook as temperament, he couldn't forgive when it became insubordination. So Fisher was replaced by Admiral Sir Henry Jackson.

Churchill, the man who defeated the German fleet before it could lift anchor is still in the Cabinet. The nation couldn't afford to lose a man of his ginger. His job is "Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster," which has to do with the collection of rents or something of that sort—but only for the moment.

AS SEEN IN GERMANY.

by
CARL W. ACKERMAN
United Press Staff Correspondent.

First Story.)

Berlin, July 26:—Germany looks back upon her accomplishments of the first year of the war with satisfaction. The Germans believe the events of the past twelve months have demonstrated to the world that the Teutons are the mightiest race of all history. No other country could have withstood the combination of world powers which Germany has kept at bay since last August, declare the Germans, and no other country has ever so deeply stirred the imagination of the world.

Germany has won her claim to a place in the sun. The German Empire has added brilliant chapters to the history of Teutonic might begun under the Hohenzollerns of the Kingdom of Prussia. The Kaiser himself has earned for himself the title of William the Great, which posterity surely will bestow upon him. These are the dominant beliefs of the German people at the close of the first year of the war.

Germany has shown up the world in all its littlenesses, and all its boastings of false greatness. Only the Germans themselves have withstood the test of blood and iron for only the Germans have gained victories during the past fateful twelve months. Germany believes she has changed the whole future course of history. German influence upon the future of civilization for generations to come will be far beyond the influence of any other nation. Germany will not dominate the world by her armed might but by her virtues which have given to her a greater capacity for organization and discipline than all the rest of Europe combined possesses.

When the Germans look back to last August and recall the threats that then were being made against them and the penalties that were imposed by England, France and Prussia in advance of the trial by battle, the nation laughs. The world didn't understand Germany last summer. It is beginning to learn now that the Hohenzollern Empire has progressed during the years since the Franco-Prussian war in ways unsuspected by the rest of mankind. There is nothing in the German of today that wasn't put there by the discipline and study that the world knows under the name of Teutonic Kultur.

The increasing respect paid to German Kultur is not one of the least victories the Germans declare they have won for themselves during the past year. Nothing came as a greater shock to the Germans last year than the way in which their Kultur was everywhere derided. The comments passed upon Germany for her strong belief in her own destiny, as represented by her Kultur caused more resentment than anything else that happened in the early days of the war. The German indignation at last changed to contempt as the idea grew that the world laughed at Teutonic Kultur because the world had been left so far behind by German progress as to be unable to understand the German point of view.

This opinion has grown as Germany has shown her ability to thrive on misfortunes, and to rise to heights of attainment capable of meeting every new task imposed upon the nation. Each new victory on the battlefield and in departments of internal organization has been regarded as one more proof that the Germans really are the world's super-men. German Kultur is now firmly believed to have conquered all opposition and to have established its preeminence among adverse conditions such as never before have had to be encountered by the aspirations of any nation in all history.

Germany has shown no spirit in the past year of revolt against her form of government. Democracy and absolutism have been in combination against the German system of a mixture of the two. The result is declared by Germans to be such as to increase the faith of the Teutonic Empire in its own governmental methods. There probably will be a more equable division of electoral districts in Germany as the result of the war, and political parties may have their representation in the Reichstag seriously altered, but Germany is not going to duplicate the British brand of democracy.

The German people believe they owe their existence as a nation to the unprecedented capacity for organization and discipline they have developed during the past year. The feeling has developed that British democracy is incapable of reaching to the heights attained by Germany, and if the Germans had been governed according to the British system they would now be crushed and at the mercy of their foes. The world said during the early days of the war that Germany would emerge from the conflict democratized. The Germans are now laughing at that prediction. They declare the prophecy must be read backward, and democracy will have to Germanize isetlf if it is to keep pace with Germany's progress in the future.

Another early prophecy of Germany's enemies which is now being recalled with mirth was the one professing to see the certainty of a German revolution before the war had gone very long. As a matter of fact the Franco-Prussian war did not solidify the people of the Empire as much as this conflict has done. All Germany is now a unit and has been increasing in solidarity from the first shot. Prussia has not dominated the nation at all. The south German states have shown no jealousy of the powerful northern nucleus of the Empire. The Prussian regiments, in fact, have not been the prize ones of the war. Catholic Bavaria has been the staunchest supporter of the protestant Hohenzollern.

AS SEEN IN FRANCE.

by
WILLIAM PHILIP SIMMS.
United Press Staff Correspondent.
(First Story.)

Paris, July 26:—"The great world-war is one year old this week: What has France accomplished?"

I put this question to M. Jean Cruppi, ex-Minister of Foreign Affairs, member of the Chamber of Deputies and of the Foreign Relations Commission, a man physically not very unlike Theodore Roosevelt. He replied:

"France accomplished the defeat of the Germans in the Battle of the Marne; she stopped the German drive for Calais and the sea; she has kept Germany nailed to the spot for ten long months, steadily reducing her by attrition; she has done many other big things but the greatest of all was the dropping of internal differences, her unification of all classes with one great, fixed purpose in view: Victory."

"Yes," he continued earnestly, "our word 'union' means something more than the harmony of our people; there is something of the sacred in it. This sacred union will last. France is as one man with one idea: final success, cost what it may! The war, no doubt, will be long but the courage and patience of our people will be equal to the task of seeing it through.

"In short perhaps the greatest accomplishment to France's credit in the last twelve months is that she has found herself."

To appreciate fully M. Cruppi's words one has but to glance back at the France of the years just preceding the war; France, the antithesis of Germany where collectivity is the national passion; France, the nation of individual workers and thinkers where no two people could be expected to agree on any subject.

In the Chamber of Deputies there are a score or more parties instead of two or three as is the case in the United tSates. The Dreyfus affair split the nation inte two hostile camps and each camp into others with varying opinions. The Caillaux case to some extent did the same thing.

All manner of pessimistic talk was heard on cafe terraces and even in drawing rooms. A sad fate was in store for the land. Surely a revolution was coming. Another restoration was on the way, some said, while others declared a second Commune could not be averted. Treason, it seemed, was on all sides and in high places; among political leaders, so it was intimated, one was as bad as another, or worse if this were possible which it was not. The theatre gave the impression that even French home life was rotten.

The things one saw and heard in Paris gave one a rather gloomy feeling—that is if he believed all he saw and heard. One got the idea that patriotism was a lost emotion in France. Some said the revolutionaries had the upper hand among the Socialists and that the Socialists were running things. Labor, they said, was ruling Capital, and labor and Socialists, by their general strike doctrine, had their hands at the throat of the nation. The Gustave Herves were the real masters of the land, and Gustave Herve, you remember, editor of the Social War, spent a time in prison because he advocated a general strike, or rebellion, among the soldiers in the event Frence should go to war with another nation.

In short the world, too busy to go below the surface of things, considered France too highly educated. The individual had too much sense, too much imagination. He could talk but he could not fight. Should a foreign Power jump on France, Frenchmen would argue among themselves what ought to be done, each man advocating something different, while French troops would rebel and may be shoot down their officers.

Germany undoubtedly had some such idea. She expected to find France unprepared and French opinion divided, a great national schism developing the moment there was serious talk of war, or a revolution after the first success of French arms.

But what happened? The real France found herself. The nation's heart, so long hidden was revealed, and to the last man France became a unit. As M. Cruppi remarked, nothing has shaken this unity since.

The moment the General Mobilization Order was posted in France all classes rallied to the tri-color. Gustave Herve tried to enlist. Labor became a marvel of efficiency and patriotism. Antimilitarists boosted it considering it against what they are against—militarism. Socialsts became cabinet members, one now holding position similar to that of Lloyd George, Minister of Munitions, in England.

It was the "sacred union," one of France's greatest accomplishments.

Instead of a revolt in the ranks, the troops dried the tears of wives, sweethearts and mothers with laughter and went their way to war singing.

PROVES IDENTITY BY LOVE LETTERS

Police Suspicious, Men Caught In Raid Gave Fictitious Names

ROOM OVER 100 DEGREES

Love letters, souvenir postals, union cards and due books of organizations were submitted to Inspector Goodhue as proof of identification when he demanded the correct names of seven men who were in one of the apartments on the third floor of the block at 124 Main street when the liquor squad of the police took possession of the place on Sunday afternoon.

The men, according to the police, were drinking beer in the kitchen. All the windows were tightly closed and there was a red hot fire in the range. In a corner was an ice chest, containing plenty of ice and 60 bottles of beer.

The police differ as to the exact temperature of the room but believe it was over 100. After seizing the contents of the ice chest, an untapped keg of beer, a keg of beer with a bottling outfit attached to it and several dozen empty bottles, the officers took the names of those present.

Suspicious that all had given fictitious names, Inspector Goodhue said proof of identity must be at once submitted or all would be taken to police headquarters and detained as witnesses.

Such prospects did not appeal to the men and a hurried search of clothes followed. Mail and society membership cards were found and turned over to the police, proving they say that the men had attempted to hide their identity.

An Italian, who said he was Antonio Lemenus and "boss of the house" was placed under arrest. He was arraigned in court today on a charge of illegally keeping and exposing liquor for sale.

The police say that fresh bottles were put on the ice as soon as others were taken off, but they doubted that there was ice enough in the chest to stand the terrific heat for more than several hours. The inspector and Officers Cahill and Canavan lost no time in mounting the three flights of stairs leading to the apartments and their appearance was a complete surprise.

SPEEDY REPLY NOT EXPECTED

Full Text of Our Warning Not Published In Germany

THE QUESTION OF SUBMARINES

Berlin Press Has Impression That Way Is Open For Further Discussion—United States May Be Given Assurance She Demands In Confidential Communication

Berlin, July 26.—German newspapers refuse to regard the third American note as a final statement of the American position. The journals which usually reflect the views of the government are particularly strong in this opinion. The Lokal Anzeiger, which is believed to voice the views of the cabinet, declaring that the note leaves the entire submarine question open to further negotiations.

The full text of the American warning has not yet been published here, the government giving out only a summary to the newspapers. This was done so that there might not be a general outburst of protest on the part of the German people against abandoning the submarine campaign. The announcement of the sinking of British vessels by submarines cause great enthusiasm throughout the empire, and if there is to be any modification of the German methods of sea attack the changes probably will be carried out with the least publicity possible.

Several of the leading newspapers of Berlin accuse the United States of acting, not as a neutral, but as a friend of Great Britain. This view is taken by the Kreuz Zeitung, which declares that the note is partisan and that the United States has no right to demand safety for persons who travel on board vessels carrying ammunition. The Kreuz Zeitung expresses confidence that Germany will not in any circumstances abandon the submarine campaign.

There is little likelihood that Berlin will send a reply to Washington before September, and even if orders are given to the commanders of submarines to refrain from attacking unarmed merchant vessels the fact will not be made public.

It has been intimated several times recently and not denied that Germany might give the United States the assurances she has been demanding in a confidential communication to be held in secret until the war ends.

German officials, however, seem to incline to the belief that they can evade giving assurances to protect Americans indefinitely provided there is no further loss of American life. The statement in the American note that any further act in violation of American rights would be regarded by the United States as "deliberately unfriendly" has made a deep impression upon the kaiser's official advisers.

The foreign office finds comfort in those portions of the American note which appear to convey warning to Great Britain as well as to Germany. The state of feeling in Germany on this line is indicated by the prominence given to a Washington dispatch printed in the Vossische Zeitung, which says that President Wilson and Secretary Lansing are preparing to send a note to Great Britain on the subject of the freedom of the seas. The Vossische Zeitung refers to this note as the "American protest to England."

PLEASES BERNSTORFF

Freedom of Seas Clause Is Applicable to Great Britain

Ambassador von Bernstorff has left Washington to remain away from the capital until instructions from his government or new developments make it necessary for him to confer again with the United States officials.

Bernstorff viewed with satisfaction the statement in the American note that the United States would insist upon the freedom of the seas "from whatever quarter violated."

He hopes this will be accepted in Germany as a proof that the Washington government intends to insist upon its right with the same firmness toward Great Britain as elsewhere.

SQUANTUM HAS CABARET SHOW

Affair At Councilman Nelson's Home Big Success

The cabaret show given on the grounds and veranda of Councilman and Mrs. John R. Nelson's home Saturday evening for the benefit of the Squantum Women's club was a success in every way.

The grounds and veranda were beautifully illuminated by colored electric lights and Japanese lanterns. The approach to the grounds was through an arch that radiated like a rainbow. The guests were ushered to their tables by Mrs. Hiram A. Morse, president of the club, Mrs. John R. Nelson, Mrs. F. Cusumano, and Mrs. William A. Reed.

The tennis court and lawn adjoining made an ideal place for the affair and the attractive evening gowns worn by the women under the gay colored lights made a scene not soon forgotten.

The tables were spread with white linen covers with decorations of cut flowers. An attractive menu card arranged by Hiram Morse was on each table and on a printed card were the choruses of the popular songs that were sung. The refreshments consisted of sandwiches of every kind, ice-cream and cake, coffee and tonics.

Misses Ethel Morse, Evelyn Reid, Dorothy Lancaster, Marjorie Woodhead, Helen Simpson, Helen Loughan, Mrs. Chester Young and Miss Rebecca Nelson and Bertha Booth were the servers and were attired in dainty white dresses with white tea aprons adorned with pink bows. Lace dancing caps topped off the costumes.

The program arranged and announced by Mrs. Charles Ramsdell consisted of songs by a professional cabaret singer who circled about the tables. Miss Jordine Davison of Atlantic, who has a sweet contralto voice, invited the audience to sing the choruses of her songs. Mr. Wilson of Cambridge, Ernest Johnson, Allston and Roy Johnson, all clever singers, made immediate hits with the audience. Roy Johnson impersonated Charlie Chaplin and sang "Charlie Chaplin's Feat." He was the hit of the evening. Miss Bertha Rund, 'cello, and Miss Louise Rund, violin, daughters of Dr. and Mrs. Rund, always favorites in Squantum, rendered several selections with piano accompaniment. George Nilsson and Miss Anderson did exhibition dancing and John Jepson, Jr., and Russell Rich sang well.

Mabel Gowing's orchestra of Boston were seated on the veranda where they later played for dancing that everybody enjoyed either by looking on or else as participants. The songs printed on the cards that the guests used were :"I Want to Go to Tokio" "Michigan", "Down Among the Sheltering Palms", "A Little Spark of Love", "If You Can't Get a Girl in the Summer Time, You Can't Get One at All"and "I'm Lonesome Melody."

The tables were arranged for parties of four, eight and ten guests. Among those reserving tables were: Mr. and Mrs. Hiram A. Morse, who had as their guests, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Ramsdell, Mr. and Mrs. Johnson; Mr. and Mrs. William A. Reed, Mr. and Mrs. F. Cusumano; Mr. and Mrs. John R. Nelson's party included Senator and Mrs. L. F. R. Langelier, Mr. and Mrs. James Thomas, Representative and Mrs. Sandberg Mr. and Mrs. Day and Mrs. Engdall of New York. Mr. and Mrs. Jepson's party included Postmaster Hammond and Miss Hammond, Mr. and Mrs. Orr and Mr. and Mrs. Leonard; Mr. and Mrs. James H. Loughan and members of their family; Mr. and Mrs. James Loughan had as their guests Misses Francis and Margaret Allen, the Misses Zottoli and Miss Mildred Hersey; Mr. and Mrs. James Foster and party; Mr. and Mrs. Bond and party, Mr. and Mrs. Golbranson and party; Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Harper and party; Mrs. Helen McGowan and her guests, Mr. and Mrs. Roy Baker of Rutland, Vt.; Mr. and Mrs. William N. Kenyon and Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Miss Ward and Mr. Ward; Mr. and Mrs. Woodhead and party; Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Purcell and party; Mr. and Mrs. Westlake and party; Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Carlson and party; Mr. and Mrs. William Donovan; Mr. and Mrs. Gatrell and Mr. and Mrs. Willis. John R. Richards's party included Mr. and Mrs. Richards, Mr. Flavin, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Allen, Miss Anna Allen, Mr and Mrs. Farquhar and Councilman Herbert G. Beeman.

LUTHERAN CHURCH HOLDS DEDICATION

Special Services Mark Completion of Its New Chapel

CONSTRUCTED BY MEMBERS

The formal dedication of the new chapel of the Swedish Lutheran church was held Sunday with special services in the morning and afternoon. The chapel stands on the north-east corner of the church, built into the main church and communicates with it by double folding doors 14 feet in width and 9 1-2 feet high. The foundation of the chapel, like that of the church is built on a solid ledge, and it required a great amount of blasting and hard work to get out the granite.

The granite taken from the ledge for the cellar was later finished and used for the walls of the chapel so that it corresponds with the main church.

The chapel is 34 by 58 feet and 24 feet high. The plans were made by William R. Lofgren, a member of the church, and the remainder of the work was done by Arthur Swanson, assisted by members of the church. On the first floor of the chapel is the main Sunday school room, 28 by 55 feet and 12 feet in height. There is also a kitchen in the new part, 18 by 10 feet. On the southerly side is a stairway leading to the second floor on which is located the women's parlor, assembly room and committee room. The windows are of cathedral glass and the church and chapel are lighted by bracolite electric lights.

The services of dedication actually began Thursday evening with a grand concert . Saturday there was a meeting of the Boston District Conference, at which many clergymen of the Swedish Lutheran faith attended, many remaining over for the dedicatory services Sunday.

The service Sunday morning was conducted by Rev. L. Hokenson, the pastor of the church, and Rev. C. F. Johanson, of Boston, who spoke to the Swedish people of Quincy in their native tongue 41 years ago.

Rev. L. W. Gullstrom of Norwood preached the dedicatory sermon, his subject being "The Wisdom of Building our Spiritual Tempie." There was special music by the choir of the church with solos by Fritz Swanson.

In the afternoon at 3.30 there was a distinct dedicatory service which was in charge of Rev. J. E. A. Evert of Manchester, N. H., vice president of the New England Conference of Swedish Lutheran churches. His subject was "The Peace of Christ."

Other addresses were made by Rev. Oscar Morem of Worcester, Rev. C. F. Johanson, of Boston, Rev. A. N. Benuada of Boston, Rev. L W. Gullstrom of Norwood, and Prof. Joseph L. Larson of Everett.

There were also special musical selections during the exercises by the church choir.

The original church society was organized in February 1889 with 37 members. The first pastor was Rev. Dr. Carl O. Young, then a senior at Augustina College, Rock Island, Ill. The first services were held in the chapel of Christ church, but two weeks after Dr. Young took charge Plumber's hall was hired and here regular services were held for nearly five years, or until the new church was built. Liberal gifts of money were made toward the new church by Charles Francis Adams, John Quincy Adams, Henry H. Faxon and Dr. William Everett, but great credit is also due to the members of the church.

At that time many of the male members were employed in the granite industry and every night after having done a hard day's work in the quarry they could be found at work on the ledge at the top of the hill getting out the blocks of granite for the cellar and later finishing these blocks which were used in constructing the outside walls of the church.

With the completion and occupation of the new church it grew rapidly and the need of additional room has long been felt. With the same spirit that prompted the men of the church to put their shoulders to the wheel when the first church was erected they went to work on the chapel, and now have the satisfaction of seeing their efforts crowned by the handsome chapel.

In July 1895 through the generosity of Henry H. Faxon a bell was placed on the church and later half the amount necessary to place a large organ in the church was raised, and the remainder was the gift of the Carnegie fund.

Much credit for the success of the church in Quincy is due to the efforts of Carl E. Carlson. The first meetings were held in his home, and it was due largely to his persistence that regular services were held in Quincy.

The different pastors who have ministered to the wants of the people of the church since Dr . Young, have been Rev. John T. Johnson, Rev. J. A. Eckman, Rev. John A. Bernhard, Rev. S. N. Elvin, and Rev. Leander Hokenson, the present pastor, who came here in 1912 and occupies the new pastorage which the society purchased on Cottage street.

WOLLASTON CONGREGATIONAL.

A large mid-summer audience gathered at the union service Sunday morning. Chas. H. Everett sang effecively "All ye that love the Lord" and played a flute solo. Rev. Dr. Sneath preached upon the subject "The Preeminence of Christ."

He spoke of the preeminence of Jesus in the realm of character, as a teacher of morals and religion, in the moulding influence of civilization and also in the affections of men. In the course of his remarks he referred to the questioning attitude of today with reference to the seeming failure of a Christian civilization. He affirmed that the war in Europe was the result of the false teaching from Kant down to Nietzsche, that life is a struggle in which the strongest survive and that force is the proper method to achieve the survival. Might makes right. After the was is over men will learn that righteousness and brotherhood are the noble principles by which civilization and nations develop and continue.

At the union young people's meeting in the evening Ray Cassidy of the Epworth league led the meeting with the suggestive topic. "Is it right to do away from home that which one would not do at home?"

At the midweek meeting on Thursday evening the topic will be "What we admire in the Life and Character of Paul." Dr. Sneath will lead the meeting.

DEATH OF CHILD.

ANTIS ISSUE STATEMENT.

Explain Their Point of View on Suffrage Indorsement.

Replying to a statement issued by officers of the State Federation of Women's Clubs, in which the declaration was made that the indorsement of the suffrage movement at the federation's recent annual meeting in Marion was a fair expression of opinion, a communication issued by Mrs. Bertrand E. Taylor, Miss Edith Melvin and Mrs. William Lowell Putnam.

They charge that the meeting was an effort of machine suffragists to capture at a master stroke the male vote in November by trying to make the men believe the majority of the women want to vote. They also characterize the meeting as being the best of arguments against woman suffrage.

The statement follows:

Four of the seven members of the council of the Massachusetts Federation of Women's Clubs have signed a circular letter regarding the recent annual meeting, held at Marion, which though it lacks the signatures of the three other members of the council, nevertheless requires an answer.

It is with great regret that we learn that we were misinformed with regard to the date on which the notice of the suffrage resolution was received by the clubs. We had understood that it was received on June 1, but after careful inquiry we learn that some of the clubs received the notice during the last week in May—some of them a few days earlier—and some not at all.

By the time this notice was received the clubs had held their last meetings for the year—the number of clubs which had not done so is so small as to be insignificant as far as the principle involved is concerned. The statement made in the circular, "The object of the federation as defined in the constitution, 'To secure more thorough acquaintance among Women's clubs of Massachusetts and to unify their work along educational, sociological and humanitarian lines,'" is entirely misleading, for Art. 3, Sec. 1 defines the kind of work to be undertaken as follows: "Any woman's club in Massachusetts which is regularly organized with constitution or by-laws with objects unsectarian and nonpartisan is eligible to membership in the Federation." It is moreover difficult according to their own limited quotation to see how they expect to "unify" the work of the Federation by introducing a subject about which the feeling ran so high that no "educational, sociological and humanitarian" work beyond the perfunctory reading of reports was given a moment's consideration at the annual meeting.

That the convention was made up of "accredited delegates" remains to be proved, for at least one delegate present and voting at the convention still has in her pocket her ticket as delegate not countersigned by the credentials committee and not asked for at the door.

The circular states that the "count on the resolution was taken on a rising vote and verified by the tellers in the usual way." The tellers disagreed in their count of the vote and a second count was made, but in the interval, owing to the lack of order kept by the presiding officer toward the close of the meeting, many of the members had left the hall immediately after being, as they supposed, counted against the resolution.. This second count is the one which was doubted by several delegates, among others an usher who had good reason to know it to be unfair—but though the request for a recount by one person is all that is required, and is never refused in any well-ordered body, the chairman ignored the request and closed the meeting.

It has been stated by a leading member of the executive board that the "agitation is on the part of outsiders who are not representative of the Federation." The principal speaker in opposition to the resolution was Mrs. Mulligan, the latest ex-president of the Federation.

Mrs. Mulligan not only spoke against it, but entered a formal protest "against this action being reported to the papers as an expression of the Massachusetts Federation of Women's Clubs—of 65,000 members." (We quote from the secretary's record.) The chairman's ruling about the vote could not affect the moral issue involved.

This meeting was an effort on the part of the machine suffragists to capture, at a master stroke, the male vote in November by trying to make men believe that the majority of women want to vote, but the meeting itself was the best argument against woman suffrage ever presented in this state. It was evident that the suffragists were afraid of the vote of the club women if they were fairly notified, just as they were afraid of the womens vote at the polls and killed the Drury bill which called for a referendum of the women as to their wishes in the matter. The attempt to befog the issue by calling this referendum a "straw vote" is the merest nonsense—the actuating motive in both cases was fear.

RECORD OF THE PAST

No Stronger Evidence Can Be Had In Quincy

Look well to their record. What they have done many times in years gone by is the best guarantee of future results. Anyone with a bad back; any reader suffering from urinary troubles, from kidney ills, should find comforting words in the following statement:

Richard W. Smith, painter, 14 Blake St., Wollaston, Mass., says: "I suffered from a painful back and kidney trouble for a long time. I was so stiff on damp and rainy mornings that it was some time before I got limbered up enough to dress myself. I had a dull, heavy pain through the small of my back. Two boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills fixed me up all right. I have used this medicine off and on since whenever I have needed a kidney tonic and it has never failed to put me in good shape."

OVER FOUR YEARS LATER, Mr. Smith added: "In my present work, painting, I find Doan's Kidney Pills to be just the medicine I need for keeping my kidneys in good working order."

Price 50c, at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mr. Smith has twice publicly recommended. Foster-Milburn Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

KNIGHT ALLOWS ONLY TWO HITS

Fore River Boys Capture Another Game

The Fore River base ball team held its lead in the Manufacturer's league Saturday by defeating the Norwood Press club at Norwood by a score of 4 to 0. Hitting in the pinches gave them the victory.

Gorman made the star play of the game when he handled a hard hit ball with his left hand, tossed it to his right hand and made a beautiful side throw to first base, retiring the runner.

Cain scored the first run. He reached on a single and stole second. The Norwood short stop in trying to head him off at third, after stopping Duggans hard grounder, threw over and Cain romped home.

Two more runs were scored when Gillis singled off the shins of the Norwood third baseman with the bases full and the last run was scored by Desmond who went home on a single by Knight after he had been sent to third on a double by Lefty Ford.

Knight was in fine form. He allowed but two hits and passed none. The score:

CHALLENGE CUP RACES ON AUGUST 23

Local interest in this year's series of races for the Quincy Yacht club challenge cup, is not keen for the reason that the Quincy club did not challenge for the cup this year. It was expected that Charles F. Adams would challenge for the cup in the name of the Quincy Yacht club with the Sprig, but later when Mr. Adams found that he was to sail the Reliance again this year he sold the Sprig to Richard de B. Boardman and Caleb Loring.

The Boston Yacht club, the present holder of the cup, has received four challenges this year and the series of races will be held beginning Monday, Aug. 23, probably off Marblehead. The challengers are the Corinthian, Eastern, Manchester and Wollaston clubs. The latter club will make a try for the trophy with F. E. M. South's Tern. The other three clubs have not announced the name of their challenger as yet. The defending yacht will probably be the Ellen, owned by C. P. Curtis. Ellens owned by Mr. Curtis have been the challenging or defending yachts in nearly all of the races for the cup.

This will be probably the last year in which sonder boats will be raced for the cup as it is expected that during the coming winter the deed of gift will be changed so as to permit other type of boats to race for the trophy.

The general opinion among those interested in the cup races is that sloops of the Class R, 20-raters would be the best type of boat for future cup races.

The children of the day school at the Swedish Methodist Episcopal church held an outing Saturday afternoon at the foot of River street. There was a large number of children in the party and they had a good time.

Q. Y. C. HOLDS CLUB RACES

Classes F and D participated in the race under the auspices of the Quincy Yacht club Saturday afternoon off the club house at Houghs Neck. There was a steady north-easterly breeze all the afternoon, enabling the yachts to carry full sail. The course was one of twelve miles. In class F, the Midget was an easy winner over the Bantam, finishing with a lead of three minutes.

In class D, it was the same old scrap between the Clara, Dartwell and Almira, Dolly III; Grayling and Iris In Saturday's race however the Clara had the best of it and finished with a lead of five seconds actual time and 1 minute 21 second corrected time. The Dolly III, won second position and the Almira third. Grayling, fourth Dartwell fifth and Iris sixth. The summary.

BANDIT IS CAPTURED

Man For Whom He Demanded Ransom Escapes While Abductor Sleeps

Idaho Falls, Ida., July 26.—Lon Dean, a sheep herder, who admits that he kidnapped E. A. Empey, was lodged in jail by cowboys. Dean, who was captured on Sheep mountain after Empey had escaped, is a slight man, 5 feet 4 inches tall.

Dean said he had worked for Empey five years ago. After abducting Empey at the point of a gun at his ranch he took his captive to a hut on Sheep mountain, five miles from the ranch.

Empey's young son was sent to notify the family that Empey would be killed unless a ransom of $6000 in gold was deposited at a designated spot. The ransom was raised and would have been paid had not Empey escaped while his captor was asleep.

Empey said he had suffered nothing from his week's captivity.

CHAPTER XII.

Loss and Gain.

Striving feebly as one who gathers up the shards and fragments after an explosion, Griswold remembered cloudily the supper of tasteless courses at the Hotel Chouteau. Afterward there were vague impressions, momentary breaches in the wall of inclosing darkness. In one of these intervals a woman had stood beside him, and he seemed to remember that she had put her cool hand on his forehead. When complete consciousness returned, the dream impression was still so sharply defined that he was not surprised to find her standing at his bedside.

Before he could frame any of the queries which came thronging to the door of the returned consciousness, she smiled and shook her head and forbade him.

Later in the day the doctor came; and when the professional requirements were satisfied, Griswold learned the bare facts of his succoring. It was characteristic of the Griswold of other days that the immense obligation under which the Griersons had placed him made him gasp and perspire afresh.

Griswold looked long and earnestly at the face of his professional adviser. It was a good face, clearly lined, benevolent, and, above all, trustworthy.

"Tell me one thing more, doctor, if you can. What was the motive? Was it just heavenly good-heartedness?—or—"

The doctor's smile was the least possible shade wintry.

"When you have lived a few years longer in this world of ours, you will not probe too deeply into motives; you will take the deed as the sufficient exponent of the prompting behind it. If I say so much, you will understand that I am not impugning Miss Grierson's motives. There are times when she is the good angel of everybody in sight, Mr.—"

The pause after the courtesy title was significant, and Griswold filled it promptly. "Griswold—Kenneth Griswold. Do you mean to say that you haven't known my name, doctor?"

"We have not. We took the Good Samaritan's privilege and ransacked your belongings—Miss Margery and I—thinking there might be relatives or friends who should be notified."

"And you found nothing?" queried the sick man, a cold fear gripping at his heart.

"Nothing but clothing and your toilet tools, a pistol, and a typewritten book manuscript bearing no signature."

Griswold turned his face away and shut his eyes. Once more his stake in the game of life was gone.

"There was another package of—of papers in one of the grips," he said, faintly; "quite a large package wrapped in brown paper."

"We found nothing but the manuscript. Could anyone else make use of the papers you speak of?"

Griswold was too feeble to prevaricate successfully.

"There was money in the package," he said, leaving the physician to infer what he pleased.

"Ah; then you were robbed. It's a pity we didn't know it at the time. It is pretty late to begin looking for the thief now, I'm afraid."

"Quite too late," said Griswold monotonously.

It was not until after the doctor had gone that Griswold was able to face the new misfortune with anything like a sober measure of equanimity. With or without money, he must relieve the Griersons of their self-assumed burden at the earliest possible moment.

This was the thought with which he sank into the first natural sleep of convalescence. But during the days which followed, Margery was able to modify it without dulling the keen edge of his obligation. What perfect hospitality could do was done, without ostentation, with the exact degree of spontaneity which made it appear as a service rendered to a kinsman. It was one of the gifts of the daughter of men to be able to ignore all the middle distances between an introduction and a friendship; and by the time Griswold was strong enough to let the big, gentle Swede plant him in a Morris chair in the sun-warmed bay window, the friendship was a fact accomplished.

"Do you know, you're the most wonderful person I have ever known?" he said to Margery, on the first of the sunning days when she had come to perch in the window seat opposite his chair. "Do you believe in destiny?"

She nodded brightly. "Sometimes I do; when it brings things out the way I want them to come out."

"I've often wondered," he went on musingly. "Think of it—somewhere back in the past you took the first step in the path which was to lead you to that late supper in the Chouteau. Somewhere in my past I took the first step in the crooked trail that was to lead me there."

"Well?" she encouraged.

"The paths crossed—and I am your poor debtor," he finished. "I can never hope to repay you and your father for what you have done."

"Oh, yes you can," she asserted lightly. "You can pass it along to the man farther down. Forget it, and tell me what you want to know about Wahaska."

"First, I'd like to know my doctor's name."

"The idea!" she exclaimed. "Hasn't there been anybody to introduce you? He is Wahaska's best-beloved 'Doctor Bertie;' otherwise Doctor Herbert C. Farnham."

"Doctor Farnham? — not Miss Char—" He bit the name in two in the middle, but the mischief was done.

"Yes; Charlotte's father," was the calm reply. Then: "Where did you meet Miss Farnham?"

"I haven't met her," he protested instantly; "she—she doesn't know me from Adam. But I have seen her, and I happened to learn her name and her home address."

"Oh," said the small fitter of deduction pegs; and afterward she talked, and made the convalescent talk, pointedly of other things.

This occurred in the forenoon of a pleasant day in May. In the afternoon of the same day Miss Grierson's trap was halted before the door of the temporary quarters of the Wahaska public library. Raymer saw the trap and crossed the street, remembering—what he would otherwise have forgotten—that his sister had asked him to get a book on orchids.

Miss Margery was in the reference room, wading absently through the newspaper files. She nodded brightly when Raymer entered—and was not in the least dust-blinded by the library card in his hand.

"You are just in time to help me," she told him. "Do you remember the story of that daring bank robbery in New Orleans a few weeks ago?—the one in which a man made the president draw a check and get it cashed for him?"

Raymer did remember it, chiefly because he had talked about it at the time with Jasper Grierson, and had wondered curiously how the president of the Farmers' and Merchants' would deport himself under like conditions.

"If you should meet the man face to face, would you recognize him from the description?" she flashed up at Raymer.

"Not in a thousand years," he confessed. "Would you?"

"No; not from the description," she admitted. Then she passed to a matter apparently quite irrelevant.

"Didn't I see Miss Farnham's return noticed in the Wahaskan the other day?"

With Charlotte's father a daily visitor at Mereside, it seemed incredible that Miss Grierson had not heard of the daughter's homecoming. But Raymer answered in good faith.

"They came up as far as St. Louis on one of the Anchor line—the Belle Julie—and even Miss Gilman admits that the accommodations were excellent."

She nodded absently and began to turn the leaves of the newspaper file. Raymer took it as his dismissal and went to the desk to get the orchid book. When he looked in again on his way to the street, Miss Grierson had gone, leaving the file of the Pioneer Press open on the reading desk. Almost involuntarily he glanced at the first-page headings, thrilling to a little shock of surprise when one of them proved to be the caption of another Associated Press dispatch giving a 20-line story of the capture and second escape of the Bayou State Security robber on the levee at St. Louis.

The reading of the bit of stale news impressed him curiously. Why had Miss Margery interested herself in the details of the New Orleans bank robbery? Why—with no apparent special reason—should she have remembered it at all—or, remembering it, have known where to look for the two newspaper references?

Raymer left the library speculating vaguely on the unaccountable tangents at which the feminine mind could now and then fly off from the well-defined circle of the conventionally usual. On rare occasions his mother or Gertrude did it, and he had long since learned the folly of trying to reduce the small problem to terms of known quantities masculine.

"Just the same, I'd like to know why, this time," he said to himself, as he crossed the street to the Manufacturers' club. "Miss Grierson isn't at all the person to do things without an object."

Easily Made Negligee of Crepe and Lace

Now that the filmiest of laces are made by wonderful machinery and are so plentiful and so cheap, every woman should indulge herself in a dainty negligee. If ever there lived a woman without a longing for this strictly feminine and most luxurious of belongings she must have been feebleminded, for every well-balanced daughter of Eve acknowledges their fascination.

The most enticing of negligees are made of crepe de chine or thin, supple silk, with laces and ribbons.

Color plays so important a part in the makeup of these garments that the fabric is the second consideration. All the beautiful and rich colors may be set down as available, and the more flowerlike the better. Also the more frilly and frivolous and altogether irresponsible the design, the better the negligee seems to fulfill its destiny—which is just to be pretty.

These house gowns are easy to make, as may be gathered from the very good example shown in the picture. A long, plaited skirt is set on to a short baby waist having elbow sleeves covered with rows of plaiting that are edged with narrow lace. A wide ribbon girdle, with a rosette bow at the front, is tacked over the joining of the waist and skirt.

A coatee of shadow lace, with draped sleeve, adds the final touch of daintiness and a new style feature at the same time. Light pink crepe and cream-white lace make as good a color combination as any, but one may consider becomingness and environment and choose whatever is most pleasing.

Suggestion for Making Pretty Night Dress

In the matter of lingerie one may choose between much-trimmed or little-trimmed garments, providing they are made of sheer, well-woven cotton or linen fabrics. The great majority are made of cotton because it is cheaper than linen, is just as good-looking, and does not muss so easily. Linen is thought to be more durable and is therefore sometimes selected for lingerie which is to be hand-embroidered. By comparison with cotton fabrics, such as fine voiles, woven of hard-twisted thread, durability lies rather in favor of cotton.

The best known tub fabrics include nainsook, batiste, long cloth, voile, mull, lawn and the fine cotton crepes. One of the first three named is chosen for the great bulk of all lingerie.

An empire gown of nainsook, with body and sleeves of narrow val insertion, is pictured here. A narrow beading is set at the top and bottom of the body and serves to carry the narrow satin ribbon that adjusts the gown to the figure. It is finished with an edging of val. The sleeves are made separately and decorated with beading edged with val. Ribbon is run in the beading and tied in little bows, with hanging loops and ends, by way of dainty decoration.

The three little figures sketched in the picture suggest gowns more simply trimmed but equally pretty. Each borrows the refinement of lace and the glow of color in ribbons, and each is gracefully cut. Thus they embody attractions that merit the interest and the admiration that women always accord tasteful lingerie.

Crepe de chine and wash silks are having a considerable vogue in undergarments, but they are merely extra luxurious and not more satisfying than the garments of cotton that emerge from the laundry time after time as good as new.

PRAISES WORK OF MR. SAVILLE

Young Quincy Sculptor Exhibits At Copley G llery

In the Sunday Herald of July 26, F. W. Coburn, the art critic, writes as follows of the work of Bruce Wilder Saville of Quincy:—

To the summer exhibition of paintings and sculptures at the Copley gallery, Newbury street, has been added a good sized fountain piece by Bruce Wilder Saville, of Quincy. This work, which was illustrated some weeks ago in The Herald, is by a young sculptor who for the past three years has been an assistant of Mrs. H. H. Kitson at her Quincy studio. The maturity with which the motive has been carried out —a nude boy grasping a big fish which he has brought out of the waves—is rather remarkable. The piece has a technical vigor and expressive jolity—as shown by the tight grasp of the hands and the kink of the toes—that augurs well for the artist's future.

This, like several other recent pieces by younger sculptors of the neighborhood, seems to make it certain that Boston at last is in fair way to have a vigorous school of sculpture—one at least fairly comparable to our incomparable school of painting. Up to now, despite the achievements of three or four excellent sculptors, we have as a community lagged about half a century behind New York in production and appreciation of modern sculpture.

SENT TO JAIL FOR OFFENCE OVER YEAR OLD

Leonard Colletti of South Quincy, who was fined $50 on July 16 last year for assault and battery and was placed on probation, was in court Saturday for a similar offence . The complaint alleged he assaulted Antonio Giovanngeli. Colletti was fined $10 and was ordered to furnish sureties of $200 to keep the peace for three months. Judge Avery ordered the payment of the first fine and Colletti was committed when unable to do so.

A CHANGE OF QUESTIONS.

A German, on landing in America, began looking for employment. Not being able to speak English, it was difficult to find work. A recruiting officer who was also of the "Fatherland," but is now in the employ of the United States, finding John unemployed offered to have him enlisted as a soldier. There seemed to be only one trouble in the way, that was the inspecting officer who was supposed to examine each recruit.

The recruiting officer thought that by proper coaching John could pass this test. So John was taught to give, in English, the following answers to these questions:

"How old are you?"
"Thirty-six years, sir."
"How long have you been in the country?"
"Six weeks, sir."
"Have you plenty of food and raiment?"
"Both, sir."

But the inspector changed the order of his questions:

"How long have you been in the country?"
"Thirty-six years, sir."
"How old are you?"
"Six weeks, sir."

The inspector in surprise exclaimed, "Are you a fool or am I?" when the prompt answer was delivered, "Both, sir."—National Monthly.

FALLON ARRESTS NAKED MAN IN CORNFIELD

When Nicholo L. Rado of Sumner street was arraigned in the district court he was clad in a complete summer outfit. When arrested after midnight by Patrolman Fallon he was nearly naked his only clothing being a shirt covering his shoulders. Friends brought the clothing to police headquarters early today.

Rado ran when he saw the officer and attempted to hide in a Sumner street cornfield. The officer found him doubled up behind. corn stalks. Rado did not resist arrest but tried to give the officer the impression he had been drinking. He frequently struck his head with his hand, indicating he had "wheels." He made a rather indefinite explanation of his actions and was fined $10. His friends believed he was walking in his sleep but Rado put that theory into the discard himself.

AMERICAN SHIP IS TORPEDOED

Was Flying The Stars And Stripes Whan She Sank

(By United Press)

London, July 26—The American owned steamer Leelanaw was torpedoed and sunk off Kirkwall, Scotland, shortly after daybreak today. Despatches from Kirkwall stated that the crew, a considerable number of whom were Americans, and Capt. Delt were landed in their own boats.

New York, July 26—The freighter Leelanaw was flying the American flag when sunk. This statement was made today by A. H. V. Bull & Co., agents for the ship which was owned by the Harby Steamship Co., operating company of Harris and Irby Co., cotton merchants of 15 Williams street, New York.

The Leelanaw was en route for Belfast to discharge a cargo of flax and to take an oil for fuel when last reported to her agents here. A cable received this noon said the steamer was torpedoed and all hands were saved. The Leelanaw left Galveston, Texas, May 5, with a cargo of cotton for Archangel, Russia, and sailed from New York 12 days later. Though her cargo was consigned to a Russian fort she was stopped by British patrol ships and taken to Kirkwall, because the cotton was consigned via Gothenburg, Sweden, the steamship authorities having prohibited the exportation of cotton. She started back for Belfast.

Later dispatches indicated that the Leelanaw was stopped and that when the German commander ascertained she carried flax he declared her cargo contraband and ordered the crew to take to the boats. The ship is reported to have been torpedoed after the crew had pulled away. Since the breaking up of the ice in the White Sea made it possible for ships to enter Archangel, German submarines have been lurking in wait for vessels cruising from the Russian port. A number of Russian and British vessels, as well as Scandinavin steamers have been torpedoed and sunk in the vicinity.

Chicago, July 26—White teamers of crepe fluttered listly in the breeze against the doors of more than half of the homes of Cicero and Hathan, sections from whence came most of those whose holiday was turned into doomsday by the overturning of the Steamer Eastland. Official and citizen Chicago turned to find the answer, "Who is to blame?"

Again extreme pity in the last tragedy was emphasized by the fact that the mourning emblems were mostly white and black, testifying mutely that the death harvest was chiefly among those of tender ago.

The total dead, some officials insist may reach 1800 or may be as low as 1000. At noon estimates by Deputy Supt. Schuettler and Mariner Peter Hoffman were from 1200 to 1500 last. At that hour 820 bodies had been recovered. The identified dead numbered 735. Divers resumed their hunt early today for bodies. Efforts were started to raise the hull and six different investigations are under way.

Chicago, July 26—Cricago opened its heart and its purse for immediate relief for survivors of the Eastlnd victims. Over $300,000 was put at the disposal of the Chicago branch of the Red Cross which will act as dispersing agents. City Health Commissioner Robertson is in charge of the relief work. The funds were raised in a whilwind campaign among bankers, department store owners and a popular fund was being raised through newspaper appeal.

Told in story and sung in rhyme.'

"They tell us that birehdays have been celebrated from time immemorial and that many wonderful birthday parties have been held. Did you ever stop to think when you said: 'My birthday comes in January or in June,' as the case may be, how it was that the months came to receive their names, and why it is that people born in one month have certain characteristics that those born in other months do not possess?

"Of course we all know the brief account given in the encyclopedia, but there is another story which traces the names of many of the months back to that long-ago age of mythology, when gods and goddesses ruled this earth, and were upposed to exert an influence over the people born in the month dedicated to them. Let us, for today at least, believe in the fairy story. See how our birth month received its name, and see if any of the characteristics supposed to belong to people born in that month actually belong to us.

"January received its name from Janus, the two-headed god, who acted as the doorkeeper of Olympus, and who sat holding his great key with one face turned backward, the other forward, watching the past as well as the future. How appropriate for the name of the month that separates the new year from the old, and today people born in January have great intuition, look ahead with clear vision, have noble ideals and remarkable business foresight.

"February received its name from the Latin verb, 'februo,' to purify, and was the month dedicated by Juno, goddess of heaven, and many other things as well, for the time of her much-needed repentance and purification, and the February-born people are said to be very thoughtful and sensible, splendid judges of human nature, apt and handy in whatever they undertake, with an interesting personality.

"March was dedicated to Mars, god of war and husbandry, who dominated the ancient world so powerfully, and today his children are logical, positive in their opinion, have an inquiring mind, make fine students, and are very faithful in the fulfillment of a duty or promise.

"April was the poetical month, from 'aperio,' to open, and was the month dedicated to Venus, goddess of love, because of the reproductive power of nature at that time, when the ground was supposed to open and the trees and blossoms come forth from the under ground palace of sleep, where they had lain all winter, to again beautify the earth, and today April people are said to have original ideas of right and wrong, are very independent, love order and harmony, and make fine leaders.

"May received its name from Maia one of the many wives of Jupiter She was very unhappy in her domestic relations, and to this day May is said to be the one unhappy month for marriages, and the woman born in May has great power of endurance, make a fine hostess, is very generous, has remarkable powers of intuition, and is very zealous in whatever cause she espouses.

"June was the month dedicated to Juno, goddess of heaven, as well as goddess of marriage, and it is a remarkable coincidence that more marriages are celebrated in June than in any other month. Persons born in June are vivacious, nervous in temperament, very original, great lovers of education, and possess fine minds.

"July was dedicated to Julius Caesar, and it is interesting to note why, not only because he happened to be born during that month, but because at that time the sun was most potent in the heavens, and he thought that denoted the power of Caesar, and that he led at least the last half of the year. People born in this month have strong likes and dislikes, are fond of travel and change, hospitable, sympathetic, and the woman born in that month, unlike other women, is apt to be rather talkative.

"August was named for Augustus Caesar. He was really born in September, but because several important victories came to him in August and because he wanted the month next to that given to Julius Caesar he selected that month to bear his name. August-born people are fearless but sensitive, kind and loving, liberal, and while not great natural students are very observant.

"For the last four months of the year we can find no fairy naming. Their names indicate plainly seventh, eighth, ninth, and tenth months, which place they once occupied in the old Roman calendar, but it is interesting to note that September was a long time ago called the barley month from the quantities of liquor made from the barley at that time, and people born in September are cool, calm, confident, always self-possessed, never lose their presence of mind, and excel in what ever they undertake.

"October was at the same time called the wine month, from the ripening grapes, and persons born in that month are conservative, modest, retiring, of a sensitive, poetical nature, and learn readily from example.

"November was for a great while called the wind mouth from the gales that swept the land at that season, and gave to its children great magnetic power, much ability. Their language is clear and concise; they are tactful and have strong wills.

"December, called for ages the 'holy' month, from the birth of the Christchild, closes our year, and gives as its heritage to its children quick, impulsive natures. They are great lovers of outdoor sports, lively, frank, and detest secrecy.

"We live in deeds, not in years," so what matters it whether our birth days be fewo rm any, if each marks the beginning of a year richer and fuller than the last.—Mrs. T. V.Enslin in the Somerville Journal.

QUINCY NURSES GET OVATIONS

British Royalty Entertained Harvard Unit

Letter From Miss Carey

Theatre and dinner parties and tours to historic parts of London and the vicinity comprised the entertainment furnished the surgeons and nurses of the Harvard Unit by the British government previous to the start for the base hospital where the contingent is probably now engaged in relieving the sufferings of the wounded of Europe's battlefields.

Miss Margaret Carey of Upland road in a letter to members of her family under date of July 12 mentions a few of the many ways the party was entertained during the stay in London. Her letters, received Monday, were written a few days before the unit left for France to engage on its work of mercy.

The arrival in Lodndon, states the letter, was similar to that of a triumphant army. Men high in government circles extended welcome and escorted the unit to the hotels. The surgeons were quartered in the heart of London and the nurses in the Hotel York, a short distance away. A continuous program had been arranged. The day following the arrival the first event was held and the week that followed was one of pleasure.

On July 11 the nurses were given a theatre party, chaperoned by Lady Paget. The letter makes little mention of the performance but tells of the ovation tendered the members of the unit on their entrance to the theatre by the large audience which evidently had been expecting them.

A week was spent in auto trips to London and one of the most interesting sights was the castle where John Harvard, founder of Harvard University, lived the greater part of his life. The castle itself, she writes, is majestic and towers above a most picturesque hillside. Its present occupant is a Harvard graduate and a classmate of Dr. Nichols, head of the Harvard unit.

A quantity of post cards has been received by friends. The surgeons and nurses are probably enjoying the best of health and spirits since no mention is made of any indisposition of any of the party. Many English papers have been received from the surgeons and the reading of the London Times, The Reynolds News and various pictorial magazines has become a popular pastime among many Quincy people.

CITY COUNCIL VOTES $20,800 FOR STREETS

Accepts Minority Report After Spirited Debate

The City Council at its meeting Monday evening turned down the report of the majority of the joint committee on finance and streets which reported orders for new streets involving an appropriation of $29,300 and accepted a report of the minority of the committee which carried an appropriation of $20,800.

The debate came on the matter of accepting new streets. After being in session until midnight last week the joint committee on finance and streets reported orders accepting ten new streets, involving an appropriation of $29,300. The council accepted the report on the several orders which were ordered to a recond reading. When the loan order covering these amounts was reported it was naturally supposed there would be no opposition. Councilman Richards however offered a minority report of $20,800. The minority report also eliminated some of the streets named in the majority report and substituted others.

Previous to this the finance committee had reported ought not to pass on the orders changing the grade of Beale street and Greenwood avenue.

Councilman Richards offered a minority report that the Beale street order ought to pass. In support of this report he said this section was rapidly developing. When the railroad built its four tracks it would be an absolute necessity that the grade be changed and if done at this time it would save the city considerable money.

Councilman McDonald also spoke at length in favor of the minority report. He was interested in the order for the reason that he had occasion to go over the street every day and knew the conditions thoroughly. "If the work is ever to be done now is the time. The plan proposes to begin to raise the grade near the Masonic Temple and at the junction of Greenwood avenue it would be raised three and a half feet. The grade at the approach to the bridge is very bad now but it will be almost impassable when the four tracks are put in. A few years from now it will have to be done and the expense then will be ten times what the work can be done for at the present time. It had been intimated that building interests had something to do with the question. This is not true. I am not arguing for this street from sentiment but from merit."

Councilman Gallagher also spoke briefly in favor of the minority report. It was an important matter and should be settled now, he declared.

The minority report was then rejected and the majority report was accepted.

The joint committee reported orders for new streets as follows:

|---|---|
| Glenwood way | $1,000 |
| Madison avenue | 4,000 |
| Bradford street | 1,500 |
| Forest avenue | 5,000 |
| Willow street | 2,800 |
| Bellevue road | 4,000 |
| Taber street | 2,800 |
| Nelson street | 3,000 |
| Briggs street | 1,800 |
| Lunt street | 3,400 |
| | $29,300 |

The report on these streets was accepted and they were ordered to a second reading.

Then the joint committee reported a loan order to provide funds for the above amounts.

MINORITY REPORT.

Councilman Richards offered a minority report for $20,800 to cover the expense of the following streets.

|---|---|
| Glenwood way | $1,000 |
| Bellevue road | 2,000 |
| Lunt street | 3,400 |
| Briggs street | 1,800 |
| Beach street | 2,100 |
| Madison avenue and Bradford street | 5,500 |
| West Squantum street | 5,000 |
| | $20,800 |

This immediately started a debate. Councilman Smith said he wanted to

ACTRESS NOT BEFORE COURT

Judge Avery Continues Case Of Laura Deane

Laura Deane, an actress summering at Houghs Neck, was not in court today to answer to a charge of drunkenness. Dr. Basch of Germantown, who treated her on the night specified in the complaint alleged by Patrolman Ferguson, told Judge Avery that owing to the physical condition of the woman she could not appear. A continuance was granted to a date to be agreed upon by Miss Deane and the officer.

Miss Deane was the central figure in an exciting incident at Houghs Neck a week ago, during which Patrolman Ferguson charges she pointed a revolver at him. The police postponed her arrest because of her physical condition. The warrant charging drunkenness was issued to Patrolman Ferguson Monday.

CENSORING MAGAZINES.

Pittsburg is to have a new censorship—a bureau to pass judgment upon all magazines sold in the city. Four policewomen are to read all periodical publications, mark objectionable matter and submit them to the director of public safety. This idea might profitably be extended to a wider area.

Moving picture films are watched, public libraries guard against undesirable fiction as best they can, yet young boys and girls can purchase at a newstand magazines with stories in them wholly unfit to read. Most girls pass through the age when they want to read nothing but love stories, and they should be given good, clean stories of that type. There are plenty of them, well-written, and worth while. But at that formative age if, they get a "problem" story, filled with the lurid society gaieties they are likely to form a pernicious desire for this type of modern novel, which should be guarded against in every way.

Ideas and ideals are just forming in the minds of boys and girls in the early 'teens, and their reading matter has a large influence in this formative period. The mothers and fathers, no doubt, do the best they can to guide the children's reading, but if their boy or girl is a great reader it is impossible first to read every book. The public library should do this, and usually does, but magazines go uncensored.

In our own public library Robert W. Chambers' late novels have been tabooed, yet young girls can get a magazine and read his stories serially.

Boys, too, in their 'teens want lively adventure stories, and as in the girl's case, there are plenty of good, wholesome ones, which the boys should be given, and the habit of good reading formed.

Pittsburg is to be congratulated upon a step taken in the right direction.

STUDY THE SALOON.

Speaking at a temperance meeting on Boston Common Sunday ex-Cong. Samuel W. McCall said among other things: "One effective way of combating the saloon, although not solving by any means the whole question is for society to furnish the things that very many men today can find nowhere else but in the saloon."

The sooner reformers realize the truth of this assertion the better for their cause. It is not the bottle behind the bar which draws evry frequenter of the saloon into the place. To many men it is more than a place in which to drink. It is their club, affording many about their only opportunity for social life.

It would be well if clergymen and other persons who are in this world principally for the good they can do to study the saloon and adopt some of its strong points for their own work. No one should presume to start a civic club, no church should presume to organize a club for those who have been accustomed to frequent the saloons, without a thorough knowledge of the saloon. The churches can learn much from the bar-rooms and can gather much strength by following some of their methods of acquiring and holding patrons. The church and the saloon are real rivals and the former can never vanquish the latter until it fights the saloon with some of its own weapons.

We are pleased to note that the chief of the fire department with the cooperation of the police has started a campaign against those motor driving idiots who insist in following fire apparatus when the latter is responding to an alarm and who usually succeed in being very much in the way. The stiff fine imposed in the district court Monday upon one of these individuals should prove a salutary lesson to others of his ilk.

The review of the first year of the Great War written by United Press correspondents which started in the Ledger Monday should be widely read. The articles are impartial and instructive and should be particularly valuable at a time when the nation faces a grave crisis and when, therefore, the fullest information should be possessed by every citizen.

ANTIVIVISECTIONISTS.

An incident highly instructive in its bearings on the struggle to preserve freedom of medical research in the United States occurred during the recent session of the California legislature. The antivivisectionists introduced a bill providing for a commission of inquiry into laboratory conditions in the state. As usual, the advocates of the measure supported their claims by lurid tales of atrocious cruelty to animals at the hands of experimenters, and they took care that the proposed commission should consist largely of persons known to be antagonistic to the use of animals for experimentation.

Such legislation has been repeatedly advocated in Eastern states, but has always been refused serious consideration by legislative bodies. The partisan character of the proposal offered in California was apparently recognized, but, instead of objecting to it on that ground, interested members of the legislature suggested a compromise. A substitute measure authorizing officers of humane societies t o inspect and supervise laboratories was introduced, and with very little discussion it passed both houses. The ease with which a measure of this character can receive favorable legislative attention is surprising.

The bill as passed would give to any antivivisectionist, who wished to form a humane society with himself as president, the right of unlimited search without warrant—a right not possessed even by the constituted officers of the law—the polce, the constables and the sheriff! Furthermore, the inspectors thus provided for would be persons without any required training whatsoever, and they would be placed in judgment over highly trained laboratory workers who are investigating the most perplexingly developed structures and the most involved and entangled processes in Nature.

One needs only to glance at antivivisection literature to learn how readily the untrained mind grossly misinterprets the facts of biologic observation. Inspectors wholly lacking insight into the extraordinary complexities of medical research are absolutely incompetent and, if permitted to act, could prove only their own capacity for blundering. The harassing of medical investigators by perpetually classing them with suspected criminals and subjecting their labors to the stupid meddling of suspicious and ignorant fanatics would have been disgraceful. Fortunately the bill did not become law. The words of the governor of California, explaining his refusal to sign the bill, are pertinent in every commonwealth where antivivisection legislation is attempted:

"The antivivisection law is so positively declared illegal by the attorney general that even were I disposed I could not sign it. I may add that the laws of the state of California for the prevention of cruelty to animals and the punishment of those guilty are plenary. Full authority is given to the humane officer, under the law, to obtain search warrants, enter premises, and gather such evidence as he may suspect exists. With our drastic laws there can be no excuse for those who insist cruelties are practiced upon animals for permitting these cruelties to continue or those practicing the cruelties to go unpunished."—Journal of American Medical Association.

BRYAN'S "ANGEL."

To carry out the elaborate campaign against the President which William J. Bryan has begun a great sum of money will be needed.

Mr. Bryant has assured his countrymen that he is a poor man. He informed them that his excursions on the Chautauqua circuit were rendered necessary because his salary of $12,500 in the Government employ and his personal resources were inadequate to the demands made on his purse.

That income of $12,500 is now cut off. Yet Mr. Bryan's friends declare that he will not seek to make up the deficiency from the paid lecture platform, but, unrewarded except by his approving conscience, will devote his time and energy to the exposition of his theories of universal peace and the means of attaining and maintaining it.

Where is the great sum of money Mr. Bryan must have to carry out this program to come from?—New York Sun.

NO BLOOD MONEY.

Two men on a train west of Davenport, Ia., one a horse buyer and the other an Iowa farmer. Said the horse buyer to the farmer: "Mr. ——, you're the man I'm on my way to see. I understand you have a bunch of horses for sale. If they will measure up to army requirements I will pay you the biggest price you ever heard of." The farmer waited a moment before replying and said, "Jake, if I didn't love horses I wouldn't raise them. My wife's of the same opinion. We can't use that kind of money at our house."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

A YEAR OF THE GREAT WAR
BY UNITED PRESS EXPERTS

AS SEEN IN ENGLAND.
by
ED. L. KEEN.
United Press Staff Correspondent.

(Article Two.)

London, July 27th:—After a year at war, the British Empire has somewhat less than three quarters of a million troops in the field; its Allies have approximately ten million.

The British front in the western theatre is about forty miles in length; the lines of the other Allies east and west, including Serbia and Montenegro, cover some sixteen hundred miles. As the ratio of troops employed is one to fourteen and the ratio of mileage is one to forty, there appears to be some justification for the complaints recently made—quite unofficially, of course—both in France and Russia that England is not doing her share of the work.

But the question as to whether England is fulfilling her obligations should be considered in the light of her promises. On this basis, she has delivered more than was specified in the contract. There were two clauses in the secret agreement made with France long before the war started:

England would take care of the seas.

She would send an expeditionary force to France of 120,000 men.

That's all there was to it. She has carried out the first clause to the letter; she has sent nearly six times as many men to the firing line as she bargained for, and she is still sending them as fast as they can be trained.

Only the other day, the TEMPS of Paris in an obviously inspired editorial commenting on recent tributes paid to France by the British press, made these significant remarks; "Frankness should be mutual. If on the land the support of our British allies is still only limited, we must not forget that on the seas it is they who have had much the heaviest task. If at the beginning of the war we were able to complete the equipment of our army with a rapidity which was not one of the German staff's least surprise, we owe it to the fleet which rendered us masters of the seas." The TEMPS then admits that to this capital support on the sea, the British Empire has brought its industrial and financial resources, "while its military effort on land has really surpassed all forecasts."

There probably always will be some difference of opinion as to whether it was British valor or German blundering that saved Paris in the early days of the war. Perhaps it was the two. Anyhow, Paris was saved, and Britishers at least always will give the lion's share of the credit to Field Marshall French, his generals and his soldiers. But even if the salvation of Paris was not due to the British, there is no question that they and they alone saved Calais and the other channel ports. Of course in accomplishing this, England has done herself a greater service than she has the French.

Since the failure of the Paris attack, Germany's main effort has been concentrated in the direction of Calais, and that is the reason why, until he has received sufficient reinforcements, General French will be unable to extend his front. The fate of the British Empire rests upon the holding of those forty miles.

All idea of the "big Spring drive" upon which the military writers had fed the imagination of the British public for months was abandoned at Neuve Chapelle, when at the cost of 13,000 men, the British barely made a dent in the German line of highly fortified trenches. In what was accomplished the Neuve Chapelle offensive was in a sense a victory; in what it failed to do, it was a defeat—for Lille was the objective and the Germans are still firmly planted in Lille.

Then after the second battle of Ypres, in which the Germans first used asphyxiating gases, came the battle of La Bassee. This showed the British public why the "big drive" had become impossible. The British and French Troops were to make a joint advance after a preliminary bombardment for three hours of the German trenches and the field of wire entanglement intervening. In that time the French fired nearly 200,000 high explosive projectiles; in one hour the British had exhausted their supply of 20,000 high explosives and the rest of the time used shrapnel. Result: The French infantry advanced two miles into trenches that had been practically cleared, with a loss of only two thousand; the British lost 15,000 men in attempting to take trenches that hadn't been cleared.

A newspaperman witnessed this battle. He told the public through the medium of the London TIMES the reason why the British had failed, starting the scandal that disrupted the British Liberal Cabinet, caused the formation of a coalition ministry sheared Lord Kitchener's wings and created the new Department of Munitions, with Lloyd George at its head.

Somebody had blundered. Lord Northcliffe's newspapers fastened responsibility on Kitchener. While giving him due credit for his magnificent work in raising organizing and training the largest volunteer army the world has ever seen, they charged him with neglecting the one thing upon which any possible hope of British success on land could be based—an adequate supply of high explosive shells.

The one inexplicable incident is Premier Asquith's statement "upon the highest possible authority" that neither Great Great Britain nor her Allies had been hampered by lack of munitions—a statement directly contradicted by his recent frantic appeals to the workmen of England to mobilize for the supply of munitions.

AS SEEN IN FRANCE.
by
WILLIAM PHILIP SIMMS,
United Press Staff Correspondent.

Paris, July 27th:—The Great Doubt has been lifted from the heart of France.

The accomplishment of this was the grandest deed of French arms in all the year of Armageddon which began a year ago this week. In history the feat will be known as the victory of the Battle of the Marne.

Not only did this victory probably decide the fate of France geographically, but its influence upon the spirit of the country was, and still is, incalculable. For notwithstanding the "solidarity" accomplished instantly and spontaneously on Aug. 1, the day the General Mobilization Order was posted, a great doubt weighed like lead on the hearts of those who marched away singing as well as those who stayed behind and wept.

Everybody remembered 1870.

The old remembered the swift defeat in the Franco-Prussian war and the horrible nightmare of blunders. The young had heard the story time and again. The French, in 1870, were totally unprepared for war, were badly equipped and badly led. Their plans lacked cohesion. Generals fought independently, one of the other. Treason was laid at the door of one and altogether it was a terrible mess in which the poor soldiers never had the slightest chance notwithstanding a courage which wrung from even the Prussians the exclamation: "Oh, what brave fellows!"

So, last August, when the soldiers started for the war, each one bore in his heart a burden heavier than the knapsack on his back: Would history repeat itself? Would 1914 be another 1870? Was France better prepared this time? Would she be better led? Were her generals equal to the great task ahead If not, then .....

The troopers dared not let their minds run beyond this point. Individually the most intelligent soldiers in the world, they have the other curse and blessing of civilization, an imagination; so they sang and quit thinking; they joked with one another, never admitting even to themselves—let alone to their companions—that the doubt was there.

Back home the hearts of mothers, fathers, wives, sisters and sweethearts were troubled by the same unexpressed dread lest 1914 prove another 1870. And if such should prove to be the case .....

They, too, smiled and talked cheerfully of a new and irresistible France.

All knew, those who remained waiting as well as those who went to war, that for 44 years Germany had been living, eating, sleeping, drinking dreaming war and that this war had come. What about France? Who was General Joffre? Who were the other generals? Newspapers had but recently declared that France was unprepared. Was this true? And all went on being troubled in secret lest France should again prove unready.

After vague news reached Paris that General Joffre was in retreat from Charleroi, the 1870 bugaboo loomed bigger and bigger. Maubeuge was invested; Lille was occupied. Then there came silent, tense days, without any real news. The government moved to Bordeaux; the Germans were now in Maubeuge, Compiegne Soissons, Rheims, Chalons, Epernay Luneville. Verdun and Nancy were seriously menaced. Paris it seemed, was doomed and Uhlans were reported to be at the gates. The worst fears of soldiers and homefolks seemed realized: It looked like another 1870, only worse.

Still there was no panic. There was the exodus of thousands of people who objected to living in Paris during a German occupation, but the city was calm. France's "sacred union" held firm.

But the Doubt, instilled into the mind of France by 1870, was there, galling and real. The people could not know that General Joffre was later to be called a genius. They could only wonder if his retreat was strategy or incompetency: The censorship was strict and they had few facts to base opinion on. They did not know the Battle of the Marne was being fought, nor that Joffre had performed, by winning a victory there, a sort of eighth wonder of the world. Yet this was true. General Bonnal said of this battle:

"This is the first time to my knowledge that a great army, retreating and fighting at the same time and for eight days in succession, was able to furnish the effort by itself to transform instantly its long and painful retreat into an irresistible offensive."

Yet that is what the French army was able to do. Through this victory a New France was born. The Great Doubt was lifted, the 1870 bugaboo banished. The people were given confidence in the army, the army in itself.

Henceforth, whatever may happen to the French soldier, he will refuse to be discouraged. He can advance, retreat or doggedly hold what he has won, any or all, with tenacity and good cheer. He has faith in his officers and faith in himself. He knows the war may be long, but he grins and grits his teeth: "We'll get 'em at last!" he says.

The ghost of 1870 has been laid.

AS SEEN IN GERMANY.
by
CARL W. ACKERMAN.
United Press Staff Correspondent.

(Second Story.)

Berlin, July 27th:—The Kaiser will go down in history as William the Great, if the events of the first year of the war appeal as vividly to the imaginations of future Germans as they do to the generation that is living through the present world conflict.

Frederick the Great held Europe at bay and saved Prussia through seven years of strife. His descendant, who now holds the Hohenzollern throne, has more than equalled Frederick's task, because Frederick had England with him and there was then no United States to furnish Germany's enemies with munitions. Nobody expects the present conflict to run seven years, but if the allies can stand a war of that duration, so can Germany with the Kaiser at the head of affairs. When the war started the Emperor William had fallen into disfavor with many of his people for a number of reasons. Some believed he was too autocratic, others thought he was too well disposed toward the English, and still others thought he was afraid of the military machine Germany had developed and was too prejudiced in favor of peace at any price ever to permit the machine to test itself. The early days of the war, when enemy after enemy took the field against Germany, people talked disparagingly of the Emperor, as an incompetent, who had played his cards boldly and had overestimated Germany's strength.

But when victories began to be won and when the enemy first here and then there was rolled back the popular opinion of the Kaiser began to change. People confessed they had misjudged him. The bitter criticism of Germany's enemies directed against the Kaiser and the comments of neutral nations added to his popularity at home, until now, the Kaiser is the idol of his nation. He is regarded as the embodiment of German virtues, the representative of German might and power. The nation agrees he has not abused the absolutely autocratic power he has wielded since last August, but has used his authority to meet every crisis confronting Germany in a manner that wins unanimous approval. If the war ends under conditions substantially as they are now, Germany will have saved herself, and will have demonstrated her powers so convincingly that the Kaiser, who is now responsible for all things in the Empire must be given the title of "The Great."

The Kaiser, in particular, has inspired Germans with confidence in the outcome of the war. His calm assertions of victory have been followed by deeds substantially his words so often that he is not only the ruler but also the prophet of his people. When the war began, few Germans, deep down in their hearts, believed the Teutonic empire had even a fair chance of succeeding. That is why there was so much hysteria last August, and why the departing subjects of the enemy powers were so frequently insulted. That is why also the Germans lost their heads in Belgium and adopted a system of terrorism. That is why, too, the hymn of hate directed against England was so popular.

Now, however, after a year of strife, Germany has recovered the confidence and believes in the Kaiser. The fear of last summer has departed and the Germans are no longer saying "God punish England." Instead of the former hatred of England there is now developing a curious kind of contempt, mingled with self-amazement that the Germans should so badly have misjudged the English. Nothing more remarkable has happened in Germany during the past year than the change of popular opinion concerning England. The might of the British Empire was magnified quite out of proportion to its actual power, the Germans now are saying.

This war was worth the fighting so say the Germans, if only because it has pricked the bubble of British strength. England will never again occupy her old place in the world. The ancient spirit of the English, which the world has long been accustomed to taking at its own valuation, has been found to be no longer existent. England has lost the war for the allies, in the opinion of German militarists, and by doing so, has irreparably stained her own prestige.

The past year's events say the Germans, have provided a complete test of the comparative merits of Germanic and British civilizations. Germany has revealed her possession of organization ability, of initiative, of austere patriotism, of inventiveness, of an unbroken spirit under adversity, of discipline, of an ability to meet every new problem the war has thrust upon her.

Where Germany has succeeded, England has failed. The English (in the opinion of Germans) have proved themselves to be boasters, muddlers and uninspired in any of their works. They have been revealed to the world as a people undermined by discontent, unpatriotic, so prejudiced that they cannot even now accept the undoubted fact that their demigod, Lord Kitchener, failed them in their hour of need. The upper classes have shown bravery but no qualities of intellectual and masterful leadership, and their lower classes are taking advantage of the perplexities of the war to strike for higher wages!

The Germans are asking what this past year of warfare has shown the English to possess which the world would be the better for the keeping. What can the world better be rid of, ask the Germans, at this anniversary time, the qualities the English have shown since last August, or the qualities the Germans have shown? Here is a Germany, beginning the second year of her war against the world, full of confidence, with increased faith in the destiny of the fatherland.

DENY RUMORS OF GIGANTIC STEEL TRUST

Dispatches from Cleveland Monday relative to the formation of a new steel trust of which Charles M. Schwab of the Bethlehem Steel Co. was slated to become the president were read with interest in Quincy from the fact that Mr. Schwab is chief owner of the Fore River Ship building Corporation, which uses a large amount of steel in the construction of naval vessels and also from the fact that the new company if formed would compete with the United States Steel Company.

The story that such a trust with Charles M. Schwab's Bethlehem Company as the nucleus was being formed by Henry C. Frick was denied by an authority second only to Mr. Frick's own word. Similar rumors have reached Wall street every six months for the past three years and the essential feature of the present amalgamation was officially denied by the Pennsylvania Railroad a week ago.

The aspect of the situation that made the financial district most skeptical was the proposal to merge the big independent companies with the Bethlehem. Mr. Frick and Mr. Schwab have not been on friendly terms since the former retired from the presidency of the United States Steel Corporation. There is no reason for supposing that they are on more intimate terms now than before. None of the others compares with Bethlehem in earnings at present.

WILL ASSIST FR. MADDEN AT HOUGHS NECK

Rev. Dr. Louis F. Kelleher of Cambridge, who was recently ordained to the Catholic priesthood at the North American College at Rome, has been temporarily assigned to assist Fr. Mark E. Madden, pastor of the Church of the Most Blessed Sacrament, Houghs Neck. Father Kelleher began his duties Sunday.

The need of an assistant became urgent soon after Father Madden's appointment and several changes have been made in the Sunday program, the most important ones being five masses, celebrated at 7, 8, 9, 10 and 11 o'clock.

Several improvements to the edifice are contemplated and a sacred concert is to be given in the Kincaide theatre Sunday evening, Aug. 8, the proceeds to be used for this purpose. The program at that affair will be distinctive offerings by prominent people in vaudeville circles.

GENERAL PROBE INTO DISASTER

Lives Lost on Eastland May Number Twelve Hundred

CORRESPONDENCE IS SEIZED

State Attorney Has Evidence That Rebates Were Offered For Large Sale of Excursion Tickets—Hints of Intimidation by Electric Company Employes—But Few More Bodies Recovered — Federal Inspectors Blamed For Horror by Secretary of Seaman's Union—Man Taken Alive From Death Trap, but Succumbs

Chicago, July 27.—Plans for investigations by federal, state and city official bodies to determine who was to blame for the capsizing of the steamer Eastland in the Chicago river with a loss of hundreds of lives are completed.

A coroner's jury will start an inquest at once, while federal departments, headed by Secretary of Commerce Redfield, and officers from the city police department and the office of the state attorney will gather evidence, holding formal inquiry in abeyance until the inquest has progressed as far as possible.

Efforts were continued to remove victims of the disaster from the wrecked ship and to determine whether the total death list would remain around 1000, as many believed, or creep up to 1200 or more, as others predicted.

The probability of swelling the list above 1000 was suggested by the announcement of detectives from the state attorney's office that they had seized the tickets taken from passengers boarding the Eastland for the excursion to Michigan City, Ind.

They asserted that these tickets numbered 2550 and did not account for children, musicians and the seventy-two members of the crew. They estimated that the total number of persons aboard the steamer might have been 2800 or more instead of the 2480 previously announced by the officers of the Indiana Transportation company. The lessees of the ships asserted that 2408 passenger tickets had been collected.

Correspondence Seized

State Attorney Horne, in pursuing his investigation, seized correspondence which had passed between officers of the Western Electric employes' organization, which gave the picnic, and the Indiana Transportation company, operating the Eastland and four other steamers set aside to carry more than 7000 persons across the lake.

Horne said this correspondence showed that the steamer company had advised that the more tickets sold the greater would be the rebate paid to the employes' organization. Tickets were to be sold to employes of the Western Electric company for 75 cents at the factory, or $1 at the wharf. According to Horne the letters showed there would be a rebate of one-third on all tickets over 4000 and something less on those above 2500.

Complaint had already been made by several employes of the Western Electric company that they had been almost compelled to purchase tickets for the excursion by fear that officers of the employes' organization, who sold them, would discriminate against those who failed to go on the excursion.

Intimidation Alleged

The picnic to Michigan City has been an annual affair, and these men said that employes who had refused to buy tickets in previous years had been given less remunerative work or discharged, although probably without the sanction of executives of the company.

To the confusion of determining the total number of lives lost there was added much wrangling among officials of different jurisdiction over tentative plans to right the Eastland, which still lies on its port side where it sank.

Estimates of the number still held under water vary from 150 to 300. The steamer, with a width of thirty-eight feet, protrudes twelve feet above the river. This, divers say, indicates that the lower edge of the deck did not sink more than a foot into the muddy bottom.

Fewer than a dozen victims were brought up by the divers on the third day of the search. One, a huskily-built man of about 35, was still living He died while Dr. Carter was working over him.

Opinion of Seamen's Secretary

"Boats have been sunk by the score on the great lakes with a loss of many lives, because the federal inspection service is 'rotten,'" Victor A. Olander, secretary of the Lake Seamen's union, said during a sharp arraignment of the service in connection with the sinking of the Eastland. "The United States inspection service is directly responsible for this disaster," he said.

Olander has been trying for years to have the government clean out and clean up its inspection service. He said:

"The Eastland capsized because the United States steamboat inspection service permitted too many people to go on board. That and nothing else was the immediate cause of the loss of life. That was the last act in a long record of improper inspection service."

A Remarkable Rescue

Harry Halversen, a diver, found a the living man among the dead. Carter's stethoscope discovered a fluttering heart beat.

"Alive—barely alive," he said. There was a hurry call for the lung motor, long since retired from service. An injection of strychnine sent a glow of warmth racing through the man who had lived for three days among the dead. Mist gathered on a pocket mirror held to his nostrils. His bared chest lifted, almost imperceptibly.

Carter began the application of first aid methods of resuscitation while waiting for the lungmotor.

"He'll have a story if they save him," Halversen said. "Chances are he had his senses until a little while ago. If I'd only known he was there—waiting, I've passed the place a dozen times without seeing him.

Discovered by Accident

"He was up over my head and, except that my line fouled, he'd have died there. I looked up to see where the trouble was and saw him perched in the wreckage of the companionway. I guess he had used his last strength to crawl there.

"He must have known he was about all in and felt himself slipping. Anyway, there he was, straddling a stanchion and propped up so his head would stay out of water, whatever happened. It flashed on me that maybe he was alive, and I climbed up after him, forgetting about the fouled line.

"And sure enough, he was alive. I could tell when I tock hold of him. He wasn't like the rest. He was sort of limp, not stiff."

As the diver finished his story the man died. Halversen shuddered as he picked up his helmet.

"Eight hundred and twenty-one, then," he said, and splashed back into the hull.

LETTERS FROM OUR READERS

DENIES STATEMENT.

Editor of the Ledger:—

On returning from Cape Cod my attention has been called to a statement in the Boston Herald in which it says:

"Bird, however, has written a letter to Joseph Walker that in view especially of the Democratic tariff mistakes, it is the height of folly to give any further aid, or comfort, to the Democratic party."

I have not written such a letter to Mr. Walker. The statement is absolutely false.

The Herald then proceeds to make the following amazing statement—

"Bird writes the flat declaration 'I shall support the Republican nominee, whether McCall or Cushing wins the nomination.'"

That, too, is absolutely false. I have never written, or said to Mr. Walker, or to any one, that I would support McCall, Cushing, or any particular candidate. The entire statement is untrue from start to finish.

I realize that a lie once started can never be caught and wholly strangled; however I hope that a reputable newspaper having published and circulated an unthruthful story, will, to say the least, give to the denial the same publicity and space that has been given to the lie.

I am not egoistic enough to believe that the general public, now in the stress of an awful worldwide war and real national peril, is especially interested in my political attitude one way or the other, but I cannot, in fairness, allow a statement of this nature to go unanswered and unchallenged at this time—the beginning of the political campaign of 1915.

CITY COUNCIL

call attention to the fact that by a queer coincidence the streets in the west part of the city had been eliminated from the order by the minority report. He was pleased that the minority was satisfied with its order.

Councilman Richards was sorry that any sectional feeling had been raised in the matter. "We have now issued bonds to the amount of $91,900 and with the $100,000 that will probably come later in the year for a new school building, it will make $191,900 for this year. We should go slow in these matters. The minority report cuts $9,000 from the street order, which is quite a saving."

Councilman Ross opposed the minority report:—"We have people coming here every year asking for the acceptance of streets. —The minority report cuts out streets that should be included. Iwould like to find out how the minority came to its conclusions."

Councilman McGrath, who with Councilman Richards signed the minority report, said in reply: "The streets have been gone over carefully and the allotment has been made according to what it was thought the city could stand and in the sections where streets are most needed. In Ward Three there is no question about Madison avenue and Bradford streets. Taber street is one of those streets which had some opposition at the public hearing. Nelson street the city had no right to undertake. We should go slow here and not make a stab in the dark. One thousand, five hundred dollars for damages is too much. Forest avenue calls for $5,000. If we are going to expend that amount of money it should be where it wil' bring back the most to the city and where it is needed more than it is here. I do not believe in spending money where there is slow development."

"West Squantum street has been looked at and we have come to the conclusion that work is needed here as the property is developing fast. There is no discrimination for Ward One, the biggest ward in the city, has not asked a thing, the members from this ward being willing to sacrifice to other wards."

Councilman Ross claimed that his question had not been answered, to his satisfaction:—"The reason that the west part of the city is not building is because they ask for improvements and are never given any. Taber street has been before the council for twenty years. It is a main thoroughfare and should be accepted The councilman from Ward Five says we should go slow yet he is willing to expend $10,000 on Beale street."

Councilman McDonald said that he had no feeling because Beale street had been turned down. When the matter first came up he had favored the majority report but rather than see all the matter held up he would vote for the minority.

Councilman Thompson said he had not signed the minority report but he favored it as did also Councilman Beeman.

Councilman Nelson said he voted with the majority in the committee but since then he had considered matters and he was now with the minority as he believed half a loaf better than none.

Councilman Smith asked if the including of West Squantum street in the minority report had anything to do with his change of front. Councilman Nelson replied he thought it a splendid addition to the list.

Councilman McGrath said the idea of sectionalism was easily repudiated.

Councilman Bolster could not see the sense of a committee agreeing and then changing. He should support the majority.

Councilman Kessler argued at length in favor of West Squantum street, telling how it was building up and why it should be accepted.

ACCEPT MINORITY REPORT.

On roll call the minority report was accepted and the order ordered to a second reading. The vote was as follows:

Yes:—Barnicoat, Beeman, Craig Ferguson, Fuller, Gallagher, Kessler McDonald, McGrath, Nelson, Prescott Richards, Thompson, Yule—14.

No:—Barry, Bolster, Griffin O'Dowd, Ross, Slade, Smith, Williams—8.

As the amount for Bellevue road was cut in half by the minority report the order for that street was sent back to the joint committee.

On the other matters before the joint committee the committee reported progress and asked for further time.

The joint committee also reported reference to the next Council on the orders for Newcomb place and Lowe street.

Councilman Smith moved that the west half of Smith street be sent back to the joint committee but the motion was lost.

On motion of Councilman Craig it was voted when the council adjourn it be until Friday evening.

The commissioner of public works in a communication asked for $3000 for extension of water mains. To joint committee on finance and water supply.

The acting Mayor called attention to the fact that several parties at Houghs Neck had violated their Sunday licenses and recommended the license be revoked. Later Councilman Smith offered an order revoking the following licenses which was adopted:

Howard D. Vinton, 1246 Sea street
M. A. Merriam, Centre road.
B. Linder & Son, 40 Centre street.
J. H. Trott & Co., 1183 Sea street.
Mrs. Ina F. Main, Sea street.
F. A. McDonald, 1085 Sea street.
William Hanrahan, 1206 Sea street
W. F. O'Connell, 85 Manet avenue.

The Acting Mayor forwarded a communication from the Fire Hazard Commissioner which was referred to the Finance committee.

Relocation of poles was granted to the pole companies and a number of minor licenses were granted.

Councilman Ross offered a resolution that the Mayor be requested to offer a reward of $50 for the apprehension of parties sounding false alarms of fires. Adopted.

Councilman McGrath offered an order for $1,000 to be expended by the commissioner in making tests and a survey of the water system. To joint committee on finance and water supply.

Councilman Slade offered an order for several street lights in Merrymount sub-division which was referred to the Executive.

In the calendar the orders amending the building ordinance and granting the Telephone Company a location for poles were passed.

Adjourned at 9 o'clock.

AT KINCAIDE'S.

The popularity of that Zendaesque romance by George Barr McCutcheon, "Graustark," was sufficient to draw large audiences to the Kincaide theatre Monday and the dramatic film adaptation of the novel bettered all expectations. One saw on the screen the charming Princess Yetive, the American hero Grenfall Lorry, the grim old Baron Dangloss, and all the rest not forgetting Lorry's chum Harry Anguish, whose fortunate "hinch" in the sixth act turns sorrow into happiness and places the American on the throne of Graustark beside his beloved. All the pomp and glitter of the court scenes in the mythical kingdom are portrayed with more effectiveness than any printed words could portray them. "Graustark" is one of the best pictures seen here in many a day. The rest of the bill proved worthy to support the feature.

"I'm planning to advise Mr. Rockefeller to take up the game," said Biggar today. "It's a great outdoor exercise."

CURBING OF DRUG MANIA

San Francisco, July 27:—A federal law has made theoffice of J. J.Scott Collector of Internal Revenue, a confessional.

The Harrison Drugs Act has made doctors careful, druggists wary. The way of the drug-user has become hard, for an internal revenue permit is necessary these days in order to get the stuff or have it in one's possession.

Collector Scott is the court of last resort. Into his ears during the past months have been poured pitiful tales by men and women of social standing in this and other communities, whom Fate has led into the net of drug-devotion.

A side-phase of the case, much less pitiful, is the application by certain osteopaths, "drugless practitioners," for permits. Osteopaths are not registered by the state medical board as "physicians" and the Federal Act expressly uses that term to denote individuals who may be granted permits. The osteopaths have been turned down.

The individual cases surpass in interest. They show the high places into which the drug-habit has made its way. Men and women of evident breeding and high standing have been among the supplicants before Scott. They have told with fearsome detail of how their mental and physical well-being has become dependent upon the potions with which De Quincy indulged himself. And, like De Quincey, many had their start in as harmless an indisposition as neuralgia.

A woman had been ill and in pain. A doctor had injected morphine and the drug exerted its devilish influence Thereafter it had become a necessity The doctor now refused further prescriptions. The druggist had become heartless. Would Scott intervene?

A prominent local business man. (Scott withholds his name), had suffered an accident. Twelve years ago it was. Pain beyond human endurance once had been assuaged with drugs. The appetite remained. Twelve years a nightly potion had been taken. The new statute cuts him off from the only thing which stabilizes his mentality. Could Scott intervene?

From a country town came a letter. A woman, mother of three grown daughters and possessed of a good husband, was a victim of morphine solution. An illness of long ago had been the start of the habit. "They saw me try once to do without it and they do not wish to go through that experience again," she wrote.

Helpless as the victims seem, Scott is quite as helpless. He can give them no aid. The fight must be made by themselves.

A curious method of fighting the drug was told by a victim to Scott recently. He wanted just one permit, for just one bottle more of morphine solution. His cure would be complete by the time it was consumed, he explained.

He had two bottles, one of the liquid drug, the other of olive oil. At the start he took a small measure of the drug and then diluted the remainder with the olive oil. After each dose of the more and more diluted drug, he would add a further measure of the olive oil. But he was not yet cured. He needed one more bottle. It had to be denied him.

"The revelations have been astonishing," Scott said today. "I have been the unwilling receptacle of a lot of fearful stories. It is hard to deny them, but the new law will mean that few new cases of drug mania will be developed."

DESERT HOLDS MYSTERY.

San Bernardino, Cal., July 27—Ill and feeble, Ernest Brant, 89, veteran prospector, is believed to be wandering somewhere in the Mojave desert with his pet burro. He prefers the solitude of the desert and the companionship of the little donkey to the companionship of men. Bryant recently appeared at the county hospital here and asked for admission for himself and his burro. The hospital authorities said they couldn't admit the burro. "But he is sick," protested Brant. The white coated attaches shook their heads. Without a word Brant turned, patted the animal, and faced toward the wilderness. Aged man and aged beast, both limping and weary, toiled back to the desert together.

REJUVENATED BY WAR.

Fredericktown, Mo., July 27—While the European war, in the words of one of the current crop of war ballads, is "Making widows out of mothers" and "Butchers out of brothers," in a way that rhymes conveniently, it is doing things for Fredericktown in the way of prosperity that Fredericktown never before dared dream could be done. Fredericktown is just one of the hundreds of "lead towns" in Missouri and its case is typical.

Before war was declared Fredericktown was voted a good town to avoid. Lead was "dropping like lead" in all markets. By the ton the product sold for less than $60. There was no big demand and there was a whole lot of the mineral already brought to the surface waiting to be used. Stores closed up, boarding houses reduced their demands on the markets and gradually were closed, patches of vacant houses appeared and gradually enlarged until they merged. Fredericktown was so nearly dead that nearby towns facetiously inquired of the coroner when he was going to hold the inquest.

Then it happened. The soldiers used up all the bullets they had and there was demand for Fredericktown's product. Laborers flocked back to the city. The shutters were removed from store and boarding house windows. Machinery began to move again, creaking at first and then developing a business-like industrious hum. Lead jumped from less than $60 a ton to $90 in leaps of from two dollars to five dollars and the men underground produced the death-dealing metal for shipment to Europe.

Now Fredericktown is thinking of sending to some big city for a civic expert to develop the beauty of the city. The war has boomed the lead country.

BAN LIFTED FROM RABBITS.

Springfield, Ill., July 27—Kansas farmers who are bothered with rabbits are invited to send a few million of them to Illinois. The pest of the fields in the west is now a cherished and sheltered animal in this state.

For the first time in history, Illinois has brought rabbits under the protection of the game laws. There is no limit on the bag one may make during the open season, from September 1 to Jan. 31, inclusive, but all the rest of the year they are protected.

Sportsmen in this state rejoiced when the new game laws which became effective July 1, provided fifteen days shooting of prairie chickens from October 1 to 15. Though the bag limit is three a day, lifting the ban at all on these birds opened the eyes of Illinoisans to the fact that the conservation for a number of years had permitted increase of these fowl, almost extinct ten years ago.

WARSAW'S FALL SEEMS CERTAIN

Two Weeks Will Decide Great Campaign in Poland

GERMAN ADVANCE CONTINUES

Has Isolated Towns Which Russians Depended Upon to Save Capital—Germans Attempting to Seize Railroads—But Little Artillery Action In West—Turkey and Bulgaria In Mix-up Over Railway—Italians Claim to Have Repulsed Fierce Attacks

London, July 27.—The triangle formed by the confluence of the Narew and Bug rivers is now the battleground which is to decide the fate of Warsaw. Military experts predict the fall of the Polish capital, and say that two weeks will decide the campaign.

Although the Germans are now attacking the defenses of Piascez, which is only twelve miles south of the city, it is believed the decisive action is to be fought between the rivers, or at least at the crossing of the Bug.

An advance from the north by way of Novo Georgievsk or from the east from Blonie or from the south means an attack upon strong modern fortifications. Victory across the Bug means the cutting of the Warsaw-Petrograd railroad, the vital communication for the capital. The railroad is not farther than six miles from the Bug and so far as can be ascertained there are no permanent fortifications to defend the line.

The dispatches from Petrograd and Berlin indicate that the Germans have made progress across the Narew. It is surmised that they must have reached Przetycz or Rzanik by this time, having left Kanienczuk, which is on the south bank of the Bug, just in their path.

By this means they have isolated Ossewiecz and Ostrolenka, leaving only one or two fortified towns in north Poland in Russian hands.

Other Points Forgotten

Little attention is paid to the situation around Ivangorod. Apparently General von Mackensen has not succeeded so well as it was thought he would. Everything has been forgotten in the dash of the Germans across the Narew.

The dispatches also tell of further advances in Kovjo and Courland, but no further attempts at Riga.

Late dispatches hint that the Germans are running out of ammunition, but there have been no signs of this in their artillery engagements.

In the meantime General von Buelow's troops, driving south from Courland are thirty-five miles southeast of Shavil, having reached the Poniewesch railway junction, linked with the Vilna-Dvinsk line, which the German cavalry is attempting to seize preparatory to cutting the more important Kovno-Vilna line. The effective German cavalry in this area is estimated at Petrograd at 30,000.

Little News From West

There has been unusual calm on the French front during the last twenty-four hours. There were no artillery actions of consequence, though there was some grenade throwing between the trenches in the forest of Ailly. Elsewhere there was cannonading, while at Ban de Sapt, in the Vosges, the Germans launched several attempts against the positions they have lost there.

As to Bulgarian Neutrality

The reported cession by Turkey to Bulgaria of the Turkish portion of the De Deaghatch railway has created considerable discussion in England, but the Bulgarian legation at London insists that it has no confirmation of such an arrangement. It is stated in circles professing to undersand the situation that it would have no effect on Bulgaria's neutrality, although this is debatable.

By a treaty signed in Constantinople Turkey granted Bulgaria the free use of the line for ten years, but this privilege, it is contended, has been frequently revoked of late, Turkey repeatedly stopping freight traffic.

Bulgaria protested against this, and finally, a fortnight ago, forbade the movement of Turkish consignments across her border. To remedy this situation appears to be the immediate object of Turkey's present move.

Claims of Italy

An air raid upon Riva, an important town at the head of Lake Garda, in the Austrian Tyrol, is described in an official statement issued at the headquarters of the Italian general staff. The communication says:

"Two of our seaplanes flew over Riva and dropped eighteen bombs on the railroad station with excellent results. The enemy's artillery fired on the machines without causing any damage.

"In Carnia enemy forces attacked our positions at Somdogna pass, but were promptly repulsed.

"In the Monte Nero region the enemy tried to arrest our offensive, delivering three fierce attacks on positions conquered by us on the crest of Luzinica, but were repulsed by us with great losses.

"On the Carso plateau the action continues to develop favorably for us."

GOING BACK TO WORK

Decision of English-Speaking Employes at Bayonne Oil Plant

Bayonne, N. J., July 27.—Developments in the strike situation indicate that probably half of the approximately 5000 employes of the Standard Oil company of New Jersey will return to work today.

In response to an appeal by Sheriff Kinkead at a mass meeting the English-speaking men and American citizens among the employes agreed to return to work. What the foreign-speaking element will do when the others go back is problematical.

SAVED BY CLOTHES CATCHING ON TREE

Society Woman Pushed Over Cliff by an Unknown Man

Islesboro, Me., July 27.—Mrs. George W. C. Drexel, the wealthy Philadelphia society woman who has a summer home at North Islesboro, narrowly escaped death when she was pushed over a forty-foot bank overhanging jagged rocks on the shore by an unknown assailant.

Mrs. Drexel's life was saved by the fact that her clothing caught in the branches of a tree a few feet below the top of the steep incline. She hung in mid-air until her cries brought rescuers, who pulled her back to safety.

Every effort is being made to capture the man, but it is feared he has succeeded in escaping from the island to the main land. Mrs. Drexel describes him as being small-sized, wearing a slouch hat and apparently an Italian.

FIRE WAS INCENDIARY

Old Mattress Used to Start Blaze Which Cost Six Lives

Boston, July 27.—Acting Chief Neal of the state police announced that evidence developed at an inquest into the recent Chelsea fire which cost six persons their lives showed that the fire was caused by an old mattress placed in a lower hallway and set ablaze by an incendiary.

"There is no doubt in my mind that the fire was incendiary," said Neil. "We found evidence that an old mattress was found burning against the stairs in the lower hall by the first people who entered the building.

"We have also learned from the evidence that the mattress was in one of the rooms of the untenanted lower floor during the day before the fire started.

Warning Against Measles

Boston, July 27.—Professor Gunn of the Massachusetts health department issued a warning that measles is a major disease, more serious in Massachusetts than scarlet fever and a number of other afflictions generally thought to be no more severe.

Movie Bomb Had a Kick

Los Angeles, Cal., July 27.—Glenn Martin, aeroplane manufacturer, is nursing serious injuries as the result of a supposed harmless hand bomb exploding. Martin was to use the bomb in a moving picture of a mimic battle.

New York's Mayor Fined

BLIND MAN A HERO

Loses Own Life In Fire In Efforts to Save Others From Perishing

Pawtucket, R. I., July 27.—Henry Herrick, 50 years old, and blind, died a hero. He saved nearly a score from death in a fire on the third floor of the Ellis block. His crippled son, who helped him, escaped.

The elder Herrick, awakened by smoke, despite his blindness, fought his way through smoke and flames down the long corridor and warned the tenants, while his son shouted out of a window for help. The blind man was found unconscious. He was rushed to a hospital with burns about the body which caused his death.

The firemen were obliged to take the victims through a rear window at the end of the flaming corridor and carry them, one by one, down a ladder.

The upper part of the block was badly damaged and the loss will reach $4000. Defective wiring is believed to have been the cause of the fire.

WIFE CLUNG TO MONEY

But It Fails to Prevent Husband Paying Debt of $3400

Trenton, July 27.—The practice of the late Mrs. Lavinia Chamberlain of Heightstown, in acting as her husband's banker and carrying $7000 continually in the hope of keeping her husband's creditors from getting it, has come to naught.

Vice Chancellor Backes filed an opinion in the court of chancery in the suit brought by Sarah F. Mount, deciding that $3400 due Mrs. Mount must be met from the estate left to Chamberlain by his wife.

It was the testimony of Chamberlain that the $7000 was carried for several years by his wife in bags upon her person.

SPORTING COMMENT

Fore River should win the championship of the Manufacturers league. The position of the local team while not secure is one game better than the base ball team of C. H. Bird and Sons. Knight has been pitching good ball, ably supported by a million dollar infield and three dash men in the outer garden. He holds the key of success and unless he makes a slip should lock first position up "tighteranell."

The Red Sox on their way home from their Western tour are ready to make base ball history. They bring with them a record of 13 wins out of 20 games in the enemy's country. The conviction is general that the Boston team is of the calibre necessary for the pennant. The next three weeks will see some crowds at Fenway park. The pitching staff is in good shape, the infield is working well and the outfield, "always one of the best in the country," is playing true to form.

E. H. Hooker of New York defeated W. H. Davis of Quincy, Ill., 7-5, 7-5, in the second round of the Longwood challenge singles on Monday in the 25th annual lawn tennis tournament. McLaughlin will be on hand Wednesday to defend his title.

W. H. Cowell has been named coach at Durham Institute, Durham, N. H. Cowell was assistant in athletics at Haskell Institute, and declined an appointment as assistant at Carlisle.

Rifle shooting is booming throughout the country and a greatly increased interest is noted in markmanship. Many state teams are entered for the national tournament at Jacksonville, Florida, in October. The government, fostering the tournament, is going to unexpected lengths to stimulate the sport. The National Rifle association of America, with offices in Washington, has begun a campaign for 100,000 members at $2 each, the receipts to be used in an attempt to bring shooting up to the plane of base ball and football.

The Blue Hills in taking the lead in West Quincy Twilight league did the unexpected in forcing the Cubs into second place. By arrangements of managers, games frequently count for more than one point. The Cubs lost a game counting three points.

CHAPTER XIII.

The Convalescent.

After a few more days in the Morris chair—days during which he was idly contented when Margery was with him, and vaguely dissatisfied when she was not—Griswold was permitted to go below stairs, where he met, for the first time since the Grierson roof had given him shelter, the master of Mereside.

The little visit to Jasper Grierson's library was not prolonged beyond the invalid's strength; but notwithstanding its brevity there were inert currents of antagonism evolved which Margery, present and endeavoring to serve as a lightning arrester, could neither ground nor turn aside.

Griswold took away from the rather constrained ice-breaking in the banker's library a renewed resolve to cut his obligation to Jasper Grierson as short as possible. How he should begin again the mordant struggle for existence was still an unsolved problem. Of the one-thousand-dollar spending fund there remained something less than half; for a few weeks or months he could live and pay his way; but after that. . . . Curiously enough the alternative of another attack upon the plutocratic dragon did not suggest itself. That, he told himself, was an experiment tried and found wanting. But in any event, he must not outstay his welcome at Mereside; and with this thought in mind he crept downstairs daily after the library episode, and would give Margery no peace because she would not let him go abroad in the town.

"'How sharper than a serpent's tooth it is to have a thankless'—what shall I say—patient, or guest, or friend?" she laughed, garbling the quotation to fit the occasion.

"Shakespeare said 'child,'" he suggested mildly.

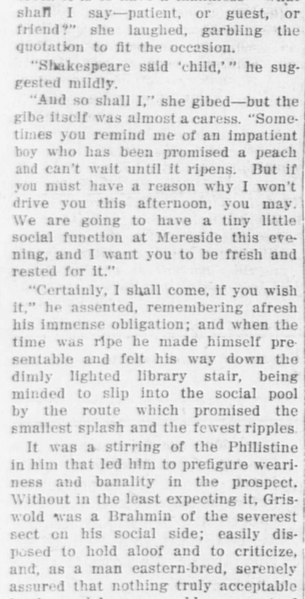
"And so shall I," she gibed—but the gibe itself was almost a caress. "Sometimes you remind me of an impatient boy who has been promised a peach and can't wait until it ripens. But if you must have a reason why I won't drive you this afternoon, you may. We are going to have a tiny little social function at Mereside this evening, and I want you to be fresh and rested for it."

"Certainly, I shall come, if you wish it," he assented, remembering afresh his immense obligation; and when the time was ripe he made himself presentable and felt his way down the dimly lighted library stair, being minded to slip into the social pool by the route which promised the smallest splash and the fewest ripples.

It was a stirring of the Philistine in him that led him to prefigure weariness and banality in the prospect. Without in the least expecting it, Griswold was a Brahmin of the severest sect on his social side; easily disposed to hold aloof and to criticize, and, as a man eastern-bred, serenely assured that nothing truly acceptable in the social sense could come out of the Nazareth of the West.

For this cause he was properly humiliated when he entered the spacious double drawing-rooms and found them so comfortably crowded by a throng of conventionally clothed and conventionally behaved guests that he was immediately able to lose himself—and any lingering trace of self-consciousness—in a company which, if appearances were to be trusted, was western only by reason of Wahaska's location on the map.

And the charming young hostess . . . Hitherto he had known her only as his benefactress and the thoughtful caretaker for his comfort. But now, at this first sight of her in the broader social field, she shone upon and dazzled him. Admitting that the later charm might be subtly sensuous—he refused to analyze it too closely—it was undeniable that it warmed him to a newer and a stronger life; that he could bask in its generous glow like some hibernating thing of the wild answering to the first thrilling of the springtide. True, Miss Grierson bore little resemblance to any ideal of his past imaginings. She might even be the Aspasia to Charlotte Farnham's Saint Cecilia. But, even so, was not the daughter of Axiochus well beloved of men and of heroes?



"You Have Many Missions, Miss Margery."

It was some little time afterward, and Jasper Grierson, stalking like a grim and rather unwilling master of ceremonies among his guests, had gruffly introduced three or four of the men, when Griswold gladly made room in the window seat for his transformed and glorified mistress of the fitnesses. As had happened more than once before, her nearness intoxicated him; and while he made sure now that the charm was at least partly physical, its appeal was none the less irresistible.

"Are you dreadfully tired?" she asked, adding quickly: "You mustn't let us make a martyr of you. It's your privilege to disappear whenever you feel like it."

"Indeed, I'm not at all tired," he protested. "It is all very comforting and homelike; so vastly—" he hesitated, seeking thoughtfully for the word which should convey his meaning without laying him open to the charge of patronizing superciliousness, and she supplied it promptly.

"So different from what you were expecting; I know. You have been thinking of us as barbarians—outer barbarians, perhaps—and you find that we are only harmless provincials. But really, you know, we are improving. I wish you could have known Wahaska as it used to be."

"It is all very grateful and delightful to me," he confessed, at length. "I have been out of the social running for a long time, but I may as well admit that I am shamelessly epicurean by nature, and an ascetic only when the necessities drive."

"I know," she assented, with quick appreciation. "An author has to be both, hasn't he?—keen to enjoy, and well hardened to endure."

He turned upon her squarely.

"Where did you ever learn how to say such things as that?" he demanded.

It was an opening for mockery and good-natured raillery, but she did not make use of it. Instead, she let him look as deeply as he pleased into the velvety eyes when she said: "It is given to some of us to see and to understand where others have to learn slowly, letter by letter. Surely, your own gift has told you that, Mr. Griswold?"

"It has," he acknowledged. "But I have found few who really do understand."

"Which is to say that you haven't yet found your other self, isn't it? Perhaps that will come, too, if you'll only be patient—and not expect too many other gifts of the gods along with the one priceless gift of perfect sympathy."

"When I find the one priceless gift, I shall confidently expect to find everything else," he asserted, still held a willing prisoner by the bewitching eyes.

She laughed softly. "You'll be disappointed. The gift you demand will preclude some of the others; as the others would certainly preclude it. How can you be an author and not understand that?"

"I am not an author, I am sorry to say," he objected. "I have written but the one book, and I have never been able to find a publisher for it."

"But you are not going to give up?"

"No; I am going to rewrite the book and try again—and yet again, if needful. It is my message to mankind, and I mean to deliver it."

"Bravo!" she applauded, clapping her hands in a little burst of enthusiasm which, if it were not real, was at least an excellent simulation. "It is only the weak ones who say, 'I hope.' For the truly strong hearts there is only one battle cry, 'I will!' When you get blue and discouraged you must come to me and let me cheer you. Cheering people is my mission, if I have any."

Griswold's pale face flushed and the blood sang lilingly in his veins. He wondered if she had been tempted to read the manuscript of the book while he was fighting his way back to consciousness and life. If they had been alone together, he would have asked her. The bare possibility set all the springs of the author's vanity upbubbling within him. There and then he promised himself that she should hear the rewriting of the book, chapter by chapter. But what he said was out of a deeper and worthier underthought.

"You have many missions, Miss Margery; some of them you choose, and some are chosen for you."

"No," she denied; "nobody has ever chosen for me."

"That may be true, without making me a false prophet. Sometimes when we think we are choosing for ourselves, chance chooses for us; oftener than not, I believe."

She turned on him quickly, and for a single swiftly passing instant the velvety eyes were deep wells of soberness with an indefinable underdepth of sorrow in them. Griswold had a sudden conviction that for the first time in his knowing of her he was looking into the soul of the real Margery Grierson.

"What you call 'chance' may possibly have a bigger and better name," she said gravely.

Some little time after this Raymer, who had been one of the men introduced by Jasper Grierson, turned up again in the invalid's corner. Raymer suggested the smoking-room and a cigar, and Griswold went willingly.

From that on the path to better acquaintance was the easiest of short cuts, even as the mild cigar which Raymer found in his pocket case paved the way for a return of the smoker's zest in the convalescent. Without calling himself a reformer, the young ironmaster proved to be a practical sociologist. Wherefore, when Griswold presently mounted his own sociological hobby, he was promptly invited to visit the Raymer foundry and machine works, to the end that he might have some of his theories of the universal oppression of wage earners charitably modified.

"Of course, I don't deny that we're a long way from the milennium yet," was Raymer's summing up of the conditions in his own plant. "But I do claim that we are on a present-day, living footing. So far as the men understand loyalty, they are loyal; partly to my father's memory; partly, I hope, to me. We have never had a strike or an approach to one, or a disagreement that could not be adjusted amicably. Whether these conditions can be maintained after we double our capacity and get in a lot of new blood, I can't say. But I hope they can."

"You are enlarging?" said Griswold.

Raymer waited until the only other man in the smoking den had gone back to the drawing-rooms before he said: "Yes; I caught the fever along with the rest of them a few weeks ago, and I'm already beginning to wish that I hadn't."

"You are afraid of the market?"

"N-no; times are good, and the market—our market, at least—is daily growing stronger. It is rather a matter of finances. I am an engineer, as my father was before me. When it comes to wrestling with the money devil, I'm outclassed from the start."

"There are a good many more of us in the same boat," said Griswold, leaving an opening for further confidences if Raymer chose to make them. But the young ironmaster was looking at his watch, and the confidences were postponed.

"I'm keeping you up, when I dare say you ought to be in bed," he protested; but Griswold held him long enough to ask for a suggestion in a small matter of his own.

Now that he was able to be about, he was most anxious to relieve Miss Grierson and her father of the charge and care of one whose obligation to them was already more than mountain-high; did Raymer happen to know of some quiet household where the obligated one could find lodging and a simple table?

Raymer, taking time to think of it, did know. Mrs. Holcomb, the widow of his father's bookkeeper, owned her own house in Shawnee street. It was not a boarding house. The widow rented rooms to two of Mr. Grierson's bank clerks, and she was looking for another desirable lodger. Quite possibly she would be willing to board the extra lodger. Raymer himself would go and see her about it.

"It is an exceedingly kind-hearted community, this home town of yours," Mr. Raymer," was the convalescent's leave-taking, when he shook hands with the ironmaster at the foot of the stairs; and that was the thought which he took to bed with him after Raymer had gone to make his adieux to the small person who, in Griswold's reckoning, owned the kindest of kind hearts.

All Sorts of Neckpieces

Just how it happened is one of those things that cannot be explained, but in this year of grace May and June beheld the summer girl (and the matron) bedecking themselves with light neckpieces of fur. No matter how summery the gown and hat, the thin silk hose and light, low shoes, a scarf of white fox hugged the throats of about nine out of ten of those who keep up with the merry pace of fads.

In the wake of summer furs—which looked especially well with white turbans—came other neckwear, and now there is a limitless variety from which to choose, with a growing demand to inspire its expansion. Next after white fox come the angora pieces. These are shown in short collars, like that at the upper right in the picture, and in short boas. Smart big pompons made of the fur, to match these neckpieces, are worn on small hats and turbans. The little angora collar shown here is finished with an ermine tail and head, and ties of ribbon.

The ostrich boa in white and black, in all white, or in white with a color matching the suit, cannot be said to take second place, although it followed the neckpiece of fur in popular favor. Just now it is in more general demand than any other and heads the list of favorite neckpieces. The newest ostrich boas are short and finished with long tassels of narrow silk braid. Nestling in the long and dainty fibers are beautiful millinery roses in a small cluster, or a single rose and bud shows off to wonderful advantage so placed. These ruffs are fastened with tassels hanging at the back. Occasionally a short neckpiece of white marabou is seen, but the longer flue of the ostrich makes it the favorite.

Besides furs and feathers there are the collars of malines and nets made in variety so great that everyone may be suited.

Favorite Fashions in Parasols

As varied as the flowers of the field, and as gay, your parasol this season may be of any shape or color you choose. If you incline to a plain one-color design, then select one of the new shapes—a pagoda parasol or one of those flat, Chinese-looking affairs.

These shapes and the small umbrella style, like those shown in the picture, are displayed in the shops in green, cerise, blue, tan, and other colors, banded with black-and-white stripes or with Dresden designs in flowered borders. Black-and-white checkerboard silks have been used with fine effect on both white and colored models. Vivid green, bordered with black-and-white stripes, and a darker green with a wide band of Dresden ribbon inserted, are among the most attractive and the most useful designs and have been almost as successful as the various black-and-white combinations so popular.

In the black one at the left of the picture, the bands of white silk are let in with hemstitching in heavy white silk. It adds immensely to the attraction of the bands.

The parasol of black-and-white stripe bordered with plain black probably stands at the head of the list of popular favorites. It looks well with any costume and is as sparkling as the summer sunshine.

It is a good idea to try the effect of colored silk in the complexion before making a choice of one. But white or black and white are safe—they always throw a pretty light upon the skin.

IS HOME FROM FAR OFF EGYPT

Dr. Harold Curtis Here To Buy Supplies For Himself And Partner

DENTISTS FOR BRITISH ARMY

Dr. Harold Curtis, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jesse F. Curtis of Upland road, arrived home unexpectedly from Alexandria, Egypt, this morning. Dr. Curtis was home on a brief vacation a year ago and it was not expected that he would return to Quincy again for some years. This time however, he came largely on business and will remain but a short time.

At the present time there are upwards of 10,000 British officers and soldiers quartered in Alexandria and Dr. Curtis and Dr. Bonney have been awarded a contract by the British government to care for the teeth of officers and soldiers while they are quartered in Alexandria, preparatory to going to the front.

Finding it impossible to obtain the necessary supplies for their business from Germany, as heretofore, it was necessary for him to come to America for them. These supplies he will take back with him when he returns and he is also planning to take two automobiles at the same time.

Dr. Curtis and Dr. Bonney are the only two English speaking dentists in Alexandria and they have a very large practice. They plan to attend to their regular practice in addition to the contract with the British government.

DR. BONNEY IS MARRIED

The marriage of Dr. Albion Bonney of Alexandria, Egypt and Miss Adeline Hill, an Illinois girl, has been announced. The ceremony was performed three weeks ago.

Dr. Bonney left Quincy three years ago to practice dentistry, and has been most successful. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. H. Bonney of Quincy Point.

CUSHING OPTIMISTIC.

"It is rather interesting to note that most of the ex-Federal office holders are against me," said Lieut. Gov. Grafton D. Cushing in discussing his campaign for the Republican nomination for Governor. "That makes it quite evident, I think, that what has usually been designated as the Republican machine is working against me along the old-fashioned political lines."

Mr. Cushing, who is determined to run his own campaign in his own way, declared he is perfectly confident that he will defeat Mr. McCall at the primaries.

"I know," he continued, "that the demand for my nomination is spontaneous. There is no doubt at all about the artificiality of Mr. McCall's campaign. It is easy to make exaggerated claims. I am not conducting my campaign that way, however. Those who are looking out for my interests in the various sections of the State are intimate friends upon whom I can rely.

"Last year I predicted that I would get more votes at the primaries than my two opponents together. Therefore I believe I am justified in holding that the voters prefer my method of campaigning—a method which is open and truthful to the old fashioned method.

"I simply want to meet the voters personally. Then they can size me up. I believe that is the dignified way to seek support. I have met thousands of men in all parts of the State, and I think I can fairly say that there is a real honest demand for my nomination."

Since he has assumed the duties of Governor, by reason of the absence of Gov. Walsh, Mr. Cushing has had many strenuous days. Mounted and on foot he has followed the maneuvres of various military organizations, and several times he has camped with them. He has another strenuous week before him which will end with the Republican picnic in Springfield Saturday.

He maintains that his journeys about the State only serve to increase his confidence in his nomination.

COAST DEFENSE.

The recent statement of Gen. Goethals that he regards both New York City and San Francisco as too strongly fortified to permit the entrance of any hostile naval force into the harbors is calculated to carry reassurance to nervous residents of our large coast cities. In reinforcing his point the general asked: "Did the American fleet ever get into the harbor of Santiago? Did the Japanese fleet ever force its way into Port Arthur? Are the French and British ships yet inside the Dardanelles? The modern tendency in guns for coast defense is to develop the mortar type, and the United States has been busy at that task. Guns on battleships cannot be elevated sufficiently to outrange the guns in the forts, while the mortars have a destructive power which would send shells crashing through the deck of battleships in fatal fashion. Nor are our gunners untrained, as is admitted the world over. "No," says Gen. Goethals, "the enemy's ship never will enter our big ports; they will never get within gunshot."—Springfield Republican.

HIS OBJECTION.

Judge—Have you anything to say before sentence is passed?

Burglar—The only thing I'm kickin' about is bein' identified by a man that kep' his head under the bedclothes the whole time. That's wrong.—Philadelphia Evening Ledger.

RECOVER MORE STOLEN GOODS

A wooden box containing a dozen cans of chocolate was found Sunday on the premises of Edgar G. Cleaves on Cottage avenue and turned over to the police Monday. The goods are thought to have been some of those stolen from the trolley freight depot early Sunday morning and were probably hidden just before Patrolman Corbett "spotted" the two men concerned.

Although the men proved to be faster of foot than the officer and were able to make a getaway in the rear of Music hall buildings a clue has been uncovered which may lead to their arrest within a few days. The three bags of flour and the hemp bag containing lump sugar left behind by the men have been claimed by the consignees.

EXPLAINS METHOD OF G. E. WILLIAMS

The method of the late George E Williams of Braintree in dealing with insurance policies is explained in the report of Courtenay Crocker, as master, filed in the suit of Charles A. Burditt against Harry R. Stanley, a lawyer, as administrator of the estate of his father, Charles Stanley, seeking to have the defendant deliver for cancellation a note for $3,500.

Burditt was formerly a member of the firm of Burditt & Williams, hardware dealers, and retired in 1907, at the age of 79. He took out a 10-year endowment policy for $5,000 in the company in 1901, through Williams. When the ninth premium was due he arranged to have the cash surrender value of the policy held as security for its payment. The amount was $549.60. He gave Williams a note for that amount with interest at 5 per cent., the report says.

Later the amount of the note was changed from $549.60 to $3,500 and the date of the note was changed by erasures. That note Williams then gave to the late Mr. Stanley for a loan of $3,500, and he also gave Stanley the insurance policy Burditt had turned over to him at the time he had made the note. In 1911 Williams got the policy from Stanley on the representation that Burditt was to make a payment on the loan. Stanley never got the policy back. Interest on the $3500 not was paid up to April, 1913, and Williams died on July 28, 1913.

As Williams wrote the company there was no change in the policy which would mature Oct. 13, 1911, the company sent him a check for $5126.25, which he turned over to Burditt. The latter called Williams's attention to the fact that the company had not deducted the $549.60 which he owed for the ninth premium and Williams said he could settle with him, and so Burditt gave Williams back a check for $604.56, which included that sum and two years' interest.

In October following William's death Stanley wrote to Burditt demanding payment of interest on the note for $3500 which he held as administrator. That was the first intimation Burditt had of the existence of the $3500 note. He denied making it.

QUINCY FIRM WINS AWARD

On the bid for 2,000 square yards on Hancock street, work upon which was commenced Monday morning, Simpson Bros., got the contract on a bid of $1.24 a square yard. This company raised its bid on new contract to $1.34 a square yard which was two cents higher than the bid of Henry Lavelle who was awarded the contract. The several bids opened this morning were as follows:

SAYS ENGLAND STILL ASLEEP

BY ED. L. KEEN.
(United Press Staff Correspondent)

London, July 17: (By Mail)—The only way in which England can hope to conquer Germany is by conscription—"national service" as he calls it—says the Rt. Rev. Michael Furse, Bishop of Pretoria, in a letter written just after his return to London from a month's visit among the British troops in Northern France and Flanders.

He paints a gloomy picture of the present situation, due to the lamentable lack of munitions as well as men in the British front. But for the spirit of the individual soldier he has only words of praise.

"I never doubted that the spirit of our troops," he says, "was as fine as I had been told it was; but I never realized what this meant until I had lived in it and with it. It is amazing, and all the more so when you realize that this spirit is there in spite of the fact that the men who show it feel in their bones that somehow the nation is not backing them as the nation could and should. The reason is not far to seek.

"After fighting desperately day and night for days and weeks with frightful losses, the men who are left are dog tired and need a rest. When they are 'pulled out' to get this rest, and after three days are sent back into the firing line again the only conclusion they can draw is that there are not enough troops available to take their places.

"When, night after night and day after day the men in the trenches know that for every one hand grenade or rifle grenade or trench mortar bomb which they throw at the enemy they will get back in answer anything from five to ten, then the conclusion they draw is also obvious—namely, that the nation does not somehow realize the situation, or, if it does, has not made it its business to supply what is necessary.

"Man for man they know that they have nothing to fear either from German infantry or cavalry; they have proved it again and again. But they know also that it is little short of murder for a nation to ask men, however full of the right spirit to face an enemy amply equipped with big guns and the right kind of ammunition unless they are at least equipped with equally effective munitions of war.

"There can be only one impression left on the minds of men in such a case, and that is, that somehow or other the nation does not know the truth, does not understand, and is not backing them, for knowing the old country as they do, they have no doubt that if Germany can produce these things we can if we will. And yet, in spite of it all, they carry on, they keep cheery, they do their best, they die gaily.

"The fact is that as a nation we are just gambling on this spirit. We know it to be there; we recognize it as the finest thing in the world; we believe it is unconquerable, whatever happens.

"So it is; but it will not win the war alone. It is this spirit, backed by guns and high explosives—legitimate munitions of war—which is going to smash this enemy of ours, and nothing else. Let no one think that we are going to do it by descending to the level of the German Imperial Staff and using any sort of gas. This talk of reprisals by gas (perhaps next we shall hear of reprisals by poisoning water supplies!) is simply another method of chloroforming the nation and blinding its eyes to the real issue.

"The British soldier might well ask: 'Why should I be punished for refusing to go into the trenches because my pay is not raised a penny an hour, and the other fellow be allowed to strike and then be cajoled into going back to work by the special visit of a Cabinet Minister and the promise of extra pay? Why should I have to stick it out, night after night and day after day, in water and mud up to my knees, when the other fellow (who is only doing another part of the same job) can make his own conditions as to hours of work?'

"But the men at the front are cherry because their consciences are at rest. They know they have done and are doing the right thing. When the whole nation knows itself to be under orders and knows that it is doing the right thing we shall see the same spirit of gay surrender at home.

"National Service will be welcomed once the nation learns the truth that thousands of the finest and most gallant lives that the Empire has ever produced are being thrown away because the nation has not yet realized that it is at war.

"There is only one way to make the nation realize this fact, and that is by bringing every member of it under the direct orders of the State for one purpose, and one purpose only. Nothing else matters today."

WORST IS YET TO COME.

Los Angeles, Cal., July 27—John Lapique, a lawyer of this city, is an unfortunate man. Because of his strenuous efforts in a recent will contest case the judge sent him to jail for 250 days for contempt of court. On top of that 10 charges of criminal libel were filed by persons against whom he made accusations during the litigation. He has just been convicted on one charge and awaits trial on the others. He hopes to get out of jail some day.

RESCUE DROWNING BOY OFF PUBLIC BATH HOUSE

George Mendizza, 7 Years of Age, Taken From Water After Lying Unconscious Beneath Waves For Nearly Five Minutes

REVIVES AFTER HALF HOUR TREATMENT

George Mendizza, seven year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Mendizza of 89 Edinborough road, Quincy Point, went under while bathing in Town River, off the public bath house about 2.30 Tuesday afternoon. A woman who was on shore became suspicious that all was not well when he failed to appear and shouted for help.

Edward Berman, an attendant at the bath house, was on the raft, when he heard the shouts of the woman. He came ashore and organized a searching party.

Several men and half a dozen women who were in bathing suits joined in combing the waters and almost five minutes after the boy sank he was found entirely submerged and unconscious in three feet of water by Mrs. Edward McLaughlin of Germaine avenue.

Artificial respiration was immediately given by John Starr, keeper of the bath house, his wife, and Ben Smith of the navy. The telephone, installed but a few days ago, carried its first emergency call to Dr. W. J. Middleton and the police station. The physician and the pulmotor sent by Sergt. Larkin arrived about the same time. A hasty examination of the lad convinced Dr. Middleton he would not need the pulmotor.

Work reviving Mendizza was immediately commenced and at the end of half an hour he was carried to the rooms occupied by Keeper Starr. An hour later he had recovered sufficiently to be taken to his home where he is under the doctor's care.

The tide was pretty low when the boy sank from sight and there were few people in bathing. Exhaustion is thought to have been the cause.

The accident is the most serious at the bath house in three years. It was the first time it was necessary to apply artificial respiration in several seasons.

INJURED MAN BELIEVED TO BELONG HERE

The man who was hit by an electric car at Whitehead station, Nantasket beach, on Sunday evening, is thought to be Hugh McIntosh of Quincy. The man was severely injured, was picked up unconscious and for nearly 48 hours lay unconscious and unidentified at the Massachusetts General Hospital, Boston.

A few minutes after he was injured he mentioned the name of Hugh McIntosh and spoke of an address not known to the hospital authorities. Tuesday night he regained partial consciousness and said he lived at Blackmore's boarding house, 186 East Howard street, Quincy. Inquiry by Patrolman Broberg showed that a man named McIntosh lived there and has been missing since Saturday night. Another boarder went to Boston and identified him as probably McIntosh. He was not certain, however.

Little is known of McIntosh except that he has worked in Quincy for several months. Among letters found in his trunk was one apparently from his mother at, 18 Tabor street, South Richmond, Va. The other address mentioned by McIntosh, South Calhoun street, may also be in Richmond. Postitive identification will probably be made today.

TO PARTICIPATE IN BIG PICNIC

Quincy branch, Irish National Foresters, met in Franklin hall Tuesday evening, and voted to take part in the picnic to be held by the organization at Russell park, Cambridge, on Labor Day. Many members plan to attend.

Chief Ranger Thomas Rogan of the branch presided at the meeting. The reports of the secretary and treasurer showed the society in a flourishing condition.

GIVES LECTURE TO MACHINE GUN COMPANY

Sergt. John Sullivan, U. S. A. retired, who recently came north after long service at Panama, lectured on the nomenclature of the army rifle before the Machine Gun Company in the Alpha building armory Tuesday evening. Lieut. George H. Downes, commanding officer, and 14 men were absent, all performing an ordered tour of duty at Fort Ethan Allen, Essex Junction, Vt. Practically all other members of the company were present.

Sergt. A. E. Duncan took the men through the manual of arms. It was the first drill with the rifles issued by the state to the company for parade purposes. There were several visitors who enjoyed the lecture and drill.

MAYOR BOOSTS CITY OF QUINCY

Will Be Chief Speaker At Banquet Tonight

Seattle, Wash., July 28—Mayor Campbell of Quincy arrived in this city Tuesday night to attend the banquet this evening of the Rotary club at which he will be the principal speaker. Mayor Campbell's subject will be "The New England Exposition of 1920." The Mayor will also have something to say about his home city, which occupies a prominent place in the history of the United States. He expects to leave for home this week and will arrive in Quincy about Aug. 5.

MEET HIS HONOR.

Miss Annie Z White of Copeland street and Miss Catherine Hussey of the Parkway who are visiting the Exposition, wrote home that they met Mayor Campbell on Massachusetts Day.

BOARD OF TRADE OFF ON OUTING

Large Number Set Sail This Afternoon

Houghs Neck re-echoed with the merry shouts of the members of the Board of Trade this afternoon when the latter boarded their steamer and at two o'clock set sail on the annual outing. One feature of the trip which deserves especial mention will be the visit to the fishing grounds, where it is expected many amateur Isaac Waltons will show their skill.

It is possible for some of the experts with hook and line to pull in anything from a minnow to a small sized whale, and it is possible for those who participate to bring home with them some of the prizes offered.

For instance the first man who sees a sea serpent two hours after starting will be given a bottle of Bromo Seltzer. For the first fish caught something will be given which the possessor will be able to pawn. For the largest fish caught the lucky man may be given a watch and he may not. It is uncertain about this prize. The man who tells the best fish story and gets away with it will be given anything he wants.

On the trip from Houghs neck to the fishing grounds there will be an entertainment by the "18th Amendment Band." Besides playing the members of the band will sing and dance. After a few hours with the fish the steamer will head for Bass Point. In case of hunger or thirst before the dinner is served there will be spring water in abundance on the boat and refreshments will be served On arrival at Bass Point dinner will be served at the Bass Point house.

During the dinner some of the best of cabaret show girls will entertain. After dinner those who do not decide to remain behind to enjoy some of the various amusements with which Bass Point abounds will take the steamer for a moonlight sail to Quincy Bay.

While it is not the intention of the committee to have much speechmaking a number of prominent politicians of the state will be present on the outing. Some of the politicians will take in the whole trip and the others will join the party on its arrival at Bass Point. Among those who have notified the committee they will be present are candidates for the G. O. P., nomination for Governor, ex-Cong. Samuel W. McCall and Lieut. Gov. Grafton Cushing, Guy A. Ham, candidate for Lieutenant Governor, Dr. W. L. Faxon candidate for the Governor's Council, Senator Louis F. R. Langelier, Representatives Charles A. Ericson and Edward J. Sandberg.

ACTING MAYOR TAKES NO ACTION

The seven days allowed Acting Mayor Crane in which to approve or disapprove the two resolves sent down by the City Council a week ago in regard to supplementary budgets on water and for Willard street expired at 10.30 this morning. The Acting Mayor states that the supplementary water budget can just as well wait until the Mayor returns as it is simply a matter of transfer. In regard to Willard street the Acting Mayor said: "It seems to me that the initiative in this matter should be taken by the City Council as they have already considered the matter."

DROPPED FROM LIST.

The city clerkis busy at the present time sending out notices to those voters who were on the voting lists last year whose names have been dropped for any reason by the assessors this year. In former times the only way a voter had of knowing if his name was still on the voting lists was to consult them. Under the election law as amended the city clerk is obliged to notify every person whose name was on last year's list, who has not been assessed this year.

POLICE SEEK MAN WHO IS SAID TO HAVE ENTICED GIRL INTO SWAMP

Couple Mysteriously Disappear When Patrol Wagon With Officers Reaches Scene

The police today scoured the Greenleaf street section for a man who residents say attempted to entice a young girl into the swamp near Woodward avenue. The circumstances aroused the entire section and men and women joined in the hunt.

The incident took place about 11 o'clock and the man said to be concerned is reported to have been loitering on Woodward avenue the greater part of the morning. His actions made residents so suspicious that several of them watched him closely.

Just before 11 he was seen to go down Greenleaf street leading by the hand a girl about nine years of age. They stopped near the wall, on the top of the 20 foot embankment which leads to the swamp. He next took her over the wall and started down the steep slope. The girl made no outcry.

A woman shouted and a man who heard her looked across his lawn and saw the man and girl. He telephoned the police and Sergt. Johnson sent the police auto and several men to the scene.

They made a serch of the vicinity and carefully examined the swamp but the girl and man had disappeared. The women furnished a good description of the man. They were unable to say much about the girl other than she was dressed in a gray gingham dress, wore a straw hat and appeared to be about nine years old.

After the police returned to headquarters, the man for whom they were searching appeared on Woodward avenue, according to residents. Sergt. Larkin who took charge of the desk, at the suggestion of Acting Mayor Crane, then assigned an officer in citizens clothes to patrol the vicinity and fully investigate the case.

BUSY WEEK FOR REBECCA WISWELL TENT

The members of Rebecca Wiswell tent, Daughters of Veterans, have started a movement to decorate annually the grave of Rebecca Wiswell, a Civil War nurse in whose memory the tent is named, and on July 29 a delegation will go to Plymouth to locate the grave. A large party is planning to make the trip. The locating of the grave will complete the biography of Rebecca Wiswell. Many facts concerning her have been gathered through references to the records of the war department and sources of private information. The tent has three photographs all taken before the war and one afterward.

The tent has also prepared a strenuous social program for this week. On Thursday the sewing circle will meet with Mrs. Annie G. Grignon on Bradford street for an all day sew and entertainment and on Saturday evening they will be the guests of Mrs. Alexis Nason, a member, who is to give a house warming at her new home on Buckley street. ## GAMMONS KING OF DIPLOMATS

Smooths Troubled Waters At Squantum Meeting

Fifty Squantum men Tuesday evening gathered at the regular meeting of the Squantum Improvement association at a special "street railway" night. All were filled to the brim with hot shot to fire at the street railway company. But when Superintendent Gammons with his six feet and more of physical force and beauty walked in and spread a genial smile over the aforesaid irate audience, the citizens were apparently as short of munitions of war as the Russians, and the battle ended with the dove of peace flying all about Mr. Gammons head. Mr. Gammons was introduced by President James H. Sumner, who presided at the meeting.

Supt. Gammons said he expected that General Manager Conway would be with him but that Mr. Conway was called unexpectedly to Brockton and could not attend. He said he would be glad to talk matters over with the Squantum residents.

He was asked if any definite plans had been drawn up by the company for the proposed switchback on Hancock street, Atlantic. He said several plans had been submitted to the company

One called for a sharp turn at the Hancock street bridge but he said this was out of the question as the raising of the outside rail for the turn would cause a rise in the road bed which would not be allowed. He said a second plan was to go several hundred yards beyond the present switch and make a turn on private land. He said that at a meeting in Boston it was determined that there was no money available this year for this improvement. He said that no figures as to the cost of this work had been submitted so far as he knew.

J. E. STANLEY FINED $10

John E. Stanley, a master plumber of Quincy, was in court this morning for doing plumbing without a permit. The original complaint charged him with violation of the regulations of the Board of Health. Judge Avery, after hearing the evidence said he would dismiss the case with the consent of the defendant on payment of $10 costs.

Because Stanley wanted to appeal a new complaint, charging him with violations of the city ordinance was drawn and he was fined $10 and appealed. The change was made because no appeal can be taken from a finding for violation of Board of Health regulations and the man was also in danger of having his registry in Quincy revoked, something the department did not insist on.

THE CITY COUNCIL.

The fight over the street orders which has been raging in the City Council for several meetings and which closed Monday evening in the acceptance of the minority report, carrying an appropriation of $20,800, must make it clear to those who have stopped to think that ward representation in the Council is highly undesirable.

It is too much to expect of any human being that he should not feel his first duty to those who elect him. All except a small number of the members of the Council are sent there by particular wards and they naturally feel that it is incumbent upon them to see to it that their wards are well treated by the city government. There is nothing dishonorable or abnormal in this: it is merely unfortunate. The natural result is log-rolling or if not this in literal form at least a compromise which is rarely for the best interests of the city.

The members of the City Council should all be elected at large and there should not be so large a Council that the voters wil be unable to make intelligent choice. A man of no particular business ability but with some political following can easily carry a ward. It is not so easy for men of small ability to carry a city. Quincy could elect a Council of seven or nine members which would be able to arrive at an intelligent solution of problems of street construction and other problems and they would not have to sit half through the summer to do it, either.

THE OLD GAME.

There was a time when candidates for political office boasted of the endorsements which they received from influential men. This is rarely the case today. Now the support of influential men is rather dreaded by the candidates, all of whom seek frantically to rest their claims upon the "peepul," assuring the latter that they have no interests to serve but those of the "peepul" and pointing the finger of scorn at their rivals because prominent men and prominent organizations have endorsed them.

It is the custom of politicians to point out that the endorsement of persons known beyond the confines of a tiny hamlet or of business men whose success has enabled them to live comfortably is a sure sign that the candidate is corrupt. One of Lieut. Governor Cushing's most recent and most foolish assertions is that his opponent for the G. O. P. nomination for governor, Samuel W. McCall, is the choice of the stand-pat machine rather than of the "peepul." Apparently this assertion has no other basis of facts than that the ex-congressman is receiving distinguished endorsement whereas those who are backing Cushing appear to be few and far between. We have the feeling, however, that the people, (not the "peepul") will not be fooled this time and that Governor Walsh's opponent will be ex-Cong. McCall.

---

It would naturally be supposed that a man convicted of murder and sentenced to prison for life would be eagor to be pardoned. Sam Bell of Little Rock, Ark., convicted of killing four of his wife's relatives and sentenced to life imprisonment is very anxious not to be pardoned. It appears that he was sentenced to life imprisonment at the first trial and at a second trial was sentenced to be electrocuted. It will be impossible to carry out the second sentence unless the governor pardons him for the crime for which he was given the life term.

MURDER MADE EASY.

To show the ease with which maniacs and criminals may obtain weapons for murder, the World purchased in Jersey City a loaded billy and a slungshot; in New York a stiletto much too efficient for the tame service of slitting magazine pages, and a long-bladed knife that would have pleased the critical eye of the late Col. Bowie; and finally a revolver and box of cartridges to be sent to an address across the Hudson.

With one exception these transactions were legal. The bravo in temporary need may pawn his stiletto and long knife; another, fancying them in a window, may enter and buy them as unredeemed pledges, and neither borrower nor broker nor buyer is amenable to law. For a loaded billy or a slungshot it would be hard to name one proper use. In New York their sale would be illegal, but in Jersey City it is not; and a few minutes' time and ferry fares make it easy to acquire them. The sale of the revolver for delivery in another state was illegal, but a direct sale in Jersey City would not have been.

Something more than enforcement of existing law is plainly necessary. New York should add to its list of deadly weapons whose sale is prohibited. New Jersey has a longer list to proscribe. We are glad to see that the officials of Jersey City, which because of its nearness is the favorite pistol mart of New York's murder-plotting or murder-willing gangsters, are anxious to remove the menace. Here is a clear case for stricter legislation for the public safety.—New York World.

MR. McCALL'S SUPPORT.

But Mr. McCall's supporters are by no means confined to the men of large affairs. The man in the street is also for him, and for reasons that are not difficult to understand. The great mass of the people have become sick and tired of political humbug. They have heard quite enough of the demagogic politician with his stock of quack nostrums. They turn, therefore, with keen pleasure to a man who preaches, and who has exemplified in his practise the old-fashioned doctrine of simple honesty, economy and efficiency in government—to a man who does not believe that human nature can be changed in the twinkling of an eye, who does not think that the chief end of the government is to hamper individual freedom by the enactment of foolish laws and who holds that we can learn something from the sum total of human experience.

We are not trying to contend that the election of Mr. McCall is going to effect a great economic change for the better. It will do nothing of the sort. But we do mean this: That the rank and file of the voters have had in recent years their fill of political flapdoodle, and a very large number see in the candidacy of a man like Mr. McCall an opportunity to write themselves down as being in favor of a government that does not promise the impossible, but sticks to those fundamentals for which government really exists. When Mr. Cushing raises the cry that the corporations are out to do him, and have chosen Mr. McCall as the instrument for the accomplishment of the deed, he is talking a kind of nonsense that merely falls on deaf ears. The time for that brand of stuff was when Eugene Noble Foss was getting away with it, not now.—Springfield Union.

The Fitchburg Sentinel recently alluded to the lack of business men in the state legislature and made some comparisons with former days that were not very complimentary to the present. It must be apparent to anybody of common-sense that somehow and in some way there should come about a change which will raise the general capacity of the legislature. When one runs over in his mind the men commonly sent to the legislature he must realize how inadequate many of them are in the training and capacity for some of the large work that comes before the legislature. They may be good fellows, honest, well-intentioned, but when it comes to an intricate, involved, immense transaction like the regeneration of a big railroad property, such as the Boston & Maine, or dealing with the skilled men behind the New Haven system, it is no great discredit to many of the legislators to say that they are hardly big enough, nor have they had the experience and training to meet such a situation.—Spencer Leader.

A YEAR OF THE GREAT WAR
BY UNITED PRESS EXPERTS

AS SEEN IN ENGLAND.
by
ED. L. KEEN
United Press Staff Correspondent.

(Article Three.)

London, July 28th:—It took John Bull ten months to discover that what he needed most was a general business manager.

Of course he has learned several other lessons, among them: that it doesn't pay to conceal the truth; that the British people resent being treated like children; that they can stand hearing bad news, and that when the situation is put before them with frankness they can actually be as patriotic as Frenchmen—or Germans.

But the one big lesson—which the Germans have taught him—is that war now-a-days is quite as much of a business as it is a science. He has seen all the old theories of warfare upset. He wasn't prepared for the change in styles. He had no idea the system of trench warfare would become so highly developed; that such an amount of high explosive shells would become necessary; that a preponderating supply of machine guns might spell all the difference between success and failure; that the Germans would introduce the use of asphyxiating gas, liquid fire, and other like agencies hitherto unrecognized in the conduct of civilized warfare—but above all that the German superiority in the new style of fighting was due to the mobilization of the entire industrial resources of the Empire coincidentally with the mobilization of soldiers.

Take the matter of machine-guns alone. The Germans concentrated upon their manufacture. Result: these weapons have practically rendered the rifle useless, and caused the slaughter of British troops, when on the offensive, in numbers entirely disproportionate to that of Germans in similar circumstances. Machine-guns cannot be improvised. The machinery for making them requires some nine months to build.

It was this question of munitions that finally brought home to the British government appreciation of the absolute necessity of mobilizing the industry of the nation if the war was to be brought to a successful conclusion. France did it early in the war, but her industrial resources, even in peace times, were exceedingly limited as compared with those of the British Empire, and today her most important industrial provinces, including 70 per cent. of her steel production, are in the hands of the enemy.

It is up to Great Britain to help not only France, but Russia, as well as herself. The driving of the Russian armies out of Galicia was due solely to their lack of ammunition.

Hitherto Britain has been concentrating upon soldiers. Now she is concentrating on munitions. "Get into the factory line and supply the firing line," has replaced on the posters the old familiar, "Your King and country need you at the front." They are even bringing back from the trenches skilled workmen whose enlistment, it is now agreed, should never have been permitted. The enrollment of volunteers for the King's army—the use of the term "Kitchener's Army" has recently been abandoned in the posters—of course continues, but the enlistment of men at all qualified to work in munition-shops is discouraged.

With the realization that organization of the country's industries for the manufacture of munitions had become imperative came appreciation of the fact that the machinery of the government was inadequate. Lord Kitchener had not only been overloaded personally, but the antiquated system of the War Office had proved itself incapable of handling the problem. So the government—mostly Prime Minister Asquith—decided to appoint a general business manager.

Lloyd George, the little Welsh solicitor who so successfully had been running the nation's finances, after a record of constructive reform legislation without parallel in history, was chosen. He was given the title of Minister of Munitions; but his commission was practically to take charge of the industries of the country. The first thing he did was to tell his fellow-countrymen the truth—the grave danger confronting the Empire through the deplorable slackness hitherto prevailing in the manufacture of the instruments of warfare. Next he brought both labor and capital into line. He got the trades unions associated with munition-making to agree to suspend during the war their rules restricting output and to bend all their energies toward the desired object; and he got the manufacturers to agree to forego all additional profits arising out of war contracts in excess of 20 per cent. To cinch matters he had Parliment put these and other regulations into legislation, including immediate government control of the workshops, and the creation of a Munitions Court with power to inflict adequate penalties for slackness, strikes, lockouts, etc. Finally, to insure an uninterrupted flow of munitions in the largest quantity possible from the United States and Canada he sent hot-foot to America one of England's ablest business men, D. A. Thomas.

Meantime, just to demonstrate, Lloyd George went out into one of the manufacturing districts where, under the old system of sub-contracting, about 10,000 shells a month were being produced, injected a little ginger, and started an output of 150,000 shells a month, which he expects to have increased to an average of 300,000. He believes that under the system already inaugurated the United Kingdom alone will soon be able to exceed the estimated product of the Central Continental Powers of 250,000 shells a day.

AS SEEN IN FRANCE.
by
WILLIAM PHILIP SIMMS.
United Press Staff Correspondent.

Paris, July 28:—When General de Maud'huy blocked the Kaiser's legions in their smashing drive for Dunkirk, Calais and Boulogne, he scored for France one of the biggest victories of the first year of the Great War.

The Germans even place this battle first in importance, and their verdict in this matter might well be taken, since they, better than anybody else, should know just what success there would have meant to them.

Whatever else a victory of the Imperial arms would have meant, it would have brought them in sight of England, the whole course of the war would have been changed and the result probably have been disastrous to the Allies' cause.

As it turned out, General de Maud'huy's success completely used up Germany's initial strength, or what was left of it after the Marne, lengthened the battlefront considerably and inaugurated the strength-sapping winter campaign in the trenches, each of these a hard blow to the Teutonic hordes. For not only were they thus doomed to months of immobilization when time was so valuable to them, but General Joffre was given time to reorganize his resources in men and material both on and back of the line, now an urgent and necessary thing.

After the battle of the Marne, in early October, the second great German offensive began: the dash for the sea. General Joffre began a similar movement about the same time, his object being to turn his opponent's right flank. A series of surprises followed. Everywhere they went in their turning movement northward, they found the Germans a little ahead of them and though at the start von Bulow's move seems to have been taken for an endeavor to turn the French left, it was now perfectly evident that the mass descent upon Paris had been transformed into an advance against the Channel ports. By the middle of October, a formidable front was presented by the Germans clear to the North Sea and the situation looked serious.

VARIED TRAINING FOR BRITISH RECRUITS

The many things that are taught the recruits for the British army keep them in training camp for a long time. Two of them are here shown learning how to swim horses across a stream, guiding them from a raft.

There are really three gates to the Channel: The Yser River, La Bassee and Arras, the last being considered by far the best since it not only opens the road to the coast but to Paris as well. Against the Prussians were General d'Urbal's Eighth Army, the British Expeditionary Force, the tattered remnants of the Belgian army and General de Maud'huy's Tenth Army, the last named holding the critical point between Albert and a point to the North of Arras, against the whole of von Bulow's command.

Military writers agree the attack on Arras was probably the critical moment of the terrific attempt of the Germans to reach the Channel coast. The bombardment of the city began Oct. 6th while General de Maud'huy, just outside the city to the eastward was holding in check the rapidly increasing army of von Bulow, the Bavarians to the north trying to outflank him.

The great battle for the possession of Arras continued until Oct. 26th, the Germans at one time entering the city. The famous Prussian Guards hammered away at the French, making some of the most desperate assaults of the war. They hoped to slash their way through to the coast, cutting off a large slice of France and what remained of Belgium, and with this territory tens of thousands of prisoners, including the entire Belgian army and the whole of the British Expeditionary Corps, not to mention seriously hampering communications between France and England.

But de Maud'huy held firm and more: he drove the Germans, including the Prussian Guard, from Arras. He kept open the lines of communication and train-load after train-load of reinforcements poured into the north of France. The Allies owe him a great debt, for his was one of the finest performances of the war.

After Arras, the Germans tried to break through on the Yser; they tried to get past Dixmude, defended by the gallant Admiral Ronarch and his daredevil Breton Marines. La Bassee saw very stubborn fighting and lastly one of the greatest engagements of the whole war came at Ypres with the British, in bulldog fashion, holding practically the whole of the line.

But after all, Arras was the main gate to the coast and had de Maud'huy failed there, the other fighting probably would not have occurred. His victory was the decisive one.

In subsequent battles had the Allies been forced back at any point reinforcements were at hand and the thing could have been remedied. The British victory at Ypres, by some said to be the biggest battle not only of this war, but of all time, was not of itself decisive since de Maud'huy had won out at Arras by October 26th, insuring the arrival of reserves all along the line as far north as the sea; and, had the British given way they very probably would have been supported by fresh troops and the German advance arrested before the coast was reached.

Thus it was de Maud'huy who held the Gate to the Sea and probably saved Dunkirk, Calais and Boulogne with all that such a victory meant for the Allies.

AS SEEN IN GERMANY.
by
CARL W. ACKERMAN
United Press Staff Correspondent.

Berlin, July 28th:—German's year of war in the west has crippled France and shamed the English. From the outset of the war, the Germans developed an initiative that gave them a superiority over their enemies, and since then, no effort of the French and British commanders, has been equal to the task of overpowering the numerically weaker Teutons.

Only once has Germany been superior in numbers to her western opponents, according to the claim of Teutonic authorities. That was during the rush through Belgium and to Paris. The superiority at that time was due to the slow mobilization of the French and the breakdown of the English plans for hurrying a large army to the continent. From the days of the Battle of the Marne, the Germans have had to fight with weaker forces than their enemies, and yet never have they been overwhelmed.

The Germans taught the French and English the secrets of defensive entrenching; the Germans revealed the superiority of siege guns over the strongest fortresses; the Germans first discovered the modern necessity for high powered shells and machine guns. All these factors of warfare were introduced by the Germans in the west. The Germans have kept ahead of their antagonists as new problem after new problem has come to the front, and the year's balance is, therefore, greatly in their favor.

Only once did the German military machine miscalculate. That was in the battle before the gates of Paris. General von Kluck was not informed that a field army had been hidden away in Paris, prepared to strike at his flank, and the German General Staff did not suppose the French army had in General Foch a great military leader capable of splitting the teutonice centre east of Paris and driving it back to the Aisne. General von Moltke, who was a sick man throughout the summer campaign, was later replaced as chief of the General Staff by General von Falkenhayn, and since then, Germany has been well satisfied with the progress of events in the west.

The retreat from Paris will go down in German history as a brilliant feat of arms because of the manner in which it was checked at the Aisne. So puzzled were the Allies by the German maneuvers that Sir John French actually reported in the early days of the Battle of the Aisne that it probably was only a rearguard action on the part of the Germans. How the Kaiser's panting troops, almost exhausted after the Marne fighting, were able to save themselves at the Aisne, will find a permanent place in the heroic tales which this war will give to history.

In the conflicts that followed the Battle of the Aisne, the Germans completely outmaneuvered their antagonists. It is customary in England to say the Germans are defeated because they didn't get to Dunkirk and Calais. If those two towns had been captured, the English would now be proclaiming victories for themselves, say the Germans because Dieppe and Havre were saved from the Kaiser's grasp. As a matter of fact, while the capture of Dunkirk and Calais would have been welcomed by the Germans, the security of those seaports is not a strategic defeat for the Germans. By retaining Antwerp and Ostend, the pressure which Germany can bring to bear on England in the peace conference after the war will be sufficient for Germany's purposes.

The French and English were able to save Dunkirk and Calais, but their offensive plans were sadly overturned by the Germans. When General Joffre started northward after the Battle of the Aisne, it was his intention to outflank the Germans, or failing that to save western Belgium and to prevent the fall of Antwerp. Sir John French's transfer of the British expeditionary force from Soissons to Ypres was for the express purpose of preventing the Germans advancing beyond Brussels. The Germans won the campaign for although they didn't reach Dunkirk and Calais, they captured Antwerp and Ostend and held

WATER RATES HAVE NO FATHER

Special Committee Feel There Has Been Mix-up

None of the special committee of the City Council appointed early in the year to investigate the water question seem willing to father some of the new rates that were announced by the commissioner just before the Mayor left for California. According to some of the members of the committee the new rates are not what they understood they were to be. In particular they have reference to that part of the meter rates which provides "For all houses occupied by more than one tenant an additional minimum charge of $4 per tenant shall be charged. There shall be no additional amount of water allowed for the additional minimum charge."

The trouble seems to be that while the committee favored this rate they did not suppose that it would be applied to houses that had been metered What they had in mind was that in tenement houses occupied by more than one family, where the service was not metered, there should be a charge of $4 for each additional tenant.

Somehow or other there was a little mixup in the announcing of the new rates, which has resulted in kicks from every quarter of the city. This rate is generally agreed to be unfair and many are refusing to pay their water bills.

The special committee has not made its report to the City Council as yet although it is said that the chairman has the report ready to submit. The general talk among the members of the City Council, who have looked into the matter, especially those members who are hard hit by the new rate is that the Council will register its protest when the matter is officially brought to its attention by the committee.

The rates are fixed by the Executive and the Council's part can only be advisory.

THE GYPSY MOTH.

State Forester Tells How To Fight Them.

A warning has been sent out by State Forester F. W. Rane against the gypsy moth pest. He says:

"Just at this time, the devastation wrought by the gypsy moth is most noticeable, as the larvae or worms are now fully matured and having passed the feeding stage, are about to transform into the pupa state. In fact, in some localities, pupation has already taken place, and in some sections of the State, moths have emerged and are laying their eggs for future crops.

"The purpose of calling the attention of the public to this subject is to explain that something can be done at the present time to repair the damage caused by the moths during the season just closing. The most effective work can be accomplished in fighting the gypsy moth pest during the fall and winter by treating the egg masses with creosote, or late in the spring, immediately after the eggs are hatched, by spraying the foliage with arsenate of lead.

"The time for determining just how destructive these moths are is now, and further, if they are very bad at present, the probabilities are that they will be equally bad or worse next season.

"The State Forester, therefore, recommends that all woodland owners look their properties over now and if they desire any advice from his office as to future methods, that an application be made to his office, stating location, acreage, etc., or send for a blank form which can be filled in and returned."

For the Children

Sons of Princeton graduates of the class of 1910 had a fine time at the recent commencement exercises of that university. Of course they are pretty small boys, but that did not detract from the enjoyment they had nor the pleasure they gave to the older folks. The little fellows were dressed in Turkish costumes and took part in the parade around the campus. They attracted a great deal of attention from the spectators and were generally acclaimed the best hit of the day. The photograph shows two of the little fellows, who are decorated with the figures "1910," which denotes the year in which their fathers were graduated.

Game of Initials.

Provide a pack of cards upon which the letters of the alphabet have been conspicuously printed. There should be but one letter on each card and more than one alphabet will be needed. Four or five would not be too many, but Q, X and Z may be omitted.

Choose a leader and have him sit where he can be plainly seen by all. He must put the pack of cards face down on a table before him, or on a book on his lap. He then calls for the name of some general, novelist, country or city, or any object he pleases, beginning with the letter which he turns up from the pack and holds up for all to see, reading it distinctly as he does so. He must name the object required before turning up the card.

Whoever in the company first names the object called for receives the card. When the cards have all been used the person holding the most has won the game. For example, the leader says, "Name a state of the Union beginning with"—here he turns up a card—"the letter 'D.'" Some one cries "Delaware" and receives the card.

"Name one of Scott's characters beginning with F."

"Name one of Dickens' novels beginning with G."

"Name a famous general beginning with G."

And so on. In case no one can give an answer the card is returned to the bottom of the pack.

Three Puzzle Birds.

Each of the following stanzas is to be completed by adding at the end of the fourth line the name of the bird described in the preceding three lines. The stars show the number of letters in the name which must rime with the second line:

What bird is fabled to bring pleasant weather,
And every sailor boy is his well wisher?
His coat is gay with many a bright hued feather,
This bird is called **********.

What bird is ever prophesying rain,
Though oft his prognostics fail?
"More wet!" he cries; "More wet, More wet!" again,
"I know the *****?

What bird is he whose humming charms the ear,
And yet whose voice perhaps is seldom heard?
His plumage gleams like gems with brilliants clear,
This is the ******* ****.

Answers.—Kingfisher, quail, humming bird.

Some Facts About Birds.

Birds are covered with feathers because they need a covering that, while it will keep them warm, will also be light, so that it will not prevent them from flying.

Ostriches have small wings because their legs are long, and the wings are not needed for running. They are only used to steady the body while running.

Birds have sharp beaks because they have no teeth, and the beak seizes, holds and divides their food.

Birds that swim under water have web feet because the spreading out of the toes of the bird brings the thin membrane between the toes into the shape of a fin, and by striking this fin against the water the bird moves itself along.

Cleaning Day.

My goodness! What a dirty place!
There's doll clothes everywhere.
No wonder that I'm in disgrace—
You bad things, though, don't care.

I'll put you on this chair to stay
While I go get a broom;
Then you'll be safely out the way
Till I clean up this room.

I wouldn't b'lieve two babies could
Get their home so sad a sight;
If I was jus' to whip you good
'Twould only serve you right.

Well, if here isn't that Nellie's dress
I looked all over for!
Here underneath this awful mess,
And with the front all tore!

And there's that nice new rubber ball
I missed the other day.
Won't it be grand if I find all
The things we've lost in play?

HOW MANY BATTLESHIPS?

Secretary Daniels And Advisers Discuss Naval Program.

By BOND P. GEDDES.
United Press Staff Correspondent.

Washington, July 28:—Two, three, four or a half dozen new battleships? This is the question being threshed out by Secretary of the Navy Daniels and two score of aides, here and abroad. Daniels, the General Board and other officials are today busily working on the naval building program to be recommended to Congress next December. They have three months to decide the question of how many new dreadnaughts Uncle Sam shall order built next year. It promises to be one of the most debated questions before the new Congress.

On Secretary Daniels' desk today are stacks of documents, masses of statistics and innumerable reports of foreign and U. S. naval officials, bearing on the battleship building program.

Every effort to keep secret the final decision reached will be made. Formal announcement will not be made until after the navy estimates have been submitted to President Wilson in October. It is probable that they will not be announced then, being deferred until presented to Congress.

There are indications at present of a most determined effort to have Secretary Daniels and the General Board, the strategy experts, at whose head is Admiral Dewey, agree unanimously on a building program. The Administration wishes to go to Congress united on recommendations for appropriations to increase the Navy. Last year the General Board recommended construction of four battleships—dreadnaughts. Because of the Treasury's condition, Daniels stood out for only two.

Financial conditions will play a great part in Congress' action, as well as that of the Department, regarding proposed new dreadnaughts. The Department also is prepared for the opposition of the Little Navy contingent in Congress, as a result of the tremendous destruction to battleships wrought by submarines in the European war.

So far all naval experts are convinced that the submarine development has not put the big battleships into the discard as engines of destruction. Secretary Daniels recently said dreadnaughts are still the backbone of the navy. With proper auxiliaries and submarine defensive flotillas, navy experts insist that the bulwark of the navy is yet the big ship.

It is regarded certain that at least two new battleships will be urged for construction by Secretary Daniels. With the popular agitation on the "preparedness" question, and its certain discussion at length in Congress, many observers of things maritime here believe the two-new-ships program will be enlarged this year. A vigorous fight is also certain from those opposing militarism, and one of the most exciting combats of the year on the navy building program is now considered a foregone conclusion.

In the process of preparing his estimates, Secretary Daniels is receiving reports from naval attaches at American embassies and legations abroad, and also a corps of naval officials assigned as observers among the European belligerents. The efficiency of the dreadnaught versus that of the submarine, mines and smaller vessels is the subject of highly scientific illumination.

Means to immunize the larger vessels from the thrusts of the underseas craft are also being studied by the naval experts. Secretary Daniels is optimistic that Yankee genius may solve the question of curbing the submarine and extend the already enormous fighting power of the dreadnaught. It is believed, however, that if some method coping successfully with the submarine is found by the United States navy it will be kept secret except in the most confidential quarters.

TAX RATE UP $1.80.

The City of Lynn announced its tax rate Tuesday as $21.80 which is an increase of $1.80 over 1914. The increase is laid to a large increase in state and county taxes. The total valuation is given as $92,120,910 an increase of $1,707,080 over 1914. During the year there has been a decrease in personal estate of $20,000. The number of polls has increased 225.

RULES FOR TABLE MANNERS

In the American Magazine Gelett Burgess writing "The Maxims of Japhet" presents the following rules for table manners:

"My son, when thou sittest at meat with a damsel, have a care how thou eatest, lest thou offend her.

"For this is the test of love whatsoever goeth into thy mouth and cometh out again, the same shall try her as with fire.

"And of these things shalt thou have a care: of the apple, and the orange, and the peach, and fruits with skins after their kind.

"The cherry and the plum and the olive and the apricot, and fruits with stones after their kind.

"The grape and the raspberry and the watermelon, and fruits with seeds after their kind, of all these things shalt thou have a care.

"And whatsoever hath seeds or skins or stones, that thou spewest out of thy mouth, these shall be an abomination unto her, unless she love thee.

"Thou shalt not help her on with her wrap whilst thou hast a cigar in thy teeth; it is abomination.

"Neither shalt thou pick thy teeth behind thy napkin; it is abomination of abominations.

"And if thou cuttest thy potato or any vegetable with a knife, thou shalt be cast out into utter darkness.

COUNTRYSIDE MAGAZINE.

The appeal of the countryside in late summer is rarely portrayed with more spirit and color than in The Countryside Magazine and Suburban Life for August. The photographic illustrations are excellent; the articles full of suggestion to all lovers of the country. The series of full page pictures, a feature of this publication, are unusually beautiful.

A Pennsylvania estate which has been made a public-private park is described by G. R. Smith. There is a good vacation story about "An Automobile Camping Trip to Maine Woods and Streams" by William Merriam Rouse, and "A Novel Good Roads Bee in a Suburban Community," by Paul Carey Maxwell, tells of a group of workers who builded better than they knew.

Some of the extremely readable articles are: "In My Own Barnyard," by Lillian A. North; "Guests that Visit Summer Flowers," by Harriet Woodward Clark; "My Growing Garden—Sober Summer," by J. Horace McFarland; and "Collecting Crooked Sticks," by Frank A. Arnold.

PREPARING FOR GRAND ARMY

Washington, D. C., July 27—Clad in a reception gown of red, white and blue, the capital city will welcome the time-worn survivors of the once powerful legions of Grant and Sherman, Meade and Sheridan at the forty-ninth annual encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, and the fiftieth anniversary of the grand review, the week beginning September 27. In the hurly-burly of patriotism at Washington on that history making occasion will be many conspicuous characters of the greatest war in the preceding century.

Col. John McElroy, past senior vice commander-in-chief of the G. A. R., who is regarded by his comrades as a veritable living encylopedia of the Civil War, its men and events is compiling a roster of the noted figures of the Sixties who are expected to attend the big encampment. It is interesting to note in this connection that the two surviving corps commanders, Maj. Gen. Granville M. Dodge of Council Bluffs, Iowa, and Maj. Gen. James H. Wilson of Wilmington, Del., are expected to be present. General Dodge commanded the noted sixteenth corps. General Wilson commanded all the cavalry between the Alleghany mountains and the Mississippi river; details of his troopers swept down through Alabama and Mississippi at the close of the war and captured Jefferson Davis.

At the head of the list of division commanders is Maj. Gen. Peter Joseph Osterhaus, who has been living for many years at Mannheim, Germany. At the time of the encampment of the G. A. R., he will come to Washington to visit his son, Admiral Hugo Osterhaus, U. S. N., and will greet his old comrades of fifty years ago. General Osterhaus stood among the splendid German officers who came to this country to serve the cause of the Union.

Another noted division commander who is expected to greet his former soldiers at the encampment is Maj. Gen. David McN. Gregg, who is auditor general of Pennsylvania. He commanded with great credit one of Sheridan's cavalry divisions.

Maj. Gen. Adelbert Ames, who commanded a division of the tenth corps, distinguishing himself at Fort Fisher and who was afterwards governor of Mississippi, and later Senator from that state, is living in retirement in Massachusetts, and is expected to come here during the encampment.

Others who are on the roster of prospective visitors are Admiral George Dewey, who was one of Admiral Farragut's young officers, gaining distinction in the attack upon Port Hudson; Maj. Gen. Nelson A. Miles, who entered the service as first lieutenant and became colonel of the 61st New York Volunteers, and who as a brigade commander delivered at Sunderlands Station, Va., the momentous blow that cut General Lee's last railroad connection and compelled the surrender of Petersburg and Richmond; Admiral Colby M. Chester, a young officer of Farragut's squadron; Lieut. Gen. S. M. B. Young, who rose from an enlisted man to be colonel and brevet brigadier general, and then entered the regular army, being retired in 1904 with the rank of lieutenant general. He is now governor of the U. S. Soldiers Home at Washington.

Col. John L. Clem, Quartermaster Corps, U. S. Army, the only survivor of the Civil War now on active list of the army, is stationed at Washington and is taking a lively interest in the arrangements for the 49th encampment of the G. A. R. Colonel Clem was baptized in the fire of battle as a drummer boy in the sanguinary contest at Shiloh. He had many thrilling experiences, and because of his undaunted valor in the "hornets' nest" at Chickamauga Generals Rosecrans and Thomas bestowed upon him the title, "Drummer Boy of Chickamauga," which he proudly wears to this day. Prior to the battle of Chickamauga he wore the cognomen, "Johnny Shiloh."

Another drummer boy of the rebellion who will be present is Abram Springsteen, who was but 10 years of age when he entered the service. He will have charge of a drum, fife and bugle corps of 100 sons and grandsons of union veterans in the Grand Review at the G. A. R encampment.

Maj. Gen. J. Warren Keifer of Ohio has promised to attend the encampment. He wore the double stars of his rank in two wars, and is still active. He commanded a brigade and division in the fighting sixth corps in the Civil War, and was commander of a division of the seventh army corps in the war with Spain. General Keifer served several terms in Congress and was one time speaker of the House of Representatives. He declared recently that he is ready and willing to go to war for Uncle Sam if his services are needed.

MERCHANT MARINE.

Merchant vessels built in the United States and officially numbered by the Bureau of Navigation, Department of Commerce, during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1915, were 1226 of 215,711 gross tons compared with 1291 of 311,578 gross tons for the fiscal year 1914.

During the past ten months, however, under the Ship Registry Act of August 18, 1914, to the American merchant fleet, 147 foreign-built vessels of 528,907 gross tons have been added, making the total for the year from both sources 1,373 vessels of 744,618 gross tons.

This tonnage is the largest annual addition to the American merchant fleet in the history of the United States. In 1908 the total increase was 718,683 gross tons, in 1907, it was 596,708 gross tons and in 1855 it was 586,102 gross tons.

The losses to the merchant fleet for the past year have not all been reported, but for the first nine months they number 1062 vessels of 195,052 gross tons.

RENDERED AID TO AMERICANS

Submarine Took Care of Them After Sinking Leelanaw

TOWED BOATS FIFTY MILES

Washington Feels Relieved by Report of Consul General That Rules of Visit and Search Were Carried Out to the Letter—Case Requires Further Legal Arguments

Washington, July 28.—Consul General Skinner at London reported that the captain of the American steamer Leelanaw had stated to the American consular agent at Kirkwall that ample time was given him and his crew to leave the vessel before fired on, that the crew went on board the German submarine, and their boats were taken in tow for fifty miles before they were landed.

The rules of visit and search evidently were followed to the letter by the commander of the German submarine, according to official reports thus far received, and due precautions taken for the safety of the crew. Previous messages had reported that the crew landed at Kirkwall in the Leelanaw's own boats.

The saving of the crew removed from the case dangerous aspects which might otherwise have brought about another climax in the relations between the two governments. There is an absence of tension, for the case is regarded by officials as a diplomatic controversy which will require further legal arguments such as were made in the case of the William P. Frye. Liability probably will be admitted again by Germany, it is thought.

The fact that Germany is disputing the meaning of the treaty of 1828 in the Frye case has led to the belief that a similar position will be taken by the Geman foreign office in the present instance.

Under the circular note sent by Germany to neutral governments, which reached here May 11, an offer to arbitrate disputes which might arise in connection with attacks on neutral vessels was made.

There is discussion on the possibility that in the event of a deadlock on the interpretation of the treaty, the subject may eventually be submitted for arbitration.

Information on one point—whether the captain of the American steamer Leelanaw was requested to deliver out the contraband in his cargo and was willing to do so—is needed by the United States government before officials can determine the nature of representations which might be made to Germany on the destruction of the vessel by a German submarine.

The Prussian-American treaty of 1828 provided that the vessels of either party, when encountered in time of war, could not be detained if contraband was given up. Should it develop that the Leelanaw's skipper was ready to surrender the contraband, the United States will present a note describing the occurrence as a violation of that treaty.

RECEIVER FOR NASHVILLE

Mayor and Commissioners of Tennessee Capital Are Ousted

Nashville, July 28.—Chancellor Allison appointed Robert Vaughn, a master in chancery, receiver for the city of Nashville.

Soon afterward Judge Matthews, in the circuit court, in response to proceedings under Tennessee's new "ouster law," suspended from office Mayor Howes and Commissioners Elliott and Andrews.

Andrews was recently dismissed by the city commission. He and Comptroller Burns, Treasurer Myers and Assistant Treasurer West are under indictment in connection with the disappearance of certain books and records from the office of the comptroller. West's whereabouts are unknown.

An audit and survey of the city's books is being conducted as a result of various charges of bad management and irregularities. Out of the charges developed petitions for receivership and ouster.

Big Check For Five Dollars Attested by Thumb Print of Maker

Minneapolis, July 28.—The largest check ever presented to a Minneapolis bank was received and paid by the Scandinavian-American National bank. In addition, it had no signature, except the thumb print of the man who drew it.

The check was thirty-six by seventeen inches in size, printed in regular form, and came from the Dakota National bank of Aberdeen, S. D., against the Capitol National of St. Paul.

It was drawn by J. H. Lewis, past potentate of Osman temple, St. Paul, and was evidently part of the frolics played by the Shriners on their trip to Seattle. The amount was $5.

NEUTRALITY CASES ARE BEING PRESSED

Active Investigation of Alleged Violations at San Francisco

San Francisco, July 28.—With the empaneling completed of a new federal grand jury, United States District Attorney Preston announced that further investigation of suspected neutrality violations would be vigorously pressed.

Numerous indictments for alleged recruiting here for the British army and the alleged supplying of munitions to a German fleet in Chilean waters by the steamer Sacramento were returned by the grand jury which completed its term July 9.

A damage suit for $107,350, brought in the United States district court against John O. Davis, collector of the port, by the Golden Gate Transport company, charterers of the steamer Olsen and Mahoney because that vessel was refused clearance papers on the ground that her cargo was destined for belligerent vessels at sea, was dismissed upon the motion of the district attorney.

EASTLAND'S MEN OBEYED ORDERS

Captain and Officers Seem Relieved of Responsibility

PEDERSON "COMES THROUGH"

Tells State Attorney How License Was Recently Granted Steamer to Carry Three Hundred More Passengers—Had Many Aboard Who Were Not Counted—Interesting Evidence Given at Coroner's Inquest

Chicago, July 28.—Charging that although the Eastland's license last month permitted but 2200 persons aboard, he had been ordered to get another for 2500 from Federal Inspector Reid, and told that there would be no difficulty in obtaining it, Captain Pederson of the ill-fated ship refuses to become the "goat."

It begins to look now as if the responsibility for the many hundreds of lives would be placed "higher up," and that the investigations will develop that the captain and officers of the Eastland were merely following orders.

In addition to the question of the total number allowed on the ship by the revised license, there is evidence to show that seventy members of the band went aboard without tickets, that babies in arms were not counted, and that children between the ages of 5 and 12 years were merely registered as "half persons."

Some of these facts were intimated in a statement by State Attorney Hoyne.

"Captain Pederson has come through," said Hoyne. "He isn't to be made the goat. Pederson admitted to me that the Eastland's capacity last year was 2200 persons. There were at least 2500 persons on the boat. I am convinced there were many more."

Since the license permitting 2200 passengers on the Eastland, another was issued which Pederson told about, according to a statement from Hoyne's office. This statement quotes Pederson as saying:

"It was in the latter part of June that I went to Robert Reid, federal inspector of hulls, and got a new license permitting the Eastland to carry 2500 passengers exclusive of the crew.

"Before I went to him, I was told in advance I would get what I was after. Officials of the steamship company ordered me to go to Reid for the new license."

Through a letter explaining to Western Electric employes how charges for the excursion would be made, it was stated that babies in arms would not be counted, and that children between 5 and 12 years would be counted as "half persons" in charging for tickets.

Babies in arms were "probably" not counted by the ticket-takers of the Eastland as passengers, and besides 200 children between 5 and 12 years who went aboard on half tickets there were many others who "doubled up" on full tickets, according to admissions made at the inquest by Daniel Gee, Western Electric employe, chairman of the picnic committee, who hired the boat from Greenbaum.

Six definitely planned inquiries to fix responsibility for the Eastland disaster are afoot. The chief question that is to be gone into is how many persons were on the steamer when she turned over while she was lying at her pier in Chicago river.

These inquiries are: Coroner Hoffman's inquest, Hoyne's county grand jury investigation, calling of witnesses by United States District Attorney Clyne for a special grand jury investigation, independent inquiry by Secretary of Commerce Redfield, inquiry by the government steamboat inspection service, inquiry by the harbors and wharves committee of the city council and inquiry by the state public utilities commission.

The situation is complicated by a clash between Hoyne and federal authorities over the possession of evidence gathered by the Chicago police and which the latter on demand turned over to the government agents for presentation to the federal grand jury.

Overloading, under-ballasting and grounding on the river bottom were cited in testimony at the coroner's inquest as reasons why the Eastland toppled over.

Adam F. Weckler, harbor master, and Joseph R. Lynn, assistant harbor master, both of whom were present when the steamer capsized with its load, ascribed the accident to these causes, told the coroner's jury that the boat was "cranky" and should never have been permitted by government inspectors to carry more than 1200 persons.

Efforts to check up the total dead made no progress. The official list of identified again totaled 824. While the list of missing grew, only three bodies were recovered, and divers said that probably not more than a score of victims remained in the si...

Divers walked the river bed, hand in hand, but found no bodies. It was said that the number of missing might be greatly reduced by weeding out duplications and tardy reports from those saved.

END OF BAYONNE STRIKE

Sheriff Says Oil Company Employes Will Get Increase In Pay

Bayonne, N. J., July 28.—About 1500 men who had been on strike for several days returned to work in the plants of the Standard Oil company and the Tidewater Oil company.

Mayor Garvan and Sheriff Kinkead declared that the strike was broken, that all of the strikers would be back at work today and that the guards who have been protecting the plants could be be removed. Kinkead said he was positive that an increase in pay would be granted to the employes before the end of the week.

About 5000 men have been idle since the strike began in the plant of the Standard Oil company. As a result of this strike and of disorders in which several of the strikers and their sympathizers were shot and killed, employes of the Tidewater Oil company quit work.

The strike was begun to enforce a demand for a 15 percent increase in wages.

A YEAR OF THE GREAT WAR

the British in complete check. The story has yet to be told of how the British troops were defeated at La Bassee, and how the British government lied to its people and deliberately reported a defeat as a victory.

Elsewhere in the west, the Germans have more than held their own against superior numbers. They have delivered counter attacks for every offensive developed by the enemy, and in the minor exchanges that have occurred since the siege of trenches began, the Germans have fully held their own. The most satisfactory of all these encounters to the Germans was the recent battle north and east of Ypres, at which the English were forced to give ground and were put on the defensive. This engagement followed soon after the date fixed by Lord Kitchener for the long promised English offensive to begin—May 1st. The Germans believe this second battle of Ypres has done more to confuse the English and create discontent among them than any other event of the war. By every law of warfare the British ought greatly to have outnumbered the Germans, and yet the latter were able to drive the enemy back almost at will. Ypres itself was saved to the English by little more than an accident. The British newspapers were preparing the public for its evacuation when more pressing interests demanded the attention of the Germans elsewhere.

The loss of the western border of Alsace to the French is the only continental defeat the Germans must acknowledge at the close of the first year of the war. The sentimental importance to the French of seizing a part of Alsatian territory far outweighs the military value to Germany of driving the French across the Vosges. At present the French hold little more than the foothills of the Vosges. This they have been able to do because the Alsatian slopes of the Vosges are so precipitous that troops coming down hill have an immense advantage over those trying to go uphill. But if the war goes far into its second year, and if the eastern situation permits, the French will have to climb back again.

Afternoon Gowns in Black and White

Black and white, it would seem, in every imaginable combination, is the paramount feature of the summer's fashions. In heavier materials it is black and white with the emphasis on black, and in sheer fabrics it is white and black with white predominant. The combination in the hands of those who know how to manage it is marvelously effective, and something new and fascinating is evolved every day. There never was anything so cool and crisp-looking for midsummer wear, and never was anything more elegant.

Among the most attractive dresses made in this way there is one having a skirt of plain white net laid in double box plaits about the waist. It is bordered at the bottom with a band of black taffeta, and two other bands are let in the skirt at equal distances apart. A little taffeta coat with long sleeves and V-shaped neck is worn with this skirt. It is smartly cut, with collar high at the back, and trimmed with many small ball buttons covered with the silk.

Black and white striped satin made up with plain black is shown in the attractive afternoon gown pictured here. The plain skirt is cut with a bias seam down the middle of the front and back and stripes are exactly matched so that they form points the length of the seams. The skirt opens at the left side and is cut to flare. It is ankle length.

A white net bodice is worn under suspenders of the striped silk, cut on the bias, and joined to a wide crushed girdle of plain black satin. This girdle is finished with pointed ends that tie in a knot at the front just below the bust.

The small coat of plain black, with plaited back extending below the waist, is lined with plain white satin in a thin, supple quality. A broad band of the striped material simulates a belt on it, and cuffs and collar lined with plain white finish the sleeves and neck. A pretty finishing touch is added in white pearl buttons (cut square) and loops of white silk soutache braid applied in place of buttonholes. The collar is shaped so that it may be wired and made to roll up and stand high at the back.

Underbodice for Wear With Thin Blouse

One of several styles in underbodices, designed to be worn with the fashionable thin blouses that everyone wears this summer, is made of sheer batiste, swiss embroidery, val lace and narrow beading. The sleeves are made separately and set in. One may buy bodices like this at such a moderate price that it is hardly worth while to make them, although those made at home cost a little less if made on the sewing machine. But there is some satisfaction in choosing just the patterns in lace that suit the individual taste, and lace sewed together by hand looks better on close examination than machine work.

The lower part of the bodice pictured is a strip of batiste hemmed at each end and gathered into a narrow strong beading at the lower edge. This beading is finished with an edging of narrow val lace and carries lingerie ribbon, which is drawn up and tied to adjust the bodice at the waist line.

The top edge of the strip is to be turned back in a tiny rolled (or machine-stitched) hem. The lower part of one arm's-eye is cut out at each side and the two rows of narrow val insertion with a narrow band of fine swiss embroidery is overcast to the top of the batiste. Finally a length of beading, with val edging sewed to one edge, finishes the top of the bodice and forms the top of the arm's-eye. Ribbon run through the beading line adjusts the bodice to the bust.

The small, short sleeves are made of row after row of val insertion, with a band of embroidery at the bottom finished with val edging.

Other bodices made of crepe de chine made up with wide insertions of shadow lace are liked in white or pale pink. Brassieres made of handkerchief linen and heavy cluny lace are cut in one piece and wrap about the figure, crossing at the back. They are finished with tapes that tie in front, or with beading carrying lingerie ribbon.

Silk Stockings.

If time permits, these should be allowed to soak for a short time before washing in tepid water, to which a little powdered borax has been added. Then wash them in a tepid soapy lather, first on one side and then on the other, paying particular attention to the feet. Pull the stockings gently into shape before drying, and when nearly dry press them on the wrong side with a cool iron.

CHAPTER XIV.

Broffin's Equation.

Having Clerk Maurice's telegram to time the overtaking approach, Broffin found the Belle Julie backing and filling for her berth at the Vicksburg landing when, after a hasty Vicksburg breakfast, he had himself driven to the river front.

Going aboard as soon as the swing stage was lowered, he found Maurice, with whom he had something more than a speaking acquaintance, just turning out of his bunk in the texas.

"I took it for granted you'd be along," was Maurice's greeting. "What bank robber are we running away with now?"

Broffin grinned.

"I'm still after the one you took on in the place of John Gavitt."

"Humph!" said the clerk, sleepily; "I thought that one was John Gavitt."

"No; he merely took Gavitt's place and name. Tell me all you know about him."

"I don't know anything about him, except that he was fool enough to pull Buck McGrath out of the river just after McGrath had tried to bump him over the bows."

"Of course, so far as you know, nobody on the boat suspected that the fellow who called himself Gavitt was anything but the 'roustie' he was passing himself off for? You didn't know of his having any talk with any of the upper-deck people?"

"Only once," said the day clerk, promptly.

"When was that?"

"It was one day just after the 'man-overboard' incident, a little while after dusk in the evening. I was up here in the texas, getting ready to go to supper. Gavitt—we may as well keep on calling him that till you've found another name for him—Gavitt had been cubbing for the pilot. I saw him go across the hurricane-deck guards; and a minute later I heard him talking to somebody—a woman—on the guards below."

"You didn't hear what was said?"

"I didn't pay any attention. Passengers, woman passengers, especially, often do that—pull up a 'roustie' and pry into him to see what sort of wheels he has. But I noticed that they talked for quite a little while; because, when I finished dressing and went below, he was just leaving her."

Broffin rose up from the bunk on which he had been sitting and laid a heavy hand on Maurice's shoulder. "You ain't going to tell me that you didn't find out who the woman was, Clarence—what?" he said anxiously.

"That's just what I've got to tell you, Matt," returned the clerk, reluctantly. "I was due at the second table, and I didn't go as far forward as the stanchion she was holding to. All I can tell you is that she was one of the half-dozen or so younger women we had on board; I could guess at that much."

Broffin's oath was not of anger; it was a mere upbubbling of disappointment

"Maurice, I've got to find that young woman if I have to chase her half-way round the globe, and it's tough luck to figure out that if you hadn't been in such a blazing h—l of a hurry to get your supper that night, I might be able to catch up with her in the next forty-eight hours or so. But what's done is done, and can't be helped. Chase out and get your passenger list for that trip. We'll take the women as they come, and when you've helped me cull out the names of the ones you're sure it wasn't, I'll screw my nut and quit buzzing you."

The clerk went below and returned almost immediately with the list. Together they went over it carefully, and by dint of much memory-wringing Maurice was able to give the detective leave to cancel ten of the 17 names in the women's list, the remaining seven including all the might-have-beens who could possibly be fitted into the clerk's recollection of the woman he had seen clinging to the saloon deck stanchion after her interview with the deckhand.

It was while he was waiting for the departure of the first north-bound train that he planned the search for the young woman, arranging the names of the seven might-have-beens in the order of accessibility as indicated by the addresses given in the Belle Julie's register. In this arrangement Miss Charlotte Farnham's name stood as No. 1.

"I've Got to Find That Young Woman If I Chase Her 'Round the Globe."

Landing in Wahaska the next evening, Broffin's first request at the hotel counter was for the directory. Running an eager finger down the "F's," he came to the name. It was the only Farnham in the list, and after it he read: "Dr. Herbert C., office 8 to 10, 2 to 4, 201 Main St., res. 16 Lake boulevard."

Then he registered for a room and prepared to draw the net which he hoped would entangle the lost identity of the bank robber. After a good night's sleep in a real bed, he awoke refreshed and alert, breakfasted with an open mind, and presently went about the net drawing methodically and with every contingency carefully provided for.

The first step was to assure himself beyond question that Miss Farnham was the writer of the unsigned letter. This step he was able, by a piece of great good fortune, to take almost immediately. A bit of morning gossip with the obliging clerk of the Winnebago house developed the fact that Doctor Farnham's daughter had once taught in the free kindergarten which was one of the charitable outreachings of the Wahaska public library. Two blocks east and one south; Broffin walked them promptly, made himself known to the librarian as a visitor interested in kindergarten work, and was cheerfully shown the records. When he turned to the pages signed "Charlotte Farnham" the last doubt vanished and assurance was made sure. The anonymous letter writer was found.

It was just here that Matthew Broffin fell under the limitations of his trade. Though the detective in real life is as little as may be like the Inspector Buckets and the Javerts of fiction, certain characteristics persist. When he found himself face to face with the straightforward expedient, the craft limitations bound him. He thought of a dozen good reasons why he should make haste slowly; and he recognized in none of them the craftsman's slant toward indirection—the tradition of the trade which discounts the straightforward attack and puts a premium upon the methods of the deer-stalker.

Sooner or later, of course, the attack must be made. But only an apprentice, he told himself, would be foolish enough to make it without mapping out all the hazards of the ground over which it must be made. In a word, he must "place" Miss Farnham precisely; make a careful study of the young woman and her environment, to the end that every thread of advantage should be in his hands when he should finally force her to a confession. For by now the assumption that she knew the mysterious bank robber was no longer hypothetical in Broffin's mind; it had grown to the dimensions of a conviction.

With the patient curiosity of his tribe he suffered no detail, however, trivial, to escape its jotting down. To familiarize himself with the goings and comings of one young woman, he made the acquaintance of an entire town. He knew Jasper Grierson's ambition, and its fruitage in the practical ownership of Wahaska. He knew that Edward Raymer had borrowed money from Grierson's bank—and was likely to be unable to pay it when his notes fell due. He had heard it whispered that there had once been a love affair between young Raymer and Miss Farnham, and that it had been broken off by Raymer's infatuation for Margery Grierson. Also, last and least important of all the gossiping details, as it seemed at the time, he learned that the bewitching Miss Grierson was a creature of fads; that within the past month or two she had returned from a Florida trip, bringing with her a sick man, a total stranger, who had been picked up on the train, taken to the great house on the lake shore and nursed back to life as Miss Grierson's latest defiance of the conventions.

It should have been a memorable day for Matthew Broffin when he had this sick man pointed out to him as Miss Grierson's companion in the high trap. But Broffin was sufficiently human to see only a very beautiful young woman sitting correctly erect on the slanting driving-seat. To be sure, he saw a man, as one sees a vanishing figure in a kaleidoscope. But there was nothing in the clean-shaven face of the gaunt, and as yet rather haggard, convalescent to evoke the faintest thrill of interest—or of memory.

PRETTY THIN MILK.

Old Captain Joshua Ketcham, who recently died at Amityville, Long Island, was much respected and beloved by the summer residents who used to sail with him on the bay and catch bluefish. There was always a refreshing flavor of the sea in his talk.

One day, when a party of city men were sailing with him, the conversation turned on the difficulty of getting good fresh milk in Amityville, and they appealed to the captain to know why.

"Well," said Captain Joshua, "it's been that way as long as I can remember. My wife made me buy a cow once. I bought her from Elbert Haff up on the north turnpike, and gave him forty dollars for her. Elbert said she'd give twenty quarts of milk a day, and I guess she did; but you could see bottom in six fathoms."—The Youth's Companion.

DIST. ATTY. ON TRIAL.

Jeff McCarn of Hawaii Has Plenty Of Excitement.

Washington, July 28—Jeff McCarn, U. S. District Attorney for Hawaii, who has had the interesting experience of being indicted and tried in his own court, says prize-fighting is a thing of the past in Hawaii. Prize-fighting, or rather, the lack of it, was the thing that led to McCarn being indicted and tried. Also it led to his being severely beaten and bruised very shortly after he accepted President Wilson's appointment to the island job.

McCarn having brought his children back to Nashville, Tenn., to put them in school, ran along to Washington to give Attorney General Gregory first-hand information on his sensational term in Hawaii and on other things.

"Most of the best people of the island favor holding prize-fights," said McCarn, "but the federal law being absolutely opposed, I could do nothing but enforce the law.

It was pointed out to me that the law never had been enforced and that previous administrations were aware of its non-enforcement. It was suggested, too, that a test case be brought, but I could not see any necessity for a test case. The law is plain. The only test would have been of public sentiment.

"There are other objections, the chief being that U. S. soldiers are led to lose a large part of their pay gambling on the fights.

"Many fights have been advertised, but none has been held ,for the law provides that every person attending is liable to punishment, as well as the principals."

For his attitude in that matter, McCarn said, he was set upon by a crowd in the courthouse and terribly beaten. "You wouldn't have recognized me for months," he said grinning. Following the assault, he said, he was indicted on a charge of "assault with a deadly weapon," it being charged that he drew the weapon, a revolver, and was only prevented from killing one of his assailants by the action of another in seizing the hammer of the revolver. In the Federal court the matter finally was dismissed and prosecution then began in the territorial court.

There the first jury disagreed, five for conviction and seven for dismissal. After a second trial the jury acquitted him in three minutes.

"Funny thing for a prosecuting attorney to go through, wasn't it?" said McCarn.

"It's a great litle island, Hawaii," said the District Attorney. "The owners, the sugar growers, are more prosperous now than at any time in their experience, I believe. The Governor, talking in San Francisco recently, however, made the mistake of saying they had more money than they knew what to do with. This aroused bad feeling aparently because the sugar growers are sure they do know what to do with it."

SMOKING TOO MUCH.

In the Woman's Home Companion Rollin Lynde Hartt writes an article entttled "Swearing Off" which is the confession of an exsmoker. He says that there are some clear cases of men who are smoking too much, and then he goes on in part as follows:

"What constitutes a clear case? Authorities differ. So do individuals. What is one smoker's death warrant may be another smoker's guide to a miserable longevity. For my own part I am reluctant to lay down any hard aond fast rule for the detection and conviction of a clear case, and yet those I chiefly suspect are these:

"The man who smokes at his work as well as at home.

"The man who wants a pipe before breakfast.

"The man who must light cigarettes between the courses of a restaurant dnner.

"The man who looks as if he had lost his last friend whenever he is deprived of smoke for two or three hours.

"The man whose hand trembles, who has 'off' days, and who thinks he must smoke in order to work.

"Now, when a woman observes that her husband, father, brother,or sonhas qualified as a slear case according to one or more of the above specifications, it is time she opened up on him with a good conscience. She will not be asking him to exhibit phenomenal will-power in his rebellion against smoke; what he calls his slavery rests far more lightly upon him than he realizes. After his first tussle, he will be able to carry cigars about in his pockets or keep them in his house for his friends, as I do, and not eel the faintest craving for a smoke—absolutely not the faintest!"

Any man who has a good opinion of himself is sure of one admirer anyway.

CHILDREN'S FOOD.

A spinster, who says she is several years on the shady side of fifty, sets down or records some of her very pronounced ideas on the training of children. On the subject of teaching children to eat what is set before them she says:

"In my own childhood I ate what was on the table for the family, and I don't ever remember expressing, or being asked, my preferences. It is now very advantageous to be able to 'eat anything, anywhere!'

"On asking a young girl recently what she particularly objected to, when she said she could not eat bacon, she replied, 'I don't know—I have never tasted it!'

"On the occasion of a picnic supper a friend was eating slices of canned tongue, cut lengthwise and said, how delicious this ham is—is it deviled, or what?'

"'It isn't ham at all,' I replied, 'it's canned tongue.'

"'Tongue!' said the aforementioned person. 'I can't eat tongue!' Down went the plate on the grass and not another morsel was touched."—Woman's Home Companion.

CUT ALASKAN TIMBER.

Washington, July 27—The Alaskan Engineering Commission, which is to build the government railroad from Seward on the Pacific 471 miles to Fairbanks in the interior, has received a permit from the Forest Service to cut 85 million feet of timber in the Chugach National Forest for use in constructing the new line. The permit was issued by the district forester at Portland, Oregon, who has direct supervision of the Alaskan forests, and is in conformity with the Act of March 4, last, which authorized the Secretary of Agriculture to permit the Alaskan Engineering Commission and the Navy Department to take from the national forests free of charge earth, stone, and timber for use in government works. The timber will be cut in designated areas along the right-of-way of the proposed railroad, which runs through the Chugach National Forest for several miles.

Experiments and tests of Alaskan spruce and hemlock are being made at the Forest Service laboratory at Seattle, Washington, and so far have substantiated the opinion of foresters that Alaskan timber is sufficiently strong for practically all structural purposes. While these tests are going on Forest Service employees in Alaska are marking the timber to be cut along the proposed railroad, the cutting to be done so that only mature trees are taken, the young trees being left uninjured and the condition of the forest improved.

This cut of 85 million feet will be the largest amount of timber ever felled on the Alaskan forests in one operation, and at the average rate per thousand board feet obtained for timber sold from the Chugach Forest during the fiscal year 1914, it is worth appproximately $145,000 on the stump. It will be nearly twice as much as the total quantity of national forest timber now cut and used annually for local purposes throughout Alaska, but only a little more than one-tenth of the estimated annual growth of the Alaskan forests. The two national forests of Alaska contain about 78 billion feet of merchantable timber and it is estimated by the Forest Service that more than 800 million feet could be cut every year forever without lessening the forests' productivity.

PATCH'S SPECIAL COAL

With Patch's "Special Guaranteed Coal" in the fire box your furnace or range does not require as much attention as it does when an ordinary grade of coal is burned. With "Guaranteed Coal" the whole fire need not be turned upside down to clear the grate with a rake or poker. --- It's all good clean coal.

HOUSEHOLD HINT

Use the poker to rake seldom. Too much poking is as bad for the fire as too little. Stir up the fire just enough to keep the coal from caking and to fill up the holes in the fuel bed.

MISS WILLIAMS WEDS AT HOME

Daughter Of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Williams Marries R. D. Phillips

TO LIVE IN VERMONT

A very pretty home wedding was solemnized at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Williams of 18 Bigelow street Wednesday evening when their daughter Miss Annie May Williams became the bride of Bernard Rolla Phillips, a son of Mr. and Mrs. R. D. Phillips ofTownsend, Vt.

The home of the bride was prettily decorated with pine, hemlock, smilax and cut flowers, the ceremony taking place beneath a canopy of hemlock and white flowers. White flowers were also used in the decoration of the parlor, pink flowers in the receiving hall, red flowers in the dining room and sweet peas in the upper rooms.

The bride was given in marriage by her father, the ceremony being performed by Rev. Edward Norton, pastor emeritus of Bethany church. Prof. William T. Williams, a brother of the bride, presided at the organ and played the wedding march as the bridal party entered.

Miss Ada M. Williams, a sister of the bride was maid of honor, and the bridesmaids were Miss Grace D. Fisher and Miss Esther E. Beckford of Quincy. The best man was attended by Raymond Phillips of Townsend, Vt., a brother of the groom. The ushers were Miss Agnes A. Fisher, C. Wesley Williams and Russell L. Williams, the two latter being brothers of the bride.

The ceremony took place at 8 o'clock the order of procession being the bridesmaids with satin ribbon to form an isle, the maid of honor carrying a bouquet of pink sweet peas, the bride leaning on the arm of her father and the ushers who gathered up the ribbon which had formed the aisle and then advanced to meet the bridesmaids

The bride wore white duchess satin trimmed with chantilly lace and pearls and carried a bouquet of bridal roses. The maid of honor wore a pink taffeta, Miss Fisher a pink chiffon and Miss Beckford a white chiffon over pink.

A reception followed the ceremony, the bridal couple being assisted in receiving by the parents of the bride and groom. A wedding lunch of fancy ices and cakes was served during the reception. The dining table looked very pretty. In the centre, in addition to the wedding cake, there was a large ice swan. The bride's cake was cut during the evening, Miss Margaret Hunt being the fortunate finder of the ring.

Following the reception Mr. and Mrs. Phillips left in a shower of confetti and flowers for a wedding trip and on their return they will make their home in Townsend, Vt., where they will be at home after Sept. 15.

The bride's gifts to the bridesmaids were gold crescent pins, and to the maid of honor a gold pin set with a ruby. The groom's gift to the best man was gold cuff links.

Mr. and Mrs. Phillips received many handsome gifts, which included cut glass, china, silver, linen and a large sum of money.

The bride is a graduate of the class of 1909 at the Woodward Institute and of the Fisher Kindergarten school of Boston in 1912. She then received an appointment to teach in Townsend, Vt., where she has taught for two years.

---

Mrs. Robert T. Johnson and children, Robert, Marcia, and Richard left today for Middleboro where they will be guests of Mr. and Mrs. James Norrie at their camp.

IS AVIATOR IN CARRANZA ARMY

Basil H. Brooks Well Known In Quincy

(Special to the Ledger.)

New York, July 29—Basil H. Brooks, who was secretary for the Argentine Commission at the Fore River shipyard, while the Rivadavia was in process of construction is a member of the aviation corps of the Carranza army, which is fighting for the supremacy of Mexico. Mr. Brooks is ranked as a lieutenant.

In a recent letter he said the Carranza force was slowly but surely getting control of the country. He mentioned late battles in which the main body of the Carranzistas were victors and said the defeats were serious setbacks for other factions in the field.

The aviation corps, used principally for scouts duty, he said, had met with many successes and were big factors in bringing about victories. The corps he said was at present a very small one but that it would be doubled within a few days by the arrival of four Burgess-Wright biplanes.

Lieut. Brooks made his home in Quincy until a year ago. He early became interested in aviation and spent many hours in studying types of engines which propel aircraft. Two years ago he became a pupil of H. Roy Waite, who then conducted a school at Saugus. That summer he qualified as an air pilot.

In his younger days he lived in Mexico. While there he acquired a knowledge of the Spanish language and talked it fluently. One of his principal duties as secretary of the Argentine Commission was to act as an interpreter and it was through his teachings that many of the non-commissioned officers and mechanics connected with the commission learned to talk the English language.

Lieut. Brooks is probably one of the youngest aviators in war service in the world. He is not 22 years of age. It was nearly six months ago that he joined the Carranzistas. His appointment as a lieutenant came a few days ago.

The police ambulance was called and he was taken to the city hospital.

LIEUT. BECKER RESIGNED TO DIE

Murderer Of Rosenthal Has Little Hope

(By United Press.)

Osinning, N. Y., July 29—"You can tell the whole world that Charlie Becker will die like a man, that is all" were Becker's words when he was informed that his appeal for a new trial had been denied.

Becker has lost his last fight and with the above words he resigned himself to his fate today. Even his lawyers were seriously groping for some legal action on which they could turn the case and keep the gaunt chair out of sight in which he will die at 5.45.

His wife, whose remarkable nerve has never failed throughout his three years fight for life was in a state of collapse but left for New York at noon in company with Counsel Johnson. Johnson will make a last plea for a reprieve until October when the court of appeal will convene. His lawyers found it impossible to get a stay of execution from the courts in session.

Mrs. Becker will not make a personal appeal to the governor. She will be present when Johnson makes his plea and if it is denied she will return and be with her husband until the last minute allowed. At Sing Sing Becker is being prepared for the last and his friends who have been closest to him during his long stay believe he will go to the chair without a tremor.

BERLIN FEELS SITUATION IS VERY SERIOUS

CARL W. ACKERMAN.
(United Press Staff Correspondent.)

Berlin, via the Hague, July 29—There is no chance to doubt that the situation growing out of the new differences between the United States and Germany is regarded here as extremely serious.

Americans in Berlin, who are in touch with the American embassy know the feeling has become extremely grave. Ambassador Gerard in dealing with the foreign office has adopted a calm attitude indicating in effect that the Lusitania incident is closed as far as he, speaking for the United States Government, is concerned. That he expects to have nothing further to communicate to Germany is evident.

LARGE NUMBER GO ON STRIKE

(By United Press)

Hyde Park, July 29—Six hundred and fifty machinists went on strike shortly before noon today folowing the failure of union committees and officials of the Becker Brainerd Milling Co., to agree upon a new wage scale. The union men have demanded a scale of 48 hours and 50 cents an hour, with time and half for overtime. This the company refused but offered to give the men a 10 per cent. increase at 50 hours a week, the men to receive it to be designated as efficient by the company.

Although several hundred people were gathered about the mill there was no demonstration as the men left. Extra police were on duty and the mill was shut down quietly. No trouble is expected.

STILL AT HOSPITAL.

Although their condition is very much improved, neither Mrs. Currier or her mother Mrs. Lewis, who were injured in the automobile accident on Quincy avenue, have been discharged from the Quincy City Hospital. Mrs. Lewis however has so far recovered that she is able to be up and about the Hospital.

BICYCLE THIEVES CONTINUE WORK

Peter Anton Is Their Latest Victim

Another victim has been added to the list of puzzled bicycle owners. This time it is Peter Anton of 545 Washington street. His bicycle was taken while his head was turned in another direction. The theft of bicycles in Quincy has been on a wholesale scale. The police are powerless to put a stop to it because of the delay in reporting the larcenies, and frequently because the description of the property is not as complete as it might be. In the meantime it is commencing to look as though the use of real locks would become general.

H. W. PINKHAM WINS SIGNAL NATIONAL HONOR

San Francisco, July 29—Herbert W. Pinkham of Quincy, Mass., was unanimously elected today president of the United States League of Local Building and Loan Associations, at its 23d annual convention. The retiring president, C. Eugene Clarke of Covington, Ky., in his address, paid a flattering tribute to the qualities of his successor.

Herbert Wilder Pinkham, who has now received National recognition of his labors to extend the cooperative bank movement, is treasurer and clerk of the Wollaston Cooperative Bank one of the largest in the Commonwealth, and is secretary and treasurer of the Massachusetts Cooperative Bank League.

He was largely instrumental with his father in establishing the Wollaston Cooperative Bank, and on its organization in 1899 was elected treasurer by the shareholders, which office he has held ever since. In all these 26 years he has never been absent from the regular meetings of the bank.

Mr. Pinkham's keen interest in all that pertains to building and loan associations is inherited from his father, George F. Pinkham, the oldest resident of Wollaston, whose interest in the movement is still undimmed. He is married, lives at 109 Grand View avenue, Wollaston, and is a prominent member of the Wollaston Baptist church. His wife is regarded as nearly as competent an authority as himself on cooperative bank matters, for her interest in them is no less pronounced than his own.

Mr. Pinkham is a brother of City Solicitor Walter S. Pinkham.

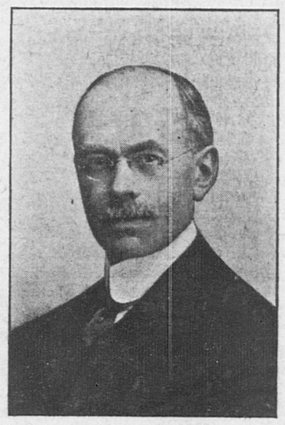
MEMBERS OF BOARD OF TRADE LAY ASIDE ALL CARES ON BIG OUTING

Ex-Congressman McCall and Other Prominent Politicians Guests of Honor But Political Speeches Are Strictly Tabooed

SEVENTY-TWO TIE FOR FIRST IN CATCHING LARGEST FISH

The annual outing of the Quincy Board of Trade Wednesday ended with a moonlight sail in Boston harbor and Quincy Bay, minus the moon. It was a most successful outing in every way, even the rain which fell during the homeward trip not dampening the enthusiasm. There were nearly 150 all told.



EMERY L. CRANE
Acting Mayor

When the time came to leave for home the sky looked a little threatening. For that matter on the trip from the fishing grounds to Bass Point the fog began to close down in a little. It was announced that the boat would leave for home at 9.45 but after dinner the weather looked so bad that it was planned to make a little earlier start.

The gentlemen who wore white ribbon badges marked "Steerers" were sent scouting about the Point to round up the party, who were easily distinguished by the tags attached to their coat lapels as well as by the paper caps which most of them wore. It was somewhat difficult to get some of the younger members away from the side attractions but the effort was generally suclessful. There were quite a few wise ones however who, not relishing a trip home in the rain, patronized the jitney bus lines to Lynn from which point they came by narrow gauge railroad to Boston, thence by the Elevated and New Haven railroad to Quincy. Some of the party even employed a jitney to take them direct to the South Station. These connected with the 11.09 train for Quincy arriving in City Square about the same time the boat arrived at Houghs Neck.

Most of the party took the 1.40 special car for Houghs Neck and while gathered on the piazza of the Yacht club waiting for the commisary department to get its supplies loaded, paper hats were distributed. These represented Indian head dress, Chinamen and other things that went without names.

As the party marched down the float to the boat the moving picture man from Kincaide's theatre transferred them to the films of his camera and again before the start a picture was taken of the steamer "Loretto." A picture was also taken of the party on the upper deck of the boat.

As soon as the trip was fairly underway the "Steerers" got busy. Many had wondered just what a "Steerer" was and they were not long in finding out for the party were soon lined up at the windows of the cabin to receive the refreshments that were passed out of the windows. Then the "18th Amendment" band got down to business and once started they were kept busy during the whole trip. Quite a few were anxious to try the fish and they were continually bragging that Isaac Walton had nothing on them. Sailing down to near the Graves lights a box of clams was brought out for bait and lines were soon dangling over the side. Even while they fished the anglers began to tell of the big fish they had caught in the past, evidently with the intention of leading those that did not fish to believe that they were some pumpkins as fishermen. The boat rocked and pitched and the fish did not seem to be very hungry.

SAMUEL W. McCALL
Congressman

The first fish landed on the deck was a sculpin which "Mike" Coughlin hooked. Then "Bobbie" Craig got a baby perch and two others each pulled in a white hake. Fishing by this time was getting a little monotinous and as Chief Steerer John Scott said he had a kind of peculiar feeling in his stomach it would be as well to start for Bass Point. "All lines in" shouted the captain. "Let her go," shouted "Charlie" Austin from force of habit, and a few minutes later the bow was turned toward Bass Point.

On the trip over "Bobbie" corralled the musicians on the upper deck and kept them busy playing popular airs while he led the chorus in singing. One of the popular airs, which was sung several times was "How dry I am."

Just before landing at Bass Point flags and painted fans were given each of the party and as they marched up the wharf the moving picture man took another shot at them. As soon as the hotel was reached they were lined up in a circle and snapped by a local photographer.

On arrival at Bass Point the party were met by several well known politicians and by some of the Quincy members, who from a natural horror for water, had taken the train to Lynn and thence the street cars to the Point.

RICHARD OLNEY 2d.
Congressman

It was a little after six o'clock when the party were seated at the tables, and almost before they could get themselves into position to advance upon the things in the eatable line, the cabaret girls got busy, and somehow or other this seemed to take away the appetites of some of the young men . Even Albert Keating, who owned up to being 83, could not refrain from leaving the table and trying some of the modern steps with the cabaret singers.

There was a distinguished party seated at the head table. They included President Fegan and Secretary Hall of the Board of Trade, ex-Congressman Samuel W. McCall, Congressman Richard Olney 2d., Councillor Guy A. Ham, President Coolidge of the Senate, Dr. W. O. Faxon, candidate for the Governor's Council, Senator Langelier, Representatives Ericson and Sandberg, William P. Kelley, Democratic candidate for state senator, ex-Representative Peter T. Fallon and of course Acting Mayor Emery L. Crane who occupied a seat at the left of President Fegan.

In time the dinner came to an end and rapping for order President Fegan tried to make a few remarks but the band kept on playing for several minutes. Finally he succeeded in saying how gratified he was at the success of the outing and then called upon John Scott to present the prizes. "John" did not present these all at one time but interspersed the speaking with his humorous presentations.

Mr. Scott first read a telegram from Mayor Campbell to Acting Mayor Crane. It was dated San Francisco, and read "Buy two more automobiles. If you can not find any department that needs them create two."

The Acting Mayor then made a lit-

FIVE MINUTES IN DEDHAM JAIL

Antonio Leminuzzi was taken over to the county jail at Dedham Wednesday, was turned around and walked right out again. He was ordered committed because he said he was unable to pay a fine of $100 imposed for two violations of the liquor law. On the way he asked Court Officer Hultman to go to Quincy Point and his wife would pay the fine, but the trip had to continue. Officer and prisoner arrived to find that Leminuzzi's wife in the meantime had brought the money to police headquarters and paid the fine. Leminuzzi was given a free ride back to Quincy.

WALKED ALL WAY FROM NEW YORK

Edward Dubrey walked into the police headquarters early today for a night's lodging. He was informed the only way he could get it was to be arrested. He claimed to be French and a New Yorker. He said he had walked the greater part of the distance and hiked the entire length of the state. His last stop he said was Worcester. In court today he was sent to the state farm.

TODAY'S ODDEST STORY.

Crookston, Minn., July 29—A Crookston man has the drop on the fishes. He has a device, with a mirror placed perpendicular in the water. In front of it is a pane of plate glass, at a slant of 45 degrees. The bait is hung between the two glasses. As the fish approaches the glass, he sees his image in the looking glass, and fearing another fish is after the morsel, speeds up. Striking the plate glass, he slides up it, and lands in a convenient net in the boat.

THE LESSON OF HAITI.

That Europe after the Great War will be made up of more republics and fewer monarchies than at present is a statement frequently made and those who assert this not improbable outcome are saturated with the belief that this is a most desirable result. Living in this greatest republic on the globe and enjoying its manifold benefits and privileges it is not unnatural that many of us should rejoice at the possibility of other nations enjoying similar privileges and benefits.

We forget that a republic is very far from being a panacea for all political ills. Even the United States of America is not free from political blemishes. The inherent and cultivated capacity of the people for self government, however, makes our republic successful. The capacity for self government is partly inherent and partly the result of education. The English speaking people are naturally adapted for self government and they have been trained in self government for many centuries.

The opposite is true in some countries of Europe. Many peoples are not yet ready for an experiment in self government. The deplorable history of Haiti during the last week or so, and for many years previous, is an illustration of a people unfit for self government. It is the same in some countries of Europe. Servia, Austria, Hungary, for example. What these countries must have if they would develop is an intelligent monarchy which shall educate the people in some of the first principles of self government, thereby fitting them ultimately to take upon their shoulders this highest political ideal.

The United States went through the throes of an intense political battle in 1912, a battle which would have been settled by force of arms in any South American country but which here ender at the ballot box. A country which could not thus end its political passions is totally unfitted for a republican government and the foisting of a republican government upon such a people would be a terrible mistake.

REMOVE THE PREJUDICE.

The fashion, which the funny men and jokesmiths have engendered, of sneering at the honesty of lawyers and assailing the size of their fees has frequently been an injustice to honest members of the profession. The members of the bar, however, cannot wonder at a practice which has some basis in fact, as is evidenced by the fee of $100,000 awarded Mr. Choate for his services in upholding the Cabot will and the fee of $25,000 for Sherman L. Whipple's work for the contestant. Even the smallest of these sums seems excessive.

The cost of going to the courts has become so great as to constitute a real menace to the triumph of justice. Lawyers are by no means wholly to blame for this but, as in the case of the Cabot will contest, they are partly to blame. It is incumbent upon the many honorable members of the legal profession to frown upon excessive fees and seek to remove a not unnatural prejudice against the profession.

AN ABOMINATION.

Among unnecessary nuisances with which this age is afflicted is the fiend who feels obliged to drive with his automobile muffler cut out. It is very seldom indeed that it is necessary for a driver to cut out his muffler, such as the fire chief going to a fire. In such a case, perhaps, it serves, among other things as a signal of warning. But under ordinary circumstances it is an unnecessary abomination. The police should vigorously enforce the law covering this point and should apprehend all autoists who unnecessarily use their muffler cut outs.

"I'm an extremely domestic man, but should there be war, I and my four sons would go."

With the latter part of this statement by Col. Roosevelt nobody could take exception. The valor and patriotism of the ex-president need no proof.

But what does he mean by being a "domestic man?" Does this mean that he loves his home and likes to linger in "the bosom of his family?" We had the delusion that he spent most of his time away from home, speaking at expositions and the like. Perhaps Mrs. Roosevelt could answer the question.

Being now the possessor of a first class new roadway in the portion of Hancock street between Granite and School streets the city should make a special effort to keep it well watered and well cleaned.

That telephone recently installed at the Public Bath House was not long in demonstrating its usefulness.

TREES COOL IN HOT WEATHER.

Few people understand how the plot of ground covered with vegetation is very different on a hot day from the strip of sand or board platform or asphalt walk. On a recent and exceedingly hot July day, a little girl who was running around barefooted, ran up the steps of her father's house, and at once began to cry. She did not exactly understand the cause of the pain, but her mother managed to find out that the source of trouble was in her feet, and placing her hand accidentally on the steps, found that they were indeed very hot. The grass on the lawn exposed to the same identical sun was soft and cool and comfortable.

Trees and shrubs maintain a uniform temperature somewhat below sixty degrees, which tends greatly to equalize the heat in their locality. No child ever burnt its feet on the grass. Vegetation of any sort is the most potent physical force in modifying and equalizing the climate. It does this by protecting the earth from the direct rays of the sun, and by exhaling into the air, in the form of vapor, large quantities of water, which is a very cooling process; and they purify the air by absorbing for their own nourishment the carbon dioxide, which is fatal to man, as well as certain malarial poisons.

It is evident, then, that at certain seasons, the climate and temperature are most pleasantly modified by the presence of luxuriant vegetation. It is particularly true in cities where parks, streets planted with shade trees, lawns, and plots of grass, all help very much to improve the atmosphere, and ameliorate the serious conditions of city life in summer.

In the country, however, it is not uncommon to find houses so surrounded by trees and bushes as to be shut out from sunlight, and be made damp and unhealthy thereby.—Healthy Home.

JITNEY REGULATIONS.

The city of Malden has formulated a set of rules for the regulation of the jitney bus traffic. No person ,firm or corporation can operate motor vehicles for hire without first obtaining a license authorizing the use of the same. Before the license is issued, a policy of accident insurance, for not less than $10,000, must be filed with the city clerk, providing in substance indemnity for any person or property injured by the careless operation of such vehicle. The license shall not permit or allow any person to ride on the running board of the vehicle. Any violation of the regulations will subject the offender to a fine of not exceeding $20 for each offense, and the forfeiture of the license. The extent of the jitney bus business in Lynn is sufficient reason for the enactment, by the Municipal Council, of a code of regulations to govern the owners of jitney buses. At present the buses are being run at will by the owners, and something should be done to protect the patrons of the bus lines. The Malden code appears to be sensible, and Lynn should have something similar. The council is proverbially slow on the matter of ordinances. Is it waiting until an accident occurs before action is taken.—Lynn Item.

LEARNING A BOY'S AGE.

While the agent was selling farm machinery at the house, the friend at the gate held his horse, and a conversation took place with the small boy of the family.

With grave incredulity, he was saying: "Are you sure you are only nine years old? I think there must be some mistake."

The boy was positive; but to make sure: "Ma!" he called. "Ain't I just nine years old?"

"Yes, son."

After a time he ventured: "Say, mister, what made you think I was more than nine years old?"

"Why," said the stranger, "I couldn't understand how you could get so dirty in nine years."—N. Y. Tribune.

A YEAR OF THE GREAT WAR
BY UNITED PRESS EXPERTS

AS SEEN IN ENGLAND.
by
ED. L. KEEN.
United Press Staff Correspondent.

(Article Four.)

London, July 29th:—"Are we down-hearted? NO!"—with a heavy accent on the "no."

This is the slogan of British football fans in the bleachers (or the English equivalent thereof) when the home team appears to be getting the worst of it. And the more precarious the situation the heavier the accent.

Since the failure of the Anglo—French Spring offensive in Flanders, the disastrous defeats of the Russians, the news of the unsatisfactory progress of the Dardanelles campaign, the development of the Fisher—Churchill scandal, the French—Kitchener row, and the disclosures regarding Britain's woeful lack of the implements of warfare, culminating in the disruption of the Cabinet, this attitude of the bleacherites has become the attitude of the British public.

And when the British public say it is not down-hearted it means it. Proof of this lies in the splendid fashion in which the workingmen of the nation have answered the call far industrial reinforcements (bear in mind that 80 per cent. of the British public consists of workingmen, their women and children); also in the marvellous response to the Prime Minister's appeal for an adequate supply of silver bullets. Never in the history of any nation has a popular war loan met with such success.

For the apathy displayed by the masses in the first ten months of the war the British government has only itself to blame. The leaders of the nation made the mistake of entrusting the entire conduct of the war on land to one man—perhaps a military genius, but with serious limitations on the human side, including an utter inability to understand the civilian temperament. For seven months the war was conducted in secret. Through the anonymous "eyewitness" the public was fed with an occasional optimistic but colorless story from the front, the burden of which was that everything was going along splendidly, that the Germans were losing heart, that they had been compelled to put their old men and young boys in the firing line—and always conveying the impression that ultimate victory was a foregone conclusion. Not until March was a single newspaper correspondent permitted at the front, and even then they were not allowed to tell the whole truth.

No wonder enlistments were slow. The fact that Lord Kitchener was able to enroll more than two million volunteers in this period is sure proof of the latent spirit of patriotism in the British public. But there was no enthusiasm, such as had been aroused in Germany by the first-hand stories from the trenches told by correspondents who were permitted to go practically wherever they chose and to write pretty much what they liked.

The workingmen of the nation have been severely criticized for their failure to appreciate the gravity of the situation—for their strikes, their slackness, and their alleged over-indulgence in liquor. The fact is they did not understand because they were not told. So far as they knew victory was assured anyhow. They went along much the same as in peace times, and when they had reason to believe that their employers were taking advantage of them, they struck. They didn't speed up, either because they didn't regard it necessary or because it was their employers and not they themselves who would profit. As to the charge of wholesale drunkenness, the mere fact that the government quickly abandoned its proposed drastic temperance measure is sufficient answer.

But now it is no longer "Kitchener's war," it is the Empire's.

Lloyd George has told not only the workingmen but the entire nation the truth. And the most striking illustration of the British workingman's willingness to help the Empire in its great need is the fact that, although it was Lloyd George himself who first accused him of slackness and drunkenness, the recruiting of his new Munitions Army started with an average enlistment of 10,000 per day.

If industrial conscription should become desirable, there need be no fear of industrial revolution. Said Lord Milner in the House of Lords the other day: "There is an idea that organized labor will resent being commandeered for the service of the tSate. That is just what it will not resent. 'If we are ordered to work for England,' I heard some typical representatives of working-class opinion say the other day, 'we will obey.' The only trouble has been that so many workingmen have feared that their labor would not simply be requisitioned for the defence of the country, but exploited for the benefit of individuals." The government has guaranteed that there will be no exploitation, and that guarantee has been signed by Labor's own representative in the new Cabinet, Arthur Henderson, and by its various leaders in the House of Commons.

This spirit of anti-down-heartedness is general in England today. The attitude of complacency on the part of the upper classes and of apathy among the lower classes has given way to one of united determination.

AS SEEN IN GERMANY.
by
CARL W. ACKERMAN.
United Press Staff Correspondent.

Berlin, July 29th:—In the western campaign Germany met new conditions of modern warfare and overcame them before the enemies were able to do so. In the eastern war area old conditions of fighting have prevailed throughout the twelve months, and Germany again has shown that she is as skilful with the old as with the new.

The more valuable territory which has fallen to German arms in this war is Belgium and northern France. These conquered districts are far more wealthy than are the captured Polish and Baltic areas. Yet, without doubt, the chief glories of the German armies have been won in the east. Germany is proud of the year's magnificent record in the west, but it is the march of events in the east that thrills the German people to their very souls. In popular imagination, the might of the Russian Empire was the most disquieting fact of the war.

This belief was encouraged by the general feeling that if Germany were to hold her own in the great war, France must be overwhelmed before Russia's mighty millions could be mobilized. But Russia came on before France was overwhelmed. Germany had to meet her enemies on two fronts at once. The people of the Empire trembled last summer as Russia's hordes crept further and further into East Prussia while the campaign against the western Allies was yet to reach its height. Germany was not afraid of the western campaign, but the fact is privately confessed that the Germans did fear the outcome of the Slavonic rush.

Then, almost over night came the news that the battle of the Mazurian Lakes had been fought and had resulted in one of the greatest victories for Germany in all history. Seldom is a nation thrilled even in wartime as Germany was thrilled by the news that Marshall von Hindenburg had cleared East Prussio of the invaders. Nothing that has happened since and nothing that is likely to happen will equal in Germany's estimation the brilliance of von Hindenburg's success. Until the Mazurian battle, Germany was not sure of herself. Von Hindenburg gave confidence to his country and demonstrated so absolute a superiority over the Russians that the fear of the Slavs vanished as light dispels the terrors of the dark. von Hindenburg turned the light on the Russians and they are now the chief inspiration of the contributors to Germany's humerous weeklies.

Warsaw has not yet fallen, but instead the Germans have captured Russia's great Baltic Port of Libau, which is second in importance only to warsaw and Riga, as an eastern objective. The Baltic operations, in fact, would be considered a worthy record of the year's warfare against Russia even if nothing else had been accomplished on that side of Europe. But in fact, the Baltic campaign ranks last in importance among the three great offensives which the Germans have successfully developed against the Slavs since last August.

The first of this is the advance across western Poland to the gates of Warsaw. Germany believes this drive alone, coming after the earlier retreat from Warsaw, is a greater success, judged purely as a military problem, than all the victories that the Allies can claim.

Second in importance among successes against the Slavs is the freeing of Galicia. This campaign is ranked in Germany as an offensive one, differing from the rescue of East Prussia, which was a defensive thrust. The Galician province, was German territory but had passed almost entirely under Russian control when the Germans undertook to rescue it for Austro-Hungary. The offensive campaign developed by Marshal von Mackensen during the last three months is specially praised by German critics, because the Slavs had so long a time to prepare their defences. When the Galician operations began it was becoming the general conclusion of militarist students that a properly entrenched army could not be driven back for any considerable distance. The Germans, however, showed that it could be done.

The winning of Galicia has bound Austro-Hungary closer to the German Empire, and has banished all hope among the Allies of enticing Vienna or Buda Pest into making a separate peace. Fully as important, too, the Galician campaign has been the culminating influence which is preventing the neutral Balkan countries from entering the war. The diplomatic work of maintaining the neutrality of Roumania, Bulgaria and Greece has caused many sleepless nights at the German foreign office in the past months.

Perhaps when the historians begin to write about the events of the past year, they will rank above everything else in importance, the influence which Germany's mighty victories in the east has had on the Balkan states. If the three southeastern neutrals had joined the Allies, earlier in the war, when Russia's strength was at its full, Germany doesn't like to think about the possible consequences.

United Press Staff Correspondent.

Paris, July 29:—General Joe Joffre must be enumerated among the great French successes of the first twelve months of the War.

This goes as it stands, whatever he may or may not do in the future. I say this because Joffre is not without his critics: There are those who say he ought to move faster.

Joffre already deserves the undying gratitude of his country if he never strikes another blow. He refused at Charleroi to sacrifice his men for a brilliant but temporary success though he must have known the country was waiting for him to make good; he ordered that soul-sickening retreat before a superior foe when he knew that every heart in France was weighted down by the doubt concerning him and his army; he patiently sought and seized the opportunity he was looking for, then instantly transformed the swift German advance on Paris into a disorderly retreat; he stopped short the mighty second German offensive in the west against the Channel ports and pinned his enemy down for a long winter trench campaign where he held the advantage; he won the confidence of his men, individually the most intelligent soldiers in the world, giving them reason for their cheerful courage which never faltered even on coldest, wettest mid-winter days.

Lastly, but by no means least, he so handled his rescources in material and men that now, at the beginning of the second year of the war the French army is the finest fighting body in the melee. Joffre was the one man in France's forty million for the job.

At that, Joffre was an accident!

That France had the right man for the place and at the moment he was most needed, was almost pure accident for her system of running the army, until a year or so before the war broke out, was not calculated to develop the man for the job.

For some reason France had not seen fit to nominate a generalissimo, a commander-in-chief of the army, until just prior to the war. There was simply a board of generals and his board was supreme.

Maneuvres were conducted just as one would expect a board to conduct them. The Blue Army, under one set of generals, would take such and such a position at such and such a time. The Red Army under another set of generals, would oppose the Blues and to do this they would hold such and such a line. The action would begin at a specified time, would take a specified form and cease at a pre-arranged hour, the Blues and Reds then to be occupying this or that position.

For a given number of days this sort of thing would continue until the final event which took place before the President of the Republic and his guests, foreign military attaches, and the rest, whose tinsel-tasseled tents were pitched on the eminence overlooking the field where the climax (according to arrangements) would unfold itself.

Naturally maneuvres under such circumstances scarcely developed initiative on the part of generals and their staffs. The weaker ones and indolent fellows were able to make about as good a showing as the best.

Suddenly all this was changed. Joffre came on the scene. The general unrest in Europe showed to France the unwisdom of letting this situation continue, and Joffre was named Generalissimo of the army. How he came to be named is not clearly known; I have heard that General Pau was the first choice, but he, for reasons of his own, thought Joffre ought to be named. And Joffre it was.

Joffre was destined to have but one go at playing war before actual war began, but he changed the rules radically for this one. He gave the Blue Army a city and its surrounding country to hold and he told the Red Army to take it. He told them to go to it. All methods were good, there was no "time out" for anything and he hoped the best man would win.

There was the dickens to pay, of course. Easy-going officers were left far behind; incompetency developed in unlooked-for places; whole commands got captured, generals commanding, staffs and all. There were all sorts of mix-ups, but Joffre looked on and took in every detail. The newspapers hinted that the maneuvres were a fiasco and that the French army was in a bad way. But Joffre considered the war game the most successful he had ever witnessed.

He had found the weak spots in the machine and knowing them, he could apply the remedy. He applied it and a number of officers were retired.

War caught Joffre in the middle of his reorganization. But he fought it out like a man until he won a breathing spell, then he dispassionately continued his merciless lopping off of official heads. His generals now average 10 years younger than at the start and he has a tried man at every part of the line.

Joffre has accomplished all this in a year.

ARE HIT HARDEST BY WAR.

London, June 25th (By mail): Next to homeless Belgians, British middle-class professional men, thousands of whom are penniless, are real sufferers on account of the war.

A dozen relief societies, in London alone, are today caring for thousands of stranded artists, architects, surveyors, stockbrokers, engineers, musicians, journalists, schoolteachers, actors and others who have found their employments gradually swept away in war time.

More than 2,000 appeals for aid have already been made to one society, the Professional Classes War Relief council, which, according to reports just made, have been able to care for out half the cases, the majority of which are legitimate.

SURPRISE FOR REV. HOKENSON

Parishioners Present Him With Purse

Wednesday was the fiftieth birthday anniversary of Rev. Leander Hokenson and while he had planned no celebration for the interesting event the parishioners of his church the Swedish Lutheran, thought the time very opportune to show him that his efforts in behalf of the church and his work along all church lines were appreciated and with this in view a little surprise was prepared.

An antomobile drove up to his home early Wednesday evening and he and Mrs. Hokenson were requested to come to the church, the excuse given being that they wanted to consult him about the lights. On arriving he was very much surprised to see gathered the members of the congregation as well as a number of friends. As the pastor and his wife entered the church they were greeted by Rev. Dr. C. F. Johanson and escorted to the front of the edifice, August Weeden escorting Mrs. Hokenson.

Dr. Johanson gave a short address taking for his text "He is worthy that you do him this, because he loves our people and has built for us a synagogue." It was a very appropriate text in view of the fact that the new chapel for which Rev. Mr. Hokenson had worked so hard had just been completed and dedicated. At the conclusion of the address Rev. Dr. Johanson presented Pastor Hokenson with a purse containing a sum of money as a token of appreciation of the members of the church and other friends.

Rev. Mr. Hokenson was deeply affected by this mark of appreciation and it was not without an effort that he was able to respond and to express his heartfelt thanks for the most generous gift. Then two little girls Florence Carlson and Carrie Nelson, each carrying a large bouquet marched toward the platform singing. On their arrival they presented the bouquets to Rev. and Mrs. Hokenson.

Following this there were brief addresses by Rec. A. G. Sporrong of the Swedish Congregational church and by Rev. E. Nordstrom of Bayonne, N. J. Between the addresses there was singing by the choir of the church. A line was then formed and the parishioners marched by their pastor each shaking him by the hand and wishing him many happy returns of the day.

An adjournment was then made to the new chapel where refreshments were served. In the centre of the table were several large birthday cakes and each person present was given a slice.

MOB VENTS FURY ON PRESIDENT

Head of Haitien Government Is Slain at Port au Prince

BODY IS THEN DRAGGED ABOUT

Corpse Kicked and Mutilated In Streets — United States Marines Land to Save Foreigners—Invasion of French Legation Likely to Call For Satisfaction From Washington

Port au Prince, Haiti, July 29.—A mob of Haitians removed Vilbrun Guillaume, president of Haiti, from the French legation, where he took refuge, and shot him to death in front of the building.

This act of violence followed immediately the burial of 160 political prisoners who were massacred in prison Tuesday, at the time of the revolutionary outbreak against Guillaume.

The mob was composed in large part of relatives of the victims of this wholesale execution. The crowd invaded the French legation and seized Guillaume. M. Gerard, the French minister to Haiti, protested vigorously, but he was powerless before the fury of the people.

Guillaume was dragged from the protection of the legation. Once in the street the crowd surged around him with imprecations and shot him to death.

The people of Port au Prince are in a state of intense excitement, and further violence is feared.

Guillaume's body lay in the spot where it had fallen for several hours while the mob marched by.

Later a body of troops tied a long rope to the president's body and dragged it through the principal streets, kicking and mutilating the corpse.

A relative of the president made a vain plea that the body be turned over to him, and narrowly escaped violence himself.

War between Santo Domingo and Haiti loomed up as a strong probability as a result of the storming of the legation, from which General Oscar was dragged to his death.

Oscar, governor of Port au Prince and a supporter of Guillaume, caused to be executed all the political prisoners in the hands of the government. The victims of this massacre included General Zamor, a former president of Haiti.

American Marines Land

Washington, July 29.—The cruiser Washington., Rear Admiral Caperton in command, reached Port au Prince at noon yesterday with an expeditionary force of 100 marines and a ship's company of approximately 700 bluejackets.

The Washington was rushed to the Haitien capital following the uprising in which President Guillaume fled to the French legation for sanctuary.

Caperton landed 400 marines and bluejackets from the Washington and the collier Jason is due with 100 marines more. These will be landed immediately on their arrival.

France is considered certain to demand satisfaction for the invasion of its legation, and it is agreed that it would be obligatory upon the United States, under the Monroe doctrine, to see that it is accorded.

There were suggestions in dispatches received here from the black republic that foreigners had been endangered. Guillaume was referred to, before his deposition, as having been engaged in expelling them as fast as he could.

The Washington's voyage was at the request of American Charge d'Affaires Davis at Port au Prince.

Davis confirmed reports of the killing of political prisoners by Oscar. The popular rising against Guillaume followed the slaughter, Davis added.

SMILE COST HIM $1000

Mexico City Man Says Gotham Blonde Nearly Earned the Money

New York, July 29.—Juan L. Lacelle, an oil dealer of Mexico City, paid $1000 for a smile. He reported to the police that, while in the Long Island railroad station, a "very pretty blonde woman with the most hypnotic smile," continually brushed against him, apologizing sweetly each time.

After she had gone, he found his wallet with $1000 was gone also. "It was nearly worth it, at that," ruminated Lacelle.

PARAGON PARK.

In the Palm Garden at Paragon Park, Nantasket Beach, this week the Cabaret entertainment comprised two new features in addition to the Broadway Musical Revue presented by 25 pretty girls; the Mazanette Trio of singers from Shanley's Restaurant, New York; and Art Spaulding and Mlle. Camilla, popular cabaret entertainers. The new features will be dancing specialties by the Church Sisters, who were so popular at this resort last summer, and a sensational trapeze specialty offered by Caprice Lewis.

The souvenir dances, held every evening during Dansants, have become immensely popular with patrons. The dancing space in the Palm Garden is marked off in numbered squares and at the conclusion of each dance the lady standing on a designated square is presented with a souvenir. Another popular feature of the Dansants is the exhibition of modern dances by LaBlanc and Lorraine. The Palm Garden orchestra and the Banjo Tango band provides the music for these entertainments. In the free open air circus a new feature is the Bernier Brothers presenting a high class acrobatic act.

BABY PARADE ON BOARDWALK AT ATLANTIC CITY

REVIEW OF FOOD AND DRUG SITUATION.

In a recent report of the Connecticut Agricultural Experiment Station appears a comparison of the proprietary medicines sold in a definite section of the country, with those at the time of the passage of the national Food and Drugs Act of 1906. This report shows a wholesome change in many instances. Habit-forming and other dangerous drugs are far less common in nostrums than they were ten years ago. The average sufferer, unless he is a drug habitue, now takes alarm at the words "morphin," "opium," "herion," "cocain" and even "alcohol," and fears to use remedies whose labels bear these words. The manufacturer dare not withhold this information, and in many cases has made substitutions to allay the public distrust. The patient, failing to obtain the customary effect of the active and dangerous drug, discontinues the use of the medicine. As a result, certain of the once most widely advertised nostrums are gradually being withdrawn from sale.

In Connecticut, out of 130 so-called "patent" medicines examined in that state last year, thirty-five might be passed "as possessing some merit." This group includes for the most part toilet preparations sold at a high price. It is unsafe to depend on former analyses of many of the secret remedies. The formulas are frequently changed, usually without notice to the public, which continues to purchase the supposedly "old and tried prescriptions."

That over sixty of the analyzed proprietary medicines are found to be out-and-out fakes will, of course, surprise no one who has studied this subject in recent years. It may be more unexpected, however, to learn that more than a quarter of the preparations still contain dangerous drugs, most of which do not come within the group which the laws require to be stated on the label.

Some of the advertising features are not devoid of humor. Thus, one preparation is recommended for alcoholism, and likewise for the production of cocktails and "excellent highballs"—on one and the same label. The label of a "hair tonic" makes the apparently damaging statement that its use brings "the removal of dandruff, and the vitality and lustre of the hair soon follows." Possibly the manufacturer's English is more at fault than his preparation! Again, there is a "Prescription for the Skin and Scalp" which "cures" eczema in all forms. It contained chloral hydrate, carbolic acid and oil of wintergreen, not one, of which is found in the list of sixty-five drugs referred to in the U. S. Dispensatory as useful in the treatment of eczema. Freckle lotions containing over 0.5 per cent. (5.3 per thousand) of corrosive sublimate are sold without a poison label.

With respect to the cod liver oil wines, there is an accumulation of evidence that they do not posses the nutrient qualities of the oil itself. Any one using them in place of the oil is likely to be grievously disappointed.

The use of wheat bran and of agar agar in the treatment of certain forms of constipation has given an impetus to the production of preparations in which these are claimed or implied to be incorporated. Even here no dependence can be put on the label. One brand of biscuits clearly designatd as Agar Agar Wafers certainly contained less than 1 per cent. of the seaweed. Disguised by a fancy trade name, the latter reaches a price of nearly three dollars per pound in some packages.

In the field of diabetic foods, there is evidence of gradual improvement out of the chaotic condition which was revealed by successive reports from the Connecticut station in previous years. It is stated that, while the present European war will doubtless interfere with the importation of many brands from abroad, the production of good products will be, and apparently is being, stimulated in this country.

Out of twenty-three samples of "malt extract," only two have any claim whatever to the name. The other samples were merely more or less concentrated beers, or diluted extract. A genuine malt extract, as defined by the U. S. Pharmacopeia, should contain all the soluble principles of malt in a permanent form. To confuse the spurious extracts with the genuine U. S. P. extract constitutes a serious abuse.

Although most of our food products are showing improvement in the direction of purity, the end is not yet in sight. We are now in the era of legal food, rather than pure food. This is a step forward, but it throws an added responsibility on the consumer. He must learn to read and understand the label; otherwise the protection given to him under the law confers little benefit. The day may arrive when "legal" and "pure" will be synonymous terms in relation to woods and drugs.—Journal of American Medical Association.

POLICE SEEKING MYSTERY COUPLE

Police in plain clothes patroled the Greenleaf street section Wednesday in an effort to apprehend the man reported by residents to have taken a nine year old girl over a wall, toward a small patch of woodland and swamp a short distance from Greenleaf street and Woodward avenue, but nothing of a tangible nature developed.

Inspector Goodhue made a personal investigation of the incident. He was unable to find anyone who could say anything definite about the incident other than that they were suspicious of the man's actions.

The activities of the police have been widespread. An effort has been made to locate the girl but nothing that would lead to her identification was uncovered and parents in the immediate and surrounding sections were interviewed as to whether or not any of their children may have had such an experience.

The police say that there is no doubt that a man was seen walking along with a little girl by the hand and that he might have taken her over the wall but that is as far as their investigation has been able to go. They say it is possible that it might have been a father and daughter, although they have no proof of it.

The suspicions of the residents became known at 11 o'clock Wednesday when they phoned the police what they said were the circumstances. Sergt. Edward Johnson rushed two men to the scene and an extensive search was made. At noon plain clothes men were assigned to the district. The police are continuing their investigations today.

A month ago a man acted suspiciously in that neighborhood and the people became somewhat alarmed and it is thought that their suspicions on Wednesday were the result of his actions.

STORY FROM THE FRONT.

London—The story reached London today of how General Sir John French commander-in-chief of the British Army, in northern France, played the principal role in a little human drama of war.

During one of the surprise visits that General French often makes to the various regiments he found a youthful territorial writing a letter and simultaneously sobbing bitterly. Sir John immediately asked to know the cause of the lad's grief. Taken by surprise, the young soldier attempted to control his emotion and stammeringly pleaded that nothing was wrong. But French persisted. The boy finally produced a letter from a younger brother in England telling him of the death of their mother following an unofficial report that her son had been killed at the front. The family, it appeared, were in humble circumstances.

"God bless you my boy, you mother, at any rate, died with the satisfaction of knowing that her son did his duty," said the Field Marshal as he pressed a substantial sum of money into the boy's hand and sent him home on three weeks leave of absence.

James N. Cantfill has joined the ranks of amateur farmers and is specializing in rhubarb. Many of his friends have enjoyed the fruits of his efforts.

JOSE SILVERA GOES TO LAW.

Mission San Jose, Cal., July 29—Jose Silvera had a vegetable garden. Manuel Fonda had a rooster. Hence, the story .

Silvera loved onions. He knew that he could buy them and that he could raise them. Because of economic pressure, he decided to have a garden. He planted onions and his garden thrived.

Fonda loved his rooster, a black Minorca. In fact he loved it almost as much as he did his neighbor, Silvera.

Early in March when the Silvera onions were sprouting, the Fonda rooster flew over into the Silvera patch. He was a busy Minorca. In half an hour he had scratched every onion from its paternal bed.

Then Silvera returned home. He shot the Minorca "between the onion patch and the back fence"

Fonda sued him for damages. Silvera fought the case. It was decided in the justice court Fonda had lost. The court decided that Silvera, not Fonda, was entitled to damages. So it allowed Silvera the market price of Fonda's dead rooster, to wit, 75 cents.

Silvera's debit account follows:

OWN LIFE IN MOVIE.

Chicago, July 29—Mrs. L. L. Rutman 23, Tulsa, Okla., held here for the Federal grand jusy for violating the postal laws, today started on a movie play of her own experience, so others may be warned.

Mrs. Rutman collected $202.17 from a Tulsa bank belonging to Mary Kelly. This was Mrs. Rutman's maiden name, and she says she was notified by the bank the money was her's, so she sent for it and when another Mary Kelly called at the bank for the money Mrs. Rutman's arrest followed.

PRINCE DISINFECTED.

Amsterdam, June 25th (By mail)—Berlin advices say that when Prince Adalbert, third son of the Kaiser, left the trenches after an inspection he insisted on the regulation certificate which read:

"This is to prove that the bearer has been disinfected and is at present free from vermin."

Federal Officials Quizzed Regarding Eastland Catastrophe

CHICAGO'S DAY OF MOURNING

Flags at Half Mast and Many Places of Amusement Closed as Services Are Held Over Bodies of Steamer's Victims—All Kinds of Vehicles Replace Hearses For Funerals

Chicago, July 29.—With a verdict all but formulated the coroner's jury investigating the deaths of a thousand or more excursionists who lost their lives when the steamer Eastland capsized in the Chicago river called in Secretary of Commerce Redfield, George Uhler, inspector general of the steamboat inspection service, and A. L. Thurman, special solicitor for the department of justice at Washington, for a private conference

Redfield said he could not speak of what he told the coroner's jury. He said Coroner Hoffman and jurors had asked him, Thurman and Uhler, regarding the usual procedure in the inspection of lake steamers and of the duties of the federal officers connected with the granting of licenses to the Eastland to carry passengers.

A corps of divers followed forty motorboats with grappling hooks for blocks down the river in an effort to find more bodies of victims of the disaster. A whole day's search, however, disclosed only two corpses to add to the 829 victims previously recovered.

Whether more may be found when the Eastland is righted cannot be determined for several days.

Under streaming skies Chicago buried its dead. The hue and cry for the guilty of the Eastland catastrophe was muffled for the time. In its place the bells of a hundred churches tolled a city's sorrow.

In official places the doors were closed. Over public and semi-public buildings flags dropped at half-mast. In the stricken villages of Hawthorne, Clyde and Cicero, all things were brushed aside by the overwhelming needs of a universally bereaved people.

The whole city was in mourning under an official proclamation by Mayor Thompson, who returned from San Francisco and took charge of the relief work.

Federal and state laws forbade the closing of the banks, and in the grain pits at the board of trade barter and sale went on as usual. The big department stores were open. Baseball promoters closed their parks. Cabarets were stilled. Many theatres did not open.

Close to 600 of the victims of the Eastland were laid to rest. So great were the demands upon the priests and the ministers that funeral ceremonies were, by sheer necessity, conducted over groups of bodies.

Conventional means of conveyance of the dead to their last resting place proved hopelessly inadequate. Hearses were quickly exhausted, as were electric and steam funeral cars. Many of the sad processions were led by coal, ice and express vans, swathed in crepe. A hay rack carried twelve coffins to a Polish cemetery.

As the solemn processions passed through the streets in a drizzling rain heads were bared, and as the little churches where many of the bodies were taken would accommodate only a few, the overflow crowds paid homage on the outside, giving little heed to the inclement weather.

URGES PREPAREDNESS

Roosevelt Says We Should Have Standing Army of 200,000 Men

San Diego, Cal., July 29.—Advocates of peace at any price were scored by Theodore Roosevelt here when he addressed a large crowd.

Roosevelt's address came as a climax to Roosevelt day at the exposition—a program of entertainment which kept the former president busy all day.

"If, after his Gettysburg address, Lincoln had listened to those who said war was the worst of evils, we would not be here," said Roosevelt.

"I'm an extremely domestic man, but should there be war, I and my four sons would go to it.

"We should be prepared. We should have a standing army of 200,000."

Auto Trucks For Mail Service

Boston, July 29.—Boston's new automobile mail service, the first in this country, will become a reality on Aug. 15. The $47,960 contract for furnishing eleven auto trucks for the mail delivery and collection has been awarded to the Boston Mail Delivery company.

Three Killed In Balloon Explosion

London, July 29.—Three persons were killed and twenty injured by the explosion of an army dirigible in its hangar at Wormwood Scrubs. It is believed that escaping gas was ignited by a lighted cigar.

Death of Robbers' Victim

Lowell, Mass., July 29.—Czesaw Marzec, victim of an assault and robbery on the night of July 5, died yesterday. His assailants are unknown.

FOR SMALL ARMY AND NAVY

Opinion That Hay May Checkmate Plans of President Wilson

Washington, July 29.—Secretary Garrison declined to take up the gauntlet thrown down by Chairman Hay of the house military affairs committee, in an interview declaring congress will not concur in the president's increased army and navy program at the next session.

The belief is growing that Hay, who, as "small army and navy" leader in the house, has scored repeatedly in past years over the expansionists, may checkmate legislation looking to fulfilment of the president's plans.

Hay is yet to be elected chairman of the house military affairs committee for the coming session, but it is known that the White House fears his success in caucus cannot be prevented unless a tremendous public sentiment develops in the president's behalf.

BECKER IS DOOMED TO DIE IN CHAIR

Motion For New Trial Refused by Supreme Court Justice

New York, July 29.—Justice Ford of the supreme court late last night denied a new trial to Charles Becker, the former police lieutenant under sentence of death for instigating the murder of Herman Rosenthal, the gambler. This decision means that Becker must be electrocuted tomorrow.

Justice Ford announced his decision in his chambers, where he had labored for several days and nights on the briefs submitted for and against the application for a new trial.

Ford's decision contained about 1500 words. It goes into the details of the affidavits filed by the attorneys for Becker and declares that the evidence proffered "is for the most part cumulative and hence insufficient."

"As I studied the authorities and examined the affidavits," the court says in conclusion, "the conviction has grown upon me that it (a new trial) could not be granted without disregarding the law and attempting to usurp the function of another department of government."

Albany, July 29.—"Justice Ford did the only thing he could do. The evidence was conclusive. If I had any doubt as to the guilt of Becker, I should pardon him."

This was Governor Whitman's only comment on the refusal of Ford to grant Becker a new trial.

OFFICIALS NOT BLAMED

Legislature Asked to Make Changes at Georgia Prison Farm

Atlanta, July 29.—Exonerating the prison officials from blame for the recent attempt to assassinate Leo M. Frank, Governor Harris sent a message to the legislature, recommending many changes at the state farm, among them separate quarters for dangerous prisoners.

The governor declared lack of money and equipment made the attempt on Frank's life possible, and recommends liberal appropriations to correct these conditions.

M'CART IS ACQUITTED

Clergyman Tried For Killing a Man Forty-Five Years Ago

Covington, Ga., July 29.—Rev. William H. McCart was acquitted in the superior court here on the charge of having murdered Monroe Smith, a neighbor, forty-five years ago.

McCart fled immediately after the shooting in 1870 and was arrested upon his return recently from Hawaii, where he had been a missionary.

He was the chief witness in his own defense, declaring that Smith had struck his mother and had threatened to kill him.

CHALLENGE FROM N. Y. BLUECOATS

The Massachusetts police base ball league is a regular league and stories of its success have reached New York and caused some of the blue coats of the big city to cock their weather eye. An interest has been stimulated which may result in the formation of a national league, or at least one that will include the New England states and New York.

The Quincy police team, the Quincy people believe, is the best combination of the lot. Boston is in first position and hasn't lost a game. Quincy has won four and lost four. The four defeats shouldn't have been registered against them. Lack of a real pitcher and an occasional wild throw brought them about. The victories were all the result of tight base ball which means of course the necessary amount of hitting at the right time. Friday the boys go to Lowell to settle old scores with the force of that city.

The season is pretty well over and Henry T. Parsons, secretary of the league and one of the patrolmen who has helped organize it five years ago has been the party through whom a real challenge has been circulated. The letter should be interesting to the members of the force and the fans who have so earnestly followed the season. The letter:

Brooklyn, N. Y. City, July 8, 1915.

Henry T. Parsons, Police Headquarters, Chelsea, Mass.

Dear Sir—A copy of the schedule for 1915 of the Massachusetts Police Baseball League has fallen into the hands of the "enemy."

The police department of New York city has two leagues, each comprising eight teams, representing the various police inspection districts. Everything in connection with these leagues is done in big league style. Therefore, each team has 21 players, signed for the season, who must abide by the major league rules which have been adopted. In all, there are 336 players in both leagues. These men are the pick of 11,000, all members of the force. Many of them have had big league experience, and one, at least, has played with our famous Giants of the National league.

Perhaps my telling you all of the above facts will defeat my purpose. But I think not. What do you think of the idea of having your best team play our best at the end of the season's series of games?

I note on your schedule that you are playing "for the world's police championship." Of course, the New York copper disputes the claim. Perhaps we are not putting the proper construction on the word "world" used. One of our managers ventured the thought that you boys feel that everything outside of Mass. is not in the world.

Another thought that because of your pride in and affection for your native state you are imbued with the idea that Mass. is your own little world. If so, they are correct. But if that word "world" used on your schedule is intended to mean the universe, we must dispute the claim of champion of it in the line of the national pastime; and right here springs up a friendly rivalry between us coppers which should be seasoned with a series of games—at least so think we all of us.

I am enclosing schedule of the Brooklyn-Queens League, and trust the action of your board of managers or whoever may be in control will act favorably upon our challenge. Rest assured the boys of your team who will represent you will be met with a brass band of the police department, and shown a bully time. The games would be played at the Giant's or Brooklyns' grounds.

Very truly yours,
F. C. Kruse, Secretary-Treasurer.

KINKEAD SHOWS HE IS RIGHT ON JOB

Police Head and Oil Plant Guards Find He Is Their Master

Bayonne, N. J., July 29.—Normal conditions were restored here when practically all the Standard Oil strikers returned to work.

Sheriff Kinkead's activities included the arrest of Police Commissioner Mara and ninety-nine armed guards and compelling Frank Tannenbaum, labor agitator, to sign a pledge to be quiet while in Hudson county.

The arrest of Mara resulted when the latter refused to leave the office of chief of police, where the sheriff was in conference with the prosecuting attorney.

The guards arrested were part of the force at the Tidewater plant. The guards all surrendered their weapons.

SPORTING COMMENT

The suggestion of Manager Stallings that the Braves play an exhibition game some Sunday before the close of the season with the Providence Greys at Rocky Point, the entire proceeds to be donated to the widow of Charley Ganzel, who has just been put out of her home in Quincy, is sure to meet with hearty favor from the fans, from none more than from President Lannin of the Red Sox, who, as owner of the Providence club, is pretty sure to second Manager Stalling's suggestion. The case of the family of the late Boston catcher has been peculiarly sad, and while temporary relief was afforded through the generosity of fans a little while ago, there is still an opportunity for additional charity in a direction that will be as appreciated by the recipients as it is deserving.—Walter E. Hapgood, Boston Herald.

THE BRAVES, BY WINNING OVER THE REDS WEDNESDAY MADE IT 15 VICTORIES OUT OF 20 GAMES.

George Barry came across with his hit in the Pawtucket-Hartford Colonial league game Wednesday. His team lost however 5 to 2.

Two fights with the umpire marked Wednesday's double header at Kansas city between the Brooklyn and Kansas City Fed. Teams. Managers Stovall and Magee both took a crack at Ump Corcoran and were banished from the game.

Old Man Wadlin, pitcher and mainstay of the Lawrence police base ball team, is injured and the team is badly crippled. Wadlin is 60 years of age. Recently the bone of one of his fingers was splintered while he was trying to stop a hot liner. It is doubtful if he will enter the box again. Lawrence may drop out of the league for the need of a capable pitcher.

George Wiley of Syracuse regained the American middle distance championship at the Revere cycle track Wednesday night. He beat Elmer Collins of Lynn and Bobby Walthour of Atlanta in a 50 mile motor paced race. Clarence Carmen of Jamaica, N. Y., who beat Wiley a year ago had a fall and was carried off unconscious. Rain put an end to the speed test in the 24th mile and in keeping with the rules the leading man was declared the winner and given the Gold Medal and the title.

One run was sufficient to give the White Sox victory over the Red Sox Wednesday. The speed boys were unable to push any acorns. Nearly 5000 fans from Natick rooted wildly for the home team. Jim Scott and Shore both pitched masterly ball. The Red Sox were good on the defense but failed to make timely hits.

Prince Rudolph held the Reds at Bay Wednesday. The final score was Braves 3, Cincinnati 1. Sherwood Magee put in the wallop that did things. The Braves now hold undisputed title to third place in the race. It took but 1 hour and 25 minutes to play the game. The weather was hot. The Braves came from behind and Sherwood Magee's triple gave them the win.

Twelve tubs are entered in the muster at Chelsea today. The Hancock of Brockton is entered.

A foul tip fractured the collar bone of Umpire Kelley while he was behind the plate in the Lawrence-Fitchburg N. E. League games Wednesday. Kelley is a recent addition to the umpiring staff. Lawrence won both games 4 to 2 and 4 to 3. Patsy Duggan got a hit the first game and three put-outs in left field. He got another put out in the second game.

That Montreal team of the International league is going some Wednesday they beat up the Richmonds, 11 to 1. The team is tied for third place. Ken Nash and Howley are both playing good ball.

Poverty is said to be a sure cure for dyspepsia; the cure however is worse than the disease.

PENDANT PICTURE TELLS STORY.

London, June 30th (By mail)—The tragic journey of a pendant, containing a girls picture and a lock of hair, from England to France and back again was told here today.

The day Private G. E. Milburn, a signaller in the Durhams, left his home for the front, Miss Bessie Grey, his sweetheart hung the pendant about his neck and kissed him goodbye. Milburn went into battle with the pendant still around his neck. He was killed and for many weeks, no letter came to the girl he left behind.

Finally a large batch of dead soldier's effects were brought to England and a London illustrated journal photographed many of them in an effort to trace the families of the fallen men. Miss Grey saw the photograph of the pendant she gave Private Milburn and claimed it.

CHAPTER XV.

In the Burglar-Proof.

A week and a day after the opening of new vistas at Miss Grierson's "evening," Griswold—Raymer's intercession with the Widow Holcomb having paved the way—took a favorable opportunity of announcing his intention of leaving Mereside. It figured as a grateful disappointment to him—one of the many she was constantly giving him—that Margery placed no obstacles in the way of the intention. On the contrary, she approved the plan.

"I know how you feel," she said, nodding complete comprehension. "You want to have a place that you can call your own; a place where you can go and come as you please and settle down to work. You are going to work, aren't you?—on the book, I mean?"

Griswold replaced in its proper niche the volume he had been reading. It was Adam Smith's "Wealth of Nations," and he had been wondering by what ironical chance it had found a place in the banker's library.

"Yes; that is what I mean to do," he returned. "But it will have to be done in such scraps and parings of time as I can save from some bread-and-butter occupation. One must eat to live, you know."

She was sitting on the arm of one of the big library lounging-chairs and looking up at him with a smile that was suspiciously innocent and child-like.

"You mean that you will have to work for your living?" she asked.

"Exactly."

"What were you thinking of doing?"

"I don't know," he confessed.

Again he surprised the lurking smile in the velvety eyes, but this time it was half-mischievous.

"We have a college here in Wahaska, and you might get a place on the faculty," she suggested; adding: "As an instructor in philosophy, for example."

"Philosophy? that is the one thing in the world that I know least about."

"Oh, but I do mean it, honestly," she averred. "You are a philosopher, really and truly, and I can prove it. Do you feel equal to another little drive downtown?"

"Being a philoscopher, I ought to be equal to anything," he postulated; and he went upstairs to get a street coat and his hat.

She had disappeared when he came down again, and he went out to sit on the sun-warmed veranda while he waited. He had already forgotten what she had said about the object of the drive—the proving of the philosophic charge against him—and was looking forward with keenly pleasurable anticipations to another outing with her, the second for that day. It had come to this, now; to admitting frankly the charm which he was still calling sensuous, and which, in the moments of insight recurring, as often as they can be borne to the imaginative, and vouchsafed now and then even to the wayfaring, he was still disposed to characterize as an appeal to that which was least worthy in him.

Passing easily to Miss Farnham the ideal from Miss Grierson the flesh-and-blood reality, he was moved to wonder mildly why the fate which had brought him twice into critically intimate relations with her was now denying him even a chance meeting. For a week or more he had been going out daily; sometimes with Miss Grierson in the trap, but oftener afoot and alone. The walking excursions had led him most frequently up and down the lakeside drive, but the doctor's house stood well back in its enclosure, and there was much shrubbery. Once he heard her voice: she was reading aloud to someone on the vine-screened porch. And once again in passing, he had caught a glimpse of a shapely arm with the loose sleeve falling away from it as it was thrust upward through the porch greenery to pluck a bud from the crimson rambler, adding its graceful mass to the clambering vines. It was rather disappointing, but he was not impatient. In the fullness of time the destiny which had twice intervened would intervene again. He was as certain of it as he was of the day-to-day renewal of his strength and vitality; and he could afford to wait. For, whatever else might happen in a mutable world, neither an ideal nor its embodiment may suffer change.

"Open That Box on the Table, Please."

As if to add the touch of definiteness to the presumptive conclusion, a voice broke in upon his reverie; the voice of the young woman whose most alluring charm was her many-sided changefulness, as if she had marked his preoccupied gaze and divined its object: "You must have a little more patience, Mr. Griswold. All things come to him who waits. When you have left Mereside finally, Doctor Bertie will some time take you home to dinner with him."

For his own peace of mind, Griswold hastily assured himself that it was only the wildest of chance shots. Since the day when he had admitted that he knew Miss Farnham's name without knowing Miss Farnham in person, the doctor's daughter had never been mentioned between them.

"How did you happen to guess that I was thinking of the good doctor?" he asked, curiously.

"You were not thinking of Doctor Bertie; you were thinking of Doctor Bertie's 'only,'" was the laughing contradiction; and Griswold was glad that the coming of the man with the trap saved him from the necessity of falling any farther into what might easily prove to be a dangerous pitfall. It was not the first time that Miss Grierson had seemed able to read his inmost thoughts.

The short afternoon drive paused at the curb in front of Jasper Grierson's bank and a moment later he found himself bringing up the rear of a procession of three, led by a young woman with a bunch of keys at her girdle.

"Number three-forty-five-A, please," his companion was saying to the young woman custodian, and he stood aside and admired the workmanship of the complicated time-locks while the two entered the electric-lighted safety deposit vault and jointly opened one of the multitude of small safes. When Miss Grierson came out, she was carrying a small, japanned document box under her arm, and her eyes were shining with a soft light that was new to the man who was waiting in the corridor. "Come with me to one of the coupon rooms," she said; and then to the custodian: "You needn't stay; I'll ring when we want to be let out."

Griswold followed in mild bewilderment when she turned aside to one of the little mahogany-lined cells set apart for the use of the safe-holders, saw her press the button which switched the lights on, and mechanically obeyed her signal to close the door. When their complete privacy was assured, she put the japanned box on the tiny table and motioned him to one of the two chairs.

"Do you know why I have brought you here?" she asked, when he was sitting within arm's-reach of the small black box.

"How should I?" he said. "You take me where you please, and when you please, and I ask no questions. I am too well content to be with you to care very much about the whys and wherefores."

"Oh, how nicely you say it!" she commended, with the frank little laugh which he had come to know and to seek to provoke. She was standing against the opposite cell wall with her shoulders squared and her hands behind her: the pose, whether intentional or natural, was dramatically perfect and altogether bewitching. "I was born to be your fairy godmother, I think," she went on joyously. "Tell me; when you bought your ticket to Wahaska that night in St. Louis, were you meaning to come here to find work?"

"No," he admitted; "I had money, then."

"What became of it?"

"I don't know. I suppose it was stolen from me on the train. It was in a package in one of my suitcases; and Doctor Farnham said—"

"I know; also he told you that we didn't find any money?"

"Yes; he told me that, too. We agreed that somebody must have gone through the grips on the train."

"So you just let the money go?"

"So I just let it go."

She was laughing again and the bedazzling eyes were dancing with delight.

"I told you I was going to prove that you are a philosopher!" she exulted. "Sour old Diogenes himself couldn't have been more superbly indifferent to the goods the gods provide. Open that box on the table, please."

He did it half-absently; at the first sight of the brown-paper packet within, the electric bulb suspended over the table seemed to grow black and the mahogany walls of the tiny room to spin dizzily. Then, with a click that he fancied he could hear, the buzzing mental machinery stopped and reversed itself. A cold sweat, clammy and sickening, started out on him when he realized that the reversal had made him once again the crafty, cornered criminal, ready to fight or fly—or to slay, if a life stood in the way of escape. Without knowing what he did, he closed the box and got upon his feet, eyeing her with a growing ferocity that he could neither banish nor control.

"I see: you were a little beforehand with the doctor," he said, and he strove to say it naturally; to keep the malignant devil that was whispering in his ear from dictating the tone as well as the words.

"I was, indeed; several days beforehand," she boasted, still joyously exultant.

"You—you opened the package?" he went on, once more pushing the importunate devil aside.

"Naturally. How else would I have known that it was worth locking up?"

Her coolness astounded him. If she knew the whole truth—and the demon at his ear was assuring him that she must know it—she must also know that she was confronting a great peril; the peril of one who voluntarily shuts himself into a trap with the fear-maddened wild thing for which the trap was baited and set. He was steadying himself with a hand on the table when he said: "Well, you opened the package; what did you find out?"

"What did I find out?" He heard her half-hesitant repetition of his query, and for one flitting instant he made sure that he saw the fear of death in the wide-open eyes that were lifted to his. But the next instant the eyes were laughing at him, and she was going on confidently. "Of course, as soon as I untied the string I saw it was money—a lot of money; and you can imagine that I tied it up again, quickly, and didn't lose any more time than I could help in putting it away in the safest place I could think of. Every day since you began to get well, I've been expecting you to say something about it; but as long as you wouldn't, I wouldn't."

Slowly the blood came back into the saner channels, and the whispering demon at his ear grew less articulate. He took the necessary forward step and stood before her. And his answer was no answer at all.

"Miss Grierson—Margery—are you telling me the truth?—all of it?" he demanded, seeking to pinion the soul which lay beyond the deepest depth of the limpid eyes.

Her laugh was as cheerful as a bird song.

"Telling you the truth? How could you suspect me of such a thing! No, my good friend; no woman ever tells a man the whole truth when she can help it. I didn't find your money, and I didn't lock it up in poppa's vault: I am merely playing a part in a deep and diabolical plot to—"

Griswold forgot that he was her poor beneficiary; forgot that she had taken him in as her guest; forgot, in the mad joy of the reactionary moment, everything that he should have remembered—saw nothing, thought of nothing save the flushed face with its glorious eyes and tempting lips: the eyes and lips of the daughter of men.

She broke away from him hotly after he had taken the flushed face between his hands and kissed her; broke away to drop into the chair at the other side of the table, hiding the flashing eyes and the burning cheeks and the quivering lips in the crook of a round arm which made room for itself on the narrow table by pushing the japanned money-box off the opposite edge.

It was the normal Griswold who picked up the box and put it on the other chair, gravely and methodically. Then he stood before her again with his back to the wall, waiting for what every gentle drop of blood in his veins was telling him he richly deserved. His punishment was long in coming; so long that when he made sure she was crying, he began to invite it.

"Say it," he suggested gently, "you needn't spare me at all. The only excuse I could offer would only make the offense still greater."

She looked up quickly and the dark eyes were swimming. But whether the tears were of anger or only of outraged generosity he could not tell.

"Then there was an excuse?" she flashed up at him.

"No," he denied, as one who finds the second thought the worthier; "there was no excuse."

She had found a filmy bit of lace-bordered linen at her belt and was furtively wiping her lips with it.

"I thought perhaps you might be able to—to invent one of some sort," she said, and her tone was as colorless as the gray skies of an autumn nightfall. And then, with a childlike appeal in the wonderful eyes: "I think you will have to help me a little—out of your broader experience, you know. What ought I to do?"

His reply came hot from the refining fire of self-abasement.

"You should write me down as one who wasn't worthy of your loving-kindness and compassion, Miss Grierson. Then you should call the custodian and turn me out."

"But afterward," she persisted pathetically. "There must be an afterward."

"I am leaving Mereside this evening," he reminded her. "It will be for you to say whether its doors shall ever open to me again."

She took the thin safety-deposit key from her glove and laid it on the table.

"You have made me wish there hadn't been any money," she lamented, with a sorrowful little catch in her voice that stabbed him like a knife. "I haven't so many friends that I can afford to lose them recklessly, Mr. Griswold."

"Damn the money!" he exploded; and the malediction came out of a full heart.

Her fingers had found the bell-push and were pressing it. When the custodian opened the door, Miss Grierson was her poiseful self again.

"Number three-forty-five-A is Mr. Kenneth Griswold's box, now," she announced briefly. "Please register it in his name, and then help him to put it away and lock it up."

Griswold went through the motions with the key-bearing young woman half-absently. Man-like, he was ready to be forgiven and comforted; and there was at least oblivion in her charming little shudder as the custodian shot the bolts of the gate to let them out.

"Br-r-r!" she shivered. "I can never stand here and look at the free people out there without fancying myself in a prison. It must be a dreadful thing to be shut away behind bolts and bars, forgotten by everybody, and yet yourself unable to forget. Do you ever have such foolish thoughts, Mr. Griswold?"

For one poignant second fear leaped alive again and he called himself no better than a lost man. But the eyes that were lifted to his were the eyes of a questioning child, so guilelessly innocent that he immediately suffered another relapse into the pit of self-despisings.

"You have made me your prisoner, Miss Grierson," he said, speaking to his own thought rather than to her question. And when they reached the sidewalk and the trap: "May I bid you good-by here and go to my own place?"

"Of course not!" she protested. "Mr. Raymer is coming to dinner tonight and he will drive you over to Mrs. Holcomb's afterward, if you really think you must go."

And for the first time in their comings and goings she let him lift her to the high driving-seat.

HE HAD SOME PRIDE.

London, June 30th (By mail). A suffragette recruiting agent on the Strand severely berated a stalwart young man because he had not joined the army. After accusing him of cowardice, she asked: Have you no pride in your country?" Recovering from the shock, the S. Y. M. finally answered: "Yes, madam, I have plenty of pride in my country. I'm going back next week, I'm an American." The suffragette apologized.

OF GEORGETTE CREPE.

Pale Yellow Color Employed In This Pretty Summer Blouse.

ELABORATE SHIRT WAIST.

The eton jacket effect is simulated in this handsome blouse by means of inserts of white silk embroidery. The color of the blouse is a pale yellow, a color much liked this year. The collar follows the lines well liked by all femininity and is moderately high in the back. The sleeves are long and trimmed with the embroidery.

ABOUT HYPOCRISY.

Be Sincere About What You Say, Do and Think.

Be sincere of what you say of others. If you cannot think nice things about them do not say anything at all. You should never run down others in your speech, so if you cannot praise be silent. If you are forced to utter an opinion about a person you dislike pick out the one point you find to admire in that person and mention that.

Unfortunately it is all too seldom that the real hypocrite recognizes herself in her true nature. She usually garbs herself in a cloak of self righteousness, covering her inward self with a mask of dissimulation. Her "I am better than thou" attitude succeeds in deceiving most of the world, including herself. This pharisaism is one of the commonest characteristics of the hypocrite.

It is better to be blunt and outspoken than to be hypocritical. The hypocrite may make more friends, but the frank person knows her friends are true. You want your friends to like you for what you are—not for what you are not, but pretend to be.

The hypocrite parades her pretended virtues before the world. Self advertisement is a model of kindness and nobility is her pet labor. Her plausibility is her best stock in trade. You have only to talk to her five minutes to know that she has two Bible classes and is the most charitable member of her church. According to her, she is constantly doing good. She will tell you in one breath that she has only love in her heart for the whole world and in the next that Mrs. Brown is no doubt a respectable woman, but that she shouldn't be so indiscreet.

The awful part about the hypocrite is that she can do more harm to a girl's character in one minute than a frank person can do in a year. The outspoken girl will talk to you against a person and you will know right away that she is talking of some one she greatly dislikes. You can tell, consequently, that her opinion of the person in question is prejudiced by her dislike and is to be valued accordingly.

But the hypocrite speaks very highly of the person she wants to slander. Then she inserts a but and a slight innuendo. Every insinuation is preceded by a flattering comment. The impression you receive at once is that this criticism must be quite unprejudiced, as the talker said so many nice things too. Every harmful innuendo is doubled in importance because you think that if a woman who is such a friend can say such things they must be true.

Keep Pantry Neat.

We all know how hard it is to keep the pantry looking neat. The spices and other articles lying around make it so untidy. From your grocer get three large, strong egg cases. Nail these firmly one on the other. This gives you six compartments. Now get a ten cent can of paint (any color you want); then make a curtain (double) and put on rod. In one compartment have spices, in another all articles that come in bags, like beans, rice, etc. This cleans the pantry out and helps fill up the kitchen.

To Keep Stockings Mated.

Take some small snap fasteners. Sew one part of the fastener on one stocking at the top and the other part on the other stocking at the top. Then when stockings are taken off to put in the wash have each person snap his or her pair together. It does not interfere with the washing, and no clothespins are necessary when they are hung on the line to dry. Best of all, the pairs are always together.

song "Has anybody here seen Kelley." Representative Sandberg got a toy shovel for digging and with it went a telegram from A. C. Atwill giving a legal opinion that "It is not contrary to law to declare Nelson ballots in Germantown not contraband." The silver cup for the biggest fish went to Charles A. Chase, Arthur Stetson was given a wrist watch and W. F. Hodgkinson got an umbrella for catching the most fish . The last joke sprung was a telegram signed William R. Hearst, to John R. Nelson which read: "What is your opinion regarding a third term for representative." Then President Fegan was given a horn that he might "blow his own horn."

Between these presentations all of the political dignitaries were in turn called upon for a few remarks. Each of these complimented and congratulated the City of Quincy on having such a live Board of Trade. They also spoke of the good which such an organization could do for the city. Of course there was just a political hint in most of the remarks but as President Fegan announced, "There is no politics in the Board of Trade" the speakers did their best to live up to that maxim. Guy Ham said that he wold make his principal speech on the way back to Quincy on the boat but it is very doubtful if he did.

FREE DISPENSARY TO MOVE ON SATURDAY

Board Of Health Has Not Been Able To Secure Suitable Quarters In Which To Locate Institution Required By State

WILL GIVE NO EXAMINATIONS FOR PRESENT

The dispensary for incipient tuberculosis cases will move from the Durgin & Merrill block tomorrow Saturday and until such time as new quarters can be obtained it will be impossible to provide treatment. The Board of Health has been trying to find a new location but has not yet been able to obtain a lease of any premises. Quincy therefore will hold the position of being the only city in the state where its location has been protested.

According to the Board of Health some people had rather have those afflicted with tuberculosis roam at large rather than that they should be educated how to ward off the disease.

In moving from the Durgin & Merrill block the Board of Health wishes to make clear the fact that it is not on account of the tenants in the block but on account of the Quincy Real Estate Trust. During all of the controversy the Trust has been very considerate the Board states.

During the first month of the establishment of the dispensary which ended this week 23 patients have been examined, largely children. The dispensary has in no way been for medical treatment but for examination of the patients and the giving out of information as to the manner in which the spread of the disease may be prevented.

In addition to this the nurse has also been busy and has visited many homes in the city and given instruction as to the care of patients, etc.

In relation to objections by tenants the Board of Health mentions the City of Cambridge where the dispensary is located in business block that has many more tenants than has the Durgin & Merrill block.

The rooms here were selected after some time spent in looking about and their selection was approved by the State Board of Health as the location was considered an ideal one.

MISS KEENE IS MARRIED

Weds Roland Phinney Of Falmouth

A quiet but pretty wedding was solemnized Thursday evening at the residence of Mrs. Mabel P. Keene, 14 Francis court, when her daughter, Etta Aljuline Keene became the bride of Roland Phinney of Falmouth, a son of Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Phinney. The ceremony took place at 8 o'clock, Rev. Edward Norton, pastor emeritus of Bethany church officiating. The double ring service was used and the bride was given in marriage by her mother.

The decorations of the house were white and yellow crepe paper and white sweet peas. In the room where the ceremony took place ropes of white crepe paper ran from the corners to the chandelier, the globes of which were covered with white paper with yellow border. From these were hung short streamers of yellow crepe paper at the end of which were suspended white sweet peas. In one corner was a canopy of the same material in the centre of which was a white wedding bell. It was here that the bridal party stood during the ceremony.

Miss Alice Louise Jackson of Lynn a cousin, was maid of honor and Raymond Oliver of Quincy the best man. The ushers were Dr. Herman L. Keene, a brother of the bride, and H. Earle Penniman, a cousin of the bride Miss Gladys Pinel presided at the piano and as the bridal party entered played the wedding march.

The bride wore a white crepe meteor with tulle veil caught up with white sweet peas. She carried a shower bouquet of the same flowers.

The maid of honor wore a light blue taffeta and also carried a bouquet of white sweet peas.

A reception followed the ceremony during which the bridal party were assisted in receiving by the maid of honor and best man.

A wedding supper was served, the table decorations being carried out along the same general lines. In the centre was a large wedding cake which was cut later by the bride. The maid of honor was the fortunte young woman to obtain the ring while the thimble was secured by Miss Florence Pratt.

The groom's gift to the bride was a pearl pendant, and his gift to the best man a pair of cuff links. The bride's gift to the maid of honor was a set of pins and to the pianist a lingerie pin.

Late in the evening Mr. and Mrs. Phinney left for a brief wedding trip after which they will reside at 14 Francis court where they will be at home after Sept. 1. As the bride came down stairs prior to her departure she threw her bouquet among her friends and passed out through the door in a shower of confetti.

The wedding gifts were displayed in one of the upper rooms. They were very numerous and handsome consisting of silver of various kinds, cut glass and china, linen, pictures and several gold pieces.

☞PRATT'S BREAD—is best because more care is used in the making.

STREETS BECOME FLOWING RIVERS

"Jim" Murray Acts Part Of Lifesaver For Girls In City Square

STREET CREW IS ON JOB

Many of the streets in the city were converted into running rivers Thursday by the heavy rain during the latter part of the afternoon. The rain came rather suddenly for up to a little after 4 o'clock the air had been hot and sultry. Suddenly it began to rain and as it continued it increased in volume and soon was coming down by the buckets full. There was little wind and the rain fell straight down. Catch basins in the streets were unable to take care of the heavy down pour with the result that they were soon overflowed and the water was sent running along the streets.

Along Hancock street near City Hall and across the Hancock end of Depot street the water was so deep that to attempt to cross meant wet feet. Several girls and women were marooned in the street for a few minutes. They ran back and forth trying to find a way to reach the sidewalk. Then Officer Jim Murray with his everyday smile came to the rescue. Jim was clothed in a heavy rubber overcoat, rubber boots and his cap also had a rubber covering. He lifted the little girls over the deep places, for which he received the applause of the bystanders who watched from sheltered places.

Then a young woman came along and tried to get over and the crowd shouted "Take her in your arms Jim." The woman heard the cries but paid no attention to them. Evidently she did not care to furnish fun for the bystanders.

At the Quincy depot many passengers who came out on the trains a little after 4 o'clock were obliged to remain there for half an hour or more before they could get away, for to attempt to get to the corner for a street car meant a ducking.

A small sized flood came down Saville street from President's Hill and flowing across the railroad tracks at that street soon buried the crossing under several inches of water. The crossing tender, fearing for the safety of express trains passing through, flagged a Cape train bringing it to a stop. Then the section men got at work and managed to clear a gutter for the water.

On Granite Street beneath the bridge the catch basins were soon filled with mud and water from the street and the water rose to the depth of several feet. Three automobiles came along and attempted to get through, two of them succeeded shooting through on high speed. Then a street gang came along and the men standing up to their waists in water cleared the mud from the catch basins and let the water off.

In some low places mud and sand were washed on the street car tracks making it necessary for the crew to get out and shovel off the dirt and sand before they could go on. For this reason some of the lines were a little off time for a while.

Many streets leading from hills were also badly washed. On these places the water rushed down like a river, making deep gullies in the streets.

ANTI-SUFFRAGE NOTES.

Though Gov. Walsh has come out in a half-hearted way for woman suffrage, his four sisters are absolutely opposed to it.

Though Secretary of State Langtry is claimed by the suffragists, Mrs. Langtry believes women can best serve the state outside of politics.

Though John D. Long says a word in behalf of votes for women, Mrs. Long is treasurer of the Hingham Branch of the Women's Anti-Suffrage association of Massachusetts.

The Hon. Joseph Walker advocates woman suffrage, but Mrs. Walker is strongly opposed.

Mr. and Mrs. Alphonse Mathien and Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Tessier have returned to their homes in Brockton after visiting in Houghs Neck.

COUNCIL MEETS AGAIN TONIGHT

Will Probably Adjourn Until September 13

There were nearly as many councilmen present at City Hall Thursday evening as at a regular meeting of the City Council. Three committees were in session, the finance committee, the joint committee of finance and streets, and the joint committee of finance and water supply. None of the committees had a great amount of business to do and 9 o'clock saw the hall closed for the night.

An adjourned meeting of the Council will be held this evening and unless all signs fail it will end with an adjournment until Sept. 13. There are several matters that must be cleaned up before the vacation, the street orders which received their first reading last Monday evening and the loan order for $20,800 to provide funds to carry out the work contemplated by the orders.

If the Council intends to widen West Squantum street and Beach street, as contemplated by the loan order, it will be necessary to offer substitute orders for these matters, as the original order are not in proper form. It will require two readings to pass them and this means unless another adjournment is taken that the final passage of these two matters will have to lay over until September. These are about the only matters of importance that will be left over. It is barely possible that another effort may be made, to get one or more of the streets in West Quincy included in the loan order tonight. They were included in the original order for $29,300 but were cut out by the order offered by the Minority, which was accepted.

BECKER ELECTROCUTED, DECLARES HIS INNOCENCE

Iron Will Of Man Found Guilty Of Murder Of Rosenthal Never Falters

GEORGE L. HOLMES.
(United Press Staff Correspondent.)

Ossining, N. Y. July 30—At peace with his maker, a prayer on his lips but with never a faltering of his iron will, former police Lieut. Charles L. Becker went to the chair and paid the death penalty for the murder of Gambler Rosenthal at 5.45 A. M. today.

Pressed on his prison shirt above his heart the former czar of the Tenderloin carried with him in death the picture of his devoted wife. In his hand he clutched a crucifix.

The death current cut off in his throat the whisper "Jesus have mercy." It was not the plea of a man shaken and fearful of death but rather the prayer of one who faced the ruler of his destiny with the conviction he was an innocent sacrifice. As the guard tightened the straps and electroids through which in a moment would come the scering current of death, priests intoned prayers. Beckers lips moved continuously in reiterating "Jesus have mercy."

Those were his last words. Over and over he said them, even when his face was covered and his voice smothered by head and face pieces.

The former lieutenant of police "died game". He made no death chamber statement. It was obvious when he stepped into the room that his head was clear and that he had been given no drug. The unfaltering nerve which has characterized Becker's three years fight for victory carried him bravely through the night and into the very door today.

His eyes never closed throughout the night. "The longest hours he spent alone were between 9 and 11.30 when Mrs. Becker arrived. He would see no one but her and his spiritual advisers. He did not want to talk with them until after he had seen the woman who had battled so bravely for him. From 9 until she arrived the condemned man paced his cell.

If Becker's nerve ever faltered it was during his agonizing wait for his wife. She was supposed to arrive at 9.30. Ten o'clock came and then 11 o'clock, and no signs of her. Becker had but eight hours to live. He feared she had met with an accident and was maybe injured. At 11.30 Mrs. Becker arrived and on the arm of Atty. John B. Johnson literally ran into the principal keeper's office. It was here that she bade farewell to Charlie.

Prison rules requiring prison bars between loved ones in this last farewell were relaxed. What happened in the room probably will never be known. The guards sworn never to take their eyes from the doomed man, averted faces when Becker crushed his wife to his breast for the last time. An hour later she left, sobbing and heart broken. Today she is lying in her home in the Bronx, prostrate with grief. She arrived from the heartrending farewell shortly after 3 A. M. Relatives had almost to carry her up the steps and into the house. Only members of the family kept the vigil last night and today at the little home.

(By United Press)

Becker died an innocent man in the opinion of his spiritual advisers, Fathers Curry and Cashin.

"From your experience with condemned men," Fr. Cashin was asked, "is it your belief that a guilty man always confesses in the last few hours?"

"Invariably," the priest responded, "usually the confession comes after the sacrament has been given."

Father Curry said to him after he had administered the Holy Sacrament: "Are you guilty by word or deed or in any manner whatsoever of this crime?"

Becker answered: "Father, as I stand on the edge of the brink I am not."

PROMISES TO RETURN FOR JAIL SENTENCE

Martin Kane was in court for drunkenness and was given 10 days in the House of Correction.

"But, your Honor, I have valuable tools at the place I am working and they ought to be taken care of," said Martin.

"Well, you can have today to take care of the tools, but you better come back tomorrow and take your sentence," said Judge Avery, and the case was continued until then.

Martin left the court room in smiles. On his honor as a gentleman, he had promised to be back Saturday.

SPIRIT OF FAIR PLAY.

There are some people who still are opposed to the public playground despite the success it has proved to be in hundreds of cities.

It has been said by some people that Quincy, with its many open spaces, parks, fields, etc., offering opportunities for play, does not need playgrounds, that they are a needless expense, and simply concentrate the mischievous and naughty boys.

These people seem wholly to lose sight of the fact that the playgrounds are supervised by trained people, and that discipline is maintained. The playground does the child good. They are taught healthy games among other things.

Justice Hughes of the United States Supreme Court has the following to say upon this subject:

"I do not know of any better way to teach a boy to be honorable and straight than to give him a chance to play with his comrades. In the playground he learns without any suggestion of rebellion against instruction and precept and preaching. He learns it because he does not want anybody else to cheat him, and is 'down' on the boy that does not play fair. And in the long run, because he is 'down' on the boy that does not play fair, he will establish standards of conduct which he must maintain in the community and particularly in our great cities. If there is one thing that we need more than another it is the constant emphasis among our citizens of that spirit of fair play, that willingness to give and take, that generosity in defeat and that lack of assertiveness in victory which we identify with true sport, and which is learned best of all in childhood upon the playground."

A SERIOUS CHARGE.

It has been charged in working circles of the city that the purpose of the civil service has been defeated and that men who have successfully passed civil service examinations for positions as foremen are obliged to work under bosses who have never passed an examination.

If the charges are supported by competent investigation it is high time that the situation should be adjusted. A continuance of the policy as charged, only defeats the purpose of the civil service.

Although the course taken by President Wilson in regard to the German submarine policy is meeting with general approval from press and people there is opposition from unexpected cources. The Boston Transcript, for example, with a long record for conservaism is surprisingly radical on this matter. It may or may not be true that the Hearst papers forced the United States into a war with Spain, but it appears fairly clear that if the Transcript had its way we should be at war with Germany. It is one of the most astonishing sidelights of the war: this yellow jingoism of the Transcript.

It is no credit to a man who is trying to be a picturesque crook that he invariably manages to improve on the spectacular details of crime fiction.

Jess Willard is experiencing the temptation that presents itself to a champion to take in the easy money instead of fighting for purses.

The Heavens came to the aid of the city Thursday and gave the new part of Hancock street a thorough washing.

How about that Squantum Library we used to hear about once in a while?

Another announcement of when the Dardanelles will fall should be due soon.

In Mexico bullets are regarded as a necessity and bread as a luxury.

GROUND FOR DIVORCE.

"This scientific article states that 10,000,000 germs can collect on a pinhead. Wife, what do you think of that?"

"In that case, you had better keep your hat on, my dear."—Pittsburgh Post.

HOW KAISER "DISCOVERED" MACHINE GUN

By Wilbur S. Forrest,
United Press Staff Correspondent.

London, July 30—How Emperor Wilhelm foresaw 20 years ago the possibilities of the Maxim gun, now so prominent in war reports, and ordered vast quantities of this death-dealing weapon, was told here today for the first time by Sir Hiram Maxim, the aged American inventor.

Today the German army has approximately 56,000 of these machine guns and the British government and other governments are making them as fast as they can all of which proves that the day of the single shot rifle is past in modern warfare, says Sir Hiram.

It was Albert Edward, Prince of Wales, later King Edward, who called the Kaiser's attention to the Maxim gun, says the inventor. The King was on a visit to his Imperial nephew when one day he inquired casually of Wilhelm if he had chanced to notice the Maxim gun. The Kaiser acknowledged he had not but immediately declared his interest when told it could fire bulletsat the rate of 600 a minute.

There happened to be one of the newly invented Maxims on a range not far from the palace and together with his guest the Kaiser went to the range to watch it perform. Sir Hiram, who was present, adds:

"Orders were sent to have everything ready and when the Kaiser and the Prince visited the grounds they found four machine guns and four big targets at a distance of 200 metres. The old Gatling gun was first fired. It was very heavy and had six barrels. The Nordenfeldt five-barreled gun was also fired and the two-barreled Gardner. It required four men to serve each gun and when they attempted to work the guns too rapidly they seemed to jam. They got through with 150 to 200 rounds a minute. One man, an experenced gunner, then sat on the tail of the little Maxim gun, carefully adjusted the sights, pulled the trigger and 333 rounds went off in slightly over a half minute. (The Maxim gun is loaded and fired by its own recoil.) The Kaiser and the Prince then walked down and examined the targets .The hits made by the hand-worked machines were scattered all over the place. These guns had been disturbed by the working of the cranks and levers, whereas the Maxim, not being interfered with by an external force, had made nearly all hits in the bullseye or close to it.

"When the Kaiser returned, he placed his finger on the Maxim gun and said, 'That is the gun, there is no other.' He then caused orders to be given to turn these guns out very rapidly and in vast quantities, and they are now making history very much to our cost.

"If we wish to beat the Germans at their own game, it is necessary to be supplied with a great number of automatic machine guns."

Sir Hiram first began work on the automatic gun in 1881, when he was chief engineer and electrician of the U. S. Lighting company of New York. He later exhibited his invention before officials in France and England and after a more perfect machine had been made he took it to Germany where the Kaiser was the first to recognize its value.

In his statement, Sir Hiram says: "In the war between Russia and Japan, two-thirds of all the casualties among the Japanese were caused by Maxim guns and in the present war the most important arm is without doubt the automatic machine gun, firing rifle cartridges. It is fast supplanting the hand rifle.

It is with this weapon that a thin line of Germans, stretching across the continent, is able to hold back the French and English while vast bordes of the Kaiser's men are driving back the Russians on the Eastern front.

WAR ODDITIES.

Liverpool—Despite Germany's submarine blockade, figures show that of 6,000 voyages to and from Liverpool since war began, only 29 ships have been destroyed.

Petrograd—Reports from Lodz say the Kaiser entered the synagogue, raised a scroll of the law and informed the congregation he was the Messiah and had been sent by God to save them.

Paris—A French lieutenant who captured a German lieutenant found his captive to be of his own family, member of a branch that left France for Germany twenty years ago.

A YEAR OF THE GREAT WAR BY UNITED PRESS EXPERTS

AS SEEN IN ENGLAND.

by
ED. L. KEEN
United Press Staff Correspondent.
(Article Five.)

London, July 30th:—England starts upon the second year of the Great War with decided advantages over her position of twelve months ago.

She has command of the seas. She has an army, trained and in training, of nearly three million men. Her "expeditionary force" in France is now firmly entrenched in a position regarded as impregnable, even if the prospects of making a successful general offensive movement are not immediate. Her airmen have established beyond question their superiority in skill and daring over those of the enemy. She is building a great aerial fleet. She has at last begun with all the resources at her command, material and human, to manufacture a preponderating quantity of arms and ammunition—of the right sort. She has back of her a united nation and a united Empire.

The war found her unprepared not only from the military standpoint, but politically. The Liberal government was apparently riding for a fall. There had been all but mutiny in the army. The Irish had become more turbulent than ever Sir Edward Carson had established his "Provisional Government of Ulster," and revolution was in sight. India was seething with sedition. Even Canada had shown signs of tiring of the restraint of mother's apron strings. Industrial unrest was at its height. Altogether things were in a very bad way.

Now most of these troubles have disappeared. Some of them remained longer than others, it is true. It has been a year of readjustment. Liberals and Conservatives, Radicals and Tories, now sleep in the same bed. So far as the Irish disaffection, upon which the Kaiser counted so fondly—thanks to the lack of understanding on the part of his emissaries—is concerned, that vanished almost over night. It was a short way from Tipperary. Sir Edward Carson, whom they were about to lock up in the Tower, is now Attorney General of Great Britain, and John Redmond could be in the Cabinet if he wanted to. One hundred and twenty-five thousand Irishmen have joined the King's army. Nationalists and Unionists—75,000 of the former and 50,000 of the latter—instead of drenching Ireland with each other's blood are fighting side by side under the Union Jack.

Canada heard the call to arms and responded at once with 33,000 men to whom she has been adding regularly since. They—or rather what is fect of them— are serving in the trenches along with Ghurkas from India. Australians and New Zealanders together with Welshmen and Scotchmen are engaged in the Dardanelles in one of the most valorous campaigns in the history of warfare. The sporadic uprising in South Africa has been suppressed, and the great mass of Boers against whom England conducted her unrighteous war fifteen years ago, with General Botha at their head, have conquered German Southwest Africa for England. Labor and capital have joined their forces in the conflict.

There has been much talk of conscription of late, both military and industrial. The leaders of the nation still believe England can win without either, and if the recent response of the manhood of the country is any criterion they are right. But they are prepared for conscription, if that should prove to be the only solution. The national register scheme looks as if it were a step in that direction. The machinery for conscription is to be created, but only to be utilized in the gravest emergency.

Although she has lost her cocksureness. England has by no means lost hope. She realizes now that the struggle may be long and desperate. But the longer the better for her and her Allies in the end. Military writers, many of them, say Germany has now reached the maximum of her efficiency, while England has only got a good start toward that goal. With the boundless resources of the British Empire still to draw upon England believes ultimate victory for the Allies can only be a question of time—if the spirit that now dominates England continues.

If it is to be a war of exhaustion, she says, then the odds are in favor of England and her Allies.

AS SEEN IN FRANCE.

by
WILLIAM PHILIP SIMMS.
United Press Staff Correspondent.

Paris, July 30th:—One year ago tomorrow the general mobilization order was posted in France calling the men to the colors. This was war. Today her leaders consider the crisis passed and that victory is only a question of time. The Minister of War, M. Alexander Millerand, has announced that the German offensive is broken and that the defensive soon will be. Prime Minister Rene Viviani, in an interview granted me, declared German resources in money and supplies to be in a bad way, and M. Victor Augagneur, Minister of the Navy, has told me that Germany's submarine war cannot have any effect on the final issue.

France, therefore, is confident, but not over-confident. She realizes that there is yet much work to be done. She argues, however, that if Germany, with her flying start and an army in the pink of condition and at its maximum strength, could not shatter the French army, caught off its guard by a "brusk attack," the Kaiser's forces are helpless now. For not only has France recovered from that sudden first blow when she stood alone to receive it, but is fitter now than at the start of the war. The English are daily increasing in number and the Russian avalanche is considered inexhaustible.

Any Frenchman, or Frenchwoman will tell you it is only a question of time.

France has astonished the world by her staying qualities, by her unanimity of purpose and by her accomplishments. Here are some of her deeds during the first year of the war:

She accomplished her own solidarity.

She frustrated Germany's original plan of campaign.

She won the victory of the Marne, saving Paris.

She defeated the German attempt to take Dunkirk, Calais, Boulogne and other English Channel ports.

She forced the Germans to accept either retirement from France and Belgium or a winter campaign in trenches.

She completed the reorganization of her army, under way when war caught her.

She made an army of individuals, temperamentalists and thinkers into an army of tenacious veterans, two-to-one more efficient than at the outset of the war.

She banished the ghost of 1870.

She learned to fight as the other fellow fights; by burrowing.

She retook part of Alsace, her lost province.

She stopped the Crown Prince at Verdun.

She held Nancy, the eastern gate to Paris.

She created heavy artillery, lacking at the start.

She ousted shirkers from safe positions back of the line and sent them to the trenches; and brought out of the trenches mechanics, engineers and others needed for war material factories.

She sent a large expeditionary force to the Dardanelles.

She bottled the Austrian fleet in the Adriatic just as England bottled the German fleet at Kiel, keeping the Mediterranean open.

She successfully launched all war financial measures.

She abolished absinthe and put other intoxicants under control.

She provided for the families of soldiers.

She cared for her own refugees and provided homes and nourishment for Belgians.

She placed women in men's jobs and kept the economic life of the country going.

She kept calm despite invasion of her territory; backed her soldiers with a patient, toiling, united citizenry; and, much to her credit, has yet to utter the first world of criticism against any one of her Allies.

France was never so calm as now. She has suffered—and is still suffering cruelly—but she has not complained. Her feeling runs too deep for outward show this revealing a little-known trait of the French.

Judging by what France has accomplished during the first year of the war, and by her present deadly calm, the powers of Central Europe have a hot time in store for them during the second year of the war, which begins Sunday.

(Tomorrow—J. W. T. Mason's general Summary of the Year's Warfare.)

AS SEEN IN GERMANY.

by
CARL W. ACKERMAN
United Press Staff Correspondent.

Berlin ,July 30:—Germany's assets after a year's warfare can be summed up thus:

Possession of Russian Poland, Belgium and Northern France—territory as large and rich as New England and New York.

The Fatherland entirely free of the enemy, save for a small strip of Western Alsace.

Powerful and active submarine and Zeppelin fleets.

A tradition for the navy.

An army still capable of offensive operations everywhere in the war theaters. And hundreds of thousands of men capable of bearing arms, not yet called to the colors.

Finances unimpaired—the only belligerent which has not borrowed heavily, openly or in secret, in foreign lands, and which has neither declared a moratorium or cancelled public debts.

A million citizens in neutral lands ready to return home and help Germany recuperate after the war.

Territory practically undamaged by the ravages of war.

Germany's losses during the year's struggle are:

Over one half of her colonial empire captured.

All her overseas commerce temporarily destroyed.

Two hundred and fifty thousand soldiers killed.

Expenditure of about $2,500,000,000.

The war has given Germany these heroes:

The Kaiser.

Field Marshall von Hindenberg, who won the battle of the Mazurian Lakes, freed East Prussia from the Slavs and pricked the bubble of Russia's irresistible might.

Gen. von Haesler, who led the German rush into France.

Lieut. von der Linden, who with 15 men captured a fort at Belgium, without firing a shot and permitted the Germans to begin the rout of the Allies.

Commander Otto Weddigen, of the submarine U-29, who sank four British cruisers in the North Sea and who finally met his death when his submarine was sunk by a British ship flying the Swedish flag.

Captain von Muecke, a lieutenant of the famous sea-raider "Emden," who led the Cocos Island landing party from the Emden safely back to Berlin, after the Emden was sunk.

Admiral von Spee, who sank one British squadron and preferred to fight with his own squadron off the Falklands until ships and crews went to the bottom, rather than surrender to an overwhelmingly superior British fleet.

The naval heroes equal those of the army. Germany believes the tradition established for her navy by the initiative, courage and ability of her sailors during the past year one of the most valuable benefits the war has conferred on her. The men who have died at sea for the Fatherland will have their names inscribed on imperishable rolls as a new inspiration for the Empire. When the present war broke the German navy was an untried instrument. It had learned all it knew of sea-fighting by manuevers and study.

The war has demonstrated conclusively to Germany that man for man the English, with all their centuries of sea training, are not the equals of the Germans. One of the major surprises of the war is the comparative inefficiency of England's naval commanders. The manner in which Admiral Cradock allowed himself to be out-maneuvered in the Chilian Coast battle by Admiral von Spee, the

IS SERVING AS NURSE IN FRANCE

Miss Marshall Writes Of Her Experiences

Mrs. William Marshall of Independence avenue has received a letter from her sister-in-law, Miss Susan Marshall of this city, now serving in France as one of the nurses of the Harvard Unit. Miss Marshall was honored by appointment as a head nurse.

She reports that the members of the unit were regally entertained by the British , being shown all the sights of London and vicinity, to say nothing of a theatre party every evening and innumerable teas and other social functions. Among the places visited were Westminister Abbey, St. Paul's Cathedral, London Hospital, London Tower and the famous Warwick Castle. At Warwick they took tea with the Lord Mayor of London and with Lady Warwick.

Miss Marshall visited her father and sister, spending several days with them. Her brother, Robert R. Marshall thirty years a soldier in the British Army, has re-enlisted in Kitchener's Two Million. Her nephew, Robert R. Marshall, Jr., is also in the British Army.

Miss Marshall is well known in Quincy, having attended many leading families in her official capacity. She is a graduate of the Quincy City Hospital and the McLean Hospital of Boston, and she served as head nurse of the Brockton City Hospital.

After enjoying the round of social activities the members of the unit were presented with three weeks pay just previous to their departure for active service in France.

On Saturday Dr. Franklin G. Balch and three other physicians will sail from New York for England, and will thence go to the base hospital in France. This is in accordance with a previous arrangement made by Dr. Nichols, who could serve only a limited period and who will return to America on their arrival. It is probable that Dr. N. S. Hunting will also return as he only went for six weeks and is due back in August.

NEEDED WHERE HE IS.

In the past twenty years there has been no Secretary of War who deserved the gratitude of the country more than Mr. Garrison does. Mr. Root was perhaps the only one of his predecessors in the same period who showed such adaptability for the post and the same ability for constructive reform. Mr. Root's fame as Secretary of War is secure; Mr. Garrison is on the threshold of his greatest usefulness. The Army and Navy Journal, referring to a report that Mr. Garrison may be called to the State Department, says:

It will be akin to a disaster to the army to have him transferred to another department. Mr. Garrison not only enjoys the confidence of the service, but the confidence of the country. He has undertaken the great work of formulating a new military policy, and this is as important, even, as the handling of the delicate diplomatic situation in the present crisis. His work will be monumental in its character and will create a new epoch in the military policy of the country.

This expresses he judgment of all who have observed the Sec. of War in action. He is not only a man of infinite zeal, but one of ideas and courage. He learned his duties quickly and has shown uncommon capacity to accept the advice of competent officers in the army. He is a man of great reserve force and all his qualities are solid. He has the army spirit, as witness his excellent address to the graduating class at West Point.

It would be well not to disturb Hon. Lindley M. Garrison in his task of reorganizing the army. His heart is in the work, and there is no other man in the Democratic party so competent to do it.—New York Sun.

PILGRIM HATS TO BE IN STYLE

By Margaret Mason
(Written for the United Press)

And now some Pilgrims Progress
Has been made in modern style
Since Hattie wears a Pilgrim hat
Its good for quite a smile.

Have you seen the quaint Pilgrim lids that all the dear girls are wearing? They are nothing more nor less than replicas of the chapeau John Alden wore when he wooed the fair Priscilla. Broad of brim with a high cone shaped crown that is flattened off before it attains to a perfect peak they are certainly a distinct novelty when perched on a perky 1915 head. How oft has the modern maid cast aside right spurnfully a garment which she declared looked as if it had come out of the Ark. And yet here she is exuberantly pleased to flaunt a hat that came over in the Mayflower. The only difference between the 1915 Pilgrim hats and the original models is the material in which they are developed. John Alden, Miles Standish and the old boys ran to felt whereas the new maids have their Pilgrim headgear done in taffeta, preferably black. A single white silk cord knotted around the base of the crown is the only adornment.

From Pilgrim designs to Quaker models is but a step and it is no anachronism for milady to wear her Pilgrim hat to top off a Quaker grey taffeta frock, tight of bodice and adorned with the sheer white Quaker collar and cuffs. Indeed the popularity of the lovely Quaker cuffs and collars seems no whit on the wane. They are becoming to almost all types of pulchritude and immediately stamp their wearers in the eyes of mere man as most desirable. "Friends." Yes verily it is most meet that thee should address your better half as "Friend Wife" these days of picturesque Quakeresque fashions. But, oh wouldn't all the Pilgrim Fathers and Godly Quakers writhe with rage could they but know that they who despised all worldy pomp and vanity have so generously contributed to the fashionable follies of 1915.

All indications are that when the first cool days of autumn arrive milady will cast aside her hot weather white fox fur set and don a costume of sheer silk mousseline. Thin fabrics are to be all the go for the fall so get out your chiffons, veils and gauzes and such and prepare to lay off your furs till next summer.

Velvet hats are getting thick as peas not only on the wax figures that gaze meltingly out of smart Fifth Avenue shop windows these scorching days but on real live figures on the outside looking in. Most of the new velvet shapes are broad of brim and flat of crown and simply adorned with a bit of gourra, a chic wing or a piquant ribbon bow. They are usually of black velvet, although many striking models are shown in a bright royal purple and a few in a deep almost black brown, a shade or so darker than last seasons popular tete de nigre.

One safe and sane note is being sounded for fall footwear. It promises to be a season of sane shoes. Back and side lacings are to be put in their proper place and the rainbow effects of colored kid are looking forward to black days. Won't your poor bedizened feet be surprised and glad to be encased once more in neat but not gaudy black kid shoes and boots laced or buttoned discreetly up the front again? Indeed our understandings have been kidded extensively this summer and it seems about time they were receiving a little serious consideration.

The wasp waist is really and truly going to appear in our midst this fall. Naturally it would appear in our midst if it appeared at all but then we are so used to things appearing unnaturally that it should not surprise if a wasp waist had alighted on our shoulderblade or even an eye brow. Corset makers are busy revising their model stays for the Autumn figure and comfort and good health are preparing to forsake us in the imminent approach of an eighteen-inch waist measure.

This you have a resume of the startling changes affecting our heads, our feet and our midsts that this fall we fall heir to.

GREEN CORN IS NOW IN MARKET

Weekly Market Review

Lovers of green corn, and their number is legion, are pleased to note that this popular vegetable has made its appearance in the local markets and is selling at the rate of around 35 cents a dozen ears.

There are peaches in the market and plenty and cheap at that. Not for years has the peach crop been so plentiful as this year and local people who have peach trees in their orchards are looking forward to their ripening and at the same time keeping their weather eye open for Young America whose fondness for other people's fruit is well known. Locally apple trees are not bearing very abundantly this year. Pear trees however are doing well and have lots of fruit, and grape vines are loaded.

Business in fruits and vegetables in the markets has picked up considerably of late, with somewhat smaller receipts and firmer prices. However, the prices for vegetables and fruit of all kinds is sufficiently low so that there is not much complaint. The season for berries is approaching an end and they will not be in the market much longer.

Potatoes is the one market product that has advanced in price during the past week, but the chances are it will drop off again by the first of the week.

The firmness in cantaloupes the past week has been due to the falling off in shipments from California which has about ceased while those from the South have not been particularly desirable, on the whole being rather tasteless. It is expected that in shipments from the South later in the week the fruit will run better. Watermelons have advanced slightly in price owing to the increased demand on account of the hot weather. Cabbages are abundant as are also new onions. Cucumbers are a little scarce and there has been none too much lettuce. Tomatoes are coming along steadily and the quantity is constantly increasing, which means lower prices. Cauliflower is scarce and high.

As for the meat market there has been no perceptible change in prices during the past week and although the demand has naturally fallen off during the summer months prices remain high.

As for fish, large cod are scarce and high and a sudden falling off in swordfish receipts has sent the cost of that variety of sea food soaring. With these exceptions the fish supply is still good and prices are moderate. There is an abundance of tinker mackerel in the market and they are pronounced excellent. There is also all of the large mackerel in the market that the demand calls for, although medium size are a little scarce. Halibut and bluefish are plentiful and low prices are the rule for this variety as well as for salmon.

The supply of chicken lobsters is a great deal larger than it has been and with more than enough to meet the demand prices have dropped. They are practically two cnts a pound cheaper than they were a week ago. Large lobsters continue plentiful and prices are reasonable, thanks to the dealers who put away large quantities prior to the closing of the Nova Scotia season. Clams are also plentiful and cheap.

A GREAT TRAVELER.

Some years ago a writer in Harper's Monthly told of an old colored man, Uncle Joshuah, who was very fond of boasting of the travels he had been on with his master. As the years passed he added to the tale of his and "Marse Richard's" travels every town and country whose names he learned of, until their itinerary was indeed marvellous in extent, and whenever a new person entered the community he immediately tried to find out how much of the world he, or she, had visited.

On the advent of the new school teacher, he was heard to accost Deacon Johnson, a member of the board. "Well, Deacon, what kind of cullud lady do de new teacher seem ter be?"

"She 'pear like a right smaht little yaller lady, she do."

"Has she done much travelin', Deacon, as you knows of?"

"I nevvah axed her, but I heah tell ez how she done been through Latin, Algebar, an' But'ny."

Uncle Joshuah was staggered for a second only, then, recovering himself, he declared patronizingly, "Yes, yes, me an' Marse Richard parse through all dem little places in de night time, but Marse Richard low dey warn wuth stoppin' ovah fur."—National Monthly.

TONQUA BEAN.

Real Source of Perfume Known As "New Mown Hay."

"There is a witchery about the smell of new-mown hay that appeals to human kind of high as well as low degree"—writes Edward Albes in a recent number of The Bulletin of the Pan American Union, Washington, D. C. "There seems to be a tendency to revert to the primitive and bucolic in most of us, however effete and blase our tastes may have become, and the frogrance of the fields gratifies the olfactory nerves of prince and pauper, of scullery maid as well as the pampered social butterfly whose more or less remote ancestors doubtless breathed in the perfume as it rose from the dew-covered, tender grass they mowed with shining blade and gathered with their own strong arms. The attraction of the perfume has lingered even through many generations."

New-mown hay, however, is not always available, so the art of the perfumer has been called upon to gratify the sense of smell which longs for this particular aroma, and "new-mown hay" has been added to the varied "perfumes of Araby" used as toilet accessories in liquid form by the devotees of fashion. Perfumes, however, like many other things, are not always what they seem. Grass, freshly cut or otherwise, has had nothing to do with the production of the sweet-scented liquid labeled "new-mown hay." The source of the essence is really a bean. Not the prosaic, edible bean of our vegetable gardens, but a bean that grows in that section of the world where once El Dorado, the "Gilded One," was thought to rule in glittering splendor; that fabled land in the fruitless quest of which so many daring, gold-loving adventurers spent money, time, and even lives most lavishly. It is known as the Tonqua or Tonka bean, and its habitat is to be found in the tropical countries of South America, chiefly in the valleys of the Orinoco, Caura, and Cuchivero Rivers in Venezuela and certain sections of Columbia and Brazil.

The bean is the seed of Dipterix odorata, a tree belonging to the leguminosae or pulse family. The genus comprises about 8 species, all large trees, to be found in the forests of the countries named and having no representative in northern localities. The Tonqua-bean tree in some cases reaches a height of 60 feet with a trunk as much as three feet in diameter; it has pinnate leaves and large panicles of flowers, which are succeeded by a pod containing a single seed. The pods are about 2 inches long, almond shaped, and very thick; the seed is about an inch long and shaped like a large kidney bean; it has a wrinkled skin of shiny black color when ready for the market. The odor, whichi s remarkable, strong, resembles that of sweet clover or new-mown hay, and is due to the presence of coumarin, a crystallizable, volatile, neutral substance which is soluble in alcohol or ether and somewhat so in boiling water, from which it crystallizes on cooling. The beans are often frosted with crystals of this substance, giving them the appearance of being sugar-coated.

In Venezuela the tree is known as sarrapia, and the men engaged in the collection of the beans are called sarrapieros. These collectors in Venezuela and Colombia usually set out for the forests in February, when the fruit begins to ripen. They go up the rivers in canoes or skiffs by the hundreds, stopping wherever the trees are plentiful, and when the fruit begins to fall all get busy. The pods are gathered and taken to some open space where sunshine is plentiful, and there carefully crushed and the beans extracted and then spread out to dry. When thoroughly dried they are loaded into the boats and transported to Ciudad Bolivar, or some other convenient port, where they are sold to the exporting merchants. Here they go through a process of crystallization by being steeped in strong rum or alcohol for about 24 hours, and then again dried. It is the drying process which causes the shiny white crystals to appear on the surface, and which causes the beans to shrink and gives them their wrinkled appearance.

During the year ending June 30, 1913, the United States imported 783,888 pounds of these beans, valued at $1,140,409. They lend their fragrance to high-grade tobacco, fine toilet soaps, to "brilliantine" and other hair dressings and dyes, to dainty cosmetics that softly tint the cheeks and lips of beauty, to flavoring extracts used in confections, and to many other things that gratify the sense of smell. Thus has an agreeable odor become an important commercial commodity.

BLUE AND GRAY JOIN.

Petersburg, Va., July 30—The fiftieth anniversary of the famous battle of "The Crater" near here was celebrated today by survivors of both the blue and the gray, with the A. P. Hill camp, Sons of Confederate Veterans, as hosts. A banquet and speechmaking tonight will conclude the program. Many gray- bearded veterans today walked over the battleground, fighting it over.

The Crater fight was the most notable of the Virginia campaign, delaying surrender of the Confederates a year. Gen. Grant's men drove a tunnel 100 feet long beneath a hill where the enemy was massed, and exploded 8000 pounds of powder, killing 276.

A bill to make the battleground a national park is before Congress.

SAFETY OF ARMY IS ABOVE CITIES

Russia Preparing For the Evacuation of Warsaw

TO AVOID DECISIVE BATTLE

Petrograd Explains to Public That Retreat Is Often Wisest Form of Military Strategy— Army to Fall Back on Easier Line of Defense, Being Confronted by 2,140,000 of the Enemy—Quietness in West Continues—Another Considerable Success Scored by Italians

London, July 30.—Despite the fact that as far as can be seen from the official reports the Russians are still holding their lines around Warsaw, there are several indications that they are about to abandon the city and retreat to a stronger line of defense.

The expected abandonment seems to be a matter of strategy, for not even the German and Austrian official reports show any serious inroads in the Russian defenses during the past two days.

It is supposed, however, that the Russian commanders have no hope of getting the vast amount of ammunition needed to cope with the German onslaught, and that they consider it wise to fall back on an easier line of defense.

One of the most significant things in the news bearing on this question was the evident attempt on the part of the Petrograd authorities to prepare the public mind for such a step as the evacuation of Warsaw.

The military writers of the Petrograd papers were evidently called together by the military authorities and asked to explain to the public that often a retreat is the wisest form of military strategy, and that an army is of far more importance than a city.

"True Line of Defense"

It was shown that Russia's true line of defense was not the Vistula line, but along a new line of strong positions marked by the Kovno, Grodno and Brest-Litovsk fortresses. This would serve to straighten the Russian line, enabling Grand Duke Nicholas to concentrate all his forces on a very much shorter front, it was pointed out.

As the result of an evidently inspired interview with "high military authorities," The Bourse Gazette of Petrograd, after pointing out the handicap under which the Russian forces are now operating, declares they are confronted now by seventy German divisions of infantry, the artillery and cavalry, in addition to the Austro-Hungarian army, which would make approximately thirty-five German army corps, or 1,440,000 men, and 700,000 Austrians, altogether 2,140,000 men, which prevents any concentration by the Russians at this time.

It adds: "Until Russia has completed the mobilization of her industrial forces her army cannot meet the German artillery on equal terms."

Upon the authority of an unnamed military authority The Rech says it is possible that Russia is on the point of a maneuver which will consist of the retirement of the army from the Vistula to the new straight line of fortresses.

It is taken by military observers in London that these editorials were published only with the permission of the Russian censorship and that the simultaneous publication of them by all newspapers indicates inspiration by the government to prepare the people for the event.

Orderly Retreat Expected

As far as can be seen by the military observers the Russian retirement will not be a serious defeat. From the manner in which the Russian lines are holding Grand Duke Nicholas will be able to make an orderly retreat, saving his armies and military equipment and leaving Warsaw just an empty shell.

The grand duke is an adept at this kind of strategy and from the beginning of the war he has never hesitated to withdraw his forces whenever it seemed military wisdom to adopt such a course.

There is no doubt that in the present great drive on the Warsaw fronts the great object of the Germans was to surround one or more of the Russian armies and thereby paralyze the Russian offensive for some time.

If, however, as now seems likely, the Russians can get all these armies away intact, and not only intact but after inflicting enormous losses on their foes, it is difficult to see how any great gain comes to the Germans from all the operations of the past two weeks.

The capture of Warsaw will be a sentimental victory for the Germans, but the territory will be denuded of all its resources by the retiring Russians and the lengthened lines of communications will increase the difficulties of further advances by the Austro-German forces.

On the Western Front

On the western front there is little to report except some further successes of the French in Alsace. In the Belgian field matters are almost at a standstill.

An official report issued in London reports a rout of the Turks in Asiatic Turkey with a heavy loss of men and war equipment.

Further Victories For Italians

Following their previous brilliant achievements on the battlefield, Italian troops scored another considerable success when they stormed the heights of San Martino, bristling with fortifications, and occupied the village.

Farther to the right they pushed their attack from the Doberdo plateau and Redipugita around Monte Sei Busi, encircling a large contingent of Austrian troops. They took 3200 prisoners, as well as a large amount of provisions, ammunition and war material.

BRITISH COAL FAMINE

Mine Men Told It Must Be Relieved In Order to Secure Victory

Twenty-five hundred coal operators and representatives of the Miners' union packed the London Opera house at a national conference called by the British government prior to the recent strike in Wales to give impetus to the coal supply.

"Coal," said Minister of Munitions Lloyd-George in his speech, "means life for us and death for our foes. Steam means coal, rifles mean coal, shells are filled with coal, the very explosive inside them is coal and coal carries them right on to the battlefield to help our men. Coal is everything to us, and we want more of it to win the victory."

The British navy which drove the German flag from the seas, he pointed out, owed its strength to coal. He continued: "Events in the east, whatever they portend, mean that we must put forth all our strength. We must pay the price of victory if we mean to get it. The peril our country faces is great, the demand for coal is great, and the supply of labor has diminished. We must have more coal to win."

UNHAPPY BRUSSELS

Fine of $1,000,000 Imposed upon City Because Zeppelin Was Destroyed

Another fine of $1,000,000 has been imposed on the city of Brussels by the German authorities in consequence of the destruction of a Zeppelin dirigible balloon at Evere by aviators of the entente allies, according to the correspondent at Havre of The Petit Parisien.

A dispatch from Amsterdam, June 14, said that British airmen had attacked the Zeppelin sheds at Evere, north of Brussels, and set fire to the building, destroying the Zeppelin inside.

MUST PAY FOR LEELANAW

New American Note to Germany Is In Course of Preparation

With a virtually complete report of the torpedoing of the American steamer Leelanaw by a German submarine at hand American state department officials began the preparation of a note to Germany asking payment of damages on the ground that the Prussian-American treaty of 1828 had been violated.

A report from American Consul Dennison of Dundee brought to light the fact that the captain of the Leelanaw attempted to escape, but submitted to visit and search after warning shots were fired. The right to escape is said to be conceded by international law, only repeated attempts to evade capture or forcible resistance being regarded as affecting the case.

Unofficial reports that the German submarine commander was unwilling to jettison the cargo of the Leelanaw and to allow her to proceed, as the treaty of 1828 provides, cleared up doubts on this point.

FAILS AT MURDER

Assailant Then Shoots Himself, Dying Almost Instantly

Lynn, Mass., July 30.—Frank Snow,, a shoe worker, tried to kill Mary Hall, proprietor of the Hotel Oxford, in the kitchen of the lodging house, last evening, and failing, ran into the basement, reloaded his 38-calibre revolver and shot himself through the head, dying almost instantly.

Miss Hall probably saved her life by grappling with Snow. She received a single bullet wound in the left shoulder.

Snow, who was 28 years old, was supposed to be infatuated with Miss Hall, in whose hotel he had roomed for some time. About three weeks ago he saw Miss Hall, who is 35, coming home escorted by another man. The next day he upbraided her, and she ordered him to move out, which he did.

Nashville Receiver Ousted

Nashville, July 30.—Judge Wilson of the Tennessee court of civil appeals granted a writ of supersedeas setting aside Chancellor Allison's recent order appointing a receiver for the city of Nashville.

War Costs France $8,369,934 a Day

Paris, July 30.—The first five months of the war cost France exactly $1,280,000,000. This is shown by the report of the budget committee on supplementary military and naval credits.

Fall River, Mass., July 30.—Stanislau Poisson, 51, stepped in the path of a fast-moving train and was killed. Twice before he attempted suicide, once by drowning, the other time by gas.

SPORTING COMMENT

The Fore Rivers and General Electric of Lynn play at Merrymount park Saturday afternoon in a Manufacturer's league game. The local team is leading the list with C. H. Bird and Son one game behind. The Electrics will be a hard nut for Fore River to crack. Veteran New Englanders are on the team and their knowledge of the game coupled with a supreme confidence makes them resourceful. The Fore Rivers are playing good ball. A win Saturday from the Electrics and from the University Press at Cambridge on Aug. 7, the last game on the schedule will give the local team the pennant. Knight is in good form and it will be up to him Saturday. With him working properly the team beyond question will contribute the right support.

The Quincy police jitneyed to Lowell today to take a fall out of the uniform men of that city. The weather is somewhat against good base ball, the officers not being in the best of condition for violent exertion on such a day.

Fr. Hugh Blunt, pastor of the Church of St. Francis of South Braintree will don a base ball uniform Saturday. He will play with the professional men of Braintree in their game with the business men at the annual lawn fete of the church.

The St. John's and St. Francis team will also play at the party.

The Braves took both games from the Cincinnatis Thursday. Evers was overcome by heat in the first but played in the second game. Magee and Moran made wonderful catchers. Pat Ragan, pitcher, gets credit for both wins in the records. Umpire Klem made a questionable decision. The Braves are in third place solid and still climbing.

Arthur Rice, formerly of Huntington School, had a trial by the Red Sox this morning. He is a catcher and played football, baseball and was on the track team of his school.

The series between the Resolute and Vanitie at Newport, R. I., has been declared off. The Resolute won the first and only race. Heavy fog caused the suspension of the series. It is estimated the cost of keeping the yachts out this summer will be $400,000.

Lawrence won its third straight game in the N. E. League Thursday. Fitchburg was defeated 7 to 3. Patsy Duggan of Atlantic, left fielder of the latter, got two hits and two putouts in the game.

Hartford has taken the lead in the Colonial league.

Franz Marceau of Wellaston, the old Dartmouth and B. A. A. miler, has been added to the Middle West team to take part in the nationals at the fair. Marceau is running strong.

Tom McNamara made a new record for the Brockton Country club golf course Thursday. He played 18 holes in 68, three better than the previous figures.

Matty Baldwin is to meet Leach Cross again. Cross has outpointed him twice. His next chance will be in Brooklyn, Aug. 10.

Lee Magee, manager of the Brookfeds, threatens to quit. He declares he has been the butt of the umpires all season.

The annual golf tournament of the Boston Press club opens at Wollaston on Aug. 9. The men will play for cups donated by Boston publishers. The main trophy will be the cup offered by Gen. Charles H. Taylor of the Globe.

Tommy Kerrigan of Atlantic, pro at the Dedham Country club, plays Pat Doyle of the Myopia Hunt club Wednesday in the first of a series of gold matches. Considerable money has been placed on both men.

Many well-known athletes who succeeded in passing the bar examination were announced last night, including: Dudley Ranney, Harvard track man: George W. Wightman, Noble & Greenough baseball player and a star tennis player in the Longwood tournament: Fred Huntington, Harvard hockey captain and football player: Fred Burns, Exeter and B. A. A. sprinter and relay runner; Robert Weston, Noble & Greenough crew captain.

MOBS HELD IN CHECK

Americans on Guard In Port au Prince and Cape Haitien

Port au Prince, Haiti, July 30.—American marines are now in control of the two important ports of the island of Haiti—Port au Prince and Cape Haitien.

A marine guard from the U. S. S. Eagle landed at Cape Haitien to protect the French consulate. The Eagle took the place of the cruiser Washington at Cape Haitien because of light draught and being able to make the harbor.

United States marines and bluejackets from the cruiser Washington, numbering 500 men, landed at Port au Prince, surrounded the United States legation, the French legation and the United States consulate. The collier Jason is on the way from Guantanamo, Cuba, with reinforcements.

The revolutionists' lust for revenge, following the execution of 160 prisoners by order of Governor Oscar and President Guillaume, does not seem to have spent itself in the killing of Oscar and the president.

Death In Hotel Fire

Seneca Falls, N. Y., July 30.—Manager Barron was killed and six persons injured when the Lux hotel at Waterloo was destroyed with $50,000 loss. Police believe the fire was incendiary.

A YEAR OF THE GREAT WAR

futility of the English attempt to force the Dardanelles; and the disputes of the Admiralty in London, culminating in the open mutiny of Baron Fisher, are all believed by the Germans as representative incidents, showing British naval prestige has been permanently injured. The activities of the German submarines are among the most potent causes of German optimism as a new year of warfare begins. The Germans don't expect their underseas boats to destroy the English navy or so to reduce it as to permit the German high seas fleet to venture forth to batle. This belief did prevail for a short time after Admiral von Weddigen's exploits in the North Sea, but it is no longer held. Nevertheless the operations against England's merchant fleet are considered to be second only in importance to under sea attacks against warships themselves.

The Germans are convinced that the submarines have demoralized Britain's confidence. That is why the government will not abandon its submarine policy, no matter how long the war may go on.

AMUSEMENTS

TREMONT THEATRE.

Announcement of the last four weeks of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre ending August 21st has brought realization that summer is past and that those who have not yet seen the play must plan to do so under the sign of the dog star. Fortunately dog-days have no terrors for the patrons of the Tremont. The theatre auditorium is cooler than most of the beaches and an ideally comfortable place for an afternoon's or evening's entertainment. The splendid attendance indicates no abatement of interest, but rather an increasing popularity. This but follows the example of New York, where indeed two play-houses—the Liberty Theatre and the Brighton Beach Music Hall—are required to accommodate the throngs; the Illinois, Chicago, where "capacity" audiences rule; and the Nixon, Atlantic City, overcrowded with summer patronage from Southern and Western visitors. Here in Boston Mr. Griffith's play could easily run into mid-September were it not that the extremely elaborate and beautiful production has been booked for the West under enormous guarantees from St. Louis managers. The great offering is of universal interest to all Americans, for it unites pictorial spectacle, music and effects into a thrilling drama of the Civil War crisis, enlivened with delightful comedy and heightened by two charming love-romances of the Blue and the Gray. The battle scenes are the greatest ever attempted by a director; the Ku Klux "rides" retain their old potency to stir the blood, whilst it is difficult to keep the feet from dancing to the catchy tunes of fifty years agone. Daily matinees and night s will continue the rule throughout the engagement.

MAJESTIC THEATRE

The Majestic Theatre, Boston, will reopen its summer season Monday afternoon, Aug. 2, with the famous Majestic Players who triumphed so signally at this popular playhouse last summer. The organization is announced as the best stock company that Boston has ever seen, and this will be readily admitted by the average theatre-goer who reads the roster of well-known stock favorites comprising the stock company which will entertain the customary crowded attendances every afternoon and evening for the balance of the summer.

The opening bill will be William T. Hodge's great success. "The Man From Home," which had a record run of seven months in Boston at the Park Theatre several seasons ago. As the visiting star will be seen Carle Stowe in the title role which brought Mr. Hodge into national stage fame. Mr. Stowe has followed in his steps to the same conspicuous success. The theme of the play is one that appeals to the national pride of an American audience, and Daniel Voorhees Pike is an individual who well represents nature's true gentleman. While the scenes are laid in Italy, the tone of the comedy situations is distinctly American.

Wife of New Secretary of State Occupies Mother's Former Place.

MRS. ROBERT LANSING.

Not since the days when Mrs. John Hay entertained official Washington as wife of the secretary of state has a cabinet hostess of this rank appeared who is as well equipped as Mrs. Robert Lansing, wife of President Wilson's new premier.

Mrs. Lansing will enjoy the unique experience of succeeding to the very exacting social duties which were so ably performed by her mother back in the Harrison administration when John W. Foster, her father, was secretary of state.

Mrs. Lansing, then Eleanor Foster, was just making her bow in society, having been graduated from Smith college. Her interest in her mother's duties was sufficient to give her an experience which she will now be able to turn to practical advantage.

The wife of the secretary of state is called upon for many exacting social duties, and Washington expects to see Mrs. Lansing make a notable place for herself as a cabinet hostess. She is a good conversationalist, quick at repartee and somewhat of a wit. Furthermore, Mrs. Lansing is the youngest woman upon whom the duty of leading the cabinet's social affairs has fallen in many years.

Mrs. Lansing was married to Mr. Lansing in 1890 in the home of her father on I street, where the Fosters lived for many years. The Lansing wedding was attended by a notable gathering, including President Harrisand and family, Vice President Morton and his family and other prominent officials and diplomats.

Mr. Lansing took his bride to a new home in Watertown, N. Y., where they have always lived except for the time spent in Washington. They spent many winters with General and Mrs. Foster before Mr. Lansing was appointed counselor of the state department, and since then they have continued to make their home with the Fosters, who have built a spacious and luxurious home on Eighteenth street, just opposite the Austro-Hungarian embassy, in Washington.

Mr. and Mrs. Lansing have no children.

Mrs. Lansing as the foremost of the cabinet wives will take precedence over many other women. She will take the lead in all things social in the cabinet circle. In social rank she comes next to the wife of the president or the president's hostess. Even the wife of the vice president does not have the social responsibility of the wife of the secretary of state. It is her duty to entertain the diplomatic corps, and it is to her that the wives and families of newly accredited ambassadors and ministers pay their respects after they have made their formal calls at the White House.

The most brilliant function of New Year's day next to the White House reception is the breakfast given by the secretary of state and his wife to the diplomatic corps.

Mrs. Lansing is known in Washington as a woman of exceptionally good taste, modesty and common sense.

Ways to Clean Silver.

One of the easiest ways to clean silver is to wash it with a soft cloth saturated with kerosene, then rinse it with scalding water. A long bath in sour milk will clean badly tarnished silver. If vinegar cruets are filled with it and left awhile the films on the intide will soon disappear.

Alcohol and salt will remove egg stains immediately, and alcohol and soda is also a good cleanser. Many prefer using alcohol to ammonia, though the latter does the work.

A chamois bag filled with powdered magnesia is very useful for polishing all silver articles. An old piece of velvet will prove wonderful for polishing silver, and a broken clothespin is a handy contrivance. Covered with a cloth, the flat, rounded tip will be more useful in working between the tines of the work and in moldings that require more friction than a brush can give.

Button Hooks.

For 5 cents buttonhooks with white bone handles can be bought. A supply of these might be laid in by many a housewife to advantage, for every room ought to be furnished with at least one shoe buttoner. Nothing is so aggravating as to be unable to find one's buttoner.

CHAPTER XVI.

Converging Roads.

Matthew Broffin had been two weeks and half of a third an unobtrusive spy upon the collective activities of the Wahaskan social group which included the Farnhams before he decided that nothing could be gained by further delay.

Having his own private superstition about Friday, Broffin chose a Wednesday afternoon for his call at the house on the lake front. It was a resplendent day of the early summer, which, in the Minnesota latitudes, springs, Minervalike, full grown from the nodding head of the wintry Jove of the North. In the doctor's front yard the grass was vividly green, gladioli and jonquils bordered the path with a bravery of color, and the buds of the clambering rose on the porch trellis were swelling to burst their calyxes.

Broffin turned in from the sidewalk and closed the gate noiselessly behind him. While he had been three doors away in the lake-fronting street, a small pocket binocular had assured him that the young woman he was going to call upon was sitting in a porch rocker behind the clambering rose, reading a book.

She had risen to meet him by the time he had mounted the steps, and he knew that her first glance was appraisive. He had confidently counted upon being mistaken for a strange patient in search of the doctor, and he was not disappointed.

"You are looking for Doctor Farnham?" she began. "He is at his office—201 Main street."

Broffin was digging in his pocket for a card.

"I know well enough where your father's office is, but you are the one I wanted to see," he said; and he gave her the round-cornered card with its blazonment of his name and employment.

He was watching her narrowly when she read the name and its underline, and the quick indrawing of the breath and the little shudder that went with it were not thrown away upon him. But the other signs; the pressing of the even teeth upon the lower lip and the coming and going of three straight lines between the half-closed eyes were not so favorable.

"Will you come into the house, Mr.—" she had to look at the card again to get the name—"Mr. Broffin?" she asked.

"Thank you, miss; it's plenty good enough out here for me if it is for you", he returned, beginning to fear that the common civilities were giving her time to get behind her defenses.

"I guess we can take it for granted that you know what I want, Miss Farnham," he began abruptly, when he had shifted his chair to face her rocker. "Something like three months ago, or thereabouts, you went into a bank in New Orleans to get a draft cashed. While you were at the paying tellers' window a robbery was committed, and you saw it done and saw the man that did it. I've come to get you to tell me the man's name."

"I have told it once, in a letter to Mr. Galbraith."

Broffin nodded. "Yes; in a letter that you didn't sign. I've come all the way from New Orleans to get you to tell me his real name, Miss Farnham."

"Why do you think I can tell you?" was the undisturbed query.

"A lot of little things," said the detective, who was slowly coming to his own in the matter of self-assurance. "In the first place, he spoke to you in the bank, and you answered him. Isn't that so?"

She nodded again. "You know so much, it is surprising that you don't know it all, Mr. Broffin," she commented, with gentle sarcasm.

"The one thing I don't know is the thing you're goin' to tell me—his real name," he insisted. "That's what I've come here for."

In spite of her inexperience, which, in Mr. Broffin's field, was no less than total, Charlotte Farnham had imagination, and with it a womanly zest for the matching of wits with a man whose chief occupation was the measuring of his own wit against the subtle cleverness of criminals. Therefore she accepted the challenge.

"I did my whole duty at the time, Mr. Broffin," she demurred, with a touch of coldness in her voice. "If you were careless enough to let him escape you at St. Louis, you shouldn't come to me. I might say very justly that it was never any affair of mine."

Matthew Broffin's gifts were subtle only in his dealings with other men; but he was shrewd enough to know that his last and best chance with a woman lay in an appeal to her fears.

"I don't know what made you write this letter, in the first place," he said, taking the well-thumbed paper from his coat pocket; "but I know well enough now why you didn't sign it, and why you didn't put the man's real name in it. You—you and him—fixed it up between you so that you could say to yourself afterwards what you've just said to me—that you'd done your duty. But you haven't finished doin' you duty yet. The law says—"

"I know very well that the law says," was her baffling rejoinder; "I have taken the trouble to find out since I came home. I am not hiding your criminal."

Broffin was trying to gain a little ease by tilting his chair. But the house wall was too close behind him.

"People will say that you are helpin' to hide him as long as you won't tell his real name—what?" he grated.

"You still think I could tell you that, if I chose?" she said, willfully misleading him, or at least allowing him to mislead himself.

"I don't think anything about it—I know! You'd met him somewhere before that day in the bank—before you knew he was goin' to turn gentleman holdup. That's why you don't want to give up his real name."

"Damn the Money!" He Exploded.

She had risen, and in self-defense Broffin had to grope on the floor for his hat and stand up too.

"Wait a minute. I'm an officer of the law, and I could arrest you and take you to New Orleans on what evidence I've got. How about that?—what?"

There was good fighting blood on the Farnham side, notwithstanding the kindly Doctor Bertie's peaceful vocation, and the calm gray eyes that met Broffin's were militantly angry when the retort came.

"If I had a brother, Mr. Broffin, he would be able to answer you better than I can!" she flamed out. "Let me pass, please!"

It was not often that Broffin lost his head or his temper, but both were gone when he struck back.

"That'll be all right, too!" he broke out harshly, blocking the way to force her to listen to him. "You think you've bluffed me, don't you?—what? Let me tell you: some fine day this duck whose name isn't Gavitt will turn up here—to see you; then I'll nab him. If you find out where he is, and write to him not to come, it'll be all the same; he'll come anyway, and when he does come, I'll get him!"

"I Am an Officer of the Law."

When Miss Farnham had gone in and there was nothing left for him to do but to compass his own disappearance, Broffin went away, telling himself with many blandishments that for once in his professional career he had made an ass of himself. The doctor's daughter knew the man; she had known him before the robbery; she was willing to be his accomplice to the extent of her ability. There was only one explanation of this attitude. In Broffin's wording of it, Miss Farnham was "gone on him," if not openly, at least to such an extent as to make her anxious to shield him.

That being the case, Broffin set it down as a fact as good as accomplished that the man would sooner or later come to Wahaska. The detective's knowledge of masculine human nature was as profoundly acute as the requirements of his calling demanded. With a woman like Miss Farnham for the lure, he could be morally certain that his man would some time fling caution, or even a written prohibition, to the winds, and walk into the trap.

This misfire of Broffin's happened upon a Wednesday, which, in its calendar placing, chanced to be three weeks to a day after Griswold had left Mereside to settle himself studiously in two quiet upper rooms in the Widow Holcomb's house in upper Shawnee street.

That it was also a day of other coincidences will appear in the casting up of the items on the page of events.

For one thing, it marked the formal opening of the De Soto inn for the summer season. For another, the special train from the far South arriving at noon and bearing the first detachment of the inn's guests, had for one of its Pullman passengers an elderly gentleman with a strongly marked Scottish face; a gentleman with the bushy white eyebrows of age, the long upper lip of caution, the drooping eyelid of irascibility, and the bearing of a man of routine; in other words, Mr. Andrew Galbraith, faring northward on his customary summer vacation, which—the fates intervening—he had this time determined to spend at the Wahaskan resort.

For a third item, it was at three o'clock of this same Wednesday that Raymer came out of Jasper Grierson's bank with his head down and a cloud on his brow; the cloud dating back to an interview just closed, a short and rather brittle conference with the bank's president held in Jasper Grierson's private room, with the president sitting at ease in his huge armchair and his visitor standing, quite destitute of ease, at the desk-end.

Raymer's horse was only a short half-square away, hitched in front of the Winnebago house, and he went to get it. But at the instant of unhitching, Miss Grierson's trap was driven up and the untying of knots paused while he stepped from the curb to stand at the wheel of the modish equipage.

"You are getting to be as bad as all the others," was the greeting he got from the high driving seat. "You haven't been at Mereside for an age—only once since the night you took Mr. Griswold away from us. By the way, what has become of Mr. Griswold? He doesn't show himself in public much oftener than you do."

"I think he has been getting to work on his writing," said Raymer, good-naturedly apologizing for his friend. "He'll come down out of the clouds after a little. I understand he dines at Doctor Bertie's tonight."

The young iron founder was looking up into the eyes of beguiling when he said this, and, being a mere man, he wondered what made them flash and then grow suddenly fathomless and brooding.

"When you see him, tell him that we are still on earth over at Mereside," said the magnate's daughter portly; and a moment later, as Raymer was turning out of Main street into Shawnee, he narrowly missed running over a heavy-set man with a dark face and drooping mustaches; a pedestrian whose preoccupation seemed so great as to make him quite oblivious to street crossings and passing vehicles until Raymer pulled his horse back into the shafts and shouted.

One more small coincidence will serve to total the items on the Wednesday page. If Broffin had not stopped to look after the man who had so nearly run him down, he might have been crossing Main street in front of the Winnebago at the precise instant when Miss Grierson, with young Dahlgren in the second seat of the trap, came around the square and pulled up to let her horse drink at the public fountain.

"Who is that Bitter-creekish-looking man crossing over to the Winnebago house?" asked Miss Grierson of her seatmate, indicating Broffin with a wave of the whip, and skillfully making the query sound like the voicing of the idlest curiosity.

"Fellow named Broffin, from Louisiana," said Dahlgren, who, as assistant editor of the Daily Wahaskan, knew everybody. "Says he's in the lumber business down there, but, 'I doubt it,' said the carpenter, and shed a bitter tear."

"Why do you doubt it?" queried Miss Grierson, neatly flicking a fly from the horse's back with the tip of the whiplash.

"Oh, on general principles, I guess. You wouldn't say he had any of the earmarks of a business man."

"What kind of earmarks has he got?" persisted Miss Grierson—merely to make talk, as Dahlgren decided.

"I don't know. We were talking about him at the club the other night, and Sheffield—he's from Kentucky, you know—thought he remembered the name as the name of a 'moonshine' raider he'd heard of down in his home state."

"A moonshine raider? What is that?" By this time Miss Margery's curiosity was less inert than it had been, or had seemed to be, at first.

"A deputy marshal, you know; a sort of government policeman and detective rolled into one. He looks it, don't you think?"

Miss Grierson did not say what she thought, then, or later, when she set Dahlgren down at the door of his newspaper office in Sioux avenue. But still later, two hours later, in fact, she gave a brief audience in the Mereside library to a small, barefooted boy whose occupation was sufficiently indicated by the bundle of evening papers under one arm.

"Well, Johnnie, what did you find out?" she asked.

"Ain't had time," said the boy. "But he ain't no millyunaire lumber-shooter, I'll bet a nickel. I sold him a pape' just now, down by Dutchie's lumber yard, and I ast him what kind o' lumber that was in the pile by the gate. He didn't know, no more'n a goat."

Miss Margery flipped a coin in the air and the newsboy caught it dexterously.

"That will do nicely for a beginning, Johnnie," she said sweetly. "Come and see me every once in a while, and perhaps there'll be more little white cartwheels for you. Only don't tell, and don't let him catch you. That's all."

CITY PAWNSHOP SUCCEEDING.

Kansas City, Mo., July 30—The welfare loan agency—in other words the city pawnshop—is going to move. It has outgrown its quarters in the city hall. Increased business, especially among women, has made the move necessary, members of the board of public welfare declared. Loans in the chattel and pledge departments now total $100,108—an increase of more than $15,000 during the last year. All loans bear interest at the rate of 2 per cent a month.

A feature of the new quarters will be a department for women where they may transact their business with less publicity.

TO TEACH FIREFIGHTING.

Charleston, S. C., July 30—Chief Luis Behrens of the fire department is preparing to tour the state at the request of the State Insurance Commissioner to instruct the fire departments in other towns in the science of firefighting. The local chief will visit all towns and cities where even the smallest fire companies exist giving the members the advantage of his years of experience. Every point from the tending of apparatus to the rescue of humans will be discussed. The tour will take up most of the month.

FREE LEGAL ADVICE.

Lincoln, July 30—The city of Lincoln will hereafter furnish legal aid to those whose circumstances do not permit them to employ a lawyer to safeguard their rights and interests. Under the initiative of Mayor Charles W. Bryan, a free legal aid bureau has been added to the city hall office force. The ordinance has been passed, and under it the mayor, with the city attorney as his chief assistant, will furnish advice along legal lines to the poor whose rights might otherwise be trampled upon.

Mayor Bryan is enthusiastic over the outlook and the possibilities of the new department.

LOCAL POLITICAL POT IS BEGINNING TO BOIL

Sen. Langelier And William P. Kelley Of Braintree Sure Candidates. But The Oracle Points Out Other Political Bees

MICHAEL T. SULLIVAN MAY RUN FOR SENATE

Papers are being circulated in the senatorial district for Louis F. R. Langelier, a candidate for reelection and William P. Kelley of Braintree, a new man in the field, and voters in all wards of the city are having a chance to make a pre-primary choice. The Kelley papers are being signed in Ward Six, home of Senator Langelier and the Langelier papers are being signed in Braintree, the home town of his opponent. The campaigning so far has been only of a preliminary nature.

The campaign will probably be waged on the third term issue and already both men have challenged each other on that score. Candidate Kelley points out that for years the precedent has been to give a man but two years. Senator Langelier will probably build his attack around the fact that "Mr. Kelley has had no political experience."

The Republicans throughout the district, although it is yet early for campaigning, are exhibiting an intense interest. What little stump speaking will precede the primaries will not commence until a few weeks previous to the telling day. Mr. Kelley in that time may inject a little spice into his speeches by endorsing the movement to hold a Superior Court session in Quincy.

He was one of those who early advocated such a change and in conversations and before several clubs the past two years has gone on record as being in favor of a three weeks' jury waived session and a two weeks' jury session here twice a year. In support of the change he has frequently stated that practically 50 per cent of the civil business that comes before the Dedham session originates in Quincy, Weymouth and Braintree.

Sullivan a Senate Possibility.

There is nothing stirring the quiet waters of local Democracy, but there is plenty of speculation as to candidates. Michael T. Sullivan, according to men who claim to be in touch, will be the Democratic candidate for senator, but definite announcement on that score is not forthcoming. His friends, who beyond a doubt have some idea of what Mr. Sullivan contemplates, have not denied the possibility of his coming out for the senate.

That step on the part of Mr. Sullivan would leave the representative slate in the fifth Norfolk district vacant since it has been generally understood that he would again seek the office he held two years and lost last year, principally through overconfidence, and with that in mind, members of the city committee are casting about for a candidate and it would not be surprising if Thomas Griffin, councilman from Ward Two should be their choice. It is doubtful, however, if he would receive the substantial support usually accorded nominated candidates since he has created some enemies as a councilman.

It would not be surprising to see William H. Flynn in the field if Councilman Griffin enters, since there is bad blood between them, politically speaking.

Residents of the Ward Two district, to forestall whatever progress may follow a Griffin boom, are gathering information on the proposed Ward Two schoolhouse, fathered by Councilman Griffin some months ago and which is practically in the same position it was the night the council passed the order appropriating the money for the land. Through some hitch the city has acquired title to only a portion of the property and it is said on what may be good authority that the parcel of land needed to complete the lot is not on the market as it was understood to be.

Another factor which may enter into the apparent delay however is the rejection of plans by the school board.

Col. A. L. Whitman is confident he will defeat Charles Ericson, candidate for re-election to the House on the Republican ticket and Rep. Ericson is equally certain that "The voters will defeat Whitman."

The Oracle.

The girls of Ward Three defeated the Ward Two base-ball team in a fine game. The score was 6 to 4, the Quincy Point girls making all of their runs in the 5th and 6th innings. Mona Norris and Gertrude Eddy were pitcher and catcher for the winners and Laura White and Eva Shea worked for the losers.

Ward Six boys beat the Wollaston School Playground team at Atlantic, 6 to 1. The feature of the game was the fine pitching of Sullivan of Atlantic; he struck out 11 men and 3 hits, one a triple with two men on the bases. G'Nong was catcher while Jones and Brown worked for Wollaston.

A YOUTHFUL SWIMMER.

Of all the swimmers who daily visit Wollaston beach there are few more fond of the water or more anxious for high-tide time than Junior Smith, the one year old son of Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Smith of Sachem street. Junior, who is not yet able to walk, goes to the beach in his go-cart attired in a little red one-piece bathing suit, and no amount of coaxing or persuading can keep him from the water once he is on the sand. He has mastered the art of creeping and finds it a convenient aid in reaching the water. When once he gets in he floats and splashes round to his baby delight until by maternal authority he is compelled to leave.

HELD DOWN BY A DENTIST.

One day lately a young man went to a dentist's office in Kansas City to have a bridge, with some teeth hanging to it, attached to his upper jaw. He rode to the building on a bicycle, which he left in the hall, and ascended to the fifth floor in the elevator.

The dentist's chair faced a window which looked out upon Grand avenue. The dentist had filled up his mouth with cement and was pressing it up into the gum with his finger. The victim was gazing out upon the street with a martyr's expression on his face.

Suddenly the victim struggled to get his head away from the grasp of the dentist.

"Ugh, ug-glug, glug-ug-lug-mug-gug," he shouted, in a muffled voice.

The dentist thought the man in the chair was having a fit, and fearing that he might swallow the cement, to say nothing of several percelain teeth backed with gold, and several hours' hard labor, he kept his finger in the victim's mouth and a silent struggle took place. The man in the chair tried to rise; the dentist, who is something of an athlete, struggled to keep him down. This sort of thing went on for several minutes until the dentist could feel that the cement had hardened. Then he took his finger out of his victim's mouth and let him up.

"Dad blame you," shouted the angry victim. "What in Sam Hill did you hold me down in that way for? Didn't I tell you I wanted to get up?"

"I thought you were having a fit," answered the dentist, apologetically.

"Fit nothing," said the victim. "I saw a thief going up the street with my bicycle. I knew it by the color and the way the tool bag hung behind and the ribbons on the handlebar. Being up five stories is handicap enough without a brigand like you holding me down with his fist in my throat.—Kansas City Star.

J. H. SPAULDING GETS THREE MONTHS

Judge Finds Well Known Real Estate Man Guilty Of Operating Automobile When Under Influence Of Liqour

DEFENDANT APPEALS TO SUPERIOR COURT

Judge Kelley of the district court of Hingham has not departed from the custom he established at the beginning of the season of sentencing men to the house of correction who were found to have operated autos under the influence of liquor.

On Friday J. H. Spaulding of Braintree was given three months. He appealed and furnished sureties of $300 to appear before the superior court.

The complainant was James W. Sweeney of Quincy. Three waitresses at the Palm Garden were witnesses for the government. The action grew out of a collision at Nantasket a week ago.

BUILDING IS RATHER QUIET THIS WEEK

Building has been a little quiet this week. A walk about the city will convince the most skeptical that while few new permits may have been issued, building is by no means inactive.

In Wollaston the block of stores at the corner of Hancock and Beale streets is nearly completed. Work has begun in earnest on the new block of stores opposite the Wollaston depot. Realizing that the City of Quincy is to do nothing about changing the grade of Beale street the contractor who has been holding up work is now going ahead. The steel for the building has been ordered and some of it has already arrived on the ground.

On Hancock street in the city proper one sees work being pushed forward on the foundation for the new blocks on the west side of Hancock street while the block at the corner of Hancock and School streets erected by the Webb Trust Co., is about completed.

Hereafter the price for permits will be more as the order passed by the City Council last Monday evening provides a new schedule of fees for permits. This order has not been signed by the Acting Mayor as he will wait until the ten days are about up. Then it must be advertised before it goes into effect.

Joseph Fratus has not taken out a permit for the new block of stores which he is to erect on the corner of Hancock street and Billings road but he has commenced work excavating for the foundation.

The permits issued this week were as follows:

John McFadden, garage, Oliver street.

George Graham, dwelling, Rock Island road.

Carl E. Johnson, garage, Mechanic street.

Oscar Holmberg, garage, Broadway.

J. Otis Battis, hen house, Colby road.

Felice Crosta, dwelling, Penn street.

QUINCY "COPS" DOWN LOWELL

Incidentally Strengthen Boston In First Place

The Boston police were given a substantial boost toward the championship of the Massachusetts Police league when Quincy blue coats defeated the Lowell officers, 5 to 4 at Lowell Friday. Lowell had lost but one game until the local boys took their measure and were in second place. Boston has a clean slate so far this season.

The game had all the elements of big league base ball. Lowell opened with a brilliant start, several hits in a row sending over three runs in the first innings. Canavan tightened up, however, and through heady box work allowed but four hits the rest of the game. His control was perfect and his speed mixture was a disagreeable medicine for Lowell. He fanned 12 and passed but one. His performance was responsible in more ways than one for the victory and it was acknowledged he pitched the best game of his career.

Maloney, the Lowell pitcher, kept Quincy from scoring for five innings. Then Quincy hit the ball and got two runs in the sixth and two more in the seventh. Lowell hit the ball and tied the score in the eighth.

Sharkey was sent in for Maloney in the eighth inning. He held together pretty well but an error in the ninth helped the visitors to win.

Ferguson figured in a brilliant play at second when he jumped into the air and speared with one hand a high throw and got a man stealing second. Fallon made a circus catch, ran almost into the left field fence, catching the ball by turning his hand toward the plate. The summary:

| Innings | 1 | 2 | 3 | 4 | 5 | 6 | 7 | 8 | 9 | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Quincy | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 2 | 2 | 0 | 1 | —5 |
| Lowell | 3 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 1 | 0 | —4 |

Ferguson and Duane, Sharkey, Maloney, and Kenny, Murphy.

WISWELL TENT ARE GUESTS AT HOUSE WARMING

A dozen members of Rebecca Wiswell tent, Daughters of Veterans, were the special guests at the house warming given by Mr. and Mrs. L. Nason at their new home on Buckley street, Friday evening.

An entertainment program was given which included readings and songs. Mrs. Kate A. Blaisdell presented Mrs. Nason, a member of the tent with a hand painted cake set. A collation was served.

INDIAN FAMILY LOCATE IN CITY

Peter Amelo And His Squaw Have Four Daughters And Four Sons

ALSO HAVE DAUGHTER-IN-LAW

The quiet which usually prevails in West Quincy was disturbed during the past week by the arrival of a band of Indians who went into camp in the woodlot on the line between West Quincy and Braintree. The residents immediately heard that another band of Gypsies were in camp and began to take the usual precautions to see that all the fowl were under heavy lock and key.

The new arrival proved to be only an Indian and his large family, consisting of his wife, four daughters, and four sons, and a daughter-in-law. They have not given up any of the customs of the Indians and the Indian tongue is used very fluently. Peter Amelo the father, a big warrior says that he once belonged to the Micmac tribe and was a great friend of the late Dennis Meuse, the well-known Indian resident of East Milton.

Every evening the camp is crowded with a curious mob of visitors who delight in hearing the younger Indians tell of their experiences. Mr. Amelo is unable to speak much English as is his wife. His children, however, volunteered the information that they came to this city from Rockland when they have been in camp. The mother and daughters are busily engaged in making baskets which they sell.

The son states that owing to the inability to get the right kind of wood for the making of baskets they will break camp Monday and leave for the woods surorunding Brookline where there is a better chance to sell the baskets.

MILLIONAIRESS WEDS POOR MAN

Harbor Point, Mich., July 31—Miss Catherine Barker, an orphan, said to be the richest 19-year-old girl in the world was to be married this afternoon at 4 o'clock to Howard Spaulding, Jr. son of Mr. and Mrs. Howard H. Spaulding of Chicago. Five years ago when Miss Barker's father, organizer of the Haskell-Barker freight car factories and head of a dozen other great industrial concerns, died, she came into a fortune of over $30,000,000. Her income is said to be approximately $2,000,000 a year. Her husband-to-be works for her in the Haskell-Barker freight car offices. His parents are not wealthy as money goes these days. Compared to his bride's fortune, Spaulding is a poor man.

The upper crust from all sections of the Middle West, the East and the West attended today. Jewelry and gowns worn at the ceremony represented more than a million. Floral decorations of the Barker cottage here cost several thousands of dollars. The bride's wedding dress and trousseau cost anywhere from $5,000 to $50,000, the latter figure being probably nearer the true mark. The wedding gifts were valued at several hundred thouasnds.

The ceremony took place in Miss Barker's magnificent summer residence modestly referred to as "Cottage No 12." The wedding is the big social feature of the season in the Little Traverse Bay region, where scores of millionaires from Chicago, Detroit, Cincinnati and St. Louis have their summer homes.

Young as she is, Miss Barker has travelled extensively. She has toured Europe, Asia, India, South America, Central America and nearly every state in the Union. She has given thousands to charity and contributed to innumerable philanthropies. Her guardian, John B. Forgan, president of the First National Bank of Chicago, has directed this work.

After a honeymoon down the Atlantic coast and through the Panama canal the couple will live in East Don Place, Chicago.

RUSSIANS EVACUATE WARSAW

(By United Press.)

Petrograd, July 31—Warsaw has been evacuated. While no official announcement of the expected move has been made by the war office it was admitted that every person has left the city. Practically all of the Russian subjects are gone, the Russian soldiers remaining, whose capture is expected, being merely a rear guard force. Official war office reports admit slight progress of the enveloping movement around Warsaw but the Russians are making the enemy pay dearly for every foot of the way.

DEPLORES DEATH OF LIEUT. BECKER

(By United Press)

Ossining, N. Y., July 31—Charles J. Johnson, Harvard man, class of 1902, who yesterday morning killed two men, making eight since June, and who expects to kill five in August and at least 18 others in the course of the next few months declared he regards these killings as nothing short of murder. It is not himself but the State of New York he considers the murderer.

Johnson is deputy warden at Sing Sing and the two executions yesterday were those of Charles Becker and Samuel Haynes.

Thomas Mott Osborne since accepting office has refused to take charge of the death penalties at Sing Sing. The unpleasant work has fallen to the young Harvard man who cannot evade its except by quitting.

"Yesterday morning," he said. "I spent with Becker. For three hours we talked of many things, for Becker was a person of intelligence, the sort of man one can talk to. An hour later I killed him. What justification is there in that?"

"EXETER" SUNK.

(By United Press)..

Providence, July 31—The collier Exeter was struck and sunk by the Colonial liner Concord early today near Clum beach, Narraganset Bay.

ASSESSORS END FIELD WORK

The assessors, who have been in the field since the first of April, completed this work Friday and from now on until the tax rate is announced they will be busy with office work. Just when the tax rate for 1915 will be announced is a question. It is thought however it will be well into September. They have several matters sent to the Mayor with requests that he forward a supplementary budget to the City Council and if he heeds this request, which he probably will in part at least, it must be disposed of before the tax rate is announced. The 1913 financial law provides for the passage of supplementary budgets at any time before the tax rate is announced.

WILL MOVE FROM CITY

Mr. Abondio Bianchi and family of Hayden street will leave Monday for Ryan, South Carolina, where they will make their future home. Mr. Bianchi is one of the best known residents of West Quincy and has lived in that section more than thirty years. He was very popular among his fellow workers in the granite sheds and has held several offices in the various Italian societies with which he was affiliated. Mr. Baanchi will join his daughter Ida who has been visiting her sister, Mrs. Peter Monti, formerly of this city in Ryan and intends to purchase a farm in that city. Mr. Bianchi recently sold his estate to Peter DaRu of Barry street.

VOTE FOR MOST POPULAR GIRL

This Is One Feature Of Big Fair Being Held By Squantum Church

MISS DAVISON LEADING

Five hundred people attended the opening night of the two night's fair of the First Church of Squantum Friday and tonight at the church grounds in Squantum. The grounds were handsomely edcorated and the fog that rolled in from the sea did not spoil the evening's enjoyment.

An excellent cafeteria supper was served from 5 to 8 o'colck. During the evening the crowd enjoyed such sports as hitting the dolls, ringing the canes, hitting the coon and fish pond. Ice cream and cake was sold and handsome aprons went for good prices.

There was a three-reel motion picture show in the hall. The reels were "Dashed to Death," "Bumptious the Aviator" and "A Trip to Mars." Miss Jordine Davison sang and Elmer Harper played the piano during the performance.

Tonight the entire program of the lawn party is repeated with a number of interesting additional features.

The contest to select the most popular Squantum girl created a great deal of interest. John Holmes and John Jepson, Jr. recorded the votes as they were cast. The standing of the contestants at the close of voting last night was Miss Jordine Davison, 500; Miss Edith P. Olsen, 270; Miss Isabel Owen, 230; Miss Annie M. Morrill, 160; Miss Edith Olson, 160; Miss Ruth Holmes, 150; Miss Alice McCarron, 130; Miss Margery Woodhead, 130; Miss Edith Verrill, 120; Miss Helen M. Simpson, 120; Miss Hazel Watts, 110. The contest continues until 10 P. M. tonight when the final vote will be announced and the winner given a handsome hand painted china boudoir set.

TAKES NEIGHBOR AS HIS BRIDE

Miss Amy Elizabeth Medlyn and William James Hodge, who live across the street from each other on Town Hill, were married Friday evening.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. Clarence E. Campbell, of the First Presbyterian church in the manse on Quincy street. Miss Anna Medlyn, sister of the bride, was her attendant and James Hodge, brother of the groom, was the best man.

A reception followed at the home of the bride and was attended by relatives and friends. Mr. and Mrs. Hodge will live on Town Hill street. Mr. Hodge is a stone cutter.

PLAN TROLLEY RIDE.

The funeral of Mrs. Mary A., wife of John J. Sweeney formerly of Quincy Point, who died at her home 35 Baker Park, Dorchester Wednesday, took place this morning from her late home. The burial was at St. Mary's cemetery, West Quincy.

CITY COUNCIL AT LAST ADJOURNS UNTIL FALL

Members Have Change Of Heart And Turn Down Order For Widening Squantum Street Which Passed Last Meeting

STREET ORDERS GO BACK TO COMMITTEE

The majority of the City Council experienced another change of heart Friday evening and as a result the widening of West Squantum street which was favored at the meeting on Monday evening was turned down, but not until several of the councilmen from that esction of the city had made a strenuous effort to have it included. There was a short tilt between President Whiton and Councilman Smith, but that soon passed off. Although the actual business of the Council did not take long it was after ten o'clock before an adjournment was taken, after suspension of the rules, until Sept. 13. The reason for the late session was due to a recess of nearly an hour which was taken in order that the joint committee on finance and streets might start all over again on the new street matters.

There had been so many mixups and changes in regard to these streets that it was deemed wise on the part of the City Solicitor to begin all over again, in order to obviate trouble with the bankers when the City Treasurer attempted to float the loan.

It was for this reason that early in the evening Councilman Richards moved that the orders relating to the acceptance of Glenwood way, Madison avenue, Bradford street, Briggs street, Lunt street and West Squantum street as well as the loan order for $20,800 be referred back to the joint committee on finance and streets. A recess was then taken.

On the Council reassambling the joint committee reported favorably on the Glenwood way, Madison avenue, Bradford street, Briggs street, Lunt street, Beach street and Bellevue road and a loan order for $15,800 was recommended.

This cut out West Squantum street which the joint committee had held up for further consideration.

The orders mentioned then took their regular reading and were placed in the calender for the next meeting.

Councilman Nelson had West Squantum street recalled from the joint committee and started to offer a substitute order.

Councilman Smith raised a point of order that the motion of Councilman Nelson was not in order under the rules of the Council and President Whiton declared the point well taken.

Councilman Nelson was then tipped off and he offered an amendment to the original West Squantum street order, which perfected it.

Councilman Smith opposed, and wondered if the committee was to follow its usual custom of doing one thing in the committee room and the opposite on the floor of the Council.

Councilman Nelson spoke at length in favor of the order. He said the street was very narrow near the bridge and was fast being built up by manufacturing houses. If the street was widened now, when the railroad put in its four tracks it would be possible, he said, to have it build a wider bridge. The work could never be done as cheap as now, and if there was any street in the city that needed widening this was the street. He claimed that a building line would not help matters any, and he felt that if not widened until later it would cost two or three times as much as at the present time.

Councilman Craig said he believed in exercising economy and for that reason he favored putting a building line on the street. "If we do this," he argued, "when it is found out what the railroad will do we can build the street."

Councilman Kessler argued at length in favor of the amendment. He asked the City Solicitor if the street was widened to the railroad bridge if the city would have to pay any part for the widening of the bridge.

City Solicitor Pinkham replied that the order only widened the street as far as Newport avenue, which was as far as the city controlled. He did not think the railroad could be compelled to widen the bridge and was inclined to think that if the county commissioners were appealed to and decreed the bridge should be widened that the city might have to pay its share.

Councilman Kessler then went on to argue in favor of the amendment. It was a street that was much used and there were manufactories there that desired to enlarge but were waiting action of the Council.

Councilman Griffin believed that if the manufacturing concerns were anxious to help out that they should be public spirited enough to allow for future widening. The worst part was at the bridge and the order gave no immediate signs of relief at that point.

Councilman Beeman replying, said that it made a difference in what part of the city an improvement was wanted and it was not the custom of manufacturers to do as had been suggested

Councilman Beeman replying, said that it made a difference in what part real meat of the matter. He believed that the question should be gone into in more detail to find out just what was what. The desired result could be obtained just as readily by placing a building line on the street as by widening.

Councilmen Thompson and Richards believed the work should be done now, and Councilman Bolster believed nothing would be gained by the expenditure of $5,000 at the present time.

The amendment was then rejected on a rising vote of 10 yes and 11 no, and it was voted to refer the order back to the joint committee.

Councilman Craig moved to take a recess that the committee might report an order for a building line but the motion was lost.

The tilt between President Whiton and Councilman Smith came on the matter of paving Smith street.

The joint committee reported reference to the next Council on the matters relating to Bass street, Belmont street, Butler road, Davis street, Lincoln avenue, Linden street in Ward Five and Ward Six, Sea street, Sixth avenue, Wesson avenue and Smith street.

The Smith street matter was laid on the table and the report on the other streets was accepted.

Councilman Smith then offered a minority report on Smith street. The chair ruled it out of order as it was too late. After an explanation that the majority report only had been accepted on the other orders the chair replied it was in error.

Councilman Smith's minority report added the borrowing clause to the original order. The mionrity report was accepted.

The order as amended was then read.

Councilman Smith moved the suspension of rule 27, that the order might be put on its final passage.

President Whiton ruled that it was not in order, that it was illegal to pass the order at this meeting.

Councilman Smith wanted to see the rule.

President Whiton replied that it was on account of the bankers and that if the councilman thought it an unjust ruling he could appeal from the chair.

Councilman Smith replied. "I sim-

A FUNDAMENTAL REFORM.

The political bosses, big and little, of New York state are opposing the adoption of the short ballot principle now under consideration by the New York constitutional convention over which Elihu Root is presiding . They are wise to do so because the adoption of the short ballot has always proved a serious blow to bossism.

The city of Boston is a case in point The former lengthy list of elective offices has been replaced by the short ballot, to the utter disgust of the politicians. The short ballot has worked so well in Boston that the efforts of Martin Lomasney and his ilk to change the charter have failed time and again

The short ballot is an important political reform, perhaps it is the important political reform for surely it serves as the groundwork upon which to build the others.

What is the short ballot? The short ballot is common sense. Those who believe in democracy believe that if the will of the people can express itself truly the city, state and nation will be well governed. Those who do not believe in the inherent wisdom of the will of the people do not believe in democracy.

Now the short ballot is the greatest of aids to the truthful expression of the will of the people. It enables the electorate to concentrate intelligently upon the men whom it wishes to place in office. Bossism fears the intelligent choice of the people. Bossism wants as many elective offices as possible so that the people may easily be led astray.

The short ballot would present a brief list of offices for which the voters are fitted to make selections. The voters are not qualified to fill all offices. The office of state auditor, for example, should be an appointive office not an elective one, because the people have neither the time nor the opportunity to determine the respective qualifications possessed by candidates for such an office. Such an office should not be a political one. Voters are inclined in minor state offices to cast their ballot for the candidate who has their party label after his name They have little interest in who is nominated for the party ticket. The bosses, on the other hand, have a very real interest and they select the man who is most likely to serve them and maintain their power.

Minor state offices should be filled by the governor and the governor should be held accountable by the electorate for the honest and efficient conduct of those offices by the men he placed there. The same holds true in the city. Many cities elect their commissioner of public works, their city clerk and so on. Quincy has a wiser system. The Quincy voters can concentrate their thought upon the selection of a good mayor and can hold him accountable for the efficient administration of the city since the other office holders are merely his subordinates.

The short ballot is right in principle. Distrust those who oppose it.

THE BECKER TRAGEDY.

One of the biggest news stories of recent years drew to a close Friday morning with the execution of former police Lieutenant Charles L. Becker. Of course, there will be a few more words to say but unless it shall later appear that Becker was innocent the real end of the drama came Friday morning in the death cell at Sing Sing. One of the chief features of interest in the final act of the tragedy has been the persistent cry of the condemned that he is innocent. There are many who believe him innocent, some of the witnesses to the execution itself, we are told, holding this opinion.

Whether or not he is really guilty few living beings can say. The rest of us must be content with the fact that he had a fair trial and that a jury found him guilty. It is right for us to have the deepest sympathy for Mrs. Becker but we should not forget Mrs. Rosenthal. It is right for us to have pitied the unfortunate man but we should not regret that justice triumphed in the end. We should rejoice that there were men strong enough to do their duty and not yield to the maudlin sentiment of the kind of people who hailed Harry Thaw, a self-confessed murderer as a hero when he returned to Philadelphia a free man the other day. The safety of the community requires that crime be pnished with a stern, unsentimental hand.

It is to be hoped that the Board of Health may speedily be able to find suitable quarters for the free tuberculosis dispensary. The institution presents possibilities of valuable service to the community and, moreover, failure to find a location will place Quincy in the unenviable position of being the only city in the commonwealth required by law to have a dispensary and yet unable, because of mistaken prejudice, to obey a wise law.

As the Oracle, pointed out in Friday's Ledger the local political pot is beginning to boil right merrily. There are candidates in plenty but very few of them are of the calbre which should represent Quincy in the state legislature. This is an important community and it should send to the general court of the commonwealth men of ability and high integrity. We have had too many of late years who did not measure up to standard.

NO SUMMER IN 1816.

Although conditions have warmed up somewhat this week, the present year is a reminder of 1816, known throughout the Uinted States as the year without a summer. Our own Marian Douglas in her clever story "Poverty Year" vividly describes life n New Hmpshire during that year, when January was so mild that most people would have let their furnaces go out had they possessed any, and February was only occasionally colder March and April coaxed the buds and lowers out, and May was a winter month with ice and snow. By the end of May everything perishable had been killed by the cold, and the young leaves had been stripped from the trees. June was as cold as May. Both snow and ice were common throughout the month all over the corn belt, and after having planted corn two or three times the farmers threw up their hands. Snow fell 10 nches deep in Vermont. The following winter was the hardest the people of the United States have ever known.—Bristol Enterprise.

PROHIBIT SPITTING.

Several of the Boston papers as well as many of the weeklies have received complaint of the "obnoxious and nauseating habit of expectorating on our street cars and other public vehicles" and authorities have been scored for not enforcing the regulation against this offence. More people are losing their lives every year, through offences of the spitting laws, than ever were even slightly injured by women's hat pins yet the laws on the latter were strictly enforced and on the former are passed over. In fact the spitting abomination seems at times to be growing worse. In addition to its dangers it is inconvenient especially to a woman, who must be constantly alert, especially in the city to escape its consequences. Judging by the habits of the average man on the street, the indifference of officials whose business it is to enforce the rules and the attitude of raillery with which any complaints are received; it is not strange that the once long signs put up by the Board of Health have been reduced to "Spitting Prohibited" and that not even these are enforced.—Weymouth Gazette.

QUITE A PREDICAMENT.

Sol Smith Russell had three young nieces living out West, and he was very fond of them. One day, while visiting his brother—a jeweler in Kansas City—he took the youngest of the trio to walk. As they passed a candy shop the child asked for some sweets and her uncle acquiesced, only on condition that she would not eat any until they got home. She promised and was given the candy. Then they started home.

"Let's wun," said the child, pleadingly, to her dignified uncle.

"No, my dear, it isn't nice to run," he answered.

"Oh, do let's wun!" she coaxed.

Again he refused. Then the chubby little hand squirmed from his and dropping down on her knees right on the pavement, she scorned the passing people and in a clear little voice prayed:

"Oh, Dod, please make Uncle Sol wun!"

"It was simply a question of my losing my dignity, or her losing her faith in God," said the actor in after years, "so we ran as fast as we could."—Sunday Journal.

LETTERS FROM OUR READERS

THE MURDER OF BECKER.

Editor of the Ledger:

Permit me once more to enter a protest against the judicial murder of men. How long it will be before the sentiment of the public will be sufficiently enlightened to forego this horrible practice of committing a second murder as a relief or revenge, or a deterrent to a first murder!

Years ago it was customary to have executions a matter for the gratification of the multitude. The times have progressed sufficiently to reduce the execution of a man to a few legal witnesses. The brutality of killing men in cold blood seems to impress the multitudes very slightly, but progress is certainly being made toward the final abolition of judicial murders. The old fashioned notion that it was a great deterrent to the commission of the crime of murder is finding fewer and fewer supporters.

How rapidly the change may come in state legislation that will exclude judicial murders it is hard to determine. Reforms many times progress slowly for a long period and suddenly acquire increased acceleration. and almost in a day reforms are made.

The lack of appreciation of this fact, that a great many murderers entirely escape because of a conscientious scruple against finding a man guilty when the penalty is an execution, when the evidence would be sufficient, in many instances, to find a man guilty if the punishment was a life imprisonment, seems singular. The fact that the evidence of very many murders is very largely circumstantial, and not the direct evidence of the performance, and the fact to a juror that it is possible that the man under indictment may be innocent deters such a juror from giving him a verdict of guilty, in consequence of which very many escapes are made, and many murderers are set free.

The certainty of punishment, rather than its severity, is recognized by penologists generally as far more effective. In the prisons today it is coming to be recognized that the man of bad purpose is much less dangerous to society if kindly treated, possibly taught a trade, and made fit to be again a member of society, rather than the older idea of working some sort of revenge upon him for his misdemeanor.

So, I appeal to the younger generation of men and women in Quincy to give this matter some consideration, and I have a hope that here and there it may result in some deliberation, which will result in helping on the work of lessening the brutal instinct which finds expression in judicial murder.

Rupert F. Claflin.

TROLLEYS vs JITNEYS

Editor of the Ledger:

If the street railway company wishes to put the jitney out of business there is to my mind only one way to accomplish it and that is to serve the interests of the public by giving frequent and dependable service.

Take the Houghs Neck line which to the casual observer seems to run itself on any old schedule. Why not in the busy hours, instead of sending down a bunch of cars at one time, with long waits on the turnouts, send a car every 5 or 10 minutes? Then when once started why not keep going instead of the long and unexplainable waits. No one wants to spend a half hour on a trip that could be accomplished in twenty minutes.

This jogging along easily may be a picnic for the motorman or conductor but not for the passenger who does not wish to waste his time or lose his train. This I think explains the success of the jitney.

If the street railway had frequent cars with shorter running time schedule and lived up to it they would in my opinion hold their patrons against the jitney. The public wants good service and patronizes those who give it. It looks to me as though it was up to the street railway.

HOLD CONFERENCE.

Acting Mayor Emery L. Crane and Sealer of Weights and Measures James M. Cantfill attended the conference Friday afternoon with Commissioner of Weights and Measures Thure Hanson, at which time the matter of hawkers and peddlers licenses was discussed. The hawkers and peddlers law is a complicated one and although the City Council has tried several times no satisfactory ordinance has ever been acted.

A YEAR OF THE GREAT WAR
BY UNITED PRESS EXPERTS

WHAT THE YEAR HAS PROVED.

by
J. W. T. MASON.
Written for the United Press.
(Final Article.)

New York, July 31:—The first year of the war cries for a compromise. From the capitals of the belligerent nations come reports of dominating optimism, but the encouragement is all based on phantom beliefs in what the future may have in store. It is a pitiful tale each country has to tell of the past. There is no aspect anywhere of hope in the present. Appeals to unsubstantial visions of the future alone encourage hope in a full won victory.

But the future is so often a will-o'-the-wisp that leads to the quicksands and quagmires. Amid the bold claims of success which each nation is making on the first anniversary of the war, it is pitifully easy to detect the wailing note of sorrow trying to disguise itself as a paean of triumph. In truth, there will be no triumphant celebrations anywhere in Europe at this anniversary time. Writers may pen their eulogies of native heroes, equalized among all the belligerents, drawn battles may be magnified into brilliant successes, but the souls of the warring people cannot rejoice at these inconclusive evidences of success. All the nations dwell too closely to defeat, and all know victory is too far away.

Compromise must bring an end to the conflict. The nations of the world must learn that all individual life depends on a perpetual compromise with environment, and that the lives of nations cannot obtain immunity from nature's laws.. This is the great lesson of the first year of the war. France recounts her success at the Marne; England relates the prowess of her fleet; Germany tells of her wonderful accomplishments on two fronts; the other belligerents sing their own songs of victory. But, when the battle maps are examined, the progress registered anywhere since the war settled down to its present mode of fighting, is seen to be infinitesimal.

Modern warfare is proving to be for more advantageous for defensive than for offensive fighting. This is the second lesson of the year's fruitless efforts by master strategists to overwhelm one another. Nations no longer can be overwhelmed. A great military machine like Germany's may conquer so small a country as Belgium; but apart from such rarely disproportionate antagonists as these, conquest of one nation by another has become impossible. Defence is more potent than attack.

Every Austro-German offensive in the Eastern war area exhausts itself long before a decisive victory becomes possible. The Slavs, too, are unable to carry the war into the enemy's territory, except by temporary drives that are soon repelled. Only minor victories are being won in turn by the belligerents in the West, each offsetting the other. It is as hopeless for France and England to dream of overrunning Germany as for the Teutons to put their trust in the conquest of France. Even the Anglo-French forces on the Gallipoli Peninsula are being checked by the despised Turks, the most inefficiently equipped troops in Europe.

Defence is triumphant at the end of the twelve months' fighting. Compromise therefore, becomes inevitable. The world has spilt its blood and wasted its treasures to learn that civilization no longer will tolerate conquest. The year has proved that educated man has taught himself, instinctively, and above everything else, the art of self-protection. But among the warring nations themselves the lesson is not yet fully learned. Each belligerent realizes the fact, as far as itself is concerned, but is reluctant to concede a like knowledge to the opposing side. Nature is thought to be willing to play favorites again, as she so frequently has done in the past; but this time, all mankind is being treated alike, and to each country has been whispered the native secret of self preservation.

Therefore, a compromise is inevitable. The dead in the second year of the war will be martyrs to the age-long belief that nature has her favorites. This is the basis for that blind trust in the future to which the belligerents now are appealing as their justification for a continuation of the conflict. But, during the past twelve months, nature has betrayed all her ancient proteges in turn. Inevitably she must continue her impartial attitude, for human strength and human wealth are limited, and no belligerent has enough left to bribe a change in nature's attitude.

The past year has proved that civilization is able to save itself from destruction. Civilizing influences will not go down in the ruin of the conflict. On the contrary rotting sores, hidden below civilization's surface, have been exposed in all lands as only a war of the present magnitude could uncover them. If the war hadn't come, these diseased spots probably would have spread, weakening civilization and retarding its healthy growth. When the war is over, and the final compromise is signed, civilization will be able to move forward in many new directions—to develop more humanity in one country; to obliterate degenerative tendencies in an other; to modify caste and encourage discipline and efficiency in a third; to expel corruption and perhaps absolutism itself, from a fourth. The time for such a peace is now, or at most, when Constantinople falls. Europe's statesmen must soon confess the fruitlessness of pursuing phantom victories. The day is fast approaching when the conflict, even if it doesn't cease, will begin to degenerate into a gigantic clinch, with the casualties everywhere fast decreasing.

NEW SCHOOL SYSTEM IS BIG SUCCESS

Troy, N. Y. July 29—It seems that what the school system of Troy needed was a fire. Since the fire that destroyed one of the grammar schools on December 23 there has been a great improvement and that not by reason of building a new and better building, either, but by reorganizing the school work of the city on the Gary plan.

The day before the fire, William Wirt, head of the Gary schools, had been one of a group of distinguished educators conferring with Supt. Eldred and Dr. William Chandler Smith, vocational education director of the Troy schools. He was on his way home but Eldred and Smith wired for him to come back. He said, under the Gary plan, he could make room for the 500 children of the burned grammar school in the big central school building—already thought to be used to capacity.

"When the term opened," said Dr. Smith, "we had in the central school, not 800 regular pupils and a few hundred part time and evening students, but nearly 1400 day students. Moreover, under the Wirt dual system we found we had room for 1800 to 2,000 children, giving them all a full program of work, study and play.

"The wonderful thing about it was the instant economy achieved, the per capita cost of operating was cut almost in two.

"The auditorium, for example, one of the most expensive rooms in the building, had formerly been in use for about thirty minutes a day. The rest of the time it was empty, unproductive, earning nothing. Now it was a hive of industry all day long. Before the shops and the domestic science rooms were used only a few hours a day; now they were in constant use.

"It was the same with the gymnasium and the playground, all other departments, before working half time, now earning their living every minute of the day. Talk of efficiency, that building spells efficiency from basement to roof. It is an object lesson to the town.

"We employ no more teachers than before, nor do we work them any harder than before. We transferred several of the classroom teachers to auditorium and gymnasium service, and we assigned other teachers to special classes."

"How did the teachers like the new plan? Coming so suddenly, it would not be strange if some of them found it difficult to adjust themselves."

Dr. Smith smiled. "They thought it was going to be difficult," he replied. "You know what the regent's examinations are, and how teachers begin to brace themselves for it along the first of the year. For a few days after the change was made I used to hear teachers exclaiming. 'What shall we do about the examinations? I shall never get my children ready, in all this confusion. I know they'll all fail.'

"Well, curiously enough, when the examinations were over it was found that more children had passed than had passed before in those two schools. It was a remarkable record they made. Hardly anybody failed. The fact is the children were so stimulated by the new life of the school, they were so inspired by the richness of the school program, and the freedom of the new system of administration that they found it easy to study."

"They didn't find freedom demoralizing then?"

"Demoralizing? That depends on what you call demoralization. Sometimes teachers visiting the school express horror at the noise in the halls between classes. But I say to them that there is nothing improper in a certain amount of noise in a school building, provided the noise is made at the right time.

"Just now, I tell them, there is no school here. For five minutes the business of the children is to change classes. While they are doing that I want them to relax. I want them to talk. I want them to stop on their way and I have bulletins of every sort pinned to the walls at intervals to catch their attention. That kind of thing quickens the intelligence, frees the mind and creates initiative.

"We hope, at least, that we can make all our school buildings serve the children not a few hours a day, nine months in the year, but all the time. The children deserve this much. I am certain, that the school shall be open to their needs at any time of their awaking life."

CASHIER GETS OUT IN A GREAT HURRY

Large Sum of Money Also Said to Have Disappeared

Boston, July 31.—From the coffers of the United Fruit company, the main offices of which are in this city, a sum of money, said to be about $100,000, has disappeared.

Simultaneously with the discovery of the fact that this money was gone, George S. Inman, 50 years of age, for a number of years cashier of the company, disappeared.

In the expensive apartments which he and wife occupied it is said that no one there knows where Inman is, or where his wife is. The automobile they owned was taken out by Mrs. Inman Thursday morning. Since that hour it has not been seen.

Inman's departure was so hurried that he left the State street offices of the company without his hat, it is said. His departure was almost simultaneous with the appearance of the experts to begin their examination of the books, according to a United Fruit official.

MRS. MARY ELIZABETH HUBBARD.

Tuesday afternoon friends and relatives gathered at her late home to pay the last tribute of respect and affection to Mrs. Mary E. Hubbard.

Mary Elizabeth Orrok was born in Boston in 1835. She was the daughter of James L. P. Orrok, a prominent merchant of that city, and Mary Anne Tower Orrok, a woman distinguished for remarkable spiritual and intellectual power and possessed of rare literary gifts. In their daughter, the practical ability of the former and the loveliness of character of the latter were most happily blended, giving to her a sunny and attractive personality.

She married Moses N. Hubbard, a well known citizen of Roxbury, in 1855 and for years their home was a radiating centre of gracious and graceful hospitality to a large circle of friends. Mrs. Hubbard possessed in a marked degree the power of attracting young people. She loved and was loved by all children who knew her. In a simple, unostentatious way, she entered into the lives of many lonely young men and women who had come from far-away homes to the city to study music and art Where financial help was needed, she gave it delicately; where there was the greater need of affection and sympathy, she bestowed both lavishly. her heart and home were open to all. As one who knew and loved her said "She was a universal mother." And scattered throughout the United States are those who have always counted it a great privilege to call her by that sacred name.

Since her husband's death she has made her home with her older daughter in Wollaston, where, although advancing years have necessarily excluded her from participating largely in social activities, she has drawn about her a large circle of friends.

The simple services held at her home on Tuesday were conducted by the Rev. William Safford Jones of Newport, R. I., a life long friend of the family. The interment was in the family lot at Forest Hills.

Mrs. Hubbard is survived by two daughters, Mrs. Herbert J. Gurney and Miss Elizabeth Hubbard, both of Wollaston, and a number of nieces and nephews.

MAKING LIVABLE PORCHES.

Privacy a Desirability When Constructing Piazzas, Balconies or Loggias.

Unfortunately up to the present time few Americans realize the meaning and desirability of privacy. Even in the country many houses are built near the road, without any attempt to screen private residences from the public gaze; and in the city, where porches are so rare a luxury, they are generally built around the main entrance of a house, where there is a constant coming and going and where a cozy retreat, hidden from every passerby, is almost an impossibility.

However, many houses have possibilities. For instance, roofs over pantries and additions or projecting extensions that are created as a result of architectural design could be made into charming little balconies without much trouble or expense.

A roof can be converted into a very satisfactory porch floor by covering and leveling it with wooden slats that allow natural drainage, and there need be no permanent wooden roofs for such a retreat when awnings and canvas curtains can be made to answer the purpose of protection quite as effectively. Is there anything more restful or more delightful than to be thus sheltered from the dust and bustle of streets? Is there anything more desirable than the security of such a retreat?

Indeed, a balcony, loggia or veranda need not be limited to the homes of the wealthy, for it can easily be brought within the scope of limited incomes and talents. The barest and bleakest of porches can be made an interesting spot—one that is essentially livable—with the help of awnings and screens, a few comfortable chairs, a swinging couch or hammock and, above all, a few flowers and vines. Flowers and green things are to a porch what an open fireplace is to a room. They form a nucleus, a charming center, around which the other things naturally group themselves.

rose chrysanthemums and the casings are of ebony. There are four leaves in the screen proper, only two of which show in the illustration.

Cooling Process.

To keep milk fresh in warm weather or to cool any liquid in a bottle dip a cloth in cold water, wrap the cloth around the jug or bottle and leave in a cool place, preferably in a draft. This method of cooling is much more effectual on account of the evaporation produced than if the jug or bottle had been placed in cold water.

Built like—"The Deacon's One-Hoss Shay"

THE best Pneumatic Tire is only as strong as its weakest part.

Strengthening its strongest parts is as useless as putting a fifth Wheel on a Wagon.

Yet this is often done to provide "Selling-feature" and "Talking Point."

The weakest part of every Pneumatic Tire is its Walls or Sides, not its Tread,—its Cotton Fabric or "Stocking," not its Rubber "Sole."

No price would be too high to pay for a material that, replacing Cotton in the Walls of Pneumatic Tires, would last as long as the Goodrich Rubber Tread could be made to wear.

Neither Silk, nor Linen, nor any other known Fabric yet discovered is so good, for this purpose, as Cotton,—and choice long-fibred Cotton is the best material that money can buy for Tire Fabric.

WE use nothing less in Goodrich Tires, and test every foot of it up to 380 lbs. to the Square Inch, before we percolate it with the most adhesive Rubber Compound ever made for this purpose.

We then shape this rubberized Fabric into Tires, with scrupulous care to have the tension on each square inch of fabric precisely the same,—that tension being controlled by a machine as sensitive as the eye, and infinitely more precise than the handwork of the most skilled Operative could make it.

To do this work we have the most highly-trained men in the Rubber Industry,—trained in the Precision that practice and our 45-year EXPERIENCE make perfect.

* * *

NO Tire Manufacturer, if he received a price of $200 per Tire, could put better Fabric into the Walls of his Tires, use greater care, more sensitively adjusted Tension devices, or more adhesive Rubber between each layer of fabric.

Because, we know the vital importance of THE BEST in this part of the Tire, and use it there unsparingly.

Made as always,—the same reliable Construction, the same dependable Service—without anything whatever taken out of Quality, no matter what reductions in List-Price are ever made.

Only 5% Plus for this Best Non-Skid Tire

Note following comparative prices. "A," "B," "C" and "D" represent four Widely-Sold Non-Skid Tires:

But,—notwithstanding all this,—the FABRIC is the part of the Tire which goes first.

Because the sides of the Tire do most of the work in running,—bending and stretching a million times an hour, in scores of different directions.

This bending of the sides causes Friction between the layers of Canvas working against each other,—Friction causes Heat—the Heat over-cures and dries out the Rubber Adhesive between layers, which then separate from each other, in spots, the threads weakening or wearing out chafing against each other.

Then you have, in due time, the incipient blow-out, or other form of Tire-Death.

* * *

PUT more layers of Fabric than we do in the walls, to strengthen them, and the friction increases, with faster deterioration of the Rubber through the greater heat engendered.

Put fewer layers, and the walls would not be strong enough to carry the load of the Car.

So there you are—Mr. Tire User!

Why put MORE layers of Fabric in the Walls of the Tire than will properly carry the load, when each additional layer is an additional developer of that FRICTION-HEAT which is to Tires what Old Age is to Man?

* * *

THAT is the reason we build, in the Goodrich Tire, a carefully BALANCED Tire, emulating the famous example of "The Deacon's One-Hoss Shay" in which "the Sills were just as strong as the Thills and the Thills as strong as the floor."

The Maximum Fabric efficiency and THEN,—the rest of the Tire built up to that.

Result,—

—The most RESILIENT Tire that can be made with Fabric Walls,—at the fairest price per Mile of performance.

Why pay more for any Tire?

HORSE POWER IN NEW YORK.

In the State of New York the waste energy of water power is equal to that produced by the consumption of eleven million tons of coal annually. There is estimated to be one and one-half million horse-power in the state unused, and yet New York leads all other states in the amount of developed water power. The New York Water Supply Commission survey, as long ago as 1908, showed the installation of 829,558 horse-power. Maine was next then, with 446,774 horse, but California has now supplanted Maine. The total estimated power possibility of New York, outside of the Niagara and St. Lawrence Rivers, boundary streams, is one and one-half million horse. The Water Supply Commission sent engineers around the state to examine each important water power site. There is over one hundred thousand horse-power in the canal system, and over one hundred thousand acres of swamp lands in the state.—"Water Power in America," by Edward T. Williams, in National Magazine for June.

CHAPTER XVII.

The Forward Light.

During the days which followed his setting up of the standard of independence in Mrs. Holcomb's second-floor front, Griswold found himself entering upon a new field—a world corresponding with gratifying fidelity to that prefigured future which he had struck out in the waking hours of his first night on the main-deck of the Belle Julie.

Wahaska, as a fortunate field for the post-graduate course in Experimental Humanity, was all that his fancy had pictured it. When he came to go about the town, as he did daily after the pleasant occupation of refurnishing his study and bedroom was a pleasure past, he found that in some mysterious manner his fame had preceded him. Everybody seemed to know who he was; to be able to place him as a New Yorker, as an author in search of health, or local color or environment or some other technical quality not to be found in the crowded cities; to be able to place him, also, as Miss Margery Grierson's friend and beneficiary—which last, he surmised, was his best passport to the good graces of his fellow-townsmen.

Coincidently he discovered that, in the same mysterious manner, everybody seemed to know that he was, in the Wahaskan phrase, "well-fixed." Here, again, he guessed that something might be credited to Margery. As to the manner of conducting the war against inequality and the crime of plutocracy, the plan of campaign had been sufficiently indicated in that white-hot moment of high resolves on the cargo-deck of the Belle Julie. For the propaganda, there was his book; for the demonstration, he would put the sacred fund into some industry where the weight of it would give him the casting vote in all questions involving the rights of the workers.

With the rewriting of the book fairly begun, he was already looking about for the practical opportunity when the growing friendship with Edward Raymer promised to offer an opening exactly fulfilling the experimental requirements. Raymer had overenlarged his plant and was needing more capital; and some of Raymer's half-confidences had led him to suspect that the need was, or was likely to become, imperative. Griswold waited patiently; he was still waiting on the Wednesday afternoon when Raymer called him over the telephone and made the appointment for a meeting at the house in Shawnee street.

"Your 'pair of minutes' must have found something to grow upon," laughed the patient waiter, when Raymer, finding Mrs. Holcomb's front door open, had climbed the stair to the newly established literary workshop. "I've had time to smoke a pipe and write a complete paragraph since you called up."

Raymer flung himself into a chair at the desk-end and reached for a pipe in the curiously-carved rack which had been one of Griswold's small extravagances in the refurnishing.

"Yes," he said; "Margery Grierson drove up while I was unhitching, and I had to stop and talk to her. Which reminds me: she says you're giving Mereside the go-by since you set up for yourself. Are you?"

"I'm not likely to," was the sober rejoinder. "My debt to Miss Grierson is a pretty big one, Raymer; bigger than you suspect, I imagine."

"I'm glad to hear you put the debt where it belongs, leaving her father out of it. You don't owe him anything; not even a cup of cold water. There's a latter-day buccaneer for you!" he went on, warming to his subject like a man with a sore into which salt has been freshly rubbed. "That old timber-wolf wouldn't spare his best friend—allowing that anybody could be his friend. By Jove! he's making me sweat blood, all right!"

"How is that?" asked Griswold.

"I've been on the edge of telling you two or three times, but next to a quitter I do hate the fellow who puts his fingers into a trap and then squawks when the trap nips him. Grierson has got me down and he is about to cut my throat, Griswold."

"Tell me about it," said the one who had been patiently waiting to be told.

"Grierson a year ago tried to get a finger into my little pie. He wanted to reorganize the Raymer Foundry and Machine works, and offered to furnish the additional capital and take fifty-one per cent of the reorganization stock. Naturally, I couldn't see it. This spring we had the capacity limit in the old plant and the only thing to do was to enlarge. I borrowed the money at Grierson's bank and did it. My borrow was one hundred thousand dollars, and there was a verbal understanding that it was to be repaid out of the surplus earnings, piecemeal. I told Grierson that I should need a year or more, and he didn't object."

"This was all in conversation?" said Griswold; "no writing?"

Raymer made a wry face.

"Don't rub it in. I'm admitting that I was all the different kinds of a fool. There was no definite time limit mentioned. I was to give my personal notes and put up the family stock as collateral. A day or two later, when I went around to close the deal, the trap was standing wide open for me and a baby might have seen it. Grierson said he had proposed the loan to his directors, and that they had kicked on taking the stock as collateral. He offered to take my paper without an indorser if I would cover his personal risk with my stock collateral, assigning it, not to the bank, but to him. I fell for it like a woolly sheep. The stock transfers were made, and I signed a note for one hundred thousand dollars, due in sixty days; Grierson explaining that two months was the bank's usual limit on accommodation paper—which is true enough—but giving me to understand that a renewal and an extension of time would be merely a matter of routine."

"Make it Ten Thousand and I'll Contribute the Remaining Ninety."

Griswold was shaking his head sympathetically. "I can guess the rest," he said. "Grierson is preparing to swallow you whole."

"He has as good as done it," was the dejected reply. "The note falls due tomorrow; and, as I happened to be uptown this afternoon, I thought I would drop in and pay the discount and renew the paper. Grierson shot me through the heart. He gave me a cock-and-bull story about some bank examiner's protest, and told me I must be prepared to take up the paper tomorrow."

"Of course you reminded him of his agreement?"

"Sure; and he sawed me off short; said that any business man borrowing money on accommodation paper knew that it was likely to be called in on the expiration date; that an extension is really a new transaction, which the bank is at liberty to refuse to enter. Oh, he gave it to me cold and clammy, sitting back in his big chair and staring up at me through the smoke of a fat, black cigar while he did it!"

"And then?" prompted Griswold.

"Then I remembered the mother and sister, Kenneth, and did what I would have died rather than do for myself—I begged like a dog. But I might as well have gone outside and butted my head against the brick wall of the bank."

Griswold forgot his own real, though possibly indirect, obligation to Jasper Grierson.

"That is where you made a mistake; you should have told him to go to h—l with his money!" was his acrid comment. And then: "How near can you come to lifting this note tomorrow, Raymer?"

"'Near' isn't the word. Possibly I might sweep the corners and gather up twelve or fifteen thousand dollars."

"That will do," said the querist, shortly. "Make it ten thousand, and I'll contribute the remaining ninety."

Raymer sprang out of his chair as if its padded arms had been suddenly turned into high-voltage electrodes.

"You will?—you'll do that for me, Griswold?" he said, with a queer stridency in his voice that made the word-craftsman, always on the watch for apt similes, think of a choked chicken. But Raymer was swallowing hard and trying to go on. "By Jove—it's the most generous thing I ever heard of!—but I can't let you do it. I haven't a thing in the world to offer you but the stock, and that may not be worth the paper it is printed on if Jasper Grierson has made up his mind to break me."

"Sit down again and let us thresh it out," said Griswold. "How much of a socialist are you, Raymer?"

The young ironmaster sat down, gasping a little at the sudden wrenching aside of the subject.

"Why, I don't know; enough to want every man to have a square deal, I guess."

"Including the men in your shops?"

"Putting them first," was the prompt correction. "It was my father's policy, and it has been mine. We have never had any labor troubles."

"You pay fair wages?"

"We do better than that. A year ago I introduced a modified plan of profit sharing."

Griswold's eyes were lighting up with altruistic fires.

"Once in a while, Raymer, a thing happens so fortuitously as to fairly compel a belief in the higher powers that our fathers included in the word 'Providence'," he said, almost solemnly. "You have described exactly an industrial situation which seems to me to offer a solution of the whole vexed question of master and man, and to be a seed-sowing which is bound to be followed by an abundant and most humanizing harvest. Ever since I began to study, even in a haphazard way, the social system under which we sweat and groan, I've wanted in on a job like yours. I still want in. Will you take me as a silent partner, Raymer? I'm not making it a condition, mind you; come here any time after ten o'clock tomorrow, and you'll find the money waiting for you. But I do hope you won't turn me down."

Raymer was gripping the arms of his chair again, but this time they were not unpleasantly electrified.

"If I had only myself to consider, I shouldn't keep you waiting a second," he returned, heartily. "But it may take a little time to persuade my mother and sister. If they could only know you—why can't you come out to dinner with me tonight?"

"For the only reason that would make me refuse; I have a previous bidding. But I'll be glad to go some other day. There is no hurry about this business matter; take all the time you need—after you have made Mr. Grierson take his claws out of you."

Raymer had filled the borrowed pipe again and was pulling at it reflectively. "About this partnership; what would be your notion?" he asked.

"The simplest way is always the best. Increase your capital stock and let me in for as much as my ninety thousand dollars will buy," said the easily satisfied investor. "We'll let it go at that until you've had time to think it over, and talk it over with your mother and sister."

The iron founder got up and reached for his hat.

"You are certainly the friend in need, Griswold, if ever there was one," he said, gripping the hand of leave-taking as if he would crack the bones in it. "But there is one thing I'm going to ask you, and you mustn't take offense—this ninety thousand; could you afford to lose it—or is it your whole stake in the game?"

Griswold's smile was the ironmaster's assurance that he had not offended.

"It is practically my entire stake—and I can very well afford to lose it in the way I have indicated. You may call that a paradox, if you like, but both halves of it are true."

"Then there is one other thing you ought to know, and I'm going to tell it now," Raymer went on. "We do a general foundry and machine business, but a good fifty per cent of our profit comes from the Wahaska and Pineboro railroad repair work, which we have had ever since the road was opened."

Griswold was smiling again. "Why should I know that particularly?" he asked.

"Because it is rumored that Jasper Grierson has been quietly absorbing the stock and bonds of the road, and if he means to remove me from the map—"

"I see," was the reply. "In that case you'll need a partner even worse than you do now. You can't scare me off that way. Shall I look for you at ten tomorrow?"

"At ten to the minute," said the rescued plunger; and he went downstairs so full of mingled thankfulness and triumph that he mistook Doctor Farnham's horse for his own at the hitching post two doors away, and was about to get into the doctor's buggy before he discovered his mistake.

CHAPTER XVIII.

The Bridge of Jehennam.

Griswold took a final look at himself in his dressing case mirror before going to keep his evening appointment at the doctor's downtown office. It was comfortably reassuring. So far as he could determine, there was little in the clean-shaven, square-shouldered, correctly garmented young fellow who faced him in the mirror to suggest either the bearded outcast of New Orleans or the unkempt and toil-sodden roustabout of the Belle Julie. If only she had not made him speak to her. He had a sharp conviction that the greatest of all the hazards lay in the chance that she might remember his voice.

He found the cheery little doctor waiting for him when he had walked the few squares to the Main street office.

"I was beginning to be afraid you were going to be fashionably late," said the potential host; and then, with a humorous glance for the correct garmenting: "Regalia, heh? Hasn't Miss Grierson told you that Wahaska is still hopelessly unable to live up to the dress coat and standing collar? I'm sure she must have. But never mind; climb into the buggy and we'll let old Bucephalus take us around to see if the neighbors have brought in anything good to eat."

The drive was a short one. Broffin was once more shadowing the house in which, first or last, he expected to trap his amateur MacHeath; and when the buggy was halted at the carriage step he was near enough to mark and recognize the doctor's companion.

"Not this time," he muttered sourly, when the two had passed together up the graveled path and the host was fitting his latchkey to the front door. "It's only the sick man that writes books. I wonder what sort of a book he thinks he's going to write in this inforgotten, turkey-trodden, come-along village of the Reuben yaps?"

Griswold, waiting on the porch while Doctor Farnham fitted his key, had a nerve-tingling shiver of apprehension when the latch yielded with a click and he found himself under the hall lantern formally shaking hands with the statuesque young woman of the many imaginings.

"You are very welcome to Home Nook, Mr. Griswold; we have been hearing about you for many weeks," she was saying when he had relinquished the firm hand and was hanging his coat and hat on the hall rack. And then, with a half-embarrassed laugh: "I am afraid we are dreadful gossips; all Wahaska has been talking about you, you know, and wondering how it came to acquire you."

"It hasn't acquired anything very valuable," was the guest's modest disclaimer, its readiness arising out of a grateful casing of strains now that the actual face-to-face ordeal had safely passed its introductory stage. "And you mustn't say a word against your charming little city, Miss Farnham," he went on. "It is the friendliest, most hospitable—"

The doctor's daughter was interrupting with an enthusiastic show of applause.

"Come out to dinner, both of you," she urged; and then to Griswold: "I want you to say all those nice things to Aunt Fanny."

In the progress to the cozy, home-like dining-room Griswold found the contrast between the Farnham home and the ornate mansion three streets away on the lake front strikingly apparent; as cleanly marked as that between Margery Grierson and the sweetly serene and conventional young person who was introducing him to her aunt across the small oval dining table.

So far, all was going well. But a little later, in the midst of a half-uttered direction to the serving maid, Miss Farnham stopped abruptly, and Griswold could feel her gaze, wide-eyed and half-terrified, seemingly fixed upon him.

It was all over in the turning of a leaf; there had been no break in the doctor's genial raillery, and the breathless little pause at the other end of the table was only momentary. When the dinner was over the doctor, in the act of filling two long-stemmed pipes for his guest and himself, was called away professionally. Miss Gilman, least obtrusive of chaperons, had been peacefully napping for a good half-hour in her low rocker under the reading lamp, and the pictures in a thick quarto of Gulf Coast views had pleasantly filled the interval for the two who were awake, when Griswold finally assured himself that the danger of recognition was a danger past. As a mental analyst he knew that the opening of each fresh door in the house of present familiarity was automatically closing other doors opening upon the past; and it came to him with a little flush of the seer's exaltation that once again his prefigurings were finding their exact fulfillment. In a spirit of artistic daring he yielded to a sudden impulse, as one crossing the flimsiest of bridges may run and leap to prove that his theory of safety stresses is a sufficient guaranty of his own immunity.

"You were speaking of first impressions of places," he said, while they were still turning the leaves of the picture book. "Are you a believer in the absolute correctness of first impressions?"

"I don't know," was the thoughtful reply; but its afterword was more definite: "As to places, I'm not sure that the first impression always persists; in a few instances I am quite certain it hasn't. I didn't like the Gulf coast at all, at first; it seemed so foreign and different and unhomelike. As to persons, however—"

"It Was a Man—He Was Looking in at the Window."

She paused, and Griswold entered the breach hardily.

"I know," he affirmed. "There have been times when, with every reasonable fiber in you urging you to believe the evil, a still stronger impulse has made you believe in the good."

"How can you know that?" she asked; and again he saw in the expressive eyes the flying signals of indeterminate perplexity and apprehension.

Resolutely he pressed the hazardous experiment to its logical conclusion. Once for all, he must know if this young woman with the sympathetic voice and the goddesslike pose could, even under suggestion, be led to link up the past with the present.

"It is my trade to know," he said quietly, closing the book of views and laying it aside. "There have been moments in your life when you would have given much to be able to decide a question of duty or expediency entirely irrespective of your impressions. Isn't that so?"

For one flitting instant he thought he had gone too far. In the hardy determination to win all or lose all, he had been holding her eyes steadily, as the sure mirror in which he should be able to read his sentence, of acquittal or condemnation. This time there was no mistaking the sudden widening of the pupils to betray the equally sudden awakening of womanly terror.

DELIVERS LECTURE ON PHILIPINES

Remove U. S. Control And Base Ball Alone Will Survive, Says Speaker

AUDIENCE ENJOYS MR. ARNOLD

"Remove American influence from the Philippine Islands and about the only thing that would survive would be base ball," declared John R. Arnold, in an instructive lecture on that colonial possession of the United States, under the auspices of the Philanthropic committee of the Women's club for the benefit of the Associated Charities in Adams Academy Friday evening. "It is a saying often used," he said, "and it comes within an ace of being true."

It was Mr. Arnolds first appearance on the lecture platform since his return from the Islands where he was in the government service for six years. He discussed the point from many angles, and highly entertained his small but attentive audience.

The natives he said lacked a spontaneous power of political organization, probably the result of an exaggerated individualism. The clan system which has not changed in several thousand years in some instances is unprogressive and it falls to pieces when it comes in touch with our civilization. A benevolent despotism would go a great way in aiding growth but that policy runs contrary to the Declaration of Independence and finds but little support in this country.

Racial traits, he said, must be seriously considered when the future of the Islands is discussed and such traits as they have are not apt to change in a short time and must be reckoned with. He said he found many of the people uncivilized and often the only thing which distinguished the civilized from the uncivilized was the wearing of trousers.

Mr. Arnold said the present population of the Islands is slightly over ,000 and that the people are very rm in the physical sense. When nes to the degree of civilization r he found it a very different He spoke of the slight e of the men and women and ence of any tendency to stout- the unmixed Philippino. He e people had straight heavy nd plenty of it but that the men practically beardless, which e them apptar effeminate.

The traits of the people, he said, were due to temperamental as well as historical connections, with the people not all on the same level of civilization. The religions were Christian, Pagan and Mohammedan.

He declared the position of women high, higher than in the east and in many parts of Europe, and he believed it to be due, not to religion, but to a racial tendency which counteracted the bringing about of the seclusion of women as practiced by the Mohammedans. Christianity, of course has done something in this regard also.

The temperamental traits mentioned were chosen because they were evident in all divisions of the people. Cold blooded in a broad sense, partly cruel and indifferent to suffering he found them. Philippino girls he said while training for nurses did not have to undergo a callousing stage because of that trait, and the men, chauffeurs and drivers of vehicles, did things which endangered themselves and the passerby. He spoke of the insane frenzy when they run amuck, which frequently happens, and said it was probably the reaction of this trait.

Among the so called Christians he said this cold bloodedness takes a ghastly form, perhaps the result of an extreme passion at which a woman is generally at the bottom.

The vanity of the people in some ways was laughable and that coupled with it was an intellectual vanity.

The irresponsibility of the people was something which can probably be overcome but that at times it seems hard to know how far to trust them. As long as everything goes right, he said, the program is normal but otherwise the incapacity for responsibility is surprising. Doctors have been known to desert their posts in the face of an epidemic.

The general lack of truthfulness he explained as common to all Orientals. He termed their exaggerated individualism as a lack of self reliance, causing them to think of themselves as individuals before thinking of their family, community or country.

The general intellectual capacity is fair but no man can form a just estimate of what stupidity is until he has dealt with the predominant Philippino.

Their intellectual vanity exceeds that of any other people and tends toward the academic and not the practical. He found they had a deep love of oratory and a tremendous belief in the power of words, the result of the Spanish conquest. "The educated Phillippino is apt to hitch his wagon to a star and sit watching it."

In speaking of society he said none existed. Most of it was destroyed by the Spaniards. "It is hard to call some classes civilized because of their superstitious and intense provincialism." Some standards of living he termed low and said that many had no conception of distance because they had never travelled perhaps more than 15 miles in all their life.

The wealthy class are the results of mixture and are wealthy through their own efforts. He said there were thousands unable to communicate with one another because of the many dialects.

As exhibits of his stay he had a bolo knife which the natives used with such effect during the occupation by the Americans, laces produced by women of the islands, a fan of unique but artistic design, and a number of photographs showing the Philippinos of various parts of the island in native dress.

Mr. Arnold was attired in the dress in general use throughout the islands. His suit was of white linen as was his tie and his shoes and stockings were white.
